

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

OCTOBER TERM.

CASES ARGUED AND DETERMINED

THE SUPREME COURT

OCTOBER TERM, 1858.

HUNTER & DAVIS v. LEVAN AND WIFE.

Where an assignment of a note and mortgage has been made to plaintiffs to indemnify them as sureties on a bail bond for the assignor, and where suit is then pending on such bond, it is proper for them, as such assignees, to institute suit on the note and mortgage, and a decree of foreclosure in such case, with directions to pay the money into Court, to await the further decree of the Court, is proper, or at least there is no error in such a decree to the prejudice of the defendants.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Eleventh Judicial District, County of El Dorado.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion of the Court.

Hall & Hume and Howes for Appellants.

Sanderson & Newell for Respondents.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., and FIELD, J., concurring.

---

This suit was brought on a note and mortgage executed by defendants to one Howard, and assigned by him to the plaintiffs. The assignment was unconditional, and in the usual form of such instruments. The Court finds that this assignment was made to plaintiffs by Howard to indemnify them against injury on account of their suretyship for him on a bail bond — the proceedings on which are now pending in this Court. This proof of the purpose and character of this instrument seems to have been made by parol. The Court ordered a sale of the mortgaged property, with directions to pay the money into Court to await its further decree.

We do not see any error in this decree to the prejudice of the defendants. By this arrangement, to say the least of it, the plaintiffs were made the pledgees or bailees of Howard, in respect to this debt assigned, and were bound to take the proper care of the subject of the Court. They were not bound to suffer the debt to be barred, or the chances of the property going to waste, before collecting the debt or foreclosing the mortgage, as might be the case if proceedings were delayed until the question of their liability on the bond was settled.

It is not necessary to decide whether, as this assignment was in writing, it would be admissible for Howard, or those claiming under him, to show by parol that what imparted an absolute sale or transfer was really a sale only on condition.

There was no error in striking out the answer of the defendants, to their prejudice, as it merely set up the facts upon which we have already passed, and some others not affecting the merits.

Decree affirmed.

MARTIN & DAVIS v. BROWNER et als.

A party cannot, under pretense of holding land in exclusive occupancy as a town lot, take up and enclose twelve acres of mineral land, in the mining district, as against persons who subsequently enter upon the land in good faith for the purpose of digging for gold therein, and who, in such operations, do no injury to the comfortable use of the premises as a residence, or for the carrying on of any mechanical or commercial business.

---

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion of the Court. Defendants had judgment in the Court below, and plaintiffs appealed.

Francis J. Dunn for Appellants.

McConnell & Niles for Respondents.

The law in California affecting the respective rights of farmers and miners upon the mineral lands, has been thoroughly discussed and settled in this Court.

The doctrine settled in the cases of McClintock v. Bryden, 5 Cal. 97, and Barrett v. Stokes, Ib., 36; has never been disturbed.

That any appropriation of lands in the mineral regions for agricultural purposes, is subject to the right of any citizen to enter upon the same and dig for gold, is now the settled law of the land.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., and FIELD, J., concurring.

Waiving the serious question whether this appeal is properly before us for want of a statement of facts, so far as the errors assigned by appellants are concerned, we think their case is without merit. The action was ejectment for a portion of a lot of about twelve acres in a small mining town. The plaintiffs claimed to have title to it, by having taken possession of and inclosing it, it being public land. It seems that the site of this village, including a portion of this lot sued for, was mining land, and parts of it had been worked as such before plaintiffs' inclosure. The defendants entered upon and were using a portion of this lot for mining purposes, but this portion was not contiguous to the buildings or the ground immediately about the buildings of the plaintiffs; nor was the use of this portion by defendants shown to injure or in any way conflict with the comfortable use of the premises by plaintiffs as a residence, or for the carrying on of any mechanical or commercial business. At most, it could only interfere with them in cultivating the soil. The Court instructed the jury, in effect, that a person cannot, under the pretense of a town lot, locate and hold a large tract of mining land in the mineral region of this State, as against persons who enter in good faith for the purpose of digging gold therein; that, while a person might be entitled to hold a town lot by location or purchase, as against miners, such lot must be so holden in good faith and for that purpose; and that one cannot, under the mere pretext of a town lot, hold a large portion of land for agricultural purposes as against the claim of the miner.

Raun v. Reynolds.

We think the law was correctly put to the jury on this state of facts. It is apparent that, if under pretense of holding land in exclusive occupancy as a town lot, a party can take up twelve acres of mineral land in the mining district, which, before his appropriation, was used and is mainly valuable for mining purposes, and hold it as owner, he may take up twice or four times that quantity; and the consequence would be that all of the mineral lands in a neighborhood might be appropriated by a few persons, by their making a village or hamlet on or near the land so appropriated. This would be to destroy to a great extent, if not entirely, the principle held by this Court in McClintock v. Bryden, 5 Cal. 97, and Barrett v. Stokes, 5 Cal. 36, which we have no desire to disturb.

We limit our decision as a precedent to the facts of this particular case, as it is impossible to prescribe a rule in such cases which must be of universal application. All that we deem it necessary now to hold is, that the facts of this case do not exempt it from the rule in the case of McClintock v. Bryden, 5 Cal. 97.

Judgment affirmed.

RAUN v. REYNOLDS et al.

The act to regulate interest on money is in derogation of the common law, and must be strictly construed.

Apply this rule of construction to the language of the second section of the act, and it will confine its provisions to contracts, fixing the rate of interest.

According to the common acceptation, the expression, "rate of interest," has reference to the percentage or amount of interest, and not to the manner of computing. The provision of the statute which authorizes judgments to bear the same interest as the contracts on which they are recovered, was intended to be confined to contracts fixing the rate of interest.

In a foreclosure suit, where judgment is taken by default, the decree can give no relief beyond that which is demanded in the bill.

Rann v. Reynolds.

Where proceedings in a foreclosure suit were delayed by agreement, in consideration of the execution of a second mortgage on other property in which third parties joined as additional security, and subsequently plaintiff filed a supplemental bill, setting up the second mortgage, and asking a sale of the premises described in both mortgages, judgment was taken by default for the debt, and the court decreed a foreclosure of the several mortgages and a sale of the property conveyed, and directed that the property described in the mortgage executed by Reynolds should be first offered for sale; but that no bid should be received for a less sum than the full sum of judgment and costs. If this sum was not bid, then the whole property included in the two mortgages — from Reynolds and from Kirk and Reynolds — was to be sold together: Held, that the decree is erroneous.

The well established rules of equity proceedings require, in such cases, not only that the property should be sold in parcels, but that the property included in the first mortgage should be exhausted, before recourse is had to the second. A party entitled to redeem has a right to have ascertained the price at which his interest was sold, in order that he may redeem.

John Hume for Appellant.

The above named defendants, appellants herein, assign for error in said cause —

1. That judgment is so rendered that interest is compounded on the judgment.
2. That the judgment is contingent and uncertain.
3. That the portion of the judgment which directs the manner of the sale of the mortgaged property, grants to said plaintiff greater relief than was by him demanded in his complaint, and was greater than the Court could grant in case of default.

And as to the first point. Independently of statutes, the only remedy by which interest can be recovered upon a judgment, is an action of debt upon the judgment. And. Leading Cases, vol. 1, page 501.

“At common law, on an execution upon a judgment, interest cannot be levied, because the execution must pursue the judgment, and there is nothing on the record to authorize the collecting of interest.” Ib., 6 Johns. 283; 2 Vesey, p. 162; 2 Johns. Chy. 172, 180; 1 Paige. 182; Brown and Wife v. Kip et al., 6 Paige, 88.

Our statute provides that when a simple rate of interest is agreed upon, the judgment shall bear the same rate. Wood's Digest, art 2838, sec. 2.

In the next section it is provided that parties may agree for the payment of compound interest, but it is not provided that the judgment shall conform to such a contract.

Baun v. Reynolds.

A judgment cannot be made to bear compound interest except by virtue of express provision of law. There is no such provision in our statute, therefore the judgment in this cause was erroneous in this particular.

As to the second point, the Court will find by examination of the record, that the judgment is contingent. The authorities before cited lay down the rule, that a judgment for money is a final determination by the Court of the amount due upon the day of the rendition of the judgment.

The amount of the judgment in this case is left contingent upon the future act or omission of the defendant. If paid before the seventeenth of February, it is for one sum; if not paid until after that day it is for another sum. Practice Act, sec. 144.

Compound interest is not a rate of interest. Our statute provides that an agreement may be made by which the interest shall, from time to time, be added to the principal, and a rate of interest calculated thereon. There is no provision in the statute for incorporating such agreement into the judgment.

As to the third point. Where defendant does not appear in a suit, no relief can be given except such as is expressly demanded in the complaint. Practice Act, sec. 147.

The order directing the manner of sale of the property, was in this case a portion of the relief granted plaintiff; but no demand was made in the complaint for any such relief, nor was notice given in any manner to defendants that such relief would be applied for. Therefore, the granting of such relief was so far an excess of jurisdiction on the part of the Court below.

It is the universal general rule, that property in separate parcels or lots shall be sold separately. Sales in mass of real estate held in several parcels, are not to be countenanced or tolerated. Allen on Sheriffs, page 188; 1 Binney, 61; Woods v. Monell et al., 1 Johns. Chy. 502; 13 Johns. 132.

"When the sale is of real estate, and consisting of several known lots or parcels, they shall be sold separately." Practice Act, sec. 223. "The judgment-debtor, if present at the sale, may direct the order in which property shall be sold." Ib.

Baun v. Reynolds.

---

Chancery follows the law, and the same reason which makes the law as it is, applies in general to Chancery. There being in this case no prayer in the complaint that the property be sold as one parcel, defendants had a right to expect that only the usual order would be made, and that the property would be sold in separate parcels, and that they would be permitted to direct the order in which the property would be sold.

Sanderson & Newell for Respondents.

There is no error in the computation of the interest up to the time of the judgment. The note drew compound interest, and the calculation is in fact correct.

But were it wrong, it is too late to raise the objection for the first time in this Court. Wood's Digest, 551, sec. 2; Guy v. Franklin, 5 Cal. 416.

There was no error in making the judgment draw compound interest. Such a judgment is authorized by the statute, and has been sustained by the decisions of this Court. Wood's Digest, 551, sec. 2; Guy v. Franklin, 5 Cal. 416; Mount v. Chapman, 9 Cal. 294; Emeric v. Tama, 6 Cal. 155.

There was no error in directing the manner in which the mortgaged property should be sold. The Court had power to do so. Practice Act, sec. 246, 7 and 8; 1 Paige, 451; 9 B. 648; 3 Scammon, 268.

This case does not come within the 223d section of the Practice Act, concerning sale under execution.

TERRY, C. J., delivered the opinion of the Court—BALDWIN, J., and FIELD, J., concurring.

The defendant, Reynolds, in January, 1857, executed and delivered to the plaintiff his promissory note for the sum of $32,000, payable six months after date, with interest at the rate of two and a half per cent. per month, payable monthly, and if not paid, to be compounded.

To secure the payment of this note, at the same time, he executed a mortgage on three-fifths of the South Fork Canal, in El Dorado county.

Rann v. Reynolds.

The note not having been paid at maturity, proceedings were instituted for its recovery, and a foreclosure and sale of the mortgaged premises.

Pending these proceedings, defendants, Reynolds and Kirk, in consideration of thirty days delay, and as further security for the payment of the note, executed a mortgage on their joint interest in a ditch known as the "Gold Hill" or "Smith's Ditch," which connected with the South Fork Canal.

At the expiration of the time agreed, the debt not having been satisfied, plaintiffs filed a supplemental bill, setting up the second mortgage, and asking for a sale of the premises therein conveyed.

Defendants were duly served, and having failed to answer, a default was taken against them; and a judgment was rendered against Reynolds for the amount of the note and interest, with interest on the judgment at two and a half per cent. per month, to be compounded monthly.

The Court also decreed a foreclosure of the several mortgages and a sale of the property conveyed, and directed that the property described in the mortgage executed by Reynolds should be first offered for sale; but that no bid should be received for a less sum than the full amount of judgment and costs. If this sum was not bid, then the whole property included in the two mortgages — from Reynolds, and from Kirk and Reynolds — was to be sold together. The errors assigned are:

First, The order directing compound interest to be computed on the judgment.

Second, The decree directing the property conveyed in separate mortgages to be sold together.

The first point is one of much general interest, and involves a construction of the statute of March, 1850, "to regulate interest on money." The second section of this Act is as follows: "Parties may agree in writing for the payment of any rate of interest whatever on money due, or to become due on any contract. Any judgment rendered on such contract shall conform thereto, and shall bear the interest agreed upon by the parties, and which shall be specified in the judgment." The third section permits parties to agree that the interest, if not punctually paid, may be added to the principal, and bear the same rate of interest.

Baun v. Reynolds.

The question presented is, whether the provision of the statute which authorizes judgments to bear the same interest as the contracts on which they are recovered, was intended to be confined to contracts fixing the rate of interest, or to include the contracts authorized by the third section of the Act.

The Act in question is in derogation of the common law, and must be strictly construed. This rule of construction applied to the language of the section would confine its provisions to contracts fixing the rate of interest. "Parties may contract," says the statute, "for any rate of interest," and judgments recovered on such contracts, that is contracts fixing the rate of interest, shall bear the same interest as the contract.

According to the common acceptation, the expression "rate of interest" has reference to the percentage or amount of interest, and not to the manner of computing. Rate is defined by Webster to be "the price or amount stated or fixed on anything." That it was used in this sense by the Legislature is, we think, evident from the fact that it was thought necessary that direct authority for the compounding of interest by contract should be given in a separate section of the Act. Statutes must be so construed as to give validity and meaning to all the parts.

If the construction of the words "rate of interest," contended for by respondent, is correct, the third section of the Act is mere surplusage.

Upon the second assignment we think the decree is clearly erroneous. Judgment was taken in the cause by default, and the decree could give no relief beyond that which was demanded in the bill. (Practice Act, section 147.)

The complaint simply asked a foreclosure of the mortgage and a sale of the property to satisfy the judgment; there was no prayer that the sale should be had in a manner differing from that prescribed in the statute for sales of real property under execution. Admitting the authority of the Courts to direct in the decree the manner in which the sale should be conducted, there is no allegation in the complaint which would warrant a demand that the usual course adopted in judicial sales should be departed from in this instance. On the contrary, the facts disclosed by the complaint furnished the strongest reason for refusing to depart from the usual course.

Baun v. Reynolds.

The property to be sold consisted of separate and distinct parcels, owned under different titles. Kirk, one of the parties to the second mortgage, owed no portion of the debt; he was merely a surety for its payment, to the extent of the value of his property.

The well established rules of equity proceedings require, in such cases, not only that the property should be sold in parcels, but that the property included in the first mortgage should be exhausted before recourse is had to the second. "Where there is a lien on different parcels of land, for the payment of the same debt, and some of these lands still belong to the man who, in equity and justice, owes, or ought to pay the debt, and other parcels have been transferred by him to third parties, his part of the land, as between himself and them, shall be first chargeable with the debt. (1 Story, Eq., 223, 2, page 300; 8 Ib., 182.) The principle of this rule applies with equal force to the case of a surety, whose property is pledged by a subsequent conveyance to answer the debt of the principal.

An additional reason why, in this case, a separate sale of the property should have been decreed, is found in the fact that, under our statute, such sales are made subject to the right of the owner to redeem. The exercise of this right, as far as Kirk is concerned, is entirely destroyed by the decree, as it is impossible to ascertain the price at which his interest was sold, or the amount of money necessary to redeem it.

If the property conveyed in the prior mortgage had been first sold, Kirk could, by paying the residue of the judgment, have released his property. Or, if the sale had been made separately, the statute gave him the right to redeem by payment of the price, with the percentage allowed by law. By the decree these rights are taken away, and he is left entirely without remedy.

The judgment and decree of the Court below is reversed, and the cause remanded.

A party who is unprepared for trial at the time of the calling of the case, should move for a continuance, and if he fail to do this, he waives his want of preparation, and cannot afterwards, when judgment has gone against him, move for a new trial on this ground.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourteenth Judicial District, County of Nevada.

The facts appear in the opinion of the Court.

McConnell & Niles for Appellants.

A. A. Sargent for Respondents.

TERRY, C. J., delivered the opinion of the Court — BALDWIN, J., and FIELD, J., concurring.

This cause was tried below by a jury, and a verdict rendered for plaintiff. The defendant moved for a new trial on the ground of surprise, and in support of his motion filed affidavits setting out that one Henry Day was a necessary witness for the defense, that he had been duly served with a subpoena before the trial, and his fees tendered him, but that he did not attend on account of sickness.

It also appears by the statement that, at time of the trial, defendants' counsel stated in Court that the witness, who resided sixteen miles from the place of trial, had been subpoenaed by defendants, that the party who served the subpoena had neglected to return it, in consequence of which neglect, they were unable to make such proof of service as would entitle them to an attachment against the witness, and that they could not ask for a continuance of the cause, for the same reason.

The Court below granted a new trial, and plaintiffs appealed.

The order of the Court below was clearly erroneous. The facts set out in the affidavits in support of the motion for a new trial should have been made the foundation of an application for a continuance, so that the plaintiffs might, if they desired, have avoided the delay by admitting the evidence as stated in the affidavit of defendants. "That a party came to trial unprepared to make out his case, or establish his defense, has not even the appearance of a valid excuse. It is true that, sometimes, no amount of diligence or effort will suffice to arrange all the details and procure everything needful in time for the trial. But injury need not for that reason be sustained. Courts are extremely indulgent and liberal in granting adjournments, and they are seldom or never appealed to in vain in a proper case. Even where it is simply expedient that a continuance should be had, and much more where any necessity for it exists, they will not deny a postponement. It is therefore incumbent upon a party, if for any good reason he finds himself unprepared to go on, to state the circumstances to the Court and move for an adjournment. If he fail to do this, he waives his want of preparation, and all right after to object. Any other rule would work great injustice, and be attended with innumerable evils." (3 Graham & Waterman on New Trials, p. 894.)

Phelps v. Owens.

"The parties," says Judge Kent, in Alexander v. Bryan, (2 John. Cas., 318) "must come to trial prepared, at their peril, and if either party has any good excuse for not being prepared, he is entitled of right to a postponement of the trial. It has, therefore, been repeatedly held, that the subsequent allegation of a party that he was not prepared, is no reason for granting a new trial, unless it be founded on the discovery of testimony of which the party was not at the time apprised.

By failing to apply for a postponement of the trial, plaintiffs waived their right to move for a new trial for reasons which existed at the time of the trial.

Judgment reversed.

PHELPS v. OWENS et al.

When a demurrer is general to a complaint, Courts are not bound to notice defects, which are mere matter of form.

In an action against a Sheriff for wrongfully seizing and selling property, under an execution, and where there was no wantonness or oppression on the part of such officer in the seizure; the measure of damages is the value of the property at the time it was seized, and legal interest on such amount from the time of seizure up to the time of the rendition of the verdict.

Phelps v. Owens.

---

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifth Judicial District, County of San Joaquin.

A statement of facts, sufficient to elucidate the points decided, appears in the opinion of the Court.

Baine & Bouldin and D. W. Perley for Appellants.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., and FIELD, J., concurring.

This was an action of trespass — or in the nature of such an action — brought by plaintiff, Phelps, against defendants, for wrongfully and unlawfully taking away certain goods and converting them to their own use. The complaint further alleges that at the time of this taking and conversion, the plaintiff was a merchant and doing a prosperous business; that the goods constituted nearly all his stock in trade, and that the taking of the goods has thrown him out of business, and nearly ruined his fortunes.

To this complaint defendants demurred assigning several causes of demurrer — none of which were well taken. The complaint states — unnecessarily, it is true, but harmlessly — in the commencement, that the defendants are indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $5,000; but this does not make it an action on contract, for the body of the complaint shows very clearly the cause of action to be a trespass, out of which the claim for money proceeds. There is no misjoinder, because there is but one count and one claim; the claim to recover, or to aggravate the damages — as it may be construed — or for special damages, arising from interruption of business, though not stated with sufficient particularity or definiteness, is not specifically demurred to on that ground. The damages might or might not be enlarged for this cause, according to the circumstances. If the trespass were “willfully and wrongfully committed,” as the complaint charges, the jury might go beyond the actual value of the goods taken and give compensation for the loss of business, credit, etc., if these injuries were properly stated. But as the demurrer does not specifically object to the generality of the statement in this respect, the Court was not bound to notice the defect, which is of matter of form.

After the demurrer was overruled, the defendants separately answered, putting the matters of the complaint in issue, and setting up new matter — which last will be noticed more particularly hereafter.

On the trial, it appeared that defendant, Owens, sued out an attachment against one Gove, in the hands of Webster, Deputy Sheriff of San Joaquin. Owens gave Webster a bond of indemnity after this levy, on the requisition of the Sheriff. The officer levied the attachment on this property as subject to the process, and Owens, having subsequently obtained judgment in his suit against Gove, sued out execution, under which Webster, the officer, sold the goods. The goods brought at the sale $1,492.42. There is some discrepancy in the proofs as to the actual value of the goods. The goods were claimed as the property of the plaintiff, who claimed to have bought them of Gove prior to the levy. The main question contested before the jury was, whether this sale to the plaintiff by Gove was or was not fraudulent; and the defendants' proof, as usual in such cases, was mostly circumstantial. The jury returned a verdict of $1,800.

It seems that there was no circumstance of wantonness or oppression on the part of the officer shown in this case. It was only, if made out, the common case of a levy by the officer upon the property of a party, when that property was not subject to the levy. The Court were asked by the defendants to instruct the jury that the defendant, Webster, is not responsible in damages beyond the value of the property, at the time it was seized under the attachment, and interest on such amount from the time of seizure up to the time of the verdict. This instruction was refused to be given without, and was given with, this qualification, that they might find any damages the party proved he had sustained.

The complaint claimed no other damages than for the taking and conversion, unless the latter clause of the complaint be considered as a claim for damages for the injury — beyond the value of the goods — to the business of the plaintiff as a merchant. But these last damages, if so stated as to be admissible of proof, could only be awarded in cases of willful and wanton trespass, or trespass marked by some circumstance of malice, oppression or fraud, and of this, as we intimated, we see no evidence in the record.

Phelps v. Owens.

The question upon which this case turns is this: What is the proper measure of damages against an officer for levying upon and selling goods not subject to the process, when the levy is made without any motive of oppression, or wanton disregard of the duties of his office, or the rights of the owner. The rule is thus stated: (Sedg. on Law of Damages, p. 530.) "We proceed now to notice the general rules which govern in trespass for taking personal property, or, as it is technically called, trespass de bonis asportatis. And, as we have said, although this is eminently an action where, in case of evil motive, the damages are under the control of the jury, and although for that purpose all the circumstances of the transaction may be given in evidence, still the determination, of which I have spoken, to adhere to the rule of compensation, has been frequently made manifest.

"So it has been decided that when trespass is brought for personal property and no circumstances of aggravation are shown, the action is to be regarded as one of trover, and the value of the property with interest furnishes the measure of damages." (Brannin v. Johnson, 19 Maine, 361; Smith v. Sherwood, 2 Texas, 460; Row v. Story, 2 Barr, 191; Thomas v. Isett, 1 Greene, Iowa, 470.)

Mr. Justice Baldwin (in Pacific Insurance Company v. Conrad, 1 Baldwin, U. S. C. C. R., 138) so fully states and so ably supports the true rule of recovery in this class of cases, that we feel justified in quoting at some length from his opinion. "The rule which ought to govern jurors in assessing damages for injuries to personal property, depends much upon the circumstances of the case. When a trespass is committed in a wanton, rude, and aggravated manner, indicating malice or a desire to injure, a jury ought to be liberal in compensating the party injured, in all he has lost in property, in expenses for the assertion of his rights, in feeling or reputation; and even this may be exceeded by setting a public example to prevent a repetition of the act. In such cases there is no certain fixed standard; for a jury may properly take into view not only what is due to the party complaining, but to the public, by inflicting what are called in law speculative, exemplary, or vindictive damages. But when an individual, acting in pursuance of what he conceived a just claim to property, proceeds by legal process to enforce it, and causes a levy to be made on what is claimed by another, without abusing or perverting its true object, there is and ought to be a very different rule, if, after due course of legal investigation, his case is not well founded. This is what must necessarily happen in all judicial proceedings, fairly and properly conducted, which are instituted to try contested rights to property. The value of the property taken, with interest from the time of the taking down to the trial, is generally considered as the extent of the damages sustained, and this is deemed legal compensation, which refers solely to the injury done to the property taken, and not to any collateral or consequential damages resulting to the owner by the trespass. These are taken into consideration only in a case more or less aggravated. But when the party taking the property of another by legal process, acts in the fair pursuit of his supposed legal right, the only reparation he is bound to make to the party who turns out ultimately to be injured, is to place him, as to the property, in the situation in which he was before the trespass was committed. The costs of the action are the only penalty imposed by the law, which limits and regulates the items and amount. In the present case the defendant acted under the orders of the government, in the execution of his duties as a public officer; he made the levy, but committed no act beyond the strictest line of his duty, which placed him in a situation where he had no discretion. The result has been unfortunate for him; he has taken the property of the plaintiffs for the debt of Edward Thompson, and must make them compensation for the injury they have sustained thereby, but no further."

Phelps v. Owens.

"It has long since been well settled that a jury ought in no case to find exemplary damages against a public officer, acting in obedience to orders from the government, without any circumstance of aggravation, if he violates the law in making a seizure of the property. In the case of Nicoll against the present defendant, Judge Washington instructed the jury that they might give the plaintiff such damages as he had proved himself to be justly entitled to, on account of any actual injury he had proved to their satisfaction he had sustained by the seizure and detention of the property levied on, but that they ought not to give vindictive, imaginary, or speculative damages. The affirmance of his charge makes it the guide for us in this case. Our true inquiry, then, must be, What damages have the plaintiffs so proved themselves to be entitled to?"

Ritter v. Stevenson.

It will be seen by applying the principle thus laid down to the instruction as qualified, that the Court below erred in refusing the instruction in the original form, which gives the exact rule of damages. and also erred in allowing the qualification; for the qualification, in fact, allows the jury to give damages for supposed injury indirectly resulting to the owner by the trespass, instead of confining it to the injury done him immediately by taking the property; the legal standard of that injury being, in such cases as this, its value with interest. We do not think the other points of appellant well taken. It is not necessary for us to enter into, nor do we intimate any opinion on the facts.

HITCHENS AND WIFE v. NOUGUES *et al.

Parties taking possession of a quartz lead under an agreement made with another party, cannot retain possession and refuse compliance with their agreement made in consideration of such possession and right to the lead. And where such parties conveyed to H one-third interest in the lead, by deed purporting to convey in fee simple absolute, and subsequently acquired other title: Held, that such subsequent acquisition of title inured to H's benefit.

A statement of the facts sufficiently appears in the opinion of the Court.

Coffroth & Howes for Appellants.

I. The judgment is unsustained by the evidence, and the decree is more than the complaint prayed for. The complaint asks an annulment of the contract, or specific performance. The new or large mill, and the railroad, are unknown to it. They are not directly or indirectly connected with it, but entirely separate and apart. The decree appropriates our property to another party, without even that party making a demand for it. But it may be said that this portion of the decree is deduced from the wording of the contract, which gives to Mary Hitchens one-third of the "money or property" which may arise from a certain state of facts; but it will be perceived that this clause of the contract has a contingency, and that nothing is to flow to the interest of Mary, except where there should be an increase of shares, or "new and additional partners admitted," or a "joint stock company be formed." If either one of these contingencies should happen, and money, property, or profits should accrue therefrom, why, then she would be entitled to an interest equal to one-third share. These things did not exist. There were no additional partners admitted; no joint stock company formed; no increase of shares. The new mill was built alone by defendants, and by their money, and although it was used to crush the quartz taken from the lode in dispute, yet it was disconnected with and separated from, the quartz ledge. The testimony is that it was half a mile distant from the vein. The portable mill, or "Cummings mill," is the only one recognized by the contract, and the only one to which the plaintiffs can lay claim. This mill was connected with, or near to the vein; the new mill a half a mile distant. The old mill was of inferior value, and was, under the contract, an appendage to the quartz vein; but to say that the new mill belonged to or was connected with the contract, is to say that simply because the defendants covenanted with plaintiffs, any other property the former might possess should be decreed to be divisional with Mary Hitchens. Hitchens paid nothing towards the erection of the new mill. Although present during the period of its building, he exercised no control over nor contributed a cent to its cost; and yet the decree appropriates to his wife one-third interest in it!

Hitchens and Wife v. Nougues.

II. The Court erred in adjudging to plaintiffs one-third of the quartz mill. This assignment of error, with the third, possibly is the most potential against and the most fatal to respondents. This property was acquired independent of plaintiffs. It was built by the money of defendants. Its erection was at their entire cost; and so well convinced were the plaintiffs that it was defendants' sole property, that they do not even lay claim to it in their complaint; yet the Court decrees them one-third of it! It is unknown to the contract — it is foreign to the issue. It was and is the enterprise of defendants alone, and it was a violent thrust at their rights to decree an interest in it to other parties. The portable, or Cummings mill, belonged to the defendants, and plaintiffs had interest in the proceeds of the quartz crushed by it, in proportion to the extent of their interest in the vein, and no more. They could have no interest in the larger mill, and they do not claim an interest. We built both mills at our own cost.

The contract gives plaintiffs nothing but one-third interest in the vein. The mills and improvements are excepted. They could not claim them. The labor in mining the quartz and extracting the gold was the consideration given by defendants for plaintiff's interest in the vein. If it proved a lucrative business it would be continued, not otherwise.

III and IV. The third and fourth assignments of error may properly be united. The Court erred in adjudging plaintiffs entitled to one-third of the quartz ledge, and erred in adjudging them one-third of the profits arising therefrom. If they held but four-sevenths, as the Court finds, and as an inducement for us to enter into the contract represented themselves to be the proprietors of the entire vein, by what process of reasoning is the conclusion arrived at, that they should have one-third? They owned but one-half the vein, and yet it is decreed that we shall give them back one-third, with all of our improvements. And again, if they owned four-sevenths, what reasoning would give them one-third of the profits? It is shown in the testimony that we purchased the other three-sevenths from other parties, although when the contract was entered into, from plaintiff's representations and from his deed, we were led to believe that he held the entire vein. It was erroneous, then, to decree one-third of the profits and one-third of the vein. They were entitled to their pro rata on four-sevenths, and no more.

Hitchens and Wife v. Nougues.

V. The Court erred in compelling a specific performance of the contract on the part of defendants, when the proof shows that plaintiffs had not fulfilled their obligations. The plaintiffs sold to defendants the entire vein. It is true that the deed of conveyance says "all the right, title and interest" of John Hitchens, yet the representation he made was that he was the entire proprietor. (See Dickson's Ev., p. 27.) The entire testimony leads to the conclusion that he held out the false representation of entire proprietorship. Defendants, then, must be looked upon, by every rule, as innocent purchasers without notice. The records did not disclose proprietary interest in any other party. The defendants were thus forced to put confidence in plaintiff's representations; and upon the statement of Hitchens, entered into the contract. The Court finds that Hitchens was not the owner of the vein, "but only four-sevenths," and that "the other three-sevenths were owned by" other parties. Hitchens gave us, then, under the finding of the Court, but four-sevenths, and we under the contract are to give his wife one-third of the whole! Or in other words, we are to erect a mill and improvements, in consideration of his permitting us to enjoy what he does not possess! Does it not at once suggest itself that the false representations of plaintiffs led defendants into the contract? Then, has Hitchens complied with the contract, and has he given us a title to, and possession of the lead he sold to us under his deed of September 15, 1858? We say he has not; and if we have, as we think we have, clearly demonstrated this to the Court, he is estopped from demanding from us a specific performance of the contract; and the Court consequently erred in thus decreeing. The authorities are strongly in our favor. In Bailey's Equity, vol. 1, p. 373, Doar v. Gibbs, the doctrines laid down fully sustain us. Again, in Kentucky, Littell, vol. 4, p. 255, Mason v. Chambers. In vol. 7, of Kentucky Reports, (J. J. Marshall) p. 370, Grundy v. Edwards, the Court says:

Hitchens and Wife v. Nonguea.

"Applications to the Chancellor for the specific enforcement of contracts are always addressed to his discretion, and he will rarely, if ever, in the exercise of that discretion, extend relief in such cases to any one who has willfully violated an essential part of the agreement which constituted an inducement to the purchase."

We were induced to purchase from the representation of Hitchens that he was full proprietor, and the title to the whole vein was an "essential part of the agreement." This doctrine is broadly laid down in Story's Equity Jurisprudence, vol. 2, p. 51, sec. 736: p. 91, sec. 769; p. 96, sec. 771; and p. 102, sec. 776. And again, it is fully asserted in Willard's Equity Jurisprudence, pp. 286 and 287; and again, in the same work, pp. 296 and 297, the principle is positively asserted.

1st. The judgment of the Court below is fully sustained by the testimony, and the relief granted is not greater than the case made by the testimony entitled the plaintiffs to receive. The prayer for relief in the bill is ample enough to cover all that is given by the judgment; but were it not, it could make no difference, for this Court has decided that where the parties are in Court, and a trial is had, it is the duty of the Court to grant all the relief to which the parties are entitled under the case made by the testimony.

2d. Although respondent did not own but four-sevenths of the lode, yet appellants knew that fact, and knew that the other three-sevenths had been abandoned by their owners. They then purchased with full knowledge of all the facts, as the Court below found.

Hitchens and Wife v. Nougues.

3d. There is no force in the position that the appellants were compelled to purchase the three-fourths owned by other parties. Nougues never dreamed of purchasing them until after this action was commenced, and then only agreed to pay for them in the event he should be successful in this action.

4th. That the respondents were entitled to a conveyance of one-third of the whole lode, and to an account and their share of the profits, there can be no doubt.

The only question about which there can be any difference of opinion is, whether they are entitled to one-third of the mill and railroad; and to determine this, a careful examination of the contract is only necessary.

Under this contract, the only mill the appellants were required to put upon the "lead" was the "Cummings portable mill," which they owned and had in operation in the neighborhood. This once upon the lead, of course became the property of both appellants and respondent Mary Hitchens. They never put it on the lead, but instead thereof put up the present mill. The fact that they more than performed their contract, can in no respect change the legal effect of the contract, or performed it in a manner and at a cost not required by the contract. From this it follows, that if the portable mill would have become the property of the concern, the present mill would also. The contract provides the respondent, Mary Hitchens, shall share in all property, and money, and advantages arising from the prosecution of the business. The erection of a mill, building of a railroad, &c., were the very things which the respondent Hitchens was unable to accomplish, and the very consideration which moved him to make the contract, and for which he gave two-thirds of the lead, then believed to be of immense value.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — FIELD, J., concurring.

This was an equity proceeding, brought by respondents for a rescission of a contract made by Hitchens with the defendants in regard to a certain mining claim, or for a specific execution of the contract, with which is connected a prayer for account. The case was tried by the judge on bill, answer and proofs, and a decree rendered in favor of the complainants. No demurrer was filed. The contract was made with Hitchens, who, it would seem, was the owner, or contracted as the owner of the premises sold to the defendants. There appears to be an evident incongruity in the bill, in this: That complainants, Hitchens and wife, sue to set aside or rescind the contract made by Hitchens alone with defendants, Hitchens, at the time of making the contract, being solely interested in the subject of the contract, and yet Hitchens and wife assert the right of the wife to enforce the contract as made, the wife deriving her right to intervene from the fact that, by the contract and the deed executed under, or as a part of it, she was entitled to a certain portion of the property sold, and a share of the profits of the business of mining proposed to be carried on afterwards. In consideration of the deed of Hitchens to defendants, they conveyed to Mrs. Hitchens one-third of the mining claim described in the bill, and they also agreed to account in a certain manner with her for the profits arising from working the claim. In one aspect of this claim, it is apparent that Mrs. Hitchens would not be interested as a plaintiff; in the other she would. But, as this point was not taken by demurrer, or in any other form on the trial, we will proceed to consider the case as the District Court considered it, viz: as a bill for specific performance. The case is simple and without difficulty. The record shows that Hitchens claimed and was in possession of a mining claim or quartz lode, in the county of El Dorado; that he entered into a written contract with Nougues and Smith, by which he purported to sell them all his right, title and interest in this claim. In consideration of this conveyance and contract, Nougues and Smith executed an instrument under seal, on the 15th of September, 1857, whereby they granted, bargained and sold to Mrs. Hitchens, and her heirs and assigns forever, one-third part of the premises in dispute; this deed is averred to be in consideration of a sale and transfer by deed and delivery of possession of the right, title and interest of John Hitchens of this claim, and also a nominal consideration of five dollars from Mrs. Hitchens to the grantors. The Court especially find that, under and by virtue of Hitchens' conveyance to the defendants, they took possession of the claim. The deed proceeds as follows:

Hitchens and Wife v. Nougues.

---

Hitchens and Wife v. Nougues.

“And we, the said parties of the first part, for ourselves, our heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, in consideration aforesaid, do covenant, stipulate and agree, with and to the said party of the second part, her heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, that the said parties of the first part will erect, establish, and put in operation, within twenty days from the date of these presents, upon said quartz lode, a quartz crushing mill which is now owned by said parties of the first part, and at work near the village of Kelsey, being a two stamp mill, known as Cummings’ Portable Mill, and that said parties of the first part will run said mill diligently, crushing quartz from said lode, and manage and conduct the same in a prudent and economical manner, and will pay over to the said party of the second part one-third part of the neat proceeds of said mill, after paying out of the gross yield all expenses necessarily incurred in procuring quartz and crushing the same, which payment of one-third of the neat proceeds as aforesaid to said party of the second part shall be made at each and every washing or cleaning up of gold at said mill. And the said party of the second part shall have the right and privilege, at any and all such washings or cleaning up, of being present either in person or by agent, for the purpose of inspecting and ascertaining the amount of such yield, and shall at any and all reasonable times have access to the books of the concern, and may examine said parties of the first part, or either of them, or their agent or clerk, on oath, respecting the condition of the accounts of the concern.”

“It is further covenanted, stipulated and agreed by the said parties of the first part, for themselves, their heirs, representatives and assigns, with and to said party of the second part, her heirs, representatives and assigns, that should there be at any time an increase of shares of stock in said quartz lode, or should new and additional partners be admitted into the concern, or should a joint stock company be formed for the purpose of improving and working said quartz lode, that in any such case said party of the second part is to share in the advantages and profits of any and all such arrangements with said parties of the first part, in proportion to their several interests. And if in any such case money or property is realized by reason of such arrangement, said party of the second part shall be entitled to and shall have one-third of such money or property.”

Hitchens and Wife v. Nougues.

---

"And said parties of the first part further covenant and stipulate with and to the said party of the second part, her heirs, representatives and assigns, that said business shall be carried on and conducted for the benefit of the said several parties to these presents, as aforesaid, in a fair and economical manner, without incurring any unnecessary expense or outlay in conducting the same."

"In witness whereof, we, the said parties of the first part, have hereunto set our hands and seals, this day and year first above written.

"J. M. SMITH, [L. s.]

"Joa. NOUGUES, [L. s.]"

"Witness: EARL S. POWERS."

Smith and Nougues, after going into possession, gave, by advertisement, notice to all persons concerned, that they would sell the shares in this claim, if payments were not made of the assessments due on such shares by the time of sale — 10th January, 1858. It is also found by the Court that Nougues and Smith did not, within twenty days after the date of the contract, nor at any time, erect the portable mill described in the agreement; but in lieu of it, proceeded to erect a large and costly mill, with eighteen stamps, without the consent of the plaintiff except so far as that consent might be inferred from the knowledge of the latter that the mill put up was being built, and his making no objections thereto. It appears, further, that at the date of the deed to defendants, Hitchens was the owner of only four-sevenths of the quartz lead; but it was found that defendants knew at the time of the purchase that Hitchens had only this interest; and that they took the risk of the other interests being forfeited or abandoned; and it is further found that these outstanding claims were bought after this contract, and by the terms of the purchases they were only to be paid for if the defendants succeeded in this suit. The defendants retaining the possession, refused to render any account, and claimed to hold the premises in their own right, unaffected by the stipulations of the contract. The Court below rendered a decree declaring the right of the plaintiffs to enforce the contract, and for an account. This decree is appealed from.

the evidence after hearing the witnesses, who were not entirely agreed in their statements. On looking over the proofs we are by no means satisfied that the Court below erred in its conclusion of facts; but as there was some conflict in the testimony, we are not disposed to interfere, unless it is clear that the District Judge, whose opportunities for judging the value of, and weighing correctly the evidence, are better than ours, erred in his decision upon it.

The defendants, having taken possession under Hitchens, cannot retain that possession, and refuse compliance with their agreement made in consideration of such possession and right to it. This is a plain, and, we believe, almost universal principle of law. But beyond this, it seems that the defendants only contracted, not for the title to the premises, but for the right and interest of Hitchens; and this they got; and still more, by force of this possession, doubtless, they were able to acquire, for what is equivalent to title or nothing, the outstanding interests; for not getting which immediately from Hitchens they claim a right to refuse performance of their covenants. Nongues is evidently estopped by his deed (and Smith, too, if he executed the deed, and we think he did in effect, for he says in his answer that the deed is sufficiently executed to pass title to Mrs. Hitchens.)

It follows, therefore, that under the statute of 1855, whether Nongues and Smith had title or not, at the time of their deed to Mrs. Hitchens, having conveyed to her by deed purporting to convey in fee simple absolute, their subsequent acquisition of title inured to her benefit.

The only question about which there can be any doubt is whether, as Nongues and Smith did not put up the sort of mill intended in the contract, but another and more costly one, if it appeared on the final hearing that the complainant has made or lost by this change, or if she did or did not assent to it, whether the proper expenditure for this, or the value of its use, or the injury for not putting on the premises the mill stipulated for, should be taken into the estimate in settling the account. But this matter can be better determined on the final settlement of the accounts when the facts are more fully developed.

Glotzback v. Foster.

GLOTZBACK v. FOSTER.

The Supreme Court will not examine errors assigned on appeal, where, after the service of the notice of appeal, the parties stipulated that all errors in the record, referee's report, decree and judgment, were waived.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourteenth Judicial District, County of Nevada.

In this case the notice of appeal was served on the Respondent's attorneys on the 15th day of May, 1858, and on the 23d day of May, 1858, the following stipulation was filed in the clerk's office of the Court below:

"Glotzback v. Foster — It is hereby stipulated and agreed between the parties hereto, that defendant is entitled to a credit of one hundred and fifty dollars on the execution in this case, being the amount claimed in defendant's answer. Hereby waiving all errors in record and referee returns of amount due, also decree and execution made May 23d, 1858.

McCONNELL & STEWART,
Attorneys for Defendant.

BUCKNER & HILL,
Attorneys for Plaintiff."

McConnell & Niles for Appellants.

TERRY, C. J., delivered the opinion of the Court — FIELD, J., concurring.

It is not necessary to examine the errors assigned in this case, for the reason that it appears from the record that after service of the notice of appeal the parties filed a stipulation, in which it was agreed that defendant should be credited on the execution, in the sum of one hundred and fifty dollars, and that all errors in the "record, referee's report, decree and judgment," were waived.

Sherman v. Rollberg.

SHERMAN v. ROLLBERG.

The Supreme Court will not notice errors assigned, unless there is a proper statement on appeal.

An answer to a suit on a promissory note by the assignee, which sets up as one defense: 1st. That the note was made payable to order, and was afterwards fraudulently altered by inserting the word "bearer" in lieu of the word "order." 2d. That the defendant paid the note before assignment. 3d. Note was assigned to plaintiff after maturity, etc.: Held, not fatally defective.

APPEAL from the County Court of Colusa county.

This was an action brought in a Justice's Court on the following promissory note:

COLUSA, Feb. 1st, 1856.

"For value received, I promise to pay Harvey Phelps, or bearer, the sum of ninety-five dollars, one day after date, with interest at three per cent. per month.

"HENRY ROLLBERG."

The defendant filed his answer in the Justice's Court; a jury trial was had, and verdict and judgment for plaintiff, from which the defendant appealed to the County Court.

The defendant made an application to the County Court to amend his answer, which was granted, and thereupon he filed an amended answer of great length, setting up various grounds of defense as one defense. The grounds upon which this Court considered, sufficiently appear in the opinion of the Court.

The answer was verified.

The plaintiff demurred to this answer, and the demurrer was overruled. The cause was tried in the County Court by a jury, who returned a verdict for the defendant, upon which judgment was entered. Plaintiff moved the Court for a new trial, which was granted on condition that plaintiff pay all costs, which he declined to do and appealed to this Court.

O. Stewart for Appellant.

The defendant's amended answer in this case only makes two points as a defense; one, an alleged alteration of the note sued on, the other, payment; neither of which under the pleadings can amount to a defense.

Sherman v. Rollberg.

1st. The defense set up as to the alteration is not good, because it is not averred that the alleged alteration was made with the knowledge, or by the authority or direction of plaintiff. Humphreys v. Crane & Yale, 5 Cal. 173; U. S. v. Linn, 1 How. 110; Henfree v. Bromly, 6 East, 309; Lewis v. Payne 8 Cow., 71; Nichols v. Johnson, 10 Conn. 192; Rees v. Ovenbaugh, 6 Cow. 746; Warring v. Smith et al., 2 Barb. Ch. R. 119.

Any other doctrine would destroy all faith in commercial transactions, for every suit upon a written instrument might be defeated, without any fault of plaintiff either by the defendant or a third person.

2d. The alteration of an instrument to avoid it must be material. Turner v. Billagram, 2 Cal. 520. An alteration to be material must be such as to materially affect the rights of the obligor. Id.

3d. The alteration alleged in defendant's answer does not affect the rights of the obligor, for it makes no difference to him whether the note reads payable to order or bearer, as far as his liability to pay is concerned. From the admissions in defendant's amended answer, if the alteration (for the sake of the argument) could be considered material, it would only temporarily suspend the right of recovery in the plaintiff until he could get the note endorsed over to himself, which is conclusive that the alleged alteration is immaterial, as far as the rights of the obligor are affected.

4th. An alteration is immaterial which does not vary the nature, subject matter or value of the contract. Humphreys v. Crane and Yale, 5 Cal. 173; Martindale v. Follet, 1 N. H. 97; Hunt v. Adams, 6 Mass. 519; Granite R. R. Co. v. Bacon, 15 Pick. 242. I cannot see how defendant's alleged alteration can have any such effect.

5th. The defense of alteration is not good, because it does not allege any time at which such alteration was made. To be a good defense, it should have been alleged to have been made after the execution of the note; for the presumption of law is, that it was made at or before its execution. 1 vol. Greenleaf on Ev. § 564.

6th. Any change in a written instrument, to make it an alteration so as to amount to a defense, must be charged to have been done by the party claiming under it; otherwise it is a mere spoliation, and no defense. 1 vol. Greenleaf on Ev. § 566.

Sherman v. Rollberg.

7th. The allegations of other alterations and defacements are too vague to demand any notice.

8th. Defendant charges, that if the note was assigned to A. L. Sherman, "'twas after it was due." Said Sherman does not sue as assignee, but as holder of the note payable to bearer; hence none of these charges are any defense.

9th. If plaintiff took the note after due, he would only be affected by equities between the original parties, and not subject to such as subsisted between intermediate holders. Vinton v. Crow, 4 Cal. 309; Story on Promissory Notes, § 178; Ib., note 4; Chitty on Bills, page 246. Also, note a; Ib. 24, and a note.

10th. If Neal was the agent of Rollberg, and took the note up as such agent, and passed it to a third person, such third person becomes an innocent bona fide holder; and as between such holder and Rollberg, Neal's acts are binding, unless fraud or collusion is charged between them, which defendant has not charged.

11th. Neal must have held said note either in the character of intermediate holder or agent. If intermediate holder, no off-sets are good as against plaintiff; if agent, his acts must bind defendant unless fraud or collusion is charged with plaintiff; either horn of the dilemma will defeat the defense set up. If the former decisions of this Court are correct, then our position is right, and the defense must fall.

As to the matters set forth in the defendant's answer, and the plaintiff's demurrer thereto, respondent supposes it cannot be assigned or regarded as error here; first, because there was no complaint on the part of plaintiff below; secondly, our statutes regulating proceedings before justices of the peace do not require the pleadings to be in writing, and although the answer may not be technically correct, it shows two grounds of objection to any judgment of this Court directing a reversal of the judgment of the County Court. Because the cause was submitted to the jury, both on the question of payment, and on the question of alteration made by some holder without the authority or consent of the respondent, we therefore ask for an affirmance of the judgment as well for this as the previous reason.

Heston v. Martin.

---

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., concurring.

This is an appeal from a judgment. Various errors are assigned, but we cannot notice them for want of a proper statement.

No other error is assigned except the overruling of the demurrer to the amended answer. This pleading is rather loosely drawn, even for County Court practice, but we think it not fatally defective. If the point of the defense were the alteration of the note, the argument of the appellant would be conclusive; but we do not so consider it. The real defense attempted to be set up is, that the note was made payable to order, and was afterwards fraudulently made payable to bearer; that the defendant paid the note before the plaintiff became assignee of it; that the defendant became assignee after the note was due. All these matters are stated as one defense, and not separately, and if true, are amply sufficient to defeat the action.

Judgment affirmed.

HESTON v. MARTIN.

In a mechanic's lien, it is not necessary to give the items of the work and materials, in the statement of the lien filed, where the contract for the construction of the building is in a sum in gross.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, County of San Francisco.

This was an action to enforce a mechanic's lien, for the construction of a house and materials furnished.

Plaintiff made a written contract with the defendant for the construction of a house. Defendant was to pay therefor a specified sum in instalments.

The case was tried by the Court, and judgment rendered for the defendants — the Court finding that, under the contract, there was nothing due. By a stipulation entered into, it was agreed to submit to the Court for its decision, the question, whether the amount of $2,080.75 — this being the balance due under the contract — was a lien upon the premises. The Court rendered a decision establishing a lien to this amount, from which decision this appeal is taken.

Robert C. & Daniel Rogers for Appellant.

Harmon & Lobbatt for Respondent.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — FIELD, J., concurring.

This appeal is without merit, and it is apparent that the only point seriously urged by the appellant — to wit: that an account is necessary, giving the items of work and materials in the statement of lien filed — cannot be maintained in case of a contract for a sum in gross.

Judgment affirmed, with ten per cent. damages.

THE PEOPLE ex rel. THE SAN FRANCISCO GAS COMPANY
v. THE BOARD OF SUPERVISORS OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO.

A mandamus directing a Board of Supervisors to proceed and audit certain accounts of the relator, does not necessarily require the Board to allow the accounts; such Board have a discretion in respect to their action in this regard, though compelled to act on the subject matter of the claim; such writ does not control or prescribe the mode, or determine the result of their action.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, County of San Francisco.

This was an application, on the part of the plaintiffs, to the Court below, for a mandamus to compel the defendants, as a Board of Supervisors of the City and County of San Francisco, to audit an account of the plaintiffs for gas furnished the city for lighting the streets and City Hall, in pursuance of a contract made with the city and James Donahue & Co., and assigned by Donahue & Co. to the relators. The application was made upon affidavit and notice to the defendants. Three separate grounds of defense were set up by the defendants in their answer, as reason why the writ should not issue, but as they were not passed upon by the Court, they are not given. The following is the order of the Court below, granting the writ:

San Francisco Gas Co. v. Board of Supervisors, San Francisco Co.

"On filing affidavits in this cause, and after hearing F. M. Haight on the part of the relator, and F. P. Tracy on the part of the defendants, and due notice having been given of the application according to law: It is ordered, adjudged and decreed that a writ of mandate be ordered to the Board of Supervisors of the City and County of San Francisco, commanding them to audit the accounts of the relator, set forth in the affidavit of J. G. Eastland, which have accrued since the first day of July, 1856, in accordance with the original contract made with James Donahue & Co., and in pursuance of the provisions of an Act of the Legislature, entitled 'An Act for the Relief of the San Francisco Gas Company,' approved March 5th, 1858."

From which order the defendants appealed to this Court.

F. P. Tracy, City and County Attorney, for Appellant.

The mandamus, as granted, commands the Supervisors "to audit the accounts of the relator set forth in the affidavit of J. G. Eastland," &c.

The term audited in reference to demands on the treasury, is to be understood as meaning "passed upon and finally allowed." Consolidation Act, 1856, § 83.

The Legislature at the session of 1858, passed an Act for the Relief of the San Francisco Gas Company, (Stat. 1858, p. 46) which gives to the Supervisors the only power they have in relation to the claims of the Gas Company. Sec. 1 authorizes them to ADJUST, audit, allow and cause to be paid, &c., the claims in question.

Nothing can be more evident than that the Legislature intended to give the Supervisors power to determine how much was due the San Francisco Gas Company, on any bill presented, and never did intend to take away their power to examine and reject any claim that was not due.

The power to adjust is the power to consider how much, if anything, is due the plaintiffs.

San Francisco Gas Co. v. Board of Supervisors, San Francisco Co.

---

2d. It is admitted that if it were true that the Supervisors had refused to adjust, audit and allow the claim of the Gas Company, according to law, the Court might properly issue mandamus to put them in motion, and compel them to act.

But the Supervisors have not refused. They deny it on oath, and the relator does not attempt to prove their allegation.

3d. The only point in controversy is, whether the Supervisors can be compelled by mandamus to approve a demand of the San Francisco Gas Company for $39,601.70, when there is proof offered them that that sum is due.

The Supervisors maintain that no Court can, by mandamus, take away from them the right to examine this account, and "adjust" it by ascertaining how much is due on it. They require, of course, some proofs or vouchers to show the amount of indebtedness, and have a right to a reasonable time for their examination.

But the Gas Company, not content with the pound of flesh to which it is entitled by law, undertakes to obtain a mandamus, which shall compel the Supervisors to allow their demand for the exact sum of $39,601.70, without examination or proof, and when they dispute their indebtedness to that amount, and deprive them of their right to a jury trial to ascertain the amount.

This is perhaps the first case where any Court has issued mandamus to compel the allowance and payment of a specific sum not ascertained to be due.

Mandamus is not the process to ascertain an indebtedness and liquidate an open account.

The mandamus, as well as the petition, is in its terms a cheat and fraud on the part of the relators.

Both the petition and the writ, as drawn by the counsel for the relator, carefully exclude the words of the Act which give a discretion to the Supervisors. They drop and keep out of sight the word adjust. They do not require that the Supervisors shall allow such sum as they find to be due, but that they shall allow the claim for $39,601.70.

4th. Mandamus will issue to the Supervisors to compel them to act upon a demand — to set them in motion — but not to control their discretion or oblige them to allow specific sums.

San Francisco Gas Co. v. Board of Supervisors, San Francisco Co.

The appellant relies upon the authorities in the respondent's brief to sustain this doctrine which has again and again been held by this Court.

5th. The appellant submits that it does not object to the issuance of a mandamus, if the relator desires it to require the Supervisors in the language and true intent of the Act, (Stat. 1858, p. 46, sec. 1) to adjust, audit, allow and cause to be paid, etc., the demand of the relators for such sum as shall be found to be due according to the contract mentioned in relators' affidavit, and the provisions of law in relation thereto.

But they say, the judgment of the Court below ought not to stand, for the foregoing reasons and for those set forth in the defendant's answer.

F. M. Haight for Respondents.

This writ is the proper remedy to enforce obedience to acts of Parliament and to the King's charters, and in such cases is demandable "ex debito justitiæ." Bacon's Abridgment, the title mandamus, page 118 of edition of 1854. Pursuing this principle, it is the appropriate remedy to compel obedience to the Legislative Acts of a State. Such has been the course of decision in the State of California, and is supported by adjudications in other States of the Union. It becomes necessary to examine the statutes in relation to this subject. No payments can be made out of the Treasury until the same have been duly approved by the Board of Supervisors and audited. Sec. 95 of the original act, session laws of 1856, page 172. Sec. 85 as amended, page 217 of the session laws of 1857, especially requires that all demands of the description of the demand in this case, must first be approved by the Board of Supervisors before it can be audited or paid. In the original bill, fifth subdivision of Sec. 74, page 165, the Supervisors were expressly authorized to provide for lighting the streets, but by a singular provision in Sec. 95, page 172 of the statutes of 1857, and the amendment of the same section, page 218, session laws of 1856, they are not authorized but prohibited to pay anything for this object. It is not necessary to discuss how far the power of the Legislature extended to exempt the corporation from a compliance with its contracts, because by a law passed in 1858, page 46 of the session laws of that year, the defendants were expressly authorized to adjust, audit and allow, and cause to be paid the amounts due the relator for gas furnished since the first day of July 1856. A duty has by this Act devolved upon the Board of Supervisors, which they have failed to discharge. "Words of permission, when tending to promote the public benefit, are always held to be compulsory." Bacon's Abridgment, and the authorities cited, page 439.

In the case of the Commonwealth v. the Mayor, 5th Watts, (Penn. R.) it is said: "The performance of a corporate function is not a duty to be demanded by action but compelled by mandamus." The People ex rel. of Wilson v. the Supervisors of Albany County, 12 John. 415, illustrates the position.

Bright v. the Supervisors of Chenango, 18th John. R. 243, illustrates the same principle.

The case of McCullough v. The Mayor of Brooklyn, 23 Wendell R. 458, is more to our present purpose.

In the case of Hull v. the Supervisors of Oneida, 19th John. R. 259, the Court says: "The superintending control over inferior courts, magistrates, corporations, etc., by mandamus is in subsidiu[m] iustitiæ. The King v. the Archbishop of Canterbury, (15 East, 117); the People v. Steele, 2 Barbour Sup. Court Rep., page 418.

See 2 Pickering Rep. 414. Rex v. Doctor Windham, 1 Cowper, 378. In Davis v. the Commissioners of Bristol, Morton, J., "Mandamus lies to all inferior tribunals, magistrates and officers, and extends to all cases of neglect to perform a legal duty where there is no other adequate remedy. It applies to judicial as well as ministerial acts. If ministerial, the mandamus will direct the specific act performed." 21 Pick. R. 259.

In the case of Selkirk v. The Board of Supervisors of the County of Sacramento, 3 Cal. Rep. page 323, a mandamus was granted to compel the Supervisors to act. They refused to exercise the legal discretion confided in them.

The People ex rel. McDougal v. Bell, Comptroller, 4 Cal. 177, illustrates our position.

Tuolumne County v. Stanislaus County, 6 Cal. Rep. 440. In this case the Court held the proper order was to command the Supervisors to audit the account; exactly what we claim in this.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court—TERRY, C. J., concurring.

In this case, we understand the mandamus merely to direct that the Supervisors shall proceed to audit the claims of the relator in this proceeding. This does not necessarily require of the Board to allow the account; they have a discretion in respect to their action in this regard, and though they are compelled to proceed to act on the subject matter of the claim, yet the mandamus does not control or prescribe the mode, or determine the result of their action.

The judgment is affirmed.

McGREGOR v. SHAW et al.

The allegations of a complaint are confessed by a default.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, County of San Francisco.

The question in this case turned on the sufficiency of the complaint, which is in substance as follows:

The defendant had commenced an action against the plaintiff, to recover some $3000, alleged to have been loaned to her by the plaintiff. The plaintiff had a valid and meritorious defense against this claim, but for the sake of peace, and to avoid litigation, he paid her five hundred dollars in full satisfaction of her pretended cause of action. She accepted that amount in full satisfaction, and executed and delivered to him a full release under seal, a copy of which is annexed to his complaint.

When he paid the money, she also promised to have her action immediately dismissed. Relying upon this promise, the plaintiff filed no answer. Instead of complying with her promise, and notwithstanding she had formally released the cause of action and received the consideration for the release, the defendant fraudulently caused a judgment by default to be entered in the action against the plaintiff, for the full amount of the claim, and fraudulently withheld the execution upon the judgment until after the term expired at which the judgment was entered, with the design thereby of precluding the plaintiff from having the judgment set aside by motion in the Court in which it was entered.

The plaintiff had no notice of the entry of judgment until the term had expired. The defendant then issued execution on the judgment, and the first information the plaintiff had of the fraud practiced upon him, was by the levy of an execution on his property. He applied to the Court to set aside the judgment, which was done; but on the defendant's appeal, the Supreme Court reversed this order of the Court, on the ground that the term having expired, the Court had no power to set aside the judgment.

To this complaint the defendant demurred.

The demurrer was overruled, and the defendant having declined to answer, a decree was entered in the Court below, declaring the former judgment fraudulent and void, and perpetually enjoining its execution.

From this decree the defendant appealed.

B. S. Brooks for Appellants.

Crockett & Crittenden for Respondent.

FIELD, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., concurring.

The complaint in this case states facts sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to the relief he seeks; and its allegations being confessed by the default, the decree was properly entered, and must be affirmed. So ordered.

McKune v. John B. Weller.

PEOPLE ex rel. MCKUNE v. JOHN B. WELLER, GOVERNOR.

An election to fill a vacancy in the office of District Judge is invalid, unless made under and in pursuance of the proclamation of the Governor.

The statute requiring the Governor to issue his proclamation of election to fill vacancies in certain offices is mandatory, and an essential prerequisite to all such elections.

The object of the proclamation is to give notice to the electors that such an election will be held.

An election cannot take place under the Constitution without statutory regulation. All the efficacy given to the act of casting a ballot is derived from the law making power and through legislative enactments; and the Legislature must provide for and regulate the conduct of an election, or there can be none.

This was an application to the Court below for a mandamus. The facts are as follows:

A. C. Monson was elected Judge of the Sixth Judicial District at the September general election, 1852; he resigned in 1857, when Charles T. Botts was appointed and commissioned by the Governor. No proclamation was made by the Governor for an election for Judge at the general election of 1858, for the unexpired term of Monson; that is for the intervening period between September, 1858, and January, 1859. At the general election of September, 1858, John H. McKune received, for the short term, two thousand and fifty-six votes, being a majority of those cast for Judge for that term, but not a majority of votes cast at the election; and he is also returned as having received a majority of all the votes cast for the long term. He obtained the certificate of the proper county officer of his election for the short term, and applied to the Governor for a commission, which was refused. This proceeding is taken to enforce that demand.

The Court below refused to issue the writ and the relator appealed to this Court.

Currey & Crocker for Appellant.

1. Has the relator right to the office for which he demands a commission?

McKune v. John B. Weller.

---

By the Constitution, vacancies in office were contemplated, and provision is therein made for supplying the same, by the grant of a commission by the Governor, which should expire upon the occurrence of a specified event. (Cons., art. 5, sec. 8.)

By the statute entitled "Courts of Justice," (Wood's Dig., 150, sec. 15) it is provided that the Governor shall fill a vacancy which may happen in the office of District Judge, by granting a commission, which shall continue until the election and qualification of a Judge in the place of the one so appointed and commissioned; and also, it is declared by the same statute, that "a Judge to fill the vacancy shall be chosen at the first general election subsequent to the occurrence of the vacancy."

By section 43 of the statute entitled "Office," (Wood's Dig., 561) it is also provided, that whenever a vacancy shall happen in the office of District Judge, the Governor shall fill the same by granting a commission, which shall expire at the next general election by the people, at which election such officer shall be chosen for the balance of the unexpired term.

There was a vacancy in the office of the District Judge of the Sixth Judicial District, which occurred long before the general election of 1858, which was filled as provided by the Constitution and laws; and here arises the inquiry, was the relator elected at the last general election District Judge for the balance of the unexpired term existing in the office of District Judge of such district?

The answer to this is, that he was so elected, if there then existed a balance of a term then unexpired.

The term of six years, mentioned in sec. 6, art. 8, of the Constitution, is an entity, however many incumbents thereof there may be during such term. See in connection to this question, sec. 5, art. 6, of the Constitution; and Smith v. Halfacre, 6 How. (Miss.) R. 581; People v. Green, 2 Wend. 266; Coutant v. People, 11 Wend. 512; Nubling's Case, 6 Ohio State R. 40; Hughes v. Buckingham, 5 Sm. and M. R. 648; People v. Langdon, 8 Cal. R. 12; Wood's Dig. 375, sec. 4; Ib. 150, sec. 15; Ib. 561, sec. 43.

The relator received a large majority of all the votes cast at the last general election for the "balance of the unexpired term" mentioned, and obtained a certificate of election from the proper officer: such being the case, he has a right to the office, unless some objection or circumstance exists rendering such election a nullity.

McKune v. John B. Weller.

---

It is said the proclamation of the Governor did not designate the office in question as one to be filled at the last general election. Here a dereliction of duty is interposed by the respondent as a defense, strange as it may seem.

But such defense is untenable.

The statute provides, that "a Judge to fill the vacancy shall be chosen at the first general election subsequent to the occurrence of the vacancy."

The statute entitled "Elections" (Wood's Dig. 375) provides that the annual election generally held in September of each year shall be called the general election. Special elections are therein defined; and it thereby appears, that special elections can only be held for the purpose of filling vacancies in office. No special election can be held without the proclamation of the Governor ordering it, and appointing the time at which the same shall be held. The proclamation is a condition precedent to the validity of a special election. Not so with a general election; because it is appointed by the statute, and by the statute the time for holding the same is fixed.

As already appears, special elections can only be held to supply vacancies in office; but the converse of this, that all vacancies in office must be supplied at special elections, is not true, because the statute has declared otherwise. Certain vacancies must be filled at the general election.

See on this subject, Wood's Dig. 375, sections 1, 3, 5, 8; Ib. 561, sec. 43; Ib. 148, 150, sections 4, 15; People ex rel. Harris v. Brenham, 3 Cal. 477; People ex rel. Davis v. Cowles, 3 Kernan, 350.

If these authorities are to be followed, then the relator has right to the office and commission demanded.

Attorney General for Respondent.

The question is whether relator is entitled to the commission sought. Upon this question I would submit the following propositions:

McKune v. John B. Weller.

---

1. That under our Constitution, District Judges are elected for the term of six years, and that it is immaterial, so far as the term is concerned, as to whether they are elected to fill a vacancy which has occurred by death, resignation, or otherwise, or is about to occur by the expiration of the term of an incumbent.

2. That the Constitution does not fix the day at which any term shall commence, and therefore it is competent for the Legislature to do so.

This power is deduced from the general doctrine that the Legislature may exercise all power not prohibited by the Constitution, and I have not found such prohibition.

3. That the Legislature has, by law, fixed the time at which the term shall commence, and that such time depends upon the particular facts and circumstances attending each case.

If, for instance, a Judge was elected at the last election, to fill the vacancy about to occur by the expiration of the term of another, then, under the law, his term would commence on the first of January next. Wood's Dig. 150, art. 634.

But if elected to fill a vacancy which had already happened, then his term would commence immediately upon his qualification. Art. 635.

4. That although every District Judge is elected for the term of six years, yet the legality of his election, when brought in question, depends upon the circumstances under which the election took place.

To illustrate: if the election had been to fill a vacancy which is about to occur, then his receiving the proper number of votes, &c., at the general election, would entitle him to the office, without regard to whether notice of such an election by proclamation had been given, the law in that case being sufficient notice. But if the election was to fill a vacancy which had occurred by death, resignation, or otherwise, before the expiration of the term of another, then the notice by proclamation would have been absolutely necessary to the legality of the election. People v. Porter, 6 Cal. 26.

No election of a District Judge would be valid without a proclamation calling it, except that provided for in art. 634, p. 150, Wood's Digest.

An election to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Monson would have been a special election, although held at the same time as the general election.

McKune v. John B. Weller.

---

Before such an election could have been held, a proclamation for that purpose must have been issued. (People v. Porter.) Without such a proclamation, the people would not be supposed to know that Monson had ever resigned. No proclamation was made for that purpose, and therefore the only legal election which was had for District Judge was one to fill the vacancy about to occur by the expiration of Monson's term.

For the purposes of this action we must regard Monson as still on the Bench, no knowledge to the contrary having ever been lawfully communicated to the voters of his district.

My conclusions then are, that McKune (if elected at all) was elected for a term of six years, commencing the first of January next, and that he was entitled to a commission to that effect. Such a commission has been delivered to him.

It has been suggested by the other side that McKune's six years should commence to run from the time of his qualification. To that end he should have been elected to fill the vacancy caused by Monson's resignation. But such an election would, as I have shown, have been a special election, for which a proclamation was necessary.

It seems to me clear that the question of the time for which a judge is elected, is not affected by, nor does it affect, the question whether the election was at a general or a special election. The two propositions are wholly distinct, and are not dependent the one on the other.

In connection with this branch of the case, I respectfully refer the Court to my brief in the case of Brodie v. Weller, argued at this term.

BALDWIN, J., after stating the facts, delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., concurring.

The first question which is made is as to the right of the relator to the office he seeks, or to the commission as evidence of that right. The objection has been taken by the Attorney General that, conceding that the short term, thus described, might have been filled by election, if otherwise regularly had, yet there was no legal election in September, 1858, for a Judge for that term, because no proclamation was made of such election by the Governor. It is urged in reply, by the counsel of the relator, that an election for an office of this character, and held under the general law, does not depend, for its validity, upon any act of the Executive, but rests upon the constitutional right of the voters to select the incumbent, and upon the general statute prescribing the time, place and manner of the election. This precise question has never been decided in this State, though the counsel on both sides have cited cases (which we purpose reviewing) to maintain that, in principle, the question has been decided in favor of their respective views.

McKune v. John B. Weller.

---

By statute (Wood's Digest, 375, art. 2116, sec. 5) it is made the duty of the Governor, at least thirty days before any general election, to issue his proclamation designating the offices to be filled at such election, and to transmit a copy thereof to the Board of Supervisors of each county of the State; and by the succeeding section, it is made the duty of the Board of Supervisors to give at least ten days' notice thereof, by posting, or causing to be posted up, at each place of holding elections, in their county, a copy of such proclamation, and to insert the same in some newspaper published in the county, if any be so published.

The statute having required that the proclamation of the Governor and notice by the Supervisors shall be made previous to the election, it would seem to devolve upon the relator to show very clearly that these acts were not necessary to the validity of his election. It may be a difficult matter to define with precision the limits between those acts prescribed by the sovereign authority which are directory — that is, which may be obeyed or not, without affecting the validity of an act, and those which do affect it. Complaint is often made, and, not without reason, that Courts have sometimes gone too far in practically setting aside or holding nugatory the positive provisions of the statutes; for it is obvious, that where statutes affix no penalty for non-observance, and it is held that the provisions of them do not affect the validity of the acts to which those provisions relate, it is nearly the same thing to hold the acts valid and to hold that these provisions are entirely inoperative. A brief review of the authorities cited by the counsel of the appellant will go far to show where the true line of distinction is between statutes directory in their character, and those, the provisions of which must be substantially followed, in order to impart validity to the acts to which they relate. In order to ascertain this fact, and determine the necessity of the notice of this election, and the effect of a want of it, we propose to examine these cases in their order. The first case cited in point of time is that of Rex v. Loxdale and four others, (1 Burrows, 445) in which it is said (p. 447) that there is a known distinction between circumstances which are of the essence of a thing required to be done by an Act of Parliament, and clauses merely directory. The precise time in many cases is not of the essence. The illustration of this rule is given in the case of Rex v. Sparrow, (2 Strange, 123) in which it was held, that though the Justices had been guilty of neglect in not appointing Overseers of the Poor within the time specified by the statute, yet that they might be compelled to discharge this duty at a subsequent time. In Smith's Commentaries on Statutory and Constitutional Construction (p. 792, sec. 679) the author, after citing and approving this doctrine, says: "A distinction in the application of the rule in the cases cited should be observed, that is, between cases where certain acts to be done are of the essence of the thing required to be done by the act, in which case it is imperative, and things which are not of the essence; in the latter case, it is merely directory; and this is one of the criterions by which to determine whether the requisition is imperative or merely directory." * * *

McKune v. John B. Weller.

---

Lord Mansfield says: "There is a known distinction between circumstances which are of the essence of a thing required to be done by an Act of Parliament, and clauses merely directory. The precise time in many cases is not of the essence." This distinction prevailed in the case of the Thames Manufacturing Company v. Lathrop. In that case, a statute required the Assessors to return an abstract of their assessment lists on or before the first day of December in each year, and the question arose, whether an assessment was valid when the assessment was not returned until after the time specified in the act. The Court held that the general statute had been made for the assessment of taxes, by which Assessors were to be chosen, whose duty it was to receive lists of all the inhabitants, and having perfected them by adding property omitted, by valuation of the items, and by the requisite assessments, to return an abstract of the lists to the Town Clerk on or before the first of December in each year. The lists and valuation of the

McKune v. John B. Weller.

---

Town Clerk were directed to be submitted, when requested, to the inspection of every person liable to pay taxes. A Board of Review was constituted, to hear appeals from the doings of the Assessors, and having given not less than ten days' notice, they were to meet on or before the first Monday of January in each year, to determine the appeals made to them. The assessment list, as annually made and corrected, was the rule for the apportionment of taxes to individuals. From this view of the law it appeared to be a positive provision, that the lists should be returned to the office of the Town Clerk on or before the first of December in each year. This direction was imperative, and was alone alterable by the Legislature. The Court must take the law as they found it, and could not say that a return after the first of December was valid, unless they assumed the character of law-makers. The reason of this legislative provision was very apparent. It was for the general benefit of every inhabitant of the towns, that each might inspect the list of his estate, and if he believed injustice done him, that he might appeal for its correction to the Board of Review. A time for the return of the lists should be limited, the general convenience demanded it, and that it should be sufficiently early for universal inspection, and preparation for a future hearing before the Board of Review, was perfectly obvious. On this principle the Legislature appointed the first of December, as the ultimate period of the return. This branch of the law was imperative, and as unchangeable by the Courts as any other; and were it within their competency it would be as difficult to assign a period more reasonable. That the return should punctually be made was indispensable. A different principle would nullify the law, and produce the general inconvenience arising from an unlimited return. No person in such case could know when he might inspect his list; and if the return was late, no time either for reflection or preparation for a review could be had. If a Legislature, in a charter of incorporation, had authorized the laying of taxes upon lists returned to a public office at a specified time, the necessity of a strict observance of limitation would not admit of a question. The case before the Court was strictly analogous to the one supposed. The general law was an enabling act to all the towns; it had prescribed the subjects of taxation and the mode, and as there was no authority to tax, except what was conferred by the law, it must be strictly observed. It had been inquired, whether the returns of the abstract of the lists by the Town Clerk to the Controller must be by the first of March in each year, according to the provisions of the Act in question; and if not, whether the Legislature is precluded from laying taxes upon the assessment lists? Unquestionably, it is not. The case put and the one under discussion were in no respect analogous. The abstract assessment lists of the towns must be strictly returned to the Town Clerk, or there was no legal assessment. But if a Town Clerk does not return to the Controller an abstract of the assessment lists, pursuant to the provisions of the law, the list was not invalidated, but he was subjected to a penalty."

---

McKune v. John B. Weller.

---

Striter v. Kelly, 7 Hill, 9, is cited, but that case only holds that where a statute declares that the Common Council should vote by ayes and noes, the provision on that subject in the charter of New York was merely directory. In that case, Judge Bronson dissented; and we are inclined to think had the best of the argument. In 11 Wendell, 605, People ex rel. Smith v. Peck, etc., the principle declared in head note is, that an election of trustees of a church is good, although the requirements of the statute in respect to the notice of such election have not been complied with, provided the election was fairly conducted, and there is no complaint of want of notice. But this note of the Reporter is broader than the decision of the Court; for Judge Savage says: "The Judge stated to the jury that the election was not necessarily void because the notice given by the trustees to the minister was less than one month, etc., and did not contain the names of the trustees whose seats became vacant, and was not announced for two successive Sabbaths, provided the election was fairly conducted, and all in fact had notice; but if the omissions were fraudulently made, or the election had thereby been prejudiced, then the omission should invalidate the election. All this I think is sound doctrine." In the People v. Runkel, (9 Johns. R. 158) the Court says: "We must give the statute a reasonable and liberal construction for the benefit of the churches. (See also, 6 Cowen, 23.) The object of the notice is, that the voters may be fully apprised of the election, and may attend and exercise their rights. There is no pretense in this case that every voter was not present, for they appear to have come from a distance; the time was well understood, and had been the same for many years. No evil resulted from the omission, if there was any; no fraud was imputed, and all parties attended and thereby admitted notice." Rodelbaugh v. Sanks (2 Watts, 9) merely holds that a section of the Act of Assembly of Pennsylvania, providing that marriages shall be solemnized before twelve witnesses, etc., is merely directory, and the pregnant reason is given by C. J. Gibson, "that if it were held to affect the contract, the effect would be to bastardize a vast majority of the children which have been born within the State for half a century." The last case cited is that of the People v. Cowles, reported in 3 Kernan, 350, and is really the only one cited by the appellant (except one in our own State, to which we will presently refer) which seems to bear with any directness upon the precise question before us. This case, therefore, will justify a more detailed examination than we have given the others. The question came before the Court of Appeals of New York on this state of facts: Robert H. Morris was elected Judge of the Supreme Court of New York, for eight years, from first of January, 1853; on the twenty-third of October, 1855, he died. A general election of Judges was held on the sixth of November, 1855. No notice was given by the Secretary of State of this election to fill the vacancy in Judge Morris' term — the laws of New York requiring that officer to give the notice; but the death of Morris occurred after notices given of the other elections and after the time given for making such notification. At the election, the relator was elected. The Governor, however, not regarding the election of relator, appointed defendant to the office. The Supreme Court of New York, at special term, decided in favor of the defendant; and afterwards, at a general term, modifying the judgment in an important particular, confirmed the judgment of the special term. The case was carried to the Court of Appeals, and that Court, by a majority — five to three — reversed the judgment. The opinion in the case in 3 Kernan was delivered by Johnson, J., and J. J. Denio, Comstock, Selden and Hubbard, concurred. Mr. Justice Wright delivered a dissenting opinion, in which Justices Mitchell and Johnson concurred. The stress of the opinion of the majority was on the peculiar features of the Constitution of the

---

---

McKune v. John B. Weller.

---

State; from which they deduced the opinion, by a process of reasoning which is almost impossible for us to comprehend, that when the office of a Justice of the Supreme Court becomes vacant before the expiration of his term of office, the vacancy is to be supplied by the electors of the Judicial District in which it exists, at the next general election of Judges, although the vacancy occur at so late a day that no notice is or can be given by the Secretary of State or other officer, pursuant to the statute, that a Justice is to be elected to fill the vacancy; and that when the incumbent, whose term of office would not have expired for several years, died on the twenty-third of October, and the electors of the district at the general election of Judges, on the ensuing sixth of November, elected a person to fill the vacancy, such election was valid, notwithstanding no notice was given by the Secretary of State that a Justice was to be elected to fill the vacancy at the election. It will be seen, by a careful perusal of the opinion, that this conclusion was induced by the peculiar structure of the Constitution of New York, and that it was not necessary to decide whether, in an ordinary case of vacancy occurring before the time of giving notice, by the Secretary of State, as required by the statute, a failure to give such notice would affect the validity of the election. But even if this judgment were otherwise fully in point, it is stripped of much, if not the whole of its authority, by the fact that it is at best, but the judgment of five Judges against three of the same tribunal, those three supported by a contrary ruling of the Supreme Court at a special term, and sustained substantially by the Supreme Court at a general term, after the subject had been thoroughly discussed and maturely considered. But as to the particular point in this case, the decision, if it be for the relator here, is mere obiter, and is not even noticed in the report of the case as a point decided. The dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Wright on the point involved expresses so forcibly our conclusions, that we insert it as expressive of our own views: "It is not contended by the relator that he has any right to the office, unless his interpretation of the thirteenth section be the correct one. He reposes himself upon the ground that the Constitution contains a positive direction as to the times when vacancies shall be filled, and that it would be an infringement of the instrument to restrict the right of the elector, by legislative enactment, to a particular kind of vacancies, viz: such as had occurred twenty days before, or of which the Secretary of State, and other officers of the Government have actually notified the people. He takes the unqualified position that the section is a restriction upon legislative authority, and that no statute can be enacted which shall interfere with the constitutional privilege or right of the elector, when a vacancy occurs prior to the day fixed for voting for Judges throughout the State, to cast his ballot for a person to fill the vacancy. By his construction the election to fill the vacancy is one held, not pursuant to any statute, but an unregulated assemblage of the electors under a constitutional provision. It is urged that it is not strictly correct to say that the election to fill the vacancy is held under the Constitution, as the Legislature provides the machinery, and the Constitution only fixes the time. But is it true that anything is provided by statute? A popular election is being held for the choice of other officers, regulated and conducted according to law, but not to fill a vacancy in the judicial office. The elector may embrace the occasion to deposit his ballot designating a person to fill a vacancy, but not under any statutory provision. He acts not pursuant to law, but the Constitution. Thus to sustain the relator's position, we are driven to assume that the term 'election,' as used in the Constitution, means something else than an assembling of the electors to vote under and in pursuance of statute authority; and that a valid election may be held independent of, and indeed in restraint of legislative regulation. That all the elector has to do is to deposit his ballot at the time fixed for a 'general election of Judges,' even though there be no statute regulation, or no authority by law, and the 'election' contemplated by the Constitution is complete. In this case it is not pretended that the election was held under any statute. No notice was given that a vacancy existed, or that the electors were required to fill it. No provision was made by law for receiving or canvassing the votes cast to fill a vacancy in the judicial office, or for ascertaining the fact whether there had been any choice. Before the votes were canvassed, the relator took the constitutional oath, and claimed to be entitled to the office, which he might well do if the 'election' was one unregulated by law, and valid by the simple force of a constitutional provision. I had supposed that it was a proposition not to be controverted, that it is by virtue of statutes alone that all valid elections are held. It has never before been pretended that a person could make title to an office through the popular vote, unless such vote was cast in pursuance of legislative regulation and authority. All the efficacy given to the act of casting a ballot is derived from the law-making power, and through legal enactments; and indeed, the Legislature must provide for and regulate the conduct of an election, or there can be none. The convention found the subject of popular election instituted and regulated by law, and the framers of the Constitution are to be understood as speaking of, and referring to such an entity as then existed, or might afterwards exist, by force of statute regulation. It is not to be assumed that the 'general election of Judges' mentioned in the thirteenth section, is not that authorized by law, and held under and in pursuance of legislative enactments, but a meeting of the people to vote under the organic law itself; and without such assumption the right of the relator has no foundation. His argument is that the Constitution appoints the time for the people to meet and vote, and all that is required to constitute a valid election, within the meaning of the thirteenth section of the Judiciary article, is for the electors to cast their ballots. Nay, further, that any statute regulation practically preventing the filling of a vacancy at the time designated in the Constitution, is absolutely void. Though the convention of 1846 may have been justly charged with legislating, rather than erecting the frame work of government, I may be allowed to repel the imputation (having been myself a member of that convention) that they so far mistook the nature and purposes of a written Constitution, as to suppose that it might or could contain within itself the elements of active enforcement. They meant by the term 'election,' that institution created and existing by operation of law, and that alone, and which, without the exercise of legislative power, could have no efficiency. The relator must make title under and in pursuance of a statute, or not at all. He must have received a plurality of votes at an election held pursuant to law, or he has no title or claim to the office. It was at such an election the Constitution provided that vacancies should be filled, and at none other."

---

McKune v. John B. Weller.

---

---

McKune v. John B. Weller.

---

"But let it be conceded that the Constitution only fixes the time, and all other essentials to constitute an election, except giving notice, are left to be prescribed by the Legislature, and that it has the power, and the obligation rests on it to provide for conducting the election; still, would this be a valid election? It is to be observed that, by fixing the time, the Legislature are virtually restricted from declaring that it shall be an essential requisite to a valid election, that the electors shall have official notice that a vacancy exists. Nothing is left to the law-making power but to provide for receiving the ballots, canvassing the vote, and declaring the result. Is not notice to the electors that a vacancy exists and is to be filled, an essential characteristic, independent of any statute requirement, to a valid election? I think that it is."

McKune v. John B. Weller.

---

"Notice to the electors lies at the foundation of any popular elective system. The elector cannot act through the ballot without notice that a vacancy exists to be filled. Necessity and sound policy demand that every elector shall have both the knowledge and the opportunity to enable him to exercise the elective right deliberately and intelligently. In our elective system, the duty of giving notice is devolved upon the Secretary of State. The Legislature has wisely provided that the notice shall be given by this officer, within a time and in a way calculated to give the fullest notice to the electors. It may be that, under this statute regulation, the omission to give the required notice of an election of a Judge for a regular term would or ought not to vitiate the election. The elector should be presumed to know the law, and consequently, at what period the regular term of the public officers to be voted for will expire, and be prepared to act accordingly. But there can be no such presumption when the election is to fill a vacancy. I believe that no case can be found, holding that notice to the electors of the existence of a vacancy, and calling on them to fill it, is not essential to give validity to the meeting of the electoral body to discharge the special duty. Certainly, it could rest on no principle or sound rule of governmental policy. In the nature of things, notice to the electors that a vacancy exists, and calling on him to fill it, is an essential characteristic of a popular election; and public policy and safety require that it should be given in such form as to reach every elector who has the duty to discharge. Notice, therefore, being an essential element of an election to fill a vacancy, whether we regard the election at which the relator claims to have received a plurality of votes held in pursuance of the Constitution or the law, it was equally invalid."

McKune v. John B. Weller.

The case of the People v. Brenham (3 Cal. 477) is the authority chiefly relied on by the relator. It is not necessary to assail that case; for, as we shall show, the principle there announced does not militate against the respondent. But it is proper to remark that the force of this case is somewhat shaken by the fact that it was decided by a divided bench, and that the two Judges who concurred in the judgment agreed to it upon different grounds. It is not easy to support that decision, even limited and qualified as it has been in the subsequent case of the People v. Porter, (6 Cal. 26). The able argument of the respondent's counsel suggests, to say the least, some doubts of the correctness of the principles there laid down. But the utmost extent to which the Court go in that case is to hold that no proclamation or notice is necessary to give validity to an election when the term is fixed by law, and expires, by limitation, at a given period, and the office is to be filled by statute at the time prescribed by law. In such case, it is held, as seems to be conceded by Mr. Justice Wright, in the case before cited from 3 Kernan, that the people are charged with a knowledge of the law, and must be held to act in accordance with that knowledge. In such case, the election must be held in any event, and it is not in any way dependent upon any extrinsic or contingent event. Though, as will be seen, we do not approve of much of the reasoning from which our predecessors deduced this conclusion, as we shall have occasion hereafter to explain, yet we do not here question the propriety of that judgment upon the facts stated. In the People v. Porter, (6 Cal. 26) this same general doctrine came under review. That was the case of an election by the people of a Judge of the County Court, to fill a vacancy occurring by the resignation of the previous incumbent. No proclamation was made by the Governor. The Governor appointed Mr. Porter after this election. The present Chief Justice delivered the opinion, and after stating the facts, says: "This being the case, was the election of Mr. Leake, which occurred on the 5th of September, legal? The law provides that vacancies in certain offices shall be filled by election at the next general election after the vacancy occurs. To render such election valid, it is necessary that it shall be conducted in the manner prescribed by law. The law requires that the Governor shall make proclamation for thirty days prior to each general election, designating the offices to be filled at such election. The Supervisors of each county are required to give notice for at least ten days, by posting a copy of such proclamation at each place of holding the election in the county, and inserting the same in a newspaper, if one be published in the county. (See Statutes of 1855, page 160.)

McKune v. John B. Weller.

---

"No such notice was or could have been given in this case, there not being thirty days intervening between the date of the letter of resignation and the day of election. The order published by the Supervisors of said county, being without authority of law, was a nullity. It is contended that the statute requiring proclamation to be made of the offices to be filled is merely directory, and that a failure to give such notice will not vitiate an election. The case of the People v. Brenham, (3 Cal. Rep. 491) is cited in support of this doctrine."

"The opinion in that case does not go to the extent claimed by counsel, and is not applicable to the case under consideration. I understand the decision to apply only to general elections, or elections to fill vacancies occasioned by the operation of law. The question involved was the validity of an election held under the charter of the city of San Francisco, to fill vacancies occasioned not by resignation, but by reason of the expiration of the term for which the incumbents were elected. The Court properly held, that the failure of the incumbent to give the required notice could not deprive the people of their right under the law to elect their officers. But it has nowhere been decided that such notice is not essential to the validity of all special elections. An election to fill a vacancy occasioned by the death or resignation of an officer is a special election, and the provision of our laws which requires such elections to be held at the same time and place with general elections does not change their character."

"It is essential to the proper exercise of the elective franchise that the voters should be informed of the offices in which vacancies have occurred, before each general election, in order that they may select fit and proper persons to perform the duties of such office."

McKune v. John B. Weller.

---

"The law gives notice of those offices which are vacant, by reason of the expiration of the term of the incumbent. The law also provides that the Governor of the State shall, by proclamation, give notice of such vacancies as are occasioned by death, resignation, or removal from office; and without this notice elections to fill such vacancies are invalid." It will be seen that the late Chief Justice dissented, for the reasons expressed in the case of Brenham. The inference would seem to be that he considered the doctrine of Porter's case as conflicting with those in Brenham's.

It is difficult to see the distinction in principle between this last case and that at bar. If Monson had not resigned, he would have been entitled to hold for this short term — that is, for the period intervening between the election and January, 1859. This period, indeed, was a portion of his term of six years, commencing from January 1st, 1853. There was, then, a vacancy for this period. This vacancy did not exist by operation of law, in the sense in which those words are used by the Court in the extracts just given. And therefore, within the doctrine of that case, it was necessary for the public notice required by the statute to be given. The argument that, as Botts was appointed to fill Monson's place, and as, by the Constitution, Botts' appointment could last only until the election, the vacancy left in the balance of the term, by operation of law, cannot be upheld. In the first place, it cannot be assumed that all the voters of the county necessarily knew that Monson had resigned and Botts had been appointed to succeed him. Even if the knowledge of the fact could be assumed in this particular case, it would make but little for the argument, for we are now discussing not an isolated case, but the general principle. The law acts by general rules, not by exceptional or particular instances, and whatever may be the merits or demerits of the given case, they must yield to the rule which is to govern all cases arising under the law. Thus, the very rule invoked here is that the people are presumed to know the law, and that it required an election to be held for this term in September, when it is quite evident that the people knew no such thing. But still, we must give effect to such general principles of presumption, against our very strong assurance that in particular instances they were not true as matter of fact. The very reason why a proclamation is ordered to be made, is because it is supposed that the people would not otherwise know the fact proclaimed. We cannot presume, as matter of law, that they did know; still less can we presume they knew that an election was legal and proper in the face of the Governor's proclamation, which impliedly asserted the contrary, by giving notice that an election would be held to fill many offices, among which this was not. And the facts in the record go to show that the people generally did not so understand or believe.

McKune v. John B. Weller.

---

We have thus reviewed the authorities cited, and they certainly fail to show that the position of the relator is sustained by any authority directly to the point, and of controlling weight. And we are entitled to conclude, from the ability and research of the counsel, that they have not been cited, because none such exist. We have examined with care the authorities within our reach, and have not been more successful than the learned counsel. We think, however, that the examination we have made shows the truth of Mr. Justice Wright's observations, that no authority can be found which authentically holds (for the doctrine of 3 Kernan is mere obiter) that an election held without notice, to fill a vacancy, is valid. The case of People v. Porter is the other way; and while the following cases do not expressly hold that the notice is essential, yet they evidently go, more or less directly, upon the idea that it is. (9 N. H. R. 524; Id. 369; 23 Wendell, 9; 4 Pick. 257. See also, 8 Greenl. 365; 7 N.H.) While the principle which establishes the line of discrimination between acts directory and acts indispensable clearly indicates the correctness of the rule we have adopted—a rule supported by the clear and cogent reasoning of Mr. Justice Wright and those associates who agreed with him in the case of Cowles. Nor do we, as before intimated, see the force of the reasoning urged in favor of the contrary view. The argument ab inconvenienti is far from the most logical and satisfactory. It is easily answered, too, by corresponding evils on the other side of the proposition.

It is true, the Governor may prolong or increase his power by failing to make the proclamation. But this cannot be expected in these cases of vacancy, nor indeed, in any case. It is not to be supposed that the Executive will prove derelict to his duty, especially for so small an object. The same argument would deny all but a scanty portion of his power. Under the pardoning power, he might, by a system of universal pardons, practically abrogate the whole criminal law; indeed, he might introduce general anarchy by refusing to execute the laws. The Legislature may dissolve the Government by refusing to levy taxes or to make appropriations, but these possible abuses of power are not reasons for refusing to give or acknowledge it. The evils on the other side are more probable of occurrence, and scarcely less injurious in character. If we hold to the principle that, whenever a vacancy happens, an election may be valid without notice to the people, frauds may and will be committed. This case may not afford an illustration, but others would. Where would be the limits of the principle? for we must have some general rule. It would apply to districts of more than one county as well as smaller districts — to cases of vacancy in other offices as well as those of Judges — and to Judges of the Supreme Court as well as of districts and counties. If death or resignation happens the day before the election, and when the fact was unknown — possibly kept concealed by design — all that it would be necessary for a man to do, would be to get a few votes — it matters not how few — and he could get the office, not only without but against the will of the great body of the people. The establishment of the principle would beget a laxity in the giving of this public notice of elections which might keep the people, in many instances, in ignorance of the offices to be filled at the various elections; and all this is to be done because of a legal presumption of “knowledge by the people of law and facts,” which every man knows is not always possessed even by the best informed, of which this case is itself a sufficient illustration. We cannot hold as nugatory a plain statutory enactment upon reasons so unsatisfactory. We think we have shown that the definition given by the authorities of directory acts, namely, those which are not of the substance of the thing provided for, has no application to this statute; that, on the contrary, the means, and only sure and efficient means, of bringing to the people authentic knowledge of their electoral rights and duties, is of the very substance of the election at which they are to exercise them; and that, if we hold in cases of vacancies that the Act requiring this proclamation which gives this intelligence is merely directory, and therefore, to be followed or not at pleasure, we may, with the same propriety, set aside every provision of law regulating the time, place and manner of elections. We should thus hold that an election may be independent of legislative control, protection or regulation.

McKune v. John B. Weller.

---

---

White v. Moses.

No censure is properly attributable to the Executive Department for its failure to insert this term in the proclamation; for the question as to the existence of this fraction of time as a period to be filled by popular election was a new, and by no means, a clear one, nor do we now decide that it did constitute such a term as to have called for this action.

This view being decisive of the relator's case, it is not necessary for us to pass upon the other questions raised in the case. Some of them arise in other cases before us, and will be disposed of when those causes shall be determined. Nor is it necessary to consider by what title the incumbent holds the office in question. It is sufficient that the relator has no title to it.

The judgment of the Twelfth District Court is affirmed.

WHITE v. MOSES et al.

In an action of ejectment, a juror who has formed an opinion adverse to the validity of title under which defendants claimed, is an incompetent juror.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, County of San Francisco.

This was an action of ejectment to recover a lot of land. The defendants claimed title through one J. F. Limantour, who claimed to be the grantee under the Mexican government.

On the trial, one William H. Graham was called as a juror, and was challenged for cause, by the defendants. On examination, touching his competency as a juror, Graham testified that he was acquainted with the claim of title by Limantour. That he knew nothing of the facts of such title except from his reading of the newspapers; that he had formed and expressed an opinion in respect to the facts of such claim; that such opinion was decided, and would require testimony to remove it. Another juror, Rosenbaum, on his examination respecting his qualification, testified that he had formed an opinion adverse to the Limantour claim which would require testimony to remove; that he had always looked upon the claim as fraudulent, &c.

These persons were admitted by the Court as competent jurors: defendants excepted. Plaintiff had judgment, and defendants appealed.

J. P. Treadwell for Appellants.

William W. Crans, jr., for Respondent.

TERRY, C. J., delivered the opinion of the Court — BALDWIN, J., concurring.

The jurors, Graham and Rosenbaum, having formed an opinion adverse to the validity of the title under which defendants claimed, were incompetent to sit in the case, and the acceptance of those jurors against the objection of defendants was error.

Judgment reversed and new trial ordered.

A nonsuit was entered, on the ground that the plaintiffs had not established their character as executors, and afterwards, on the application of the plaintiffs, the judgment of nonsuit was vacated and a new trial granted. From this order defendants appealed.

Dickinson v. Owen.

DICKINSON v. OWEN.

M, a married woman, had a sum of money left her by bequest during coverture; she and her husband joined in a power of attorney to O, authorising him to demand and receipt for the money. O received the money under said power. Some time after the receipt of the money by O, the husband of M died. M brought suit against O for the money; O set up as a defense: 1. That the money was collected for the husband, and a settlement and discharge since his death with his administrator. 2. Money advanced, from time to time, to the husband during his lifetime, with the knowledge of M. Held, that the money was the separate property of M, and when O received it, he received it as the trustee of M, and that it could not be charged with money advanced to the husband, nor could the settlement with the administrator have any effect on M's rights.

When a bailee disclaims his relation to the bailor he cannot claim the right to require a demand for the money before interest is charged against him.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Thirteenth Judicial District, County of Mariposa.

The plaintiff was entitled to a sum of money from the estate of her brother, Charles Mills, who died in Louisiana, leaving a will; and she, in order to get the money due, in connection with her husband, then living, made a power of attorney to the defendant in 1852, authorizing him to collect it from the representative of Mills' estate in New Orleans. The defendant collected the money. After the death of the husband of plaintiff, she demanded the money of the defendant, who did not pay it over. The defendant put in an answer, in which he averred that the money was collected for the husband, O. M. Dickinson, and that after the husband's death, the defendant settled with and obtained a discharge from the administrator of the latter; and further averring "that long anterior to the death of O. M. Dickinson, he, defendant, had from time to time, and at divers times and places, paid and advanced to said O. M. Dickinson large amounts of money, to wit, about the sum of $2,500, and which said sums of money were paid to and within the knowledge of the said plaintiffs, as defendant verily believes, and were used in the support and maintenance of said O. M. Dickinson and the plaintiff."

This latter clause to the answer was demurred to, and the demurrer sustained. Defendant appealed.

Dickinson v. Owen.

---

Shafters, Park and Heydenfeldt for Appellant.

1. Owen was the agent of Dickinson alone in collecting the money, because a married woman cannot appoint an attorney.

Story on Agency, sec. 6, and authorities there cited.

The rule in this State is the common law upon that subject — it has not been altered by statutes.

In Rowe v. Kohle, 4 Cal. 285, this Court says: "We have repeatedly held that our statute does not change the rule of the common law upon the relation of husband and wife, except in the particular cases expressly provided by the statute, and that a femme covert cannot contract under the laws of this State so as to render her liable in a suit at law." See also, Simpers v. Sloan, 5 Cal. 457; Snyder v. Webb, 3 Cal. 83.

It follows that Owen was in no wise in privity with the plaintiff. The husband has this right to the custody and control of the wife's separate estate. Wood's Dig., p. 488, sec. 6.

Therefore he had the right to collect the money due to the plaintiff from the brother's estate, and this he effectually accomplished, through the defendant as his agent; Qui facit per alium, facit per se. This made the defendant liable to the husband as his agent. The present case goes upon the idea of his liability to the plaintiff as her agent, whereas she was only entitled to seek redress out of the estate of the husband. The finding ought to have been for the defendant.

2. If the plaintiff was entitled to recover, she could not recover interest. The principal alone was her separate estate. The statute declares "the rents and profits of the separate estate of either husband or wife shall be deemed common property." Wood's Dig., p. 488, sec. 9.

3. If the point first taken is good, then it is evident the Court erred in sustaining the demurrer to the declaration, for if the defendant was only the agent of Dickinson (having no privity with plaintiff) then he had the right to settle with Dickinson or his administrator, and an allegation of such settlement was a good defense.

Dickinson v. Owen.

---

John H. Saunders for Respondent.

The only defenses really interposed by the original answer in the Court below were, first, limitations — which has been abandoned — and second, that after the death of the husband of plaintiff, defendant had a settlement with his administrator, involving the item of the wife's claim in this action.

Plaintiff's demurrer to the latter defense was sustained, and rightly, because there can be no pretense that the administrator of the husband (who, in respect of the separate estate of the wife, is a mere trustee during coverture) would be entitled to the custody of the estate as against the wife surviving. During his life, it would have been his duty to keep the principal fund separate from his own, for the reason that it did not belong to him, and could not possibly be part of the general assets of his estate. The use of it, in his own private affairs, in such a way as to destroy the identity of the fund, would have been conversion. As long as it could be identified, she, being the owner, could during coverture, for improvidence of her husband, secure its preservation by the interposition of another trustee in the place of her husband. Wood's Digest, p. 488, sec. 8. And upon his demise, she, as the owner, would be entitled to its custody and control. See Wood's Digest, p. 488, sec. 6, providing for the management and control of the separate estate of the wife, by the husband, only during the continuance of the marriage.

Our system, derived from the Louisiana Code, and substantially the same, and in the particular we now consider, only differing from it in the husband and wife deriving, by inheritance from each other, a part of the separate estate, is very well illustrated upon this point by the case of Robin et al. v. Castille, 4 La. Rep., New Series, p. 187, in which the Court says: "When the wife dies during coverture, her heirs are seized of all the effects constituting her separate estate from the moment of her decease."

By the amended answer, the settlement with the administrator of the husband is reasserted, with the further defense that "long anterior to the death of the said O. M. Dickinson, he, the said defendant, had, from time to time, and at divers times and places, paid and advanced to said O. M. Dickinson large amounts of money, to wit: about the sum of $2,500; and which said moneys were paid to, and within the knowledge of, said plaintiff, as defendant verily believes, and were used in the support and maintenance of said O. M. Dickinson and said plaintiff."

Dickinson v. Owen.

Plaintiff's demurrer to this defense was also sustained, and this is one of the alleged errors assigned by appellant, and the subject of the first point of his brief, because,

1st. Defendant, acting under a power from plaintiff and her husband, was the husband's agent, not hers, she being disabled by coverture from appointing an agent.

2d. The husband has the right to custody of wife's separate estate, and therefore, properly received the $2,500 from defendant.

All of this reasoning goes upon the hypothesis that defendant did, in fact, pay over the trust fund to the husband in his lifetime, and yet the amended answer indicates, indeed asserts in terms, that all dealings between defendant and the husband were in private account between them, and had not the least reference to the specific fund in question.

The relative position of the parties to this fund is this: Defendant, upon receipt of this fund, held it in trust to permit the husband to use, but not alienate or encumber it during coverture, and upon his demise or dissolution of coverture, to the use of the wife absolutely.

If the husband had received it during his life he would have been substituted in the same trusts, and the wife must have succeeded to the possession and control of the fund immediately upon his death. Not receiving it, the original trust necessarily remains, and the wife is, of course, entitled to its possession and use, and to its recovery, by an action for money had and received, or bill in equity.

The privity entitling the wife to this action, arises not out of a technical relation to a deed, but out of her absolute ownership of the fund which defendant has, and unjustly refuses to pay her. It is the elementary privity of trustee and cestui que trust, which the law creates whenever one man has received money or property properly applicable to the use of another, without regard to the manner of its acquisition. See 2 Story's Eq., sec. 1196.

Dickinson v. Owen.

---

Although the authorities cited by appellant, with many others, show that the wife cannot, during coverture, contract or render herself liable by the execution of a power, the same authorities show she may do what is necessary to possess herself of her separate estate. See Story on Agency, sec. 6.

Second. Appellants insist that even if plaintiff became entitled to receive from defendant the principal sum of $2,500, she has no right to the interest accrued during the lifetime of the husband, he being entitled to that by our statute.

At common law, the husband had the personal privilege of entitling himself to his wife's choses in action, by reducing them into possession during the coverture. If he did not reduce them into possession, the wife surviving him was entitled, and not his personal representatives. See Blackstone, book 2, ch. 24.

Our law preserves the ultimate ownership to the wife, and compensates the husband for his administration of the separate property of the wife by the profits. It exempts the principal from the common law marital right, which before embraced principal and profits, but subjects its produce to its exercise. And the husband has no more vested estate or interest now, in the current profits of the wife's estate not reduced by him to possession, than before our statute he had in the principal.

And this upon the principle of the case cited by appellants, (Rowe v. Hohle, 4 Cal. 285) "That our statute does not change the rule of common law upon the relation of husband and wife, except in the particular cases expressly provided by the statute, etc."

BALDWIN, J., after stating the facts, delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., and FIELD, J., concurring.

As the money was due the wife by bequest during the coverture, it was the separate property of the wife, (Wood's Digest, 487, art. 2,605) and this was, no doubt, known to the defendant; indeed, the face of the power very clearly indicates the facts. When he received the money, therefore, he received it as trustee of the wife. The title of the wife was in no way impaired by the mere mode which she adopted—through a power of attorney in which her husband joined—to collect the fund. The question does not arise as to the right of the husband to receive this money for the wife from the attorney; for the defense does not pretend that he did so receive it. We take the averment demurred to only to assert that the defendant had dealings with Dickinson, and had loaned or advanced him money; but it is not charged when this was—whether before or after the receipt of this money; nor that there was any advance—so to call it—of this money, or even on account of it. It merely amounts to an attempt to set off against this claim of the wife a claim against the husband. It is immaterial what Dickinson did with the money advanced him, under the circumstances; the wife's separate estate is not chargeable with it.

The property being that of the wife, of course no settlement with or discharge by the administrator of the deceased husband could have any effect upon her right.

The defendant having disclaimed the relation of bailee to the plaintiff, cannot claim the right of the bailee to require a demand for the money, before interest is charged against him.

People v. John B. Weller.

PEOPLE ex rel. SAMUEL H. BRODIE v. JOHN B. WELLER, GOVERNOR.

A person duly elected Judge of the District Court of this State, is entitled to hold office for the period of six years.

Where an election for the office of District Judge was held by the qualified electors of such district at the general election in 1858, and the term of the present incumbent of that office does not expire until January, 1861: Held, that such election was unauthorized and the person elected is not entitled to a commission to such office.

The statute, so far as it affects the election of 1858, only applies to such offices as were to become vacant in January, 1860, and this is evident as well as by the terms of the act as the unreasonableness of supposing that the Legislature meant to authorize an election several years in advance of the time when the office was to be filled.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District, County of San Francisco.

This was an application to the Court below for a peremptory writ of mandamus, to compel the defendant, as Governor of this State, to issue to the relator, Samuel H. Brodie, a commission as Judge of the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District.

The facts upon which the application was based are as follows: The Twelfth District was created, by act of the Legislature, on the fifteenth day of May, 1854. On the twenty-sixth day of May, 1854, Edward Norton was appointed and commissioned by the Governor as Judge of the District Court for the Twelfth Judicial District. At the general election in September, 1854, he was elected Judge of that district, and was duly commissioned, and entered by virtue of his election and commission upon that office on the second day of January, 1855.

On the thirtieth day of July, 1858, the defendant, as Governor, issued his proclamation, as required by law, designating certain offices to be filled at the general election to be held on the first day of September, 1858; but the office of District Judge was not among the number so designated. The qualified electors of the Twelfth Judicial District, however, held an election to fill the office of District Judge of that district, and at such election the relator received the highest number of votes for that office. The County Clerk of San Francisco county subsequently issued to the relator a certificate of his election, and the relator applied to the Governor for a commission, which was declined, and he then applied to the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District for a mandamus. The Court below refused to order the issuance of a peremptory writ of mandamus, and the relator appealed to this Court.

People v. John B. Weller.

---

G. F. & Wm. H. Sharp for Appellant.

The relator contends that the statute of 1853 (Wood's Dig. p. 150, art. 634) is constitutional, and that the relator, who was elected Judge of the Twelfth District Court in 1858, at the general election, is entitled to take and hold office from the first of January, 1859. The Constitution evidently contemplated the fixing of the time of the commencement of the term of the District Judges en masse, and we contend that even without legislation that instrument prescribes first of January, 1853, as the commencement of the term of the second class of Judges, and the first of January, 1859, as the commencement of the term of their successors. The statute of 1853 was passed in conformity with this constitutional provision.

Uniformity of election is what was aimed at by that instrument. The language of art. 6, sec. 5, is not that each of said Judges shall be elected at a general election, but "the Judges," as a class, "shall be elected at the general election, pointing to the one election for all the District Judges. To accomplish this uniformity, the first officers elected held for two years from the first of January next after their election, a period much shorter than that prescribed by the Constitution as the proper term of their successors. This was undoubtedly for the sake of uniformity. At the end of those two years the district would, to a certain extent, be arranged, and a point of time was fixed from which the terms of District Judges would thereafter run.

The plan contended for by the other side would produce disorder throughout the whole State, for if there is no uniform time for the beginning of terms of office, then each officer must hold the full period. It will not do to say that a Judge in one part of the State holds his office for six years, and that another, elected to fill a vacancy, can only hold for a residue of the term; we can see no just reason for drawing a distinction.

People v. John B. Weller.

---

If the Constitution has not provided uniformity throughout the whole State, it has not been provided for in any part of it.

It is a stretch of imagination to suppose that many of the incumbents will vacate their offices in the course of every year.

On the principle contended for, each successor would hold for the full term, and thus it is easy to perceive that before many years, the utmost confusion would be the consequence. It would require an Executive officer of extraordinary ability to keep himself informed as to when terms expire; elections would become an evil of no ordinary magnitude. 6 How. Miss. R. 604.

Again, by providing for a general election, it was meant that it should not only be general as to all officers whose terms had expired, but that it should be general, territorially, that is, throughout the State. The Constitution (art. 6, sec. 5) looked to the creation of new Judicial Districts, after the division of the State into Districts by the first Legislature. Can it be supposed that as to these new Districts there was to be no fixed time for the general election?

It seems clear that all District Judges hold in reference to the regular periodical elections prescribed for them as a class.

Smith v. Halfacre, 6 How. (Miss.) R. 583, a case exactly like this; opinion by Sharkey, C. J.

This has been the uniform understanding of the Legislature (Wood's Dig. 561, art. 2,882) as well as of the Bar.

Again, note the phraseology of the Constitution as to the term of District Judges, and it will be observed that the language used corroborates the idea already presented. The language is not that each shall hold his office, but that "they shall hold their office" for the term of six years, showing that reference is there had to the term of the Judges as a class merely. Having prescribed this uniformity, it was the intention of the Constitution that a District Judge elected for a newly created district, or elected to fill a vacancy, should not disturb this uniformity, but should hold only until the expiration of the time of the current term of all the District Judges; that in constitutional parlance, there is no such thing as the creation of a new district, but only the "alteration" of the old. Art. 6, sec. 5.

The Constitution of the United States, in reference to Senators from new States, and to the classification of Senators, (art. 1, sec. 3; art. 4, sec. 3) and the construction which has been placed upon it and uniformly acted on, furnishes an analogy to the present case. Senators are required to be elected for six years; the classification provided for only extended to the first session of the Senate. No provision is made as to Senators from States newly admitted, yet the rule has been uniformly applied to them; they hold from the fourth of March, no matter when elected, and for two, four or six years, with reference to the terms of the other Senators.

People v. John B. Weller.

---

The same may be said of our Supreme Court Judges, under art. 6, sec. 3. The classification of Judges was in words applicable only to the first set of Judges; but their successors have held, and do now hold, with reference to that classification. See opinion of Murray, C. J., in case of People v. Langdon, 8 Cal. R. 11; Opinion of Judge Field in case of People v. Whitman, 10 Cal. 46.

The decisions which hold that where there is no time prescribed for the commencement of a term of office, the officer elected holds for the full term, irrespective of the time of its commencement, can have no application to this case, for the reason that our constitution does not look to, and prescribe the time for, the commencement of the term of Judges. This distinction should be borne in mind in considering the question raised here. (People v. Coutant, 11 Wend. R. 512, and cases there cited, are for this reason inapplicable. See opinion of Maison, J.)

II. If the statute is held to be unconstitutional as to the time when the relator will enter into office, it is void as to that part only; but the election is valid, it being in the power of the Legislature to fix the time for the general election throughout the State of all District Judges; and the party elected will enter as soon as the term of the incumbent expires. Houston v. Royston, 7 How. (Miss.) R. 552; People ex rel. McMinn v. Haskell, 5 Cal. R. 357.

4th. There is no prescribed period in the Constitution for the commencement or ending of the term of District Judges. The provision simply is, that when elected they shall hold their offices for six years. The plain meaning of this is, that every District Judge shall serve for the term or period of six years, without regard to the particular year in which he is elected; or whether any other Judge in the State is elected at the same time. This proposition is clearly sustained by numerous decisions made by the highest Courts of other States upon constitutional provisions like that of ours just quoted. *People v. commission which will authorize him to enter into the office of District Judge of Twelfth District, at the expiration of the term of the present incumbent, even though that time should be on the first of January.

To this I cannot subscribe. I admit that it is competent for the Legislature to fix the time of election, and it may, perhaps, do so many years before the commencement of the term; but such must clearly appear to be the intention of the Legislature before the rule can be with safety and with fairness to the people applied to the particular case.

Relator was elected under a statute which prescribed that the election should take place in 1858, and the term commence in 1859; he was voted for with that understanding, and any material deviation from such understanding would operate as a fraud upon the rights of the people of his district. It will not, then, be safe or just to say that although the part of the act fixing the commencement of his term is void, yet that part providing for the election is operative, and the only effect is to postpone the time of his entering into the office. This is one of the cases where all parts of the Act are so peculiarly connected, and resting one upon the other, that to declare one part void is to so declare as to the whole.

The authorities cited by relator are not in point, when the facts of the cases so cited are compared with the facts in this case.

acre, 6 How. 582; The People v. Langdon, 8 Cal. R. 12; The People v. Whitman, 10 Cal., Field's opinion; Cases from Dallam. Const. of Texas fixes no time of commencement for terms of Judges. Dangerfield v. Sec. of State, Dallam, 358.

In Bradley v. McCrabb, Dallam, 504, it was a contest for Clerk of the District Court; but the case shows that by the Constitution there was no provision for any time of commencement of the time of office, nor even a provision for a particular time of election.

In Roman v. Moody, Dallam, 512, the contest was in relation to County Clerk, which was created by statute.

No commencement of terms of office is specifically fixed, and the time of the Chief Justice of the counties, the Court say:

"It is simply provided that he shall hold his office for four years, and not that it shall commence and end on prescribed days," &c.

And in Selby v. Johnson, a contest for District Judge, (Dallam, 597) it is again shown that there is not fixed by the Court of Texas, any time of commencement of office, or particular time of election.

And the Court, after quoting from the Constitution the language of tenure, adds: "Nor are there other expressions and terms used, which by implication and construction, can modify the certain and plain intendment of the foregoing declaration."

In Banton v. Wilson, 4 Texas, 400, the only question raised by the record is, whether an election which was ordered, was a regular election, and all else decided in that case is mere obiter dictum. But this case (which was another contest for Clerk) also shows the fact that there is no fixed time in the Court of Texas for the commencement and termination of the office.

And in that case the Court says: "The statutes of 1846 did not prescribe any fixed period for election of county officers after the first election for that purpose in July, 1846."

In Hughes v. Buckingham, 5 Smedes and Marshall, 632, which is relied on by respondent, the case of Smith v. Halfacre is expressly affirmed, both opinions being by Judge Sharkey, and it pronounces that the incumbent has the right to a full term of office as fixed by law, where the statute does not prescribe the commencement or termination of the term.

---

In the People v. Green, 2 Wend. 266, there was a contest for Sheriff. The Constitution of New York specifically provided for elections "once in every three years, and as often as vacancies shall happen," and the Governor may remove them at any time within the three years for which they shall be elected.

It is also shown, then, that the statute provides expressly in case of vacancies, for the new officer to hold during the constitutional term.

And it is very explicit that there is no time fixing the commencement and end of the term.

In Contant v. The People, &c., 11 Wendell, 512, the decision is the same as in the last case from 2 Wendell, and the same reasons apply, and it is sustained in the opinion of the Chancellor by the debates in the Convention which framed the Constitution.

And this case is an authority for following a well matured legislative construction.

And it shows that a provision in the revised statutes pointing explicitly to a different result, was after a strong contest between the two houses, rejected, p. 517.

The case of the People v. Garey, 6 Cow. 642, has no relevancy to the subject matter under discussion.

In the case of the State of Ohio v. Niebling, 6 Ohio R., 40 (Citchfield) was a contest for Clerk.

The Court says: "Although the Constitution has fixed the periods for the commencement and termination of many of the officers, yet in regard to the Clerk of the Court, no invariable period of the year is prescribed."

And the Court decides the case in favor of the new term on the ground, that as regards other officers, the Constitution expressly provides for elections to fill the unexpired terms where vacancies occur.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., concurring.

The record in this case raises the simple question — for what period are District Judges elected under our Judiciary system? It will be seen that there had existed, prior to Judge Norton's incumbency, no term in the office of the Twelfth District Judge. That office was created by the Legislature, in May, 1854; so that the question so much discussed, as to the duration of the period of service of Judges elected before the expiration of six years from the date of the qualification of a predecessor, is not necessarily involved in this decision. The Constitution (art. 6, sec. 1) provides that "the judicial power shall be vested in a Supreme Court, in District Courts, in County Courts, and in Justices of the Peace." Section 5 provides that "the State shall be divided by the first Legislature into a convenient number of districts, subject to such alteration, from time to time, as the public good may require; for each of which a District Judge shall be appointed by the joint vote of the Legislature at its first meeting, who shall hold his office for two years from the first day of January next after his election; after which, said Judges shall be elected by the qualified electors of their respective districts at the general election, and shall hold their office for the term of six years."

People v. John B. Weller.

The phraseology of the third section (which relates to the Justices of the Supreme Court) is different from that of the fifth section, especially in this: That after providing for the first election of Justices of the latter Court by the Legislature, it directs "them to be so classified as that one shall go out of office every two years."

It is urged for the relator that the office of District Judge is divided into fixed terms, which are to be considered as distinct entities, independent of the person or number of persons who may fill such terms; that the reason of this was, that system and order may be maintained in elections; that it might be known by the officers and the people of the State when the offices of these Judges commenced and expired; and that therefore, the election to fill these offices should be held throughout the State on the same days. If there be any reason for a constitutional policy of this sort, we are unable to find in the words of the Constitution any indication of it. Certainly, no language is contained in that instrument which by reasonable inference justifies this construction. If the Convention meant to declare that all elections for District Judges should be held on the same day over the State, or that the individual Judges should only hold in certain cases fractions of terms, it would have been easy to say so in unequivocal language. But this is not said; on the contrary, the language is express: "said Judges shall hold their offices for the term of six years." The construction given would require the section to read: "Provided, if a Judge be elected before the expiration of the period for which his predecessor was elected, then such Judge last elected shall only hold for the remainder of the term of his predecessor." The fact that the Legislature is directed to appoint the District Judges for the first two years, does not aid the construction; that provision was only for a temporary organization of the judicial system, until the people had time and were prepared to act.

People v. John B. Weller.

Nor, if we were disposed to go beyond the words of the Constitution, to find a latent policy which is to control the language, do we see any such obvious reasons for this course as the counsel seems to imagine. For the importance of this principle of electoral uniformity is not very apparent. It is true, it might save some little trouble to the Executive Department to announce at stated intervals all the elections for Judges; but still, this would not dispense with the necessity of giving notice of elections for vacancies. This is, however, a small matter. Nor do we see how it is important to the citizens of Siskiyou that the election of Judges for the Los Angeles District should occur at the same time as that for their own. On the other hand, we think the policy was not to have frequent elections for judicial offices; but that the policy was to give to each District Judge elected a right to hold for six years, and thus to secure the independency of the Judiciary; and it is obvious that this reason applies to Judges whenever elected.

We do not, however, approve of that principle of constitutional construction, which seeks by vague surmises, or even probable conjecture, or general speculation of a policy not distinctly expressed, to control the express language of the instrument; since such a mode would not unfrequently change the instrument from what its framers made it, into what the Judges think it should have been. Chief Justice Marshall, in Gibbons v. Ogden, (9 Wheat. 1) speaking of the Federal Constitution, says "that the framers and the people who adopted it, must be understood to have employed words in their natural sense, and to have intended what they have said." "It is true, the spirit of the instrument must be observed; but this spirit is to be collected chiefly from the letter." (1 Story Com. 411; 4 Wheat. 122.) "If," says the

People v. John B. Weller.

---

Supreme Court of the United States, "the plain meaning of a provision, not contradicted by other provisions in the same instrument, is to be disregarded, because we believe the framers could not intend what they say, it must be one where the absurdity and injustice of applying the provision to the case would be so monstrous that all mankind would, without hesitation, unite in rejecting the application."

The case mainly relied on by the relator is that of Smith v. Halfacre (6 How. Miss. 601). This case evidently rests for support, if it can be maintained at all, upon the peculiar judicial system as fixed by the Constitution and laws of that State. This is evident from the subsequent case of Hughes v. Buckingham (5 S. & M. 648) where it is held that a Clerk of a High Court of Errors, whose office is created by statute for four years, but without any designation of the time of commencement, was entitled to the full period from his assumption of the office. The Court says: "The term of four years relates to the incumbent, not to the office. The office, or the interest in it, is not divided into periods of four years each. * * If the incumbent should choose to abandon or forfeit his interest, the term of his successor commences as soon as he may be designated by the Chancellor, and the law or the grant gives him the full term; not a remnant of what had been abandoned by his predecessor." "The case of Smith v. Halfacre (6 How. 582) decides the principle now involved. The great struggle in that case was to show that no period was fixed by the Constitution for the commencement of the Judge's term of office, and that he was therefore entitled to hold for the full period of four years from the time of his election. And it was fully conceded by the Court that this would have been the result of an omission to designate the commencement of the term. But we held that, on a fair construction, the Constitution did provide for the beginning and the end of the term." Now, the Constitution of this State does not fix the time of the commencement of the term of the District Judges — this may be fixed by the Legislature, and has been done by our statute. (See The State v. Niebling, 6 Ohio, 43.)

But if the case were in point, however great our respect for the Court deciding it, we should be constrained by the weight and number of opposing authorities, to disregard it. The principle which we have adopted is sanctioned by the following cases: 6 Ohio, supra, 5 S. & M. 648; Banton v. Wilson, 4 Texas, 400; Shelby v. Johnson, Dallah, 597; Roman v. Moody, Ib. 512; Bradley v. McCrabb, Ib. 512; People v. Garey, 6 Cowen, 442; S. C., 9 Cowen, 640; 1 McCord, 233; People v. Green, 2 Wend. 266; Powers v. Hurst, 2 Hump. 24; Coutant v. People, 11 Wend. 132; Ib. 512; Marshall v. Harwood, 5 Maryland, 431. The provisions, constitutional or statutory, construed in some of these cases, are identical with those we are construing, and they all maintain the same or an analogous principle. In 2 Hump. especially, the language of the Court is singularly applicable. Judge Green says: "To preserve uniformity in the appointment, at the same time, of officers of the same grade throughout the State, would be a matter of small moment and no practical utility. But if it were a matter of greater importance than it is supposed to be, it would be unattainable. New counties have been admitted, and will continue to be constituted; the organization of which, by the election of county officers, would necessarily mar the supposed beauty and harmony which would result from preserving the term of office entire," etc.

People v. John B. Weller.

The only remaining question is, whether the relator is entitled to a commission for the office to commence in January, 1861, after the expiration of Judge Norton's term. The statute under which the relator claims, is in these words: (Wood's Dig. 150, art. 634, sec. 14) "The District Judges shall be chosen by the qualified electors of their respective districts, at the general election in the year 1858, and at the general election every six years thereafter, and shall enter upon their duties on the first day of January subsequent to their election."

The statute, so far as it affects the election of 1858, only applies to such offices as were to become vacant in January, 1859, and this is evident as well by the terms of the Act as the unreasonableness of supposing that the Legislature meant to authorize an election several years in advance of the time when the office was to be filled.

MANSON v. KOPPIKUS et al.

Ferris v. Coover (10 Cal. Rep. 589), affirmed.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Sixth Judicial District, County of Sacramento.

This was an action of ejectment to recover a lot of land in the City of Sacramento.

The facts and the points raised are the same as those in the case of Ferris v. Coover (10 Cal. Rep., p. 589). Plaintiff had judgment and defendant appealed.

C. A. Johnson for Appellant, refers to the briefs on file in the case of Ferris v. Coover.

Geo. Cadwalader for Respondent.

First. The error, as alleged by appellants, may be confined to the following propositions: That the grant in evidence did not convey an immediate interest in any land whatever, but that its validity depended upon subsequent events which never happened, and therefore title derived from it should not sustain ejectment.

Second. The grant does not cover the land in dispute.

The first point is well settled by the Supreme Court of the United States, in Fremont's case, where the Court decided that upon the delivery of the grant, the fee at once passed to the grantee, and that all the conditions contained therein were subsequent, and did not prohibit the vesting of the estate. This conclusion has been recognized by this Court in the various cases involving the title to the "Las Mariposas," and may be regarded as at rest.

In Gunn, Admr. v. Bates & McCarty, 6 Cal. R. 263, this Court determined in a case similar to one at bar, that where possession was had and retained of a portion of the land embraced within the limits of a Spanish grant, the grantee was thereby invested with sufficient title to sustain ejectment for the whole of the land, though by measurement the quantity of land embraced within the boundaries thereof exceeded the calls of the grant. This rule is undoubtedly correct, as any other would exclude the Mexican grantee from the right to recover a single acre, merely because the government of Mexico had failed to specifically designate the exact location of his grant, and define the surplus. The doctrine of the foregoing case is peculiarly applicable to the present one; the Court below finding as a fact, that Sutter, upon the receipt of his grant, went into possession of a portion of the tract granted and retained visibly and substantially down to the present period.

Manson v. Koppius.

The grant in this case is entitled to a liberal and not a technical construction: in other words, the grantee is to have that which the Mexican Government intended that he should have. In 19 Howard, 363, the grant confirmed contained only the following words of description:

“A tract of land known by the name of the El Cahon, near the Mission of San Diego. The land of which grant is made is that which the map attached to the expediente expresses.”

Here there was a valid grant described altogether by reference to the map, the Court holding that the map was a portion of the grant itself; and so it will be noticed that in matters of description the map exercises a controlling force. Larkin's case, 18 Howard, U. S. R. 561.

Taking the map and grant together, we find a discrepancy as to the position of the southern boundary. The grant calls for 38° 49' 32", and the map shows the Lindero line to be several miles south of that parallel of latitude; consequently a latent ambiguity is created by the instrument itself. Now we hold that there is no proposition more firmly settled in law than that parol evidence is admissible to explain the contradiction reconciling the conflicting calls by ascertaining the intention of the parties. This rule is as old as the time of Lord Bacon.

The evidence introduced by respondent to explain the mistake or contradiction, was of the highest character. It proved the southern line to have been run some two miles south of Sutterville. Mr. Greenleaf, in his work on Evidence, section 301, observes that the highest regard is to be paid to natural boundaries; 2d. To lines actually run, and courses actually marked at the time of the grant; 3d. To courses and distances giving preference to one or the other according to circumstances. Evidence of long continued occupation, though beyond the given distance, is admissible.

Manson v. Koppikus.

---

See also 9 Cranch, 178; 2 Wheaton, 306; 17 Mass. 210.

In Newsom v. Prior, lessee, reported in 7 Wheaton, U. S., page 7, the question was as to the boundaries of a grant containing the following words of description:

“Five thousand acres of land lying on both sides of the two main forks of Duck Creek, beginning, &c., and running thence west 894 poles to a white-oak tree; south 894 poles to a stake crossing the river; thence east 894 poles to a stake; thence north 894 poles to the beginning.”

It being proved by a subsequent survey that the second line to cross the river, must be 1,222 poles long instead of eight hundred and ninety-four poles, as indicated by the grant, the question was disposed of by the Court as follows:

“The distance must be disregarded, and this line so extended as to cross the river, or in other words, the distance must be controlled by the call for the crossing the river; and though the effect of this is undoubtedly that the purchaser acquires more land than is expressed in his grant, and more than he paid for, yet Courts cannot now shake a principle so long settled and so generally acknowledged.”

Course and distance must yield to natural or fixed objects. McCloy, lessee v. Galloway, 3 Ohio, 282; Jacob v. Ongen, 14 Ohio, 529; 6 Mass. 131; 3 Pickering, 401; 9 Conn. 661; 4 Monroe, 32; 3 J. J. Marshall, 420; 2 Binney, 109; 6 Wheaton, 583.

If we are entitled to show the natural objects at the limits of the survey, all difficulty in the case ceases, for on the Lindero line we have the two lagunas or lakes, that come fully within the definition of natural objects. These lakes are both identified by the witnesses, and shown upon the map as touched by the Lindero line. Sutter testifies positively as to Vioget's running the south line at this point. This evidence in no sense contradicts the grant; it merely in effect dissolves the ambiguity created by the conflicting calls of the map and grant for the southern line, and gives the grantee the thing granted; not a shadow of authority exists going to deny the validity of such evidence.

Manson v. Koplikus.

4 East, 327; 7 East, 99. If the words of the instrument be ambiguous, the Court will call in aid the acts done under it, as a clue to the intention of the parties. 8 Bingham, 181.

In this case, on the ground of mistake alone in the southern boundary of the grant, respondent's case can be supported. The evidence introduced shows the mistake not to have been in the survey, nor in the map thereof, but in the imaginary line of latitude, the report of the survey. Vioget says his instruments of observation were defective, and whatever mistake was made in one line, extended to the other. Thus we have the mistake shown as well as the cause thereof. But it is urged that Feather River is the true southern boundary of the land. This, however, is a forced construction and flat contradiction of the grant, map, natural objects and distance in the case, and will not be further noticed.

"It cannot be doubted that where a deed is indefinite, uncertain or ambiguous in the description of the boundaries of the land conveyed, the construction given by the parties themselves, as shown by their acts and admissions, is deemed to be the true one, unless the contrary be clearly shown. The difficulty in the application of the descriptive portion of a deed to external objects, usually arises from what is called a latent ambiguity, which has its origin in parol testimony, and must necessarily be solved in the same way. It therefore becomes a question to be decided by a jury, what was the intention of the parties to the deed." (8 Howard, 505.)

FIELD, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — BALDWIN, J., concurring.

This case involves several of the questions which were considered and decided in Ferris v. Coover, 10 Cal. 589, and upon the authority of that case the judgment is affirmed.

Russell v. Conway.

---

RUSSELL et als. v. CONWAY et als.

A Court of Equity, upon bill filed, will compel an equitable set-off, when the parties have mutual demands against each other which are so situated that it is impossible for the party claiming a set-off to obtain satisfaction of his claim by an ordinary suit at law or in equity.

The insolvency of the party against whom the set-off is claimed, is sufficient ground for the exercise of the jurisdiction of the Court of Equity.

So held, when the claim against the party praying for a set-off was not a personal claim, but a judgment in rem against property belonging to him, while his claim against the other party was on a judgment.

In such a case, where the prayer of the bill is that the judgment against the property of the plaintiff may be satisfied, upon his crediting the judgment obtained by him against the defendant in another Court, the application for set-off must be made in the Court in which the judgment adverse to the plaintiff was entered, that Court having control over that judgment, and the plaintiff having the power to credit or satisfy the judgment held by him against the defendant.

As to lien of attorney, see en parte Kyle (1 Cal. R. 331) and Mansfield v. Dorland, (2 Id. 517).

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, County of San Francisco.

Plaintiffs aver that on the twenty-third of February, 1855, they instituted in the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, an action against the bark Elvira, belonging to defendants, to recover damages sustained by a collision of said bark and a certain other vessel called the Madonna, the property of plaintiffs.

That defendant Conway appeared and answered to such action, as owner of the Elvira, defendant Brooks acting as his attorney, and procured the release of the vessel by giving bond to abide the decision and judgment of the Court; that one of the sureties on the bond was, at the time of its execution, insolvent; that the other was in embarrassed circumstances, and became insolvent soon afterwards, and that the pecuniary circumstances of the sureties were at the time well known both to Conway and his attorney; that plaintiffs recovered judgment in the sum of $1,640, and two hundred and eighty-six dollars costs; of which, owing to the insolvency of Conway and his sureties, they have been able to collect only the amount of twenty-five dollars.

That on the twenty-seventh day of February, 1858, defendant Conway commenced a suit in the Twelfth District Court for the County of San Francisco, against the bark Madonna, for damages arising out of the same collision, and caused the vessel to be seized by the Sheriff; that plaintiffs appeared and answered to the action, as the owners of the Madonna, and that defendants recovered a judgment against the vessel for the sum of $1,226, and one hundred and twenty-two dollars costs, which judgment the Sheriff is proceeding to enforce, he having ample security in his possession.

Russell v. Conway.

---

That defendant Brooks claims to be the owner of the judgment, by virtue of an assignment from the defendant Conway; that this assignment was collusive, and intended to defraud plaintiffs and defeat the right to offset. Plaintiffs pray that the judgment of Conway against the Madonna may be satisfied, upon the entering a credit of the amount of it upon the judgment recovered by them in their action against the Elvira, which credit they offer to enter.

To this bill defendants demurred, on the ground —

1st. That the complaint does not state facts sufficient to entitle plaintiffs to the relief demanded.

2d. That the Court had no jurisdiction of the subject of the action.

The Court overruled the demurrer, and upon failure to answer, entered a decree for plaintiffs, and from this decree defendants appeal.

B. S. Brooks for Appellants.

I. We insist that the plaintiffs do not in their bill show any right to come into Court to set off these two judgments.

1. In the first place, the plaintiffs do not show upon their part any sufficient interest in the subject of the controversy. It appears that both judgments are in rem — the one against “the Elvira,” and the other against “the Madonna.” We are not seeking to enforce our judgment against the plaintiffs, but simply against “the bark Madonna,” which was long ago sold to Meiggs & Pray. The plaintiffs say that they, in their bill, show an interest; let us see if they do.

2d. It will be at once conceded that there is not any direct allegation in the bill that our judgment or execution are against the plaintiffs or their property; but this interest is sought to be inferred from the other allegations of the bill. This course is open to two objections: 1. That the plaintiffs’ case cannot be made out by inferences, but must be stated positively and distinctly; and 2d. There cannot be any such inferences legitimately drawn. It is contended that the bill shows either that the plaintiffs were owners, or that they were in some way bound to indemnify the owners against this claim. The very fact that the bill is open to this double construction shows its insufficiency. If it was true that as principal or as surety the plaintiffs might sustain such a bill, they must either allege that they are the principal debtors, or they must allege that they are surety. An allegation that they are either principal or surety, is not an allegation that they are the principal nor that they are the surety. It is impossible that the plaintiffs should be both, and if the bill is so drawn that neither one of these positions of the plaintiffs is clearly and distinctly alleged, but either may be inferred, then the bill is clearly demurrable.

Russell v. Conway.

---

3. But I do not see that there is ANY allegation of interest. In the commencement of the bill the plaintiffs recite that, in February, 1855, they filed a libel against the Elvira for a collision with the "Madonna," "the property of the plaintiffs." This is the only allegation of property in the "Madonna" (against which, it will be remembered, we seek alone to enforce our judgment) which is to be found in the bill; and I submit to the Court, that it does not amount to such an allegation. This is the "inducement" of the complaint. They are showing how they got their judgment, and they were intending to set forth, and did set forth, in fact, merely what were the principal allegations of the libel which they filed. That was the ground of that admiralty suit, that our ship ran into their ship. But if it should be construed as an allegation of property in the ship, it is an allegation of property in 1855, and not now. Plaintiffs' counsel argued, that if it was their property in 1855, the law presumed that it continued to be their property. Perhaps this is true in evidence, but not in pleading. He should allege in pleading that the ship is now their property, and then proof that they bought her in 1850 would support the allegation, unless we showed a change of property. They must allege an interest in the Madonna now. For if it does not appear that they have some interest in the property which we are seeking to subject to our execution, and which alone we can subject to our execution, what right have they to complain or to stop us?

Russell v. Conway:

II. The plaintiffs fail to show any equitable reason for setting off these judgments.

It is scarcely necessary to argue before this Court, that setting off claims in equity is not by any means a matter of course. On the contrary, unless there are some equitable reasons irrespective of the mere existence of independent demands, they cannot be set off in equity. Todd*, 2 J. Marsh. 365; Allunt v. Winn, 3 J. J. Marsh. 304; Beall v. Squires, 3 Munro, 375.

Our statute gives a party a right to set off certain claims at law or in equity, and it might well be argued that the subject was exhausted; that the Legislature had seen fit in its wisdom to declare the cases in which set-off should be allowed, and that to extend the relief or right beyond this would be a usurpation of the powers of the Legislature. It is a principle well settled, that equity in regard to set-offs, as in other respects, follows the law, and only interferes to carry out the intention of the statute by applying the same rule to cases which are within the letter. But when the statute has laid down certain broad, general principles, by which it describes and designates the classes of demands which ought to set off or compensate each other, it is going far beyond the province of a Court of Equity to apply this rule to cases totally distinct in principle. As Mr. J. Ashhurst says: "Where cases are new in principle, it is necessary to have recourse to legislative interference, but where the case is only new in the instance, the Courts can apply the recognized principle.

It appears by the allegations of the bill, that the owners of both vessels claimed damages for the collision—both obtained judgments. The plaintiffs, Russell & Co., tried their case first, and got judgment. Why did they proceed to the trial of Conway's case in the Twelfth District Court? They could have plead the prior adjudication in the United States District Court, and there is no question, and was then no question, that such a plea was a complete bar; but they chose to run their chance in that Court of trying the case over again, in order to obtain a personal judgment against Conway upon their counter claim. They tried it, both parties consenting, and the plaintiffs here got beat, and Conway obtained judgment against them.

Russell v. Conway.

---

Now was not this a waiver of the judgment in the United States District Court? Suppose the plaintiffs had obtained a judgment against Conway for a different amount in the Twelfth District Court: could they have enforced both judgments, or could they have elected? I think not. It seems to me that the plaintiffs, by consenting to try the matter over, completely waived their judgment in the United States District Court, and have no right to set it up, or plead it in any shape.

If the plaintiffs had filed this bill in the United States District Court where the larger judgment is, the case would have been different, for that Court would not have been estopped by the decision of another Court, and particularly not by the decision of a tribunal of a different or foreign jurisdiction; and it is well settled that the application must be made in the Court where the plaintiffs' judgment is. Hicks v. Ross, 11 Barb. S. C. R. 481.

This is not a case in which a Court of Equity would decree a set-off; but if it was, I do not understand that it is a right. It is a matter entirely in the discretion of the Court, and the plaintiffs had no vested interest in, or lien upon, the judgment. It is not a right, the enforcement of which they have a right to demand, but a relief which they pray from the consideration of the Court. Davidson v. Gerghayer, 3 Bibb, 250.

III. A point much debated in the Court below was the lien of the attorney Brooks (also the assignee) for his costs. The Court below was inclined to allow it to the extent of disbursements, if it should appear that these were made by the attorney, but held that prima facie, these were made by the party. But I think the lien of the attorney in this State should be held to be much more extensive. In England, and in those States where there is a rate of counsel and attorney's fees, which is fixed by law, and which are recovered as part of the judgment, there is some reason in limiting the attorney's lien to that sum. But in this State there is no sum recovered for attorney and counsel fees. It is left entirely to agreement between attorney and client what they shall be, and the amount of the lien is not, therefore, limited by law. It therefore exists to the whole extent of the attorney's claim, or it does not exist at all.

Whitcomb, Pringle & Felton for Respondents.

I. The books are full of cases where one judgment is set off against another on motion; but where the claim of a third party is interposed, the remedy by motion is insufficient, and a bill of equity is necessary to dispose of the rights of all parties. Hence the jurisdiction in this case. Simpson v. Hart, 14 Johns. 74; Gay v. Gay, 10 Paige, 369; Barber v. Spencer, 11 Paige, 517.

II. The appellants contend that the complaint does not show any sufficient interest on the part of the plaintiffs in the subject of the suit, because it does not appear with sufficient certainty whether the plaintiffs are the owners of the Madonna, the bark against which the judgment was obtained. But it is clear that the allegations of the complaint admit of no other construction than that the suit of Conway was brought against the bark of the plaintiffs, and that by virtue of that suit they are bound by their property to the payment of the judgment. The complaint avers property in the Madonna on the twenty-third of February, 1855; suit brought against said bark on the twenty-seventh of February, 1855; and that the present plaintiffs came in and claimed said bark and defended the action; and afterwards, that "they are unable to collect their judgment against Conway by reason of his insolvency and that of his bondsmen, while they are bound for payment of his judgment." The natural and only meaning and effect of these averments taken together is, that the bark Madonna was the property of these plaintiffs when the claim of damage for the collision attached to her. After that it is quite immaterial whether she was sold or not, for under the decision of this Court, in the case of Meiggs & Pray v. Scannell, no sale could divest the lien; nothing was transferable except the surplus beyond the judgment.

The case presents all that is essential to the set-off of a Court of Equity. It is true, there is not identity in name, because one judgment is against the bark Madonna and the other judgment is against Conway and his sureties. But the parties in both cases are substantially the same, identical in substance and in truth. The Courts have always disregarded mere names in the matter of parties to a suit. In Barrett v. Barrett, 8 Pick. 341, a judgment in favor of the Judge of Probate in a suit upon a probate bond brought in his name for the benefit of a legatee against an executor and his sureties, was set off against a judgment recovered by the executor in his individual capacity against the legatee. So it was held in Driggs v. Rockwell, 11 Wend. 504, that a party had a right to set off a demand against the real plaintiff for whose benefit the suit was brought, although he was not the nominal plaintiff on record. See also, cases cited in 8 Pick.

Russell v. Conway.

---

Every judgment against the property of a party is really a judgment against him under our system; except in cases of fraud, a judgment has no reach beyond the property of a party, it proceeds against his lands or goods; and this judgment which is against his vessel, his property, is substantially and actually a judgment against him. It binds him by his property.

When the counsel for the appellants objects to the set-off for want of mutuality, he is confounded by terms. All that a Court of Equity requires in decreeing a set-off is to be assured of the substantial identity of the parties whose rights are extinguished the one by the other, and their interest in the claims that are set off. In this case an absolute mutuality would exist as soon as it was ascertained that there is an equivalent in the remedy on both sides.

III. The Court below was the proper tribunal. The party should proceed in the Court where the judgment against him is obtained. The reason and propriety of this is obvious. That judgment is the one which he is seeking to control. He comes into Court with an offer to satisfy his own judgment, as the condition of the relief he demands against the other. His remedy is sought in the Court whose judgment he wishes to affect by the suit. The other judgment is under his control, and he is ready and offers to enter a credit upon it, as a plaintiff would offer a deed to be cancelled, or a sum of money to be paid for specific performance, or any condition within his power to be performed, dependent upon the decree of the Court granting or refusing his prayer. See Cook v. Smith, 7 Hill, 186. See also, Ross v. Hicks, 11 Barb. S. C. R., p. 481. The counsel for the appellants has apparently been misled by the latter case. He cites it in his brief to sustain a doctrine quite opposite to what is the real doctrine of the case.

Russell v. Conway.

---

IV. As to the equitable grounds upon which the plaintiffs rely for a set-off, the two judgments arise out of the same subject matter and the same controversy. The defendant, Conway, has avoided the payment of the decree against him by giving straw bondsmen, and by reason of such fraudulent action the judgment held by these plaintiffs is worthless, whilst that against them is good. Surely it would be difficult to present a stronger case to a Court of Equity. The misfortune of the plaintiffs' position is, that their bark was held by the process of the State Court, while in the Court of Admiralty they could not prevent the defendant, Conway, from liberating his vessel by substitutive bondsmen of his own choice. If, as the appellants say, a set-off is in the discretion of a Court of Equity, there never was a juster occasion for the exercise of that discretion.

Nor is there any more force in the objection of defendants, that the plaintiffs have waived their decree in admiralty by not pleading it in bar of the action in the Twelfth District Court, thereby assenting to another trial. Indeed, such a position can hardly be gravely advanced. It is asserting, in other words, that the plaintiffs have lost their decree by not interposing it as a defense to the other action; that their decree has thereby become satisfied, or abandoned, or extinguished by some mysterious process. The truth is, all that the plaintiffs have lost is the opportunity of defeating the first action, and now they are obliged to come and satisfy the judgment obtained in it. If they had pleaded their decree in admiralty juris darrein continuance, which was the only way they could have pleaded it, but which they were not obliged to do, they might have prevented a recovery against them and thus restrained the whole amount of their decree to make what they could of it. Now they are forced to admit the validity of the judgment against them and to pay the amount by a deduction from the amount of their decree.

TERRY, C. J., after stating the facts, delivered the opinion of the Court — BALDWIN, J., and FIELD, J., concurring.

In support of his first ground of demurrer, appellant contends that the complaint does not show plaintiffs' interest in the subject of the controversy — the judgments being in rem, one against the Madonna, and the other against the Elvira (the defendants having no personal judgment against the plaintiffs) — and that it does not sufficiently appear that the Madonna is the property of plaintiffs, or that defendants are seeking to enforce their judgment against plaintiffs.

Russell v. Conway.

---

The argument in support of this position is based on a supposed transfer of the Madonna by plaintiffs to third parties, and a replevin suit instituted by those parties to recover the vessel from the hands of the Sheriff, which facts nowhere appear in the record of this cause, and therefore, are not matters for our consideration.

The complaint shows that the Madonna was, in February, 1855, the property of plaintiffs; that they appeared and defended the suit against the vessel as owners, and there is nothing in the record to raise a presumption that they are not now the owners of it. The complaint shows a judgment binding on plaintiffs' property, and which they must satisfy in order to release this property. This is, we think, a sufficient showing of interest in the subject.

It is also contended that plaintiffs have not shown any equitable reason for setting off these judgments. But we think it would be difficult to find a case addressing itself more strongly to the consideration of a Court of Equity. The bill charges, and the demurrer admits, that the parties each recovered a judgment in rem against the property of the other; that defendant, by giving a bond with sureties which he knew to be worthless, deprived plaintiffs of their lien on the property, against which he recovered judgment; that defendant, as well as the sureties on his bond, are insolvent; and that a fraudulent assignment of the judgment had been executed for the purpose of defeating plaintiffs' right to set off their decree against it. Under these circumstances it becomes the imperative duty of a Court of Equity to interfere to prevent the consummation of a fraud.

In the case of Simson v. Hart, (14 John. 74) the facts of which are similar to those contained in this record, the Court says: "Nothing could be more unjust than to leave to the respondent the power of collecting his judgment of the appellant, against which, from the insolvent condition of the respondent and the embarrassed state of his father, the appellant could not indemnify himself by collecting any part of his judgment from them; and although it is difficult to settle precisely the extent of the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery, one of its acknowledged and most salutary attributes consists in the power to put a stop to proceedings injurious or unconscientious. I have no hesitation in saying, that chancery had original and rightful jurisdiction of the suit, and was fully authorized, by a series of adjudged cases, in issuing a perpetual injunction against the respondent's suing out or executing an injunction on his judgment, upon the appellant's entering satisfaction for so much as the respondent's judgment amounted to, on his judgment; or, which would have produced the same result, decreeing that the respondent should acknowledge satisfaction of record upon the like terms."

Russell v. Conway.

There is no force in the objection that the judgments are not in the same right. It is well settled that although the demands, as being joint and several, are not, strictly speaking, due in the same right, yet if the legal or equitable liabilities or claims of many become vested in, or may be urged against one, they may be set off against separate demands, and vice versa.

In Gay v. Gay, (10 Paige, 376) the Chancellor held: "If an equitable right of set-off exists, while the parties have mutual demands against each other, because the debt due to the party claiming the set-off is so situated that it is impossible for him to obtain satisfaction of such debt by an ordinary suit at law, or in equity, to recover the same, this Court, upon a bill filed, will compel an equitable set-off of one debt against the other. And the insolvency of the party against whom the set-off is claimed is a sufficient ground for the exercise of the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery, in allowing a set-off in cases not provided for by the statute, although the demands on both sides are not liquidated by judgment or decree, so as to authorize a set-off upon a summary application, by motion. (See Lindsey v. Jackson, 2 Paige Rep. 581, and cases there referred to.) And where there are cross demands between two parties, of such a nature that if both were recoverable at law they would be the subjects of legal offset, then if either of the demands is matter of equitable jurisdiction only, the set-off may be enforced in equity." (Clark v. Cort, 1 Craig & Phil. Rep. 154. See, also, Bare v. Spencer, 11 Ib. 518.)

recovered in the Federal Court, puis darrein continuance in bar of defendants' action, and insists that, by failing to do so, they waived their rights under the judgment. It is difficult to perceive in what manner appellants were prejudiced by the neglect complained of, and we know of no rule by which such neglect can amount to anything more than a waiver of the right to insist on their judgment as at bar. It certainly cannot affect the validity of the judgment, or plaintiffs' right to set it up in another proceeding.

The objection that the right to an equitable set-off has been lost by laches of the plaintiffs, and by their attempts to defeat defendants' execution, is supported by facts which appear only in the brief of appellant, and not in the record.

The objection that the judgment was assigned before filing this bill is answered by the fact that upon the record the assignment is admitted to have been fraudulent, and certainly the defendants can claim nothing in a Court of Equity by reason of such an assignment.

This disposes of the objections to the equity of the bill. The demurrer to the jurisdiction of the Court is equally without merit. The plaintiffs' application was made to the Court having control of the judgment against them, which they desired to have cancelled and satisfied. The judgment in the Federal Court was under their control, and they could themselves direct as to its disposition, while the judgment against them could only be controlled by the Court in which it was rendered.

"Where judgments obtained in different Courts are to be set off, the moving party must go into the Court in which the judgment against himself was recovered." (Cook v. Smith, 7 Hill, 186; Ross v. Hicks, 11 Barb., S. C. 481.)

The only remaining question raised by the appellant is as to the lien of the attorney for his costs, which question was settled by this Court in ex parte Kyle (1 Cal. R., 331) and Mansfield v. Dorland (2 Ib. 507) and we have no desire to disturb those decisions.

Judgment affirmed.

 Welmer v. Lowery.

WEIMER v. LOWERY et als.

In an action to abate a nuisance, caused by the running a ditch for the conveyance of water across the land of the plaintiff, the defendants set up in their answer, among other things, the following: "That said tract of land is situated in the heart of the mineral regions of said State, and is a part of the public domain belonging to the government of the United States, and that said government has never granted or conveyed the same, or any part thereof to the said plaintiff." "They further say that their said ditch was constructed in the summer of 1855, and has been used ever since, and still is, for the purpose of conveying the waters of the South Fork of the American river from a point about five miles above said land to gold mining localities lower down, and in the vicinity of said stream, there to be used for gold mining purposes; that the same is fourteen miles in length, and was constructed for the purposes aforesaid at a cost to said defendants of about $20,000;" which allegations were stricken out, on motion of plaintiff's attorney: Held, that they were properly stricken out, as irrelevant; for, if true, they constituted no defense to the action.

The statute making possessory rights of settlers on public lands for agricultural or grazing purposes yield to the rights of miners, has legalized what would otherwise be a trespass, and the act cannot be extended by implication to a class of cases not especially provided for.

A person has no right to construct a ditch through the inclosure of another without his consent.

A new trial will not be granted on the ground of newly discovered evidence, which is alleged to be a deed, recorded in the County Recorder's office a year before the trial, and the record of judgment in the same Court in which the cause was tried.

This was an action under the 249th section of the Practice Act.

Complainant alleges that he is the owner and in possession of a lot of ground in Coloma, on which he has a family residence and cultivates a garden and orchard; that defendants, against his will, had dug a ditch across a portion of the lot for the purpose of conveying water; that by the cutting of this ditch and throwing the earth from it over a portion of his lot, it was rendered unfit for cultivation; that his property is injuriously affected, and his use of it obstructed by the ditch of defendants. He therefore asks that it be abated as a nuisance.

Defendants' answer denies the ownership of the plaintiff; upon information and belief, denies that plaintiff had expressly forbid the construction of the ditch; but admits that he requested them to take it across the lot at a different point. They deny that the land is inju-riously affected by the ditch; but aver that it is benefited by it. Defendants also allege that the land in question was situated in the mining region; was the property of the United States, and that their ditch was constructed in 1855, for the purpose of conveying water to be used for mining purposes from the American river to gold mines in the neighborhood of the premises; was fourteen miles in length, and had cost $20,000.

Welmer v. Lowery.

The allegations were, on motion, stricken out by the Court, as irrelevant; the cause was submitted to a jury, who found that plaintiff was the owner, and in possession of the premises at the time the ditch was constructed; that it was cut on his land without his consent, and that the ditch injuriously affected the lot, and interfered with its comfortable enjoyment by plaintiff.

Upon this verdict a judgment was rendered, requiring the nuisance to be abated. Defendants moved for a new trial, which was overruled, and appeal taken.

Sanderson & Hewes, for Appellants.

1st. The Court below erred in striking out that portion of the answer which alleges that the lot claimed by the respondent, and upon which the pretended nuisance was created by appellants, was in the heart of the mineral region, and was public land, and had never been conveyed by the government to respondent or any of his grantors.

2d. The Court below erred in striking out that portion of the answer which alleges that appellants' ditch was dug in the summer of 1855, and has been used ever since, and still is, for the purpose of conveying the waters of the South Fork of the American river from a point about five miles above respondent's lot to gold mining localities lower down, and in the vicinity of said stream, there to be used for gold mining purposes; that the ditch is fourteen miles long, and was constructed at a cost of $20,000.

3d. The only facts upon which the judgment is based are found in the special verdict, which is as follows:

"We, the jury, find:

"First — That the plaintiff was the owner and in possession of the Weimer v. Lowery.

---

---

lot of land described in the complaint at the time defendants' ditch was dug, and is still the owner.

"Second — That such ditch was dug through said lot by defendants, and without the consent of plaintiff.

"Third — And that said ditch does interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of said lot, and injuriously affects said lot."

These facts are insufficient to sustain the judgment of the Court below, directing the abatement of appellants' ditch.

4th. The Court below erred in refusing a new trial, because the statement and affidavits, the deed from Gordon to Weimer, (which action was brought to enforce a vendor's lien) all show that the respondent was not the owner of the lot at the time the ditch was dug.

As to first point. The action of the Court below in striking out those parts of the answer specified in the first and second points above set forth, can only be sustained upon the ground that they are sham or frivolous. A sham answer and defense is one that is false in fact, and not pleaded in good faith. "A frivolous answer is one that shows no defense, conceding all that it alleges to be true." (Brown v. Gimsan, 1 Code Rep., New Series, 1856.) It is not contended that the portions stricken out of the answer in this case come within the definition of a sham answer given above; but it is contended that they come within that of a frivolous answer, and therefore we shall confine our attention to the latter question.

This action grows out of an alleged nuisance. In such actions damages may be recovered, or the nuisance abated, or both may be done. (Practice Act, sec. 249.) So far as the abatement of the nuisance is concerned, it is a chancery action. "The action may be enjoined or abated." This leaves it to the discretion of the Court; and whether the Court will do either or not depends entirely upon the equity of the case. (As to its being in the discretion, see Bemis v. Clark, 11 Pick. 452, where a similar statute is construed.)

For the purpose of enabling the Court to exercise its discretion understandingly and equitably, it was proper to plead the matters in question; for if the plaintiff sustained but trifling injury from the alleged nuisance, which could be readily compensated in damages, and an abatement of the nuisance would operate to the irreparable or great injury of the defendants, equity requires that the plaintiff should be content with his damages, and the Court should exercise its discretion accordingly. Hence, the fact that the land was public land, and that the works of defendants were of great value and importance, were properly pleaded, for the purpose of enabling the Court to render such a judgment as equity between the parties should dictate. The plea of public land was proper, for the reason that, if the ditch was dug prior to plaintiff's title, he took it as he found it, and subject to all rights antecedently acquired. Crandall v. Woods, 8 Cal. Rep. 136.

Weimer v. Lowery.

The Court below has, however, acted upon the hypothesis that the fact of nuisance being determined, it followed of course, as a matter of law, that the nuisance must be abated, regardless of consequences. In this the Court was mistaken, as we shall endeavor to show hereafter, and consequently erroneously struck out those parts of the answer in question.

As to the second point, to wit: insufficiency of the facts found to sustain the decree. The facts are, that plaintiff was the owner at the time the ditch was dug, and is still; that the ditch was dug without his consent, and that it injuriously affects the lot, &c. No damages are found, notwithstanding they are prayed for in the complaint. The jury do not find that, at the time the ditch was dug, the plaintiff forbade the defendants from digging it, but that they dug it without his consent. What is the meaning of the words, "without his consent?" Does it mean that he forbade them? Most certainly not; the words certainly convey no such idea. The meaning is simply that the defendants dug the ditch without first obtaining the plaintiff's permission, or that he gave no express consent. The most latitudinous interpretation of the words cannot assign them any other meaning. If we are correct in our understanding of the verdict, the plaintiff occupies the position of standing silent, while the defendants were engaged in constructing the ditch, and is now estopped. Having stood silent, and suffered the defendants to expend their labor and money without objecting, he cannot now disturb their enjoyment of it. 6 Adol. & Ell. R. 469; 9 B. & C. R. 586; 3 B. & Ad. R. 318, note A; 3 Johns Ch. Rep. 116.

But concede, for the sake of the argument, that the true meaning of the verdict is that the respondent forbade the appellants to dig the ditch; even then we say that the facts do not sustain the judgment. In order to show himself entitled to an abatement of the ditch, the plaintiff must show it to be such a nuisance as a Court of Equity would enjoin; he must show such an injury as cannot be compensated in damages. He has entirely failed to show such a case. For the two years during which this pretended nuisance has existed, he has claimed only three hundred dollars damages; and the jury, upon his own showing, refused him any damages. The injury, upon the plaintiff's own showing, and according to the verdict, is of the most trifling character. Courts of Equity will not interfere, unless the trespass produces irreparable injury or great mischief. It is not every technical nuisance that a Court of Equity will abate; but where the injury is trifling, and can be fully compensated in damages, it will leave the party to his judgment at law for damages; and more especially as in this case, where an abatement would result in a great and irreparable injury to the opposite party. Beamis v. Clark, 11 Pick. 452.

Weimer v. Lowery.

---

"When an injury will admit of a pecuniary compensation, a Court of Equity will never interpose." Ingraham v. Dumell, 5 Metcalf Rep. 118.

As to the fourth point, to wit: the Court erred in refusing a new trial. The judgment roll in Gordon v. Weimer shows that that action was brought to foreclose a vendor's lien. The present plaintiff allowed judgment by default in that case. This, taken in connection with the conveyance from Gordon, shows that the plaintiff was not the owner of the lot at the time the ditch was dug; if so, he could not maintain the action until after he had formally notified the defendants to abate the nuisance. Lupton v. McLincoln, 1 Stew. 133.

Thos. H. Williams for Respondent.

Our statute prescribes that an answer, among other things, may contain "any new matter constituting a defense to the action." Wood's Digest, page 173, sec. 46.

And provides that "irrelevant and redundant matter contained in a pleading may upon motion be stricken out." Page 174, sec. 57.

Welmer v. Lowery.

---

And defines a material allegation to be "one essential to the claim or defense, and which could not be stricken out without leaving the pleading insufficient."

Irrelevant matter and redundant matter is such, which, if taken as true, does not constitute a cause of action or a defense to the action.

This Court has again and again decided that a defendant in an action respecting land, would not be permitted to set up outstanding title in another, or in the government, and that as between individuals, possession should be held "prima facie" evidence of title; then clearly the Court below was correct in striking out the allegation that the land belonged to the government, and that the government had not conveyed to plaintiff, because, if true, the facts stated constituted no defense.

The same may be said in regard to the other matter stricken out, for this Court has often decided that a trespasser upon the rights of another, who is digging a ditch, cannot justify that he intends the water for mining purposes; and the value of his ditch is immaterial, as the dollars and cents in question cannot affect the rights of the parties. Fitzgerald v. Urton, 5 Cal. 308; Tartar v. Spring Creek Water and Mining Co. 5 Cal. 395; and Burdge v. Underwood, 6 Cal. 45.

I invite special attention to the last case cited, as it is more directly in point than cases are usually found.

The cause of action, the judgment sought, the facts in the case, and the judgment rendered, agree precisely with this case, with this exception—the Court there finds one hundred and fourteen dollars damages, the cost of filling the ditch, while in this case the judgment requires the defendants to fill it at their own cost, or if they fail to do so, the Sheriff shall fill it at defendant's cost, which will amount to a greater sum than the one hundred and fourteen dollars in the other case.

I might here rest the case, but as counsel for appellants have seen fit to encumber the record with other questions, it may not be improper to briefly notice some of them.

They say "that the plea of public land was proper, because if the ditch was dug before plaintiff took up the land, he took it as he found it, subject to all rights, &c."

This is a fair specimen of the defense, and can be answered in two ways:

Welmer v. Lowery.

1st. If defendants dug the ditch before plaintiff's location of the land, they should have positively and unequivocally averred the same, and not reach it by saying that the land belonged to the government.

2d. The complaint charges that plaintiff became the owner and possessor of the land in 1852, and that he was in possession when defendants commenced digging their ditch in 1855; and defendants do not deny either allegation — on the contrary, the answer admits the possession.

Appellants' counsel quibble as to whether the jury meant that plaintiff forbade the defendants entry upon his lot; but conclude at length that the question is immaterial.

The verdict must be taken in connection with the pleadings, and it will be found that the only issue made upon this branch of the case was, whether defendants entered against the will of plaintiff; and upon that point the jury find for plaintiff. It will be observed that the denial of defendants is evasive, and that they do not even notice the allegation which charges that plaintiff has frequently requested a removal of their works, and that the ditch be filled.

But they say that plaintiff stood by — saw their work going on without forbidding it — thereby tacitly consenting to the trespass.

To which there are two answers:

1st. The entry by defendants was "prima facie" a trespass, and they must show consent, either express or implied, in defense. They fail to charge the same in the answer, to prove it or to show it by the verdict.

2d. The jury find generally the entry against the consent of plaintiff, which according to strict language includes both express and implied consent, and the presumption is, that they intended their language to be understood in its ordinary acceptation.

Appellants contend, however, that conceding this a nuisance, still it is not such a one as should be enjoined or abated.

Upon this subject I understand the following to be the correct rules of law:

1st. That every trespass or injury, however slight, is the subject of an action.

Weimer v. Lowery.

---

2d. That an injury which would merely entitle the party to nominal damages is not such as would authorize an injunction or abatement.

3d. That where the injury is more than nominal, and interferes with comfortable enjoyment of property, Courts of Equity will interpose and prevent its continuance.

Having discussed this subject at some length in the case of Harvey et al. v. Chilton et al., tried at this term, I shall forbear extending my remarks at this time, but respectfully refer the Court to that case, and the authorities there cited, both by the counsel on the other side and myself.

In this case, the jury returned a verdict finding, in the language of the Act, that the ditch complained of does injuriously affect plaintiff's lot, and interferes with his comfortable enjoyment of it. And having so found, it was then in the discretion of the Court to abate the nuisance; and I presume this Court will not say that such discretion was improperly used.

The complaint describes the character of the ditch, and shows its effects upon the land, and the answer does not controvert such description, from which it appears that a strip of plaintiff's lot, from one side to the other, and from four feet to ten or twelve wide, is rendered unfit for use so long as the ditch may remain on it, and necessarily it is inconvenient to pass over the ditch, which can only be done by small bridges, to cultivate the northern part of the lot.

Again calling attention to the case of Burge v. Underwood cited, I leave the case with a suggestion or two, in reference to the motion for new trial.

This motion is made upon the ground of newly discovered evidence, to wit: that Weimer was not the owner of the land upon which the nuisance was created.

The answers to this motion are more numerous than necessary to state, and I will therefore only give:

1st. The affidavit is made only by one defendant, when there were many, and does not pretend that the newly discovered testimony was unknown to his co-defendants. It is true, he says that he had the chief defense of the case, and I presume that his co-defendants did the small work.

Weimer v. Lowery.

---

2d. The deed and record which he exhibits shows that the deed from Gordon to Weimer was executed and filed in the County Recorder's office nearly one year before the commencement of this action, and the suit of Gordon v. Weimer had been terminated before this was commenced. How, under the circumstances, attorneys could have induced their client to swear that he by "due diligence" could not have discovered the evidence before trial, I cannot understand.

3d. Weimer shows by his answer that, in fact, the land was his long before the deed was executed, the latter being withheld until the purchase money should be paid.

4th. Possession is sufficient to maintain the action against a continuance of the nuisance.

5th. The application should show that the evidence is new, material, not cumulative; has been discovered since the trial, and could not have been, by due diligence, discovered before trial, and will not be granted if the facts stated are fully controverted by counter affidavits. Bartlett v. Hogden, 3 Cal. 55; Brooks v. Lyon, (Ibid.) 113; Burritt v. Gibson, (Ibid.) 396.

TERRY, C. J., after stating the facts, delivered the opinion of the Court — FIELD, J., concurring.

The assignments of error are, first, in striking out part of defendants' answer; second, that the verdict of a jury did not warrant the judgment; and third, refusal of the Court to grant a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence.

The first point is not well taken. It has never been held that a trespasser upon lands in the possession of another can justify his acts by setting up an outstanding title, in which he has no privity. Nor has it ever been decided that the fact that a party is engaged in the construction of a work requiring a large pecuniary expenditure, will justify a trespass on private property. The allegations were properly stricken out as irrelevant — because, if true, they constituted no defense to the action.

The second point is answered by the decision of this Court in Burge v. Underwood, (6 Cal. 45) the findings of which are entirely analogous to the special verdict in this case.

The third objection is that the Court erred in refusing a new trial, on the ground of newly discovered evidence. The evidence set out in the affidavit consisted of a deed, which had been recorded in the County Recorder's office more than twelve months prior to the trial, and the record of a judgment in the same Court in which the cause was tried; and we are not able to perceive why this evidence could not as well have been discovered before the trial, by the exercise of the slightest degree of diligence.

Judgment affirmed.

STOCKTON, SHERIFF OF SHASTA COUNTY v. COUNTY OF SHASTA. SAME v. SAME.

A Sheriff cannot maintain an action against a county for compensation for "taking care of the Court House, and keeping and guarding the Jail of the county during his incumbency of the office of Sheriff." The law fixes his compensation for the performance of such official duty.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Ninth Judicial District, County of Shasta.

These two actions were instituted by the plaintiff to recover of the County of Shasta compensation for taking care of the Court House, and keeping and guarding the Jail of the county, while plaintiff was acting as Sheriff of said county. Plaintiff had judgment in the Court below, and the defendant appealed to this Court.

ing and guarding the Jail of the county, during his incumbency of the office of Sheriff."

In our opinion there is no warrant or authority in law for such a charge, and the Board of Supervisors properly rejected the account.

The Sheriff, by virtue of his office, is charged with the custody of all persons arrested on civil or criminal process, and is responsible for their safe keeping; for these services he is, in the case of criminals, to receive a compensation, to be fixed by the Supervisors of the county, and paid out of the public funds, and in the case of persons confined on civil process, to be paid by the person at whose instance the process was issued. In order to perform this duty, it is necessary that he should have a secure place in which to detain persons committed to his charge. Therefore the statute provides that the "County Jail shall be kept by the Sheriff and used as a prison" for the detention of such persons as are placed in his custody.

He is also required to "keep an office at the county seat of his county" for transaction of other business connected with his station, and would have the same right to demand compensation from the county for guarding and taking care of this office as of the Jail.

The law fixes the compensation of officers for the performance of these official duties, and it also provides that no fees shall be charged for any other services than those mentioned. (Wood's Dig., p. 453.)

HARVEY et als. v. CHILTON.

Plaintiffs owned certain mining claims and quartz lode on the banks of a stream above the mill and dam of defendant. Defendant commenced raising his dam two feet higher. Plaintiffs brought suit against defendant, alleging that the addition of two feet to defendant's dam was a nuisance, and would back the water on to plaintiffs' claims, and thus prevent them from working them, and would also destroy their water privilege for a quartz mill, which they intended to construct: Held, that the action was premature, and that the demurrer to the complaint, on the ground that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, was properly sustained.

The allowance of costs rests in the discretion of the Court of original jurisdiction.

Harvey v. Chilton.

---

This was an action to abate a nuisance.

The complaint alleges, that plaintiffs are owners of a certain mining claim situated in the bed of the North Fork of the Cosumnes River, about sixty rods above a certain dam across said stream, belonging to defendant; and that they are also the owners of a certain other mining claim situated on the left bank of said stream, and adjacent to the first mentioned claim. That a part of said plaintiffs are the owners of a certain quartz lode situated upon the left bank of said stream, about three hundred yards above the dam of defendant. The said river claim can only be worked by taking water from said stream at some point above the same, by means of a ditch, and using the same with machinery for the purpose of draining said claim. That said bank claim can only be worked by water taken as aforesaid, with a fall from said claim sufficient to carry the tailings into said stream. That said quartz lode can only be worked by a mill situated at a certain point at the south end of said lode, the same to be run by water power obtained by means of a ditch as aforesaid. That for the purpose of obtaining water for the several objects above named, the plaintiffs, in March, 1857, commenced digging a ditch from a point about one and a-half miles above said claims, and had about a mile of the same completed at the time of the grievances hereinafter complained of. Plaintiffs further say, that all of the aforesaid operations could have been successfully carried on by them as before stated, had the defendant allowed his said dam to remain of the same height as when they were first undertaken. In June, 1857, the defendant commenced to build his dam higher than the same originally, by about two feet and a-half, and by so doing has, and will continue to back water upon said claim in the bed of said stream, so as greatly, if not entirely to impede the working of the same; and has and will continue to back said water opposite of said bank claim, so as to deprive said plaintiffs of a fall sufficient to carry off the tailings from said bank claim, and thus greatly impede, if not entirely prevent the plaintiffs from working said bank claim. Plaintiffs further say, that said increase of the height of said dam, does and will cause the water to flow back so as to destroy the mill power of the plaintiffs, intended to be used by them in crushing their said quartz, for they say they cannot run said mill with a less fall than fifteen feet, which fall the previous height of said dam enabled them to secure, by means of their said ditch, and that their mill privilege will be entirely destroyed, etc. The complaint concludes with a prayer that a decree be made requiring the defendant to remove the addition to said dam.

Harvey v. Chilton.

The defendant demurred to this complaint on the ground that it did not contain facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The Court below sustained the demurrer, and gave judgment for defendant for full costs, including jury fee. Plaintiff moved to retax costs, which was denied, and he appealed to this Court.

Sanderson & Newell for Appellants.

Does the raising of his dam by defendant, operate as a nuisance to the property and rights of the plaintiffs?

For the purposes of this action, the plaintiffs must be regarded as the actual owners in fee of the bed and banks of the stream, and the owners of a mill site upon which they had already taken measures, by digging a ditch, to erect a mill. (Merced Mining Co. v. Fremont, 7 Cal. 130.) The defendant then could not do any act which would operate as a nuisance to the plaintiff, in obedience to the rule of the common law, "sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas."

In this case irreparable injury is the direct result of defendant's act, for it entirely prevents the use and employment by plaintiffs of their property. It is such a material injury to property as a Court of Equity will prevent. (Winstanley v. Lee, 2 Swanst. R. 335; Attorney General v. Nichol, 18 Ves. 343; Cherrington v. Abney, 2 Vern. 646; Nutbrown v. Thornton, 10 Ves. 163; Mohawk & Hudson Railroad Co. v. Artcher, 6 Paige, 83.)

The bare flooding of plaintiffs' claims is sufficient to warrant the relief. (Repka v. Sergeant, 7 W. & S. 1; Pastorious v. Fisher, 1 R. 27; Ramsey et al. v. Chandler et al., 3 Cal. 90; Remis v. Clark, 11 Pick. 452.)

"Where parties have located a mining claim upon the banks of a stream, and are using the bed of the stream for the purpose of working their claim, any subsequent erection or dam which will turn the water and hinder their work, is an encroachment upon the rights of said parties." (Sims v. Smith, 7 Cal. R. 148.)

Harvey v. Chilton.

---

This cause having been tried upon demurrer, the Court improperly taxed jury fee and witnesses' fees against plaintiffs.

The costs, to say the least, were in the discretion of the Court, and he ought not to have taxed them all against plaintiffs. (Practice Act, sections 495, 497, 498.)

Thos. H. Williams for Respondent.

The first ground appellants (plaintiffs below) maintain, that the complaint does state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and that the facts so stated warrant the relief sought.

The Court will observe by an examination of the complaint, that immediate or present injury is not complained of, but when plaintiffs get the remaining third of their ditch completed, and get ready to build a quartz mill, and make the other necessary arrangements, by turning the river, &c., to work the "river bed claim," and also to work the "bank claim," then they expect to be injured, and have no doubt but that their said works will be impeded.

I maintain that one who locates a piece of ground for mining purposes only, owns it to the extent of the right to mine, and no further, which right and the free exercise of it, no one can lawfully interfere with. Any other doctrine would be destructive of some of the most important interests of our mining country.

Appellants cite as authority the case of the Merced Mining Co. v. Fremont, 7 Cal. R. 130, of this Court; but I think that decision rather favors my view of the question.

Judge Burnett uses this language: "If a party leases from another a tract of land for agricultural purposes, upon which there is a mine, any irreparable injury to the mine would not affect his estate, but the injury would be to the estate of the landlord, and the remedy in respect to that injury must be sought by the latter. But where the lease is of a mine, the case is entirely different. The injury in that case is to the estate of the tenant, and he is the proper party to sue."

Showing clearly that the inquiry must be whether an injury has been done, or is about to be done, the particular interest or right of the complainant.

Harvey v. Chilton.

---

Nuisance means literally, annoyance; in law it signifies, according to Blackstone, "anything that worketh hurt, inconvenience, or damage."

A private nuisance is "anything done to the hurt or annoyance of the lands, tenements or hereditaments of another." 3 Black. Com. 215.

And our statute declares that "anything which is injurious to health, or indecent, or offensive to the senses, or an obstruction to the free use of property, is a nuisance, and the subject of an action." Wood's Dig., p. 200, art. 983.

Now, do the facts set forth in the complaint show that defendants have injured the rights or interest of the plaintiffs, or have obstructed the free use of their property; or any other use which they have ever attempted to make of it?

They cannot say that flowing the water back injured the ground or land, as it seems never to have been in any other condition than covered by water. And they cannot charge that the gold will rust or otherwise injure. Then, if they are unable to aver injury to their right, they must fall back upon the sole proposition, that we interfere with the free use and enjoyment of it; but that they cannot do, for according to their showing they are not prepared to use it — are not in a condition to do so, and may never be.

In this connection, I will quote from some authorities bearing upon the question under consideration.

In Van Bergen v. Van Bergen, 3 Johns. Ch. R., p. 27, we find the following: "The cases in which chancery has interfered by injunction to prevent or remove a nuisance, are those in which the nuisance has been erected to the prejudice or annoyance of a right, which the other party had long previously enjoyed."

"It must be a strong and mischievous case of pressing necessity, or the right must have been previously established at law, to entitle the party to call to his aid the jurisdiction of this Court."

"An act in its consequences slightly injurious will not support the action." Palmer v. Mulligan, 3 Caine's R., p. 312.

"It is well established, that it is not every violation of the rights of another which may be ranked under the general head of nuisance, which will authorize the interposition of the equitable powers of this Court; such interposition rests upon the principle of a clear and certain right to the enjoyment of the subject in question, and it must also be a case of strong and imperious necessity, or the right must have been previously established at law." Olmstead v. Loomis, 6 Barbour, 160, and cases there cited; Angell on Water Courses, sec. 412.

Harvey v. Chilton.

---

The authorities cited by the other side are entitled to but little weight.

In Wynstanley v. Lee, 2 Swanst., the Court refused the injunction.

Mohawk & Hudson R. R. Co. v. Arthur, 6 Paige, does not belong to this class of cases.

Cherrington v. Abney, 2 Vern. 646. There is no such case.

Remis v. Clark, 11 Pick. 452, is more favorable to mine than the other side.

Nutbrown v. Thornton, 10 Ves. 163, was an action to restrain distress by a landlord against his tenant, and has no application.

Pastorious v. Fisher, 1 R. 27, and Rissha v. Sergeant, 7 W. & S. 1, merely establish or assert the doctrine that nominal damages may be obtained for an injury, however insignificant.

The two cases cited by counsel proceed upon the hypothesis that the plaintiff was the absolute owner of the land for all purposes, and therefore any flooding would be an injury or trespass.

Attorney General v. Nichol, 16 Ver. 342, sustains the doctrine for which I contend; and is so construed by the Court in Van Bergen v. Van Bergen, 3 Johns. Ch. R., p. 27.

Ramsey et al. v. Chandler et al., 3 Cal. 90, does not help their cause. In that case the injury was direct, immediate and present. The plaintiffs had turned the river and were "proceeding to take out large quantities of gold" when defendants flooded them.

TERRY, C. J., delivered the opinion of the Court — FIELD, J., and BALDWIN, J., concurring.

In this case we think the demurrer was properly sustained.

The complaint shows no injury which has been occasioned to plaintiff by the act complained of. It does not appear that plaintiff had ever commenced to work the claims owned by him, or that the claims are at all injured or likely to suffer damage from the defendant's dam. We think the action is premature. If after the plaintiff has completed the improvements he has projected, and is prepared to prosecute his enterprise, he is hindered or obstructed by defendant, the law will afford him a remedy.

Rogers v. Hoberlein.

---

The question as to the allowance of costs rests in the discretion of the Court below, and we think there has not in this case been such an abuse of discretion as would warrant our interference.

Judgment affirmed.

ROGERS, PUBLIC ADMINISTRATOR, v. HOBERLEIN.

A Public Administrator, having administration of an estate, continues such administration after the expiration of his term of office, and until his authority is directly set aside or indirectly revoked by another appointment.

To vest the incoming administrator with title to the estate, there must be a grant of administration to him; the mere handing over the papers by the old administrator to the new is not sufficient.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, County of San Francisco.

This was an action in the name of the plaintiff, as Public Administrator of the County of San Francisco, to recover from the defendant certain rents due by virtue of a lease from Samuel Flower, former Public Administrator of said county, and as such in charge of the estate of Auguste Deck, deceased.

In December, 1855, the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco, by a simple order, and without the presentation of a petition, directed letters of administration to issue to Samuel Flower, the then Public Administrator of that county, upon the estate of A. Deck, deceased. Flower's term of office expired in November, 1856, and he was succeeded by the plaintiff. Flower delivered to the plaintiff, as his successor, all the papers and property of said estate, but no order of the Probate Court of that county was made directing letters to issue to said plaintiff, nor did they ever issue.

The question presented by the record is, whether a Public Administrator, having administration upon an estate, continues such administration after the expiration of his term of office, or whether the administration follows the office into the hands of the succeeding incumbent, who may sue without obtaining a grant of administration on the particular estate.

Plaintiff had judgment in the Court below, and the defendant appealed.

Heydenfeldt for Appellant.

1. The first assignment of error is, that the declaration is insufficient to support the judgment.

The suit is upon a lease made between defendant and Samuel Flower, as Administrator of Deck.

The contract is either personal to Flower, or in his representative capacity. In either case, there is no right in the plaintiff to recover.

If "personal," then the case shows no assignment by Flower to the plaintiff.

If representative, then it is insisted that Flower is still Administrator of Deck, and plaintiff is not.

Plaintiff has not taken out letters of administration, nor had any grant of administration by order of the Probate Court.

Flower has never been removed, nor had his letters revoked, nor has he resigned.

In Beckett v. Selover, 7 Cal. 215, this Court held that letters of administration, or an order of the Probate Court appointing an Administrator, was essential; and so Williams on Executors, and all the authorities, hold that letters are the title of the Administrator to the estate, without which he has no right.

In creating the office of Public Administrator, the law intended only to add one more to a class to whom letters were to be granted.

See Wood's Digest, p. 396, art. 2250, where the law declares — "Administration shall be granted," &c., and where the Public Administrator is the eighth in a classification containing ten classes. Immediately preceding this section is given the form of letters of administration.

Rogers v. Hoberlein.

---

It is insisted, upon a proper construction of this statute, that the Public Administrator does not hold the administration of estates by virtue of his office, but by virtue of his letters of administration.

He obtains the letters by virtue of his office, as being one of a class entitled to administer; but having once obtained letters, he holds like any other Administrator, by virtue of his letters, and is entitled to continue in the administration until the estate is closed up, independent of his tenure of office as Public Administrator.

Among the classes entitled to administer is "ninth; creditors." Now if letters be granted to a creditor, and he immediately pays his own debt and thus ceases to be a creditor, does he lose his right to administer; and could another creditor come in and demand a revocation of his letters, and an issue of letters to himself?

And yet this would be strictly analogous to the claim set up here, that the expiration of the office of Public Administrator takes away from the late incumbent the right to administer by virtue of his letters.

Such was certainly not the intention of the Legislature. Two different Acts show what was the legislative exposition.

The Act of March 8, 1851, a special Act for San Francisco county, provides for an immediate election, and that after the election the PRESENT incumbent should hand over everything to his successor.

The Act of April 15, 1851, provides for similar elections throughout the State, and again directs "the present incumbents shall turn over, etc., to their successors."

Nothing can be clearer than the inference, that without the provisions above cited, the incumbents would have held, by virtue of their letters, even after their terms expired; and it may possibly admit of question whether their rights were not of such a character that the Legislature could not direct them.

If, as is contended here, administration exists in the plaintiff, then we have the anomalous proposition that it exists in two persons by totally different titles, originating at different times; for if Flower was administrator, he was not so by virtue of his office, but by virtue of an order of the Probate Court.

Rogers v. Hoberlein.

---

Even then, if his office ceased, his powers under the order did not cease, and his letters have not been revoked. The grant of letters is to Flower, not to the Public Administrator, and although he is called Public Administrator, this is only descriptio personæ.

His letters granted to him by name cannot enure to his successor in office. It is his evidence of title, and cannot be evidence of title in another; it is a personal trust, and must remain so until revoked or resigned.

Daniel Rogers for Respondent.

The Public Administrator is a public officer of the particular county for which he may be elected.

It is necessary to examine briefly the different Acts of the Legislature in relation to this office, in order to find out the laws applicable to it now, and what are the duties and powers defined by them.

In the law of 1850, in relation to the estates of deceased persons, in chapter 14, section 304, the appointment of a Public Administrator was invested in the Probate Court of each county. This appointment was made by a mere entry upon its minutes.

By this law it is evident that there was no intention to invest him with the ordinary powers of an administrator of a particular estate, because his duties are particularly defined, which were — the preservation of estates in particular instances, and the collection of the assets.

By virtue of his office he could not receive general letters, because he was not named in section 52 as one to whom letters could issue. Under this law, the Public Administrator took charge of some estates and held them for their mere preservation, in his official capacity; and hence, upon the expiration of his term of office, his duties and powers ceased and devolved upon his successor. March 8th, 1851, by a special law applicable only to the County of San Francisco, this office was made elective, and it was made the duty of the (then) present Administrator to deliver over to his successor all papers, assets, etc. This was supplied by that of April 15th, 1851, making the office elective in each of the counties. This law retained the section requiring the present Administrator to deliver over to his successor the property of the estates. The general law of 1850 was repealed by that passed May 1st, 1851. In section 52 of this law, the Public Administrator is named as one who is entitled to receive general letters of administration on particular estates; but that section (310) in the law of 1850, defining the duties of the Public Administrator, is omitted. Many of the sections of the law of April 15th, 1851, in relation to the Public Administrator, have been amended, and are repealed; but sections 6 and 7 remain.

Rogers v. Hoberlein.

It is difficult to account for the presence in section 6 of this law of the word "present," except as arising from bad legislation; because it is only by virtue of this section that it was made incumbent upon the Public Administrator to deliver to his successor anything pertaining to the estates held by him. Has this section expired by its own limitation, or is it still in force? If the section is to receive a strict construction, it has undoubtedly executed itself, because the word "present" can only be construed as referring to the Public Administrator then holding the office; but if, on the other hand, this Court construes the word as surplusage, and that it was the intention of the law-makers to retain the section, it may not then be difficult to solve the question involved in this case.

The only sections particularly defining the duties of the Public Administrator are sections 88, 304 and 305. It seems he holds the estates committed to his charge by virtue of these sections simply as a special Administrator. Under section 52, he receives letters of administration because he is the Public Administrator — not because of any connection with the particular estate; and upon the expiration of his official term, his duties and powers as a public officer cease, and the further execution of the trust devolves on his successor in office.

If the Administrator is a public officer, giving bond and taking an official oath, why is there not on the expiration of this office a termination of his duties and powers? There is no law particularly applicable to him whereby he is exempted.

With all public officers, their public functions cease with the expiration of their office, with but one exception, that of the Sheriff; and in his case there is an express provision of law.

If then, there is no provision of law continuing his connection with the administration of a trust after the expiration of his official term,

Rogers v. Hoberlein.

---

there is, by mere operation of law, not only a change of administration but a legal transfer of his letters, and all assets in his possession.

Wm. W. Crane for Respondent.

I. The various provisions of the statute all indicate that an office was created, with distinct duties attendant upon it. If the proposition of the appellant be true, the Legislature would merely have enacted that a Public Administrator shall be elected in each county, prescribing his term; then the general statutes relative to the estates of deceased persons would point out his class, and regulate all his duties; but it goes further, and creates an office as distinct and necessary to the functions of government as that of District Attorney, County Treasurer and others.

If the duties of the Public Administrator appertain to an office, as contended for, then we submit that the general rule governing the rights and duties of incumbents in office must prevail in this as in other cases, viz.: that as to the incumbent personally, they are dependent upon his tenure of office, commencing and ending with it.

The separation of the incumbent from office is recognized in the case of The People v. Langden, 8 Cal. 1.

The condition of his bond is, that he will account for and pay over all moneys and property that may come into his hands, "as such Public Administrator." Now, if after he ceases to be Public Administrator and becomes a private one, he receives money due the estate and misapplies it, his sureties would not be liable.

II. The appellant urges that the Public Administrator did not hold the estate of Deck by virtue of his office, but by virtue of the letters granted to him. This is not altogether true. It is too broadly stated. He is entitled to hold both by virtue of his office and the letters. He could not demand the letters unless he was Public Administrator, nor could he hold the estate unless in the first instance acquired by letters.

The case of Beckett v. Selover merely decides that there must be a judicial grant of administration in each case, in the first instance; but it does not decide that the Public Administrator thereby becomes invested with a personal title which continues until the estate is closed. The granting of letters is only a statutory mode of bringing the estate within the control of the office; and whoever at the time is the incumbent performs the duties of the office. Most of the State and County officers take property into their possession by means of certain legal forms: for instance, the mode in which County Treasurers acquire school moneys from the State. (Laws of 1855, p. 230.)

Rogers v. Hoberlein.

---

The office always continues, though the incumbent may be different. If the title of a succeeding Public Administrator is questioned, he is only obliged to exhibit the grant of letters to his predecessors and his own commission to make out a prima facie case.

The learned counsel for the appellant says in his brief: "Now if letters be granted to a creditor, and he immediately pays his own debt and thus ceases to be a creditor, does he lose his right to administer, and could another creditor come in and demand a revocation of his letters, and an issuance of letters to himself? and yet this would be strictly analogous to the claim set up here."

In the first place, all the persons authorized by the statute to receive letters except the Public Administrator, are so authorized because of a personal connection with or interest in the estate.

Secondly. Under our statutory system, a creditor cannot pay his debt until the estate is wound up, and a decree of distribution entered; and the contingency suggested could not arise.

III. It is urged that the administration does not pass to the successor in office because of the absence of an express provision to that effect.

If the theory urged above be correct, viz: that all property, papers, money, etc., attend the office and not the incumbent, then no enactment is necessary; such seems to have been the Legislative understanding. It will be seen that no such provision is made in reference to the County Clerks, (Wood's Digest, p. 88) District Attorney, (p. 64) Coroner, (p. 112) Assessor, (p. 55) Treasurer, (p. 712) Clerk of Supreme Court, nor Superintendent of Public Instruction.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., concurring.

This case comes here upon a single point made by an agreed state of facts; this is whether the Public Administrator of San Francisco

County, having administered upon an estate, continues such administration after the expiration of his term of office, or whether the administration follows the office into the hands of the succeeding incumbent, who may sue without obtaining a grant of administration on the particular estate. This question depends upon the construction of our statutes. The first Act upon the subject of Public Administrators was passed in 1850. (Acts of 1850, p. 403, ch. 14, section 304.) This Act provided that the Probate Court might, by an order entered on its minutes, appoint a Public Administrator for the County, who should hold office for one year, and until his successor was qualified. This Act defines the rights and duties of this class of public officers. Section 312 provides that, if at any time, letters testamentary or of administration be regularly granted on such estate to any other person, the Public Administrator shall, under the order of the Probate Court, account for, pay and deliver to the Executor or Administrator thus appointed, all the money, property, debts, papers, or other estate of the person deceased. Section 317 provides that the Probate Court may at any time order the Public Administrator to account for, and deliver all the money and property of any estate in his hands to the heirs or to the Executor or Administrator regularly appointed.

It will be observed that nothing is said in this statute—which is the basis of all the legislation on the subject—about the handing over of papers, etc., to the succeeding Public Administrator.

The next Act is that of April, 1851. (Acts of 1851, p. 206.) The first section of this Act provides that there shall be elected in and for each of the organized counties in this State a Public Administrator, who shall continue in office until his successor is qualified. By section 6 it is provided that it shall be the duty of the present Public Administrators each to account for, pay over and deliver to his successor, within twenty days after he shall have been qualified, all moneys, property, etc., which may have come into his possession as such Administrator, or be held by him by virtue of his office. Section 7 prescribes a penalty for non-compliance with section 6, against those now holding the office. Section 305 of Act of May 1st, 1851, (Acts of 1851, p. 418) provides that the Public Administrator shall make a perfect inventory of all such estate taken into his possession, and administer and account for the same as near as circumstances will permit, according to the law prescribing the duties of administration, subject to the control and direction of the Probate Court.

Rogers v. Hoberlein.

Section 52 of the general Act concerning estates of deceased persons (Acts of 1851, p. 434) prescribes the persons to whom administration shall be entitled in their order. 1st. To the surviving husband or wife. * * 8th. To the Public Administrator. 9th. Creditors. 10th. Any person or persons legally competent. Art. 2349, section 281 (Wood's Dig. 419) provides for the removal of any Executor or Administrator, etc.

In Beckett v. Selover, (7 Cal. 216) this Court held that the Public Administrator is not entitled to administer upon every estate, and there must be a judicial grant of administration to him in each particular case, of which his official commission is not proof; and he must show the grant of administration like every other Administrator.

It will be seen, from this review of the statutes, that it is nowhere provided that the Public Administrator shall hand over to the succeeding incumbent of the office the papers, or that the latter succeeds to the unfinished business of estates. By virtue of his office, it is true he is entitled to a grant of administration, as by virtue of his debt a creditor is entitled, but it does not follow from this that the grant is limited in time or by the existence of this relation. The statutes seem ex industria to exclude this idea. In one provision, the duty is imposed expressly, under a penalty, upon the then existing Public Administrators, to hand over the papers, etc.; and by other sections it is incumbent upon them to deliver the property, etc., to the Administrator regularly appointed.

It may have been the intention of the Legislature to confine the entire administration of an estate, once granted to a Public Administrator, to the person to whom the letters are granted; since it might lead to great confusion, and expense, and trouble, in shifting the administration to as many different hands as there should be Public Administrators. In this case a grant of administration was made to Flower, former Public Administrator; and no grant was made to Rogers, the plaintiff here. This was necessary, as held in Beckett v. Selover, to give him any title to the estate. The mere handing over the papers by Flower to him did not vest him with the title to sue in this case.

The main argument urged by the respondent against this view is, that as these powers and duties of the Public Administrator exist by virtue of his office, they must necessarily expire with the office. But this depends upon the nature of the office, and upon the Act creating it. At common law, a Sheriff was, after the expiration of his term, from a principle of convenience, considered in some respects as an officer; he could finish some kinds of business which he had begun. And so it has been held in other States, that an Executor or Administrator, after his resignation or removal, is to be treated, for purposes of settlement, remedies, etc., as Administrators in office. We do not see that estates would not be as safe in the hands of the first incumbent, as in those of his successor; while many considerations of convenience and expedition in the settlement of estates are involved in the continuing of the management of them in the hands to which they were first committed. At least, it would seem to be clear that the grant of administration must continue the authority and power of the grantee until it is directly set aside, or indirectly revoked by another appointment.

Upon the agreed facts, therefore, we think the law is for the defendant.

Judgment reversed.

County of El Dorado v. Reed.

---

COUNTY OF EL DORADO v. REED, COUNTY TREASURER, AND HIS SURETIES.

The Board of Supervisors of a County cannot settle with the County Treasurer at a special meeting of such Board, unless they have first given public notice of such meeting, and specified in such notice that such business will be transacted.

In order to give the amplest opportunity to the District Attorney, or citizens who desire to do so, to contest the allowance of improper demands against the Public Treasury, the business of the Supervisors is required to be transacted at the regular meetings required by law; or if at special meetings, public notice must be given of the business to be so transacted; and unless such notice be given, the acts of the Supervisors are a nullity.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Eleventh Judicial District, County of El Dorado.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion of the Court.

Sanderson & Newell for Appellants.

We insist that the Court erred in this case, by reviewing the action of the Board of Supervisors.

1st. Because the law clothed them with power to settle with the Treasurer, audit his accounts, and make him his proper allowances. That the exercise of that power was a judicial act, and an error committed by them in its exercise could not be enquired into collaterally Wood's Digest, p. 694, sec. 9.

2d. The only case in which the acts of Supervisors could be questioned collaterally, is where the record discloses that they acted without jurisdiction. In this case their record discloses no such fact, because they are authorized to audit and ascertain the state of accounts between the Treasurer and the County, and in this instance were in the exercise of that power, and part of their allowances are admitted to be legal charges.

3d. The action of the Board is in the nature of a judgment, and like a judgment, when questioned collaterally, must be respected as a whole, or disregarded entirely (being a nullity). In this case their action cannot be treated as a nullity, nor did the Court so treat it, for he credits Reed with all the allowances but one. People v. Sup. of El Dorado Co., 8 Cal. 53.

County of El Dorado v. Reed.

4th. The Court erred in thus reviewing collaterally these allowances, allowing some and disregarding others of them; he should have admitted the settlement as a whole, or disregarded it entirely.

5th. An erroneous action of the Board, where they have jurisdiction, cannot be reviewed collaterally, but the error must be corrected by a writ of certiorari: until so corrected it is conclusive. 2 Sandford, 472; 8 Cal. 58.

6th. In making the final settlement of the Treasurer, the Auditor is clothed with no judicial functions, but must be governed by the allowances of the Board; to give him additional power would be to make him an appellate judicial tribunal to review their proceedings at discretion.

TERRY, C. J., delivered the opinion of the Court — BALDWIN, J., and FIELD, J., concurring.

This was an action on the official bond of a County Treasurer.

The defense relied on is a settlement with the Board of Supervisors, at which settlement certain allowances were made to the Treasurer, leaving a balance due the county of seventy-three dollars, which was paid by Reed to his successor in office.

It appears that this settlement and allowance was made by the Supervisors at a special meeting, called for the transaction of other business; and that the settlement of the Treasurer's accounts was not specified in the order calling the meeting, as part of the business to be performed.

Section 5th of the Act "concerning Supervisors (Wood's Digest, 693) provides that when a special meeting of the Board of Supervisors is required, the order calling such meeting shall be entered in the records of the Board, etc. * * The order shall specify the business to be performed, and no other shall be transacted at such special meeting."

The reason of the prohibition contained in this section is fully explained by the Act of May 12th, 1853, (Wood's Digest, 65) which provides that the District Attorney, when not engaged in the other Courts as criminal prosecutor, shall attend the sittings of the Board of Supervisors, "when engaged in auditing accounts and claims brought against the county, and in all cases oppose such accounts or claims as he may deem illegal, unjust, or extortionate;" and the 21st section of the Supervisors' Act, (Wood's Digest, 696) which authorizes any person being a citizen and a tax-payer of the county, "to appear before the Board of Supervisors, and oppose the allowance of any claim or demand made against the county."

In order to give the amplest opportunity to the District Attorney, or citizens who desire to do so, to contest the allowance of improper demands against the Public Treasury, the business of the Supervisors is required to be transacted at the regular meetings provided by law; or if at special meetings, public notice must be given of the business to be so transacted, and unless such notice be given, the acts of the Supervisors are a nullity.

Rose v. Davis.

ROSE v. DAVIS et al.

Where a party takes possession of a part of a tract of land under a deed of conveyance to the whole, and at the time of entry no one is holding adversely, such possession will extend to the whole tract described in the deed.

A decree of confirmation of a grant by the United States Land Commission and the United States District Court, cannot be impeached in an action of ejectment between a party claiming under the grant and a third party.

Possession of the grantor under whom the plaintiff claims inures to the benefit of such plaintiff.

A party purchasing land cannot acquire, by such purchase, any greater right than his grantor possessed, and where such grantor entered upon the premises under a contract for lease, he is subject to the same estoppel as a tenant.

The rule of estoppel, which prevents a tenant from disputing his landlord's title, extends to all persons who enter upon premises under a contract for a lease, and to all persons who by purchase, fraud or otherwise, obtain possession from such tenant.

A private survey is no legal evidence of the facts it purports to contain, since, if it were, any man might recover the land of another, by including it in his own boundaries.

When a private survey is admitted as a diagram, but not as evidence, the Court should clearly explain to the jury the precise purpose and effect of its admission.

The survey or map of the United States Surveyor of a grant, is inadmissible as evidence to establish boundaries, without proof of the orders or authority under which he acted.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Tenth Judicial District, County of Yuba.

This was an action of ejectment to recover a tract of land in Yuba County. Plaintiff claimed by title deraigned from the grant of one Sutter, and his possession under it. Trial by jury on complaint and answer, putting in issue title and possession. There was a dispute as to whether the locus in quo was within the boundaries of the Sutter grant, and of the land conveyed to plaintiff, which was part of the Sutter grant. In order to make out his case, the plaintiff offered in evidence the map of J. W. Higgins, of a survey of a tract of land called the Linda tract, it being a private survey made under the orders of the claimants of the Linda tract for the purpose of showing that the land in dispute was embraced in said survey of said Higgins; and also offered a map made by one Von Schmidt, claiming to be a deputy surveyor of the United States, for the purpose of showing what was claimed to be the eastern line of the grant, before referred to, from the Mexican Government to John A. Sutter; and to the introduction of each of said maps counsel for defendants made the following exceptions: 1. That the map of Higgins was a private survey. 2. That there was no proof that it was made by consent of the defendants, or any of their grantors, or upon notice to them, or any of the grantors, or by order of the Court.

The Von Schmidt map was objected to as inadmissible: 1. Because no law of the United States, or order of a Court of competent jurisdiction within the United States, or any order or instruction of any Department at Washington, connected with the business of the United States for this State, or any other order, instruction or authority whatever, of either the Federal Government or the State Government, or any other instruction or authority was shown, authorizing the said survey or map to be made, or to be used in evidence in any Court of Justice of the State of California. 2. That no notice upon the defendants or grantors was shown before the making of the said survey as to the same, and no consent of the defendants was shown, or their grantors, to the making of said survey.

The Court ruled that the Higgins survey and map might go in evidence as a diagram, and the said Von Schmidt's map and survey be admitted as evidence.

After the close of the testimony, the Court, at the request of the plaintiff, gave the jury the following instructions:

1st. That if the jury believe the land claimed by the plaintiff is embraced in the boundaries named in the deed from John A. Sutter to Rose, Reynolds and Kinlock, and that they took possession of a part of the tract purchased by them from Sutter, claiming the whole, and that no one at the time of the entry held adversely, then their entry and possession are deemed in law co-extensive with the whole tract purchased by them.

2d. That the decree of confirmation of the grant to John A. Sutter by the United States Land Commission and the United States District Court, cannot be impeached in this suit.

3d. That the possession of the three, Rose, Reynolds and Kinlock, the grantors under whom the plaintiff claims, inures to the benefit of the present plaintiff.

4th. That Joseph L. Davis did not, by his purchase from Richard

---

Rose, acquire any greater right than Rose himself possessed; and that Rose, having entered upon the premises upon a contract for a lease from Rowe, was subject to the same estoppel as the tenant, and could (not) have disputed Rowe's title.

5th. That the same estoppel which prevents a tenant from disputing his landlord's title, extends to all persons who enter upon premises upon a contract for a lease, and to all persons who by purchase, fraud or otherwise, obtain possession from such tenant.

The Court gave several instructions at the request of the defendants' counsel, but refused to give the fourth asked by the defendants' counsel, which is in these words:

4th. "A demarcation, or private survey, made by direction of a party interested under the grant, is inadmissible evidence, because it would enable the grantee to fix a vagrant grant by his own act."

Plaintiff had verdict and judgment, and the defendants appealed to this Court.

Bryan & Filkins for Appellants.

The errors of the Court below are embraced in the refusal of the following instructions asked for by defendants' counsel, and refused by the Court.

The Court was asked to instruct the jury as a fourth instruction, as follows:

"A demarcation, or private survey, made by direction of a party interested under the grant, is inadmissible evidence, because it would enable the grantee to fix a vagrant grant by his own act."

This was certainly most pertinent to the case, and was refused.

The language of the instruction is precisely in the language of the opinion of Chief Justice Marshall, and a majority of the Supreme Court, in the case of Blake v. Dougherty, 5 Wheaton, 364 and 365.

On page 365 of the case last cited, the Court says:

"This private survey might have been made on any other part of the West Fork of the Cane Creek with as much propriety as on that where it has been made. It would have been equally admissible if placed anywhere else on that stream. To allow it any weight would be to allow the grantee to appropriate, by force of a grant, lands not originally appropriated by that grant. This would subvert all those principles relative to conveyances of land which we have been accustomed to consider as constituting immutable rules of property."

Rose v. Davis.

In Surget v. Little, 5 Smedes & Marshall, 330 and 331, Chief Justice Sharkey reviews the whole doctrine, and holds that in no case can a mere private survey bind parties who do not consent to the survey. See James, Lessees, v. Stookey, 1 Wash. C. C. Rep. 330; Chirac v. Reinecker, 2 Peters, 619, and other cases reviewed with favor by Chief Justice Sharkey in the above opinion.

In Bearce v. Jackson, 4 Mass. Rep. 410, Chief Justice Parsons in passing upon this point uses the following language in the close of his opinion: "A plan taken ex parte can never be used but as chalk, unless by consent." Upon the same doctrine is the case of Gerrish v. Beard, 11 Mass. Rep. 193.

It would be an unheard-of doctrine, to announce that an ex parte private survey should be evidence of boundary between two litigants.

As Chief Justice Marshall and Judge Sharkey say, this would be to allow a man to make his title in the shape of a survey or boundary. The boundary would be the limit of the conscience of the party or his surveyor; a dangerous standard to trust, perhaps, in this country.

So much for the private and ex parte Higgins survey.

We say that the survey of Von Schmidt, the deputy surveyor of the United States, is equally inadmissible before the patent has issued to the claimant, and before he is ordered to proceed by the Government of the United States to segregate the private land which may be claimed from the lands of the General Government.

We hold this position to be self-evident, that the government officer who acts without authority of law, his act is to be considered in no other light than that of a private individual. It would be idle to say that Von Schmidt or anybody else can dispossess me of land by his mere act of making a survey, without law, without orders, and without employment, except that of the party opposed to me in a suit.

The Act of March 3d, 1853, Congress of the United States, to provide for the survey of public lands in California, section 3, provides that the Surveyor General shall have the same powers as are conferred upon the Surveyor General of Louisiana, and can survey private claims to separate them from the public lands when they are "confirmed." The Sutter claim, Sutter himself says in the testimony before quoted, is not located, and he does not know where he will locate it. It is pending in the Supreme Court of the United States, and no authorized survey under the Act can be made until the claim is "confirmed," plainly referring to a final confirmation of the title, as the Louisiana Act referred to provides.

Rose v. Davis.

---

The Act is a limitation of his powers, as well as a proscription of his duties. He cannot survey until final confirmation, because the Supreme Court of the United States may throw the claim out, and in that case it is all governmental land, and there is none to segregate. Wood's Digest, Appendix, p. 748, sec. 3.

Where the Act last referred to says:

"He shall also cause all private claims to be surveyed after they have been confirmed, so far as may be necessary to complete the surveys of the public lands:" the grant of power to survey after confirmation is to deny that power, so far as the Government is concerned, before a final confirmation. The old maxim of law will apply here and govern "Expressio unius est exclusio alterius." But in any event he is limited by the language to make "such surveys only so far as may be necessary in the completion of the surveys of the public lands." They must show this to be that case, which they fail to do. Wood's Digest, p. 748, sec. 3.

The same authorities are referred to upon this point as upon the survey of Higgins, which was merely a private survey and had no shadow of authority.

Reardon, Mitchell & Smith for Respondent.

As regards the map of Von Schmidt. This map is presented to the Court with all the evidences of authenticity, and of its being a map of a survey taken in accordance with all the requirements of the Act of Congress and the decree of confirmation to Sutter. It is not pretended that it does not include the land in controversy; it is evidence in all Courts of the United States; it is conclusive against the United States for any claim to land within its boundaries; and it will scarcely be contended that it is not evidence, we might add "conclusive evidence," against sheer squatters on what they supposed to be government land, not even claiming right to preëmption. It may be proper to notice, passim, a sort of side argument, that the decree in favor of Sutter does not appear to be a final confirmation, within the words of Act of Congress before cited. We reply that the contrary nowhere appears. It would be a waste of time to contend, therefore, that the confirmation by the United States District Court was and is a final confirmation, or to argue that the Surveyor General was not bound to await the last possible day for perfecting an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, before proceeding to discharge the duties imposed on him by the law of Congress.

Rose v. Davis.

---

The appellants proceed to a formal assignment of errors.

I. The Court was asked to instruct the jury as a fourth instruction, as follows:

"A demarcation or private survey, made by direction of a party interested under the grant, is inadmissible evidence, because it would enable the grantee to fix a vagrant grant by his own act."

"This was certainly most pertinent to the case," say the counsel, "and was refused."

We deny the pertinency, because:

1st. The map in question was not made by direction of a party interested under the grant.

2d. Because the reason, to wit: "that it would enable a grantee to fix a vagrant grant by his own act," does not apply. In this case there is no pretense of any attempt to fix a vagrant grant by any act of the grantee or others.

It will be perceived that the language of Chief Justice Marshall, so carefully followed in the words of instruction, was used in the case of Blake v. Dougherty, &c., 5 Wheaton, 364, 365. In which, a certain grant of public domain called vaguely for the West fork of Cane creek, the waters of Elk river, &c.; and the plaintiff relied on a grant admitted to contain the lands in controversy. The defendants claimed under a prior grant, and exhibited what is called "a demarcation," which the Court understood to mean a private survey made by direction of a party interested under the grant, and which had the effect to locate the prior on the location of the subsequent grant, by the act of the party interested. It was, in short, the act of a party locating a "vagrant grant." Accordingly, the Court say: "This private survey might have been made on any other part of the west fork of Cane creek, with as much propriety as on that where it had been made. It would have been equally admissible if placed anywhere else on that stream."

Rose v. Davis.

---

The reason for the exclusion of such testimony is therefore obvious, but that reason is clearly not applicable to this case.

So also in the case of Surget v. Little, 5 Smedes & Marshall, 330, 331. The point presented does not arise in this case.

The Court there decided that, knowing judicially that most of the lands in the State had been surveyed, they would not permit a private map to be introduced, with proof that it conformed strictly to the map or survey in the land office. The Court saying: "Whether it did so conform was a question for the jury, and it was susceptible of better proof than was offered," &c.

The only point there decided was that the best evidence should be produced, or a reason given for not producing it.

In the case of Bearce v. Jackson: (4 Mass. Rep. 408, 409, 410) "The plaintiff offered in evidence a plan of the land described in the declaration, accompanied by the oath of the surveyor who took it, attesting its accuracy." The Judge refused to admit "the plan, because a plan including the lands in question had been taken by order of the Court, and with the consent of the parties to this action, which was proved to be correct," &c.

But we may save time by admitting, in the very words of appellants' counsel, that "it would be an unheard-of doctrine to announce than an ex parte private survey should be evidence of boundary between two litigants."

The Higgins map was not used as evidence for any such purpose; for this reason, if no other, that there was no question of boundary between the two litigants. We submit, therefore, that the Court did not err in refusing to grant this particular instruction, more especially as all that was material in it had been embraced in the instructions granted by the Court.

Rose v. Davis.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., concurring.

This was an action of ejectment to recover a tract of land in Yuba county. Plaintiff claimed by title deraigned from the grant of one Sutter, and his possession under it. Trial by jury on complaint and answer, putting in issue title and possession. There was a dispute as to whether the locus in quo was within the boundaries of the Sutter grant, and of the land conveyed to plaintiff, which was part of the Sutter grant. In order to make out his case, the plaintiff offered in evidence the map of J. W. Higgins of a survey of a tract of land called the Linda tract, it being a private survey made under the orders of the claimants of the Linda tract, for the purpose of showing that the land in dispute was embraced in said survey of said Higgins; and also offered a map made by one Von Schmidt, claiming to be a Deputy Surveyor of the United States, for the purpose of showing what was claimed to be the eastern line of the grant, before referred to, from the Mexican Government to John A. Sutter; and to the introduction of each of said maps, counsel for defendants made the following exceptions:

1. That the map of Higgins was a private survey.
2. That there was no proof that it was made by consent of the defendants, or any of their grantors, or upon notice to them, or any of the grantors, or by order of the Court.

The plaintiff's counsel introduced the Von Schmidt map, which was objected to as inadmissible:

1. Because no law of the United States, or order of a Court of competent jurisdiction within the United States, nor any order or instruction of any Department at Washington, connected with the business of the United States for this State, nor any other order, instruction or authority whatever, of either the Federal Government or the State Government, or any other instruction or authority was shown authorizing the said survey or map to be made, or to be used in evidence in any Court of Justice of the State of California.

2. That no notice upon the defendants or grantors was shown before the making of the said survey as to the same, and no consent of the defendants was shown, or their grantors, to the making of said survey.

Rose v. Davis.

---

The Court ruled that Higgins' survey and map might go in evidence as a diagram, and that the said Von Schmidt's map and survey be admitted as evidence.

The Court, at the instance of plaintiff, gave several instructions, numbered from one to five in the record, which seems to us to be correct.

It gave several instructions at the instance of the defendants. These do not come up for review.

It refused the fourth instruction asked by the defendants, in these words: "A demarcation or private survey made by direction of a party interested under the grant is inadmissible evidence, because it would enable the grantee to fix a vagrant grant by his own act." This instruction was designed, doubtless, to apply to the Higgins map of survey, which, as has been seen, was admitted against the exception of the defendants. It will be observed that it was offered as evidence to establish boundaries, and the specific objection made to it by defendants was that it was inadmissible for that purpose; but the Court "admitted it to go to the jury as a 'diagram.'" Probably, as it was made a part of the complaint, and as it tended to show the jury more clearly than by verbal description the premises the plaintiff claimed, the Court did not err in permitting it to go to the jury for this purpose; but as it was offered for a different purpose, and as the jury might easily be misled as to the effect of it, the Court, under the circumstances, should have guarded them against any improper influence, by explaining more distinctly than by the general words used in overruling the objection, the precise purpose and effect of its admission. At any rate, the defendants had a right to have the direction of the Court, as sought in the charge, as to the effect of this paper. The Court, therefore, should have given the fourth instruction; for the law is too plain for controversy, that a private survey is no legal evidence of the facts it purports to contain; since, if it were, any man might recover another's land by including it himself, or getting some one else to do it, within his boundaries.

The objection to Von Schmidt's map was well taken for a like reason. No authority was shown for making the survey. The United States Surveyor, nor his Deputy, is not an officer generally empowered to make surveys of private lands, which shall be evidence of title of boundaries. He may have special authority by orders of Court, or of the political department for that purpose — in which case the orders or authority given him are his warrant for the act; and this must be shown before his acts are effectual for any purpose of proof. The authorities which support these opinions are numerous. (See Blake v. Dougherty, 5 Wheaton, 364; 5 S. and M. 330, and cases cited in C. J. Sharkey's opinion, 4 Mass. 410.) But the principle upon which they rest is too clear to justify further citation.

There is nothing in the point as to the misapprehension of the jury as to the law as laid down by the Court; and the Court was right in giving no effect to these affidavits. (Hansberger v. Kinney, 6 Grattan, 287; 4 Hump. 338.)

For the errors we have indicated, the judgment must be reversed and cause remanded.

THE BUTTE CANAL AND DITCH COMPANY v. VAUGHN.

Where water from an artificial ditch is turned into a natural water course, and mingled with natural waters of the stream, for the purpose of conducting it to another point to be there used, it is not thereby abandoned, but may be taken out and used by the party thus conducting it, so that he do not, in so doing, diminish the quantity of the natural waters of the stream, to the injury of those who have previously appropriated such natural waters.

The burden of proof devolves on the party thus mingling the water belonging to him with that appropriated by others. He can only claim such quantity to which he establishes his right by decisive proof. The enforcement of his right must leave the opposite party in the use of the full quantity to which he was originally entitled.

The first appropriator of the water of a stream passing through the public lands in the State has the right to insist that the water shall be subject to his use and enjoyment to the extent of his original appropriation, and that its quality shall not be impaired so as to defeat the purposes of its appropriation. To this extent his rights go, and no further. In subordination to those rights, subsequent appropriators may make such use of the channel of the stream as they think proper, and they may mingle its waters with other waters, and divert an equal quantity, as often as they choose.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifth Judicial District, County of Amador.

This was an action for the diversion of the waters of the South fork of Jackson creek in the County of Amador. Plaintiffs claimed under the first appropriator of the waters of said stream. Defendant in his answer set up a right to a portion of the water, by virtue of a contract with the owners of the Amador County canal, which drained the North fork of the Mokelumne river. From this canal, the water claimed by defendant was emptied into a natural ravine, and from thence flowed into the South fork of Jackson creek, above the dam of plaintiffs, and after descending the stream for a mile, was again taken up at a point above plaintiffs' dam and diverted through defendant's ditch to his mining ground. Plaintiffs demurred to this portion of the defendant's answer as new matter. The demurrer was sustained by the Court below, and the defendant appealed. The material facts sufficiently appear in the opinion of the Court.

W. W. Cope for Appellant.

This case in its material features is precisely similar to that of Hoffman et al. v. Stone et al., 7 Cal. R. 46. There is no question as to the fact of priority; but the appellants, who were the defendants in the Court below, contend that they had the right to divert from said stream a quantity of water equal to that turned in for their use from the "Amador County Canal." The ditch of the defendants was constructed in pursuance of a contract with the owner of that canal for a supply of water, and the channel of said stream was adopted and used as a connecting link between the two, and as a medium for the conveyance of water from one to the other. The water turned into said stream was derived from a foreign source; it was turned in subsequent to the construction of the ditch of the defendants, and for the sole purpose of supplying that ditch. It was not abandoned, nor was the possession of it lost even for a moment.

---

Butte Canal and Ditch Co. v. Vaughn.

The principal difference between this case and that of Hoffman et al. v. Stone et al., consists in the fact that the water in this case, when turned into the creek, mingled with other water flowing therein, to the use of which the plaintiffs had the prior right. But the decision in that case indicates very clearly the immateriality of this difference. It settles a point of considerable importance in this case, that a mere prior right to the use of the water of a stream, does not entitle the party having such right to the exclusive use of the channel of the stream. A reasonable use may be made of such channel by any other person, and it would seem to follow, that any use must be regarded as reasonable from which no actual damage results to the prior appropriator.

If that case was correctly decided, the judgment in this must be reversed, or if affirmed, must be affirmed upon grounds purely technical. The only question is as to the effect upon the respective rights of the parties of the mingling of these separate bodies of water, by the voluntary act of the defendants. It is true, the identity of the water turned into the creek was destroyed by the mingling of such water with the natural water of the stream. But does it therefore follow, the whole was subjected to the prior rights of the plaintiffs? In the case of a confusion of goods, where one person willfully and without consent mixes his goods with those of another, so that they cannot be distinguished, the law gives the entire property to the injured party. But this is a rule of necessity, and is carried no farther than necessity requires. If the goods mixed are of the same kind, and of equal value, each party takes his given quantity, and neither is entitled to the whole. 2 Kent's Com. 437; 15 Ves. 442.

Butte Canal and Ditch Co. v. Vaughn.

---

The attention of the Court is particularly requested to the case in 15 Vesey. The rule there stated appears to me to be peculiarly applicable to a case like the present.

Eddy v. Simpson, 3 Cal. R. 249, and Kelley v. Natoma Water Co., 6 Cal. R. 105, are not authorities in this case. The decision in both of these cases proceeded upon the ground of abandonment alone, whereas in this case no such question exists or can arise.

The decision in Hoffman et al. v. Stone et al. is confidently relied upon by the appellants as governing this case.

The plaintiffs claim that all the water in South Jackson creek belonged to them, as first appropriators; that if any one negligently or willfully mingled other water with their water, they (plaintiffs) were entitled to the whole. The plaintiffs rely, with confidence, on the case of Eddy v. Simpson, 3 Cal. R. 249, to sustain the judgment of the Court below. The case of Kelley v. Natoma Water Co., 6 Cal. R. 105, is to the same effect. The latter case, however, has other facts mixed up with it, and other principles discussed, and among other things the doctrine of "relation." The case of Eddy v. Simpson has but one proposition in it, and we will examine that case, and endeavor to show that it does not in any one particular differ from the case now under discussion. We will further endeavor to show that that case is founded on the soundest principles of law, and ought to be sustained.

Appellants contend that this case differs from Eddy's case, in this particular—that in Eddy's case the water escaped, and flowed first into plaintiff's creek, and after it had flowed into the creek, defendants erected their dam to take it out; whereas, in this case, defendants erected their dam and ditch to take out the water before they had turned it in.

Now, the time at which the ditch was dug to take out the water, in either case, could make no difference, unless the question of abandonment had arisen; it might then have thrown some light on the intention of the parties. The digging of the ditch beforehand would clearly show that the party thus digging the ditch did not intend to abandon the water he was turning in above. If, then, the case of Eddy v. Simpson turned on the question of technical intentional abandonment, and it was on that ground that the Court sustained the action in that case, we admit that our authority is not in point. But if it turned on any other point than technical voluntary abandonment, then we think the case of Eddy v. Simpson is directly to the point. The difference of facts in the two cases could not upon any other principle be material.

Butte Canal and Ditch Co. v. Vaughn.

How do the appellants in this case come to the conclusion that the case of Eddy v. Simpson was decided on the doctrine of abandonment? Neither the word abandon nor abandonment, nor in fact, any word of similar import is used, either by this Court in their opinion, nor by either of the counsel in their briefs, nor by the Judge of the Court below in his instructions.

The Court decides one doctrine clearly; that is, that the use of water is only usufructuary; that the defendants having suffered the water to escape from where they used it, and to mingle with water where plaintiffs were using it, it all became subject to the use of plaintiffs.

In this case, say the appellants, we did not suffer our water to escape, but we intentionally turned it into plaintiffs' water. They contend that having turned the water in willfully, they have greater rights than if it had escaped without their consent. In the case where the water had escaped, why could not the party who originally appropriated it take it up again, after its escape? Undoubtedly not; because it had, after its escape, mingled with the water of another, and they could not separate it. There is no law which hinders a man from pursuing the property which has escaped from him. If he has only a usufructuary interest, still he may pursue, to enjoy that interest. In the case of Eddy v. Simpson, no one will deny that, after the water which was brought to Cherokee Corral, by the defendants, and there used by them, had escaped from them, they might have pursued that same water, erected dams and reservoirs, and taken it up again, at any point before it mingled with water used by another. They might have retaken it anywhere on the flats, and in the natural dry ravines, before it mingled with the water of Shady Creek. They did not lose the water then, irrevocably, by letting it escape. After an ordinary escape they had the right of recapture, or new appropriation. But they had lost it by letting it mingle with water appropriated by another. The reason is, the law will not attempt to make impracticable divisions. If one voluntarily mixes his property with that of another, ordinarily he loses the whole. And this rule is enforced with more rigor against the person who voluntarily and willfully makes the confusion, than against one who does it accidentally or negligently. See Kent's Com. 365, margin, 437, 8th edition, note 1.

Butte Canal and Ditch Co. v. Vaughn.

But in either case a division is refused, on the ground that it would be impracticable to tell what portion belongs to each of the parties, and the one who is faultless will not be subjected to a division in which, from the uncertainty of human testimony, and the impossibility of Courts doing exact justice, he might suffer a loss. If he is not in fault, he will not be subjected to any risk. The doctrine upon the subject of confusion of goods is well settled: that he who willfully mixes his goods with those of another loses the whole, except in the single instance where goods mixed are of the same quality, and are capable of being measured by some just standard, as wheat by the bushel, flour by the pound, wine by the gallon, etc., and in such cases, if the quantity mixed can be ascertained, then the wrong-doer may have his wheat, wine, or flour restored to him by measure, because it can make no difference to the innocent party whether he has the same identical grains of wheat, or drops of wine, which he originally had, provided he has the same quantity and quality. But the very moment it becomes impossible to make a decision, and do the innocent party certain justice — when the division can only be guessed at, or any injury has resulted to the innocent party from the admixture, then the wrong-doer forfeits the whole. We refer to the following authorities on this head: 2 Kent's Com. 365; Willard v. Rice, 11 Metcalf; Breckenridge v. Holland, 2 Blackford's Ind. R. 377.

In regard to the application of this rule to the use of the water, we think that we can show that it applies with more force than to any other class of property.

Butte Canal and Ditch Co. v. Vaughn.

In the first place, running water is incapable of accurate admeasurement; at least, no accurate means of admeasurement are in use among miners. It is true, they do measure by the square inch; but then a square-inch tube, with one foot head, would only carry half as much water as the same tube with four feet head, and one-third as much as with nine feet head, etc., that is, in proportion to the square root of the height.

But the difficulty of admeasurement is the smallest of the objections attending such confusion of water. If one party, after having conducted his water for some distance through artificial channels, and used it for mining purposes, turns it into a natural stream which has been appropriated by another, he of course empties mud and sediment with the water, and thereby injures the quality of the water in the natural stream. The quantity added would not, as a general rule, more than compensate for the depreciation of the quality.

Another difficulty is this: suppose water be turned into a creek at its head, which will fill a certain orifice, with a certain pressure; it runs down the creek say five or ten miles; now, how are you to measure it when it is taken out? During that five or ten miles, of course, there is a great loss by evaporation, leakage, sinking into the sand, etc. If you measure at the taking out in the same way as when it was let in, you make the innocent party, who first appropriated the creek, sustain all the loss of the wrong-doer. If you allow a per centage for loss, what will it be? The loss would be much greater in some cases than in others. Running over a gravelly bottom, in some cases, the loss would be fifty or seventy-five per cent., perhaps, in five miles. In other cases, with a narrow, shaded channel, and a compact rock bottom, the loss would not be ten per cent. in ten miles. But there is still another and greater difficulty, practically, than all we have yet mentioned. All men who have dug ditches from small creeks, have been in the habit of using their dams, at the head of the ditch, to accumulate water during the night, to be used during the day. Usually, these dams have filled up during the night. If, after the water is turned in, the dam soon fills up and runs over, much water is wasted during the night. Both parties commence using water out of the dam, or reservoir, in the morning, and it is soon emptied. All these things would make the equitable division of the water so difficult, that it would be impossible for the most equitable and right-minded persons to make a satisfactory division.

Butte Canal and Ditch Co. v. Vaughn.

---

It was suggested, on the argument of this cause, that the doctrine of confusion of goods did not apply to this case, because plaintiffs did not own the water, and only had a usufructuary right in it. Well, that is a special property. They had a right to it, with all the rights pertaining to property, so long as it was in their possession. They have the same right to protection, so long as the water is being used by them, that they would have in the use of property absolutely belonging to them. The injury is done to them before they have parted with the water. For the time being, they are the quasi owners. To show that the doctrine of confusion applies not only to the case of absolute property, but also to cases where there is only a qualified property, we refer to the case of Willard v. Rice et al., 11 Metcalf's Mass. Rep. 493.

The case in 15 Vesey, to which appellants refer, fully carries out the doctrine for which we contend in regard to confusion of goods.

FIELD, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., and BALDWIN, J., concurring.

The plaintiffs claim, under the first appropriators, the right to the waters of the South fork of Jackson creek, in the County of Amador, and previous to and at the time of the diversion by the defendants, which is the occasion of this suit, were the owners of a line of ditch and of flumes and aqueducts, into which, by means of a dam constructed across the stream, they diverted the waters from the natural channel of the fork, and conducted the same to adjacent mining ground to be used for mining purposes.

The defendants are the owners and in possession of valuable mining ground situated on the north side of the fork, and are endeavoring to obtain the requisite supply of water for its successful working from the North fork of the Mokelumne river and its tributaries, through the Amador County canal, under a contract with the owners of the canal. For that purpose the water is conducted from the canal by artificial channels to a natural gulch or ravine, from which it is emptied into the South fork of Jackson creek, above the dam of the plaintiffs. About a mile below the point where the water is thus emptied, the defendants have constructed a ditch leading to their mining ground, into which, by means of a dam at its head thrown across the fork, they divert a portion of the waters flowing in the channel, and it is this diversion which is the subject of complaint in this suit. The quantity of water diverted does not equal the quantity emptied into the fork from the Amador County canal through the ravine or gulch designated. Upon these facts the single question is presented whether the defendants, after the mingling of the water conducted by them from the canal with the waters naturally flowing in the fork, possess the right to take out an equal or less quantity from the stream, or is the right of the defendants to the use of the water whilst in the ravine, or to the use of an equal quantity, lost by its subsequent mingling with the natural waters of the fork?

Butte Canal and Ditch Co. v. Vaughn.

This case is similar in its material features to that of Hoffman et al. v. Stone et al. (7 Cal. 46). In that case the plaintiffs were the prior appropriators, and as such entitled to the waters of a stream called Dutch gulch, the channel of which was dry at certain seasons of the year. This channel the defendants used as a connecting link between two canals constructed by them, emptying their waters by one canal into the channel, and subsequently diverting them by means of a dam into the other. The plaintiffs in that case, who were the owners of a ditch which received its supply of water from the creek, obtained a judgment perpetually enjoining the defendants from diverting the water from the main channel so as to prevent it from flowing down to the extent of the capacity of their ditch. But on appeal the judgment was reversed, and this Court, per Murray, C. J., said:

"The plaintiffs being the prior locators, it would follow that any interference with the waters of Dutch gulch would be an infraction of their rights. But the appropriation of the waters did not give them the exclusive use of the bed of the stream. We see no reason why it might not be used by others as a channel for conducting water, so long as it did not interfere with their rights. If the defendants were diverting the natural water of the stream, as well as that brought into it by themselves, then the plaintiff would have a just cause of complaint."

Butte Canal and Ditch Co. v. Vaughn.

In the case at the bar the channel of the South fork of Jackson creek is used as a connecting link between the Amador County canal and the ditch of the defendants. The water from the canal is emptied into the fork with no intention of abandoning its use, but for the sole purpose of supplying the ditch. The principal difference between this case and that of Hoffman v. Stone, is the mingling of the water introduced by the defendants with the waters of the creek. In that case the channel of the stream was dry in certain seasons of the year, and at the time the suit was brought there was no natural water flowing in it. But it does not appear that this circumstance had any controlling influence upon the decision. The point settled in that case is this: that the prior right to the use of the natural water of a stream does not entitle the owner of such a right to the exclusive use of the channel. So long as his right is not interfered with, there is no reason why the bed of the stream may not be used by others as a channel for conducting water. If the plaintiffs in the present case receive their full supply, as previous to the introduction of water by the defendants, they have no cause of complaint.

It does not necessarily follow that the water introduced by the defendants became subject to the use of the plaintiffs, because its identity was lost by being mingled with the water naturally flowing in the creek. The rights of the parties, after such mingling, are not unlike the rights of the owners of goods of equal value after their mixture — both are entitled to take their given quantity. Where there is a confusion of goods willfully made by one owner, without the consent of the other, so that it becomes impossible to distinguish what belongs to each, the common law gives the entire property to the injured party. "But this rule," says Kent, "is carried no further than necessity requires; and if the goods can be easily distinguished and separated, as articles of furniture, for instance, then no change of property takes place. So, if the corn or flour mixed together were of equal value, then the injured party takes his given quantity and not the whole." (Coms., 2d vol., 365; Lupton v. White, 15 Vesey, 442.)

The plaintiffs rely, with apparent confidence, upon the case of Eddy v. Simpson (3 Cal. 249). In that case the plaintiffs were the prior appropriators of the water of Shady creek, having diverted the same by a dam across the stream. The defendants, by like means, obtained the water of Bloody Run and Grizzly cañon, which they brought to a place known as Cherokee corral, where, after its use, it passed from their possession and found its way, by natural channels and the natural level of the country, to Shady creek, at a point above the dam of the plaintiffs. And when the defendants undertook to retake from Shady creek, a quantity of water equal to that which thus found its way into the channel, the Court held their rights to the water were gone. "When the water of Grizzly cañon and Bloody Run," said the Court, "left the possession of the defendants at Cherokee Corral, all right to and interest in that water was lost by the defendants. It might be made the property of whomsoever chose to possess it. Without the agency of the defendants, it found its way into Shady creek, joining the waters there in the possession of the plaintiffs, and became a part of the body of water used and possessed by them."

Butte Canal and Ditch Co. v. Vaughn.

It is very evident that the Court considered the fact that the water had passed from the possession of the defendants, and found its way to Shady creek without their agency, as material circumstances of the case; in other words, it regarded the water as having been abandoned. This is the view taken by Mr. Chief Justice Murray, when he notices the objection that Hoffman v. Stone was within the rule of that case; for the reason he assigns, as an answer to the objection, is the finding of the jury that the water was not abandoned by the defendants, and left to find its way by natural channels into Dutch gulch, but was turned in by the defendants, making the gulch a connecting link of their ditch.

There may be some difficulty in cases like the present, in determining with exactness the quantity of water which parties are entitled to divert. Similar difficulty exists in the case of a mixture of wheat and corn — the quantity to be taken by each owner must be a matter of evidence. The Courts do not, however, refuse the consideration of such subjects, because of the complicated and embarrassing character of the questions to which they give rise. If exact justice cannot be obtained, an approximation to it must be sought, care being taken that no injury is done to the innocent party. The burden of proof rests with the party causing the mixture. He must show clearly to what portion he is entitled. He can claim only such portion as is established by decisive proof. The enforcement of his right must leave the opposite party in the use of the full quantity to which he was originally entitled.

Butte Canal and Ditch Co. v. Vaughn.

---

Cases involving questions of analogous character and equal difficulty, are of frequent occurrence. The illustration given by the defendants' counsel is in point. A constructs a ditch, and appropriates a portion of the water of some stream for mining purposes; B subsequently constructs a ditch for a similar purpose, tapping the stream. A then enlarges his ditch, destroying the landmarks of its original capacity. A dispute then arises between A and B, as to whether A is not diverting more water through his enlarged ditch, than he is entitled to by virtue of his first appropriation. Here the quantity of water to which A and B are respectively entitled, becomes difficult of accurate adjustment; and if, instead of two, there be a greater number of ditches taking water from the same stream, questions respecting the conflicting rights of the parties become exceedingly complicated and embarrassing. The Courts do not, however, as we have observed, refuse to entertain such questions; but endeavor to relieve them of their complication and embarrassment, and to mete out justice to all parties. (Priest v. Union Canal Company, 6 Cal. 107, and White v. Todd's Valley Water Company, 8 Cal. 443.) In Embrey et al. v. Owen, (4 Eng. Law and Equity, 470) Baron Alderson refers to a case in point. "There was a case," says the Baron, "of Dakin v. Cornish, tried before me at Leeds, in 1845, where water was taken from the river Ayr to work a steam engine. There was an artificial course from the river to a reservoir in the yard of a mill; the water was there mixed with other water obtained from the earth, the whole was then used for the steam engine, what remained was transferred into another tube and carried back to the river; and the question was whether this was an injury to some other mills lower down on the stream. We took much care about the case, and I left it to the jury to say if the same quantity of water continued to run in the river, as if none of its water had ever entered the premises of the defendant, and if so, he was entitled to their verdict."

The first appropriator of the water of a stream passing through the public lands in this State, has the right to insist that the water shall be subject to his use and enjoyment to the extent of his original appropriation, and that its quality shall not be impaired so as to defeat the purpose of its appropriation. To this extent his rights go, and no further. In subordination to these rights, subsequent appropriators may make such use of the channel of the stream as they think proper, and they may mingle with its waters other waters, and divert an equal quantity, as often as they choose. Whilst resting in the perfect enjoyment of their original rights, the first appropriators have no cause of complaint.

Clark v. McElvy.

It follows that the Court below erred in sustaining the demurrer to the new matter set up in the answer, and the judgment rendered thereon must be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings. Ordered accordingly.

A bill of sale for a mining claim, not under seal, and without warranty, which only purports to convey to the vendee the right, title and interest of the vendor, will not pass the title, although the vendor is in possession at the time, if such possession is without title. Such a bill only passes an equity, which is subject to the legal title or any superior equity. In such a case, the purchaser takes the risk of any infirmities or defects of title which may exist. The doctrine of caveat emptor applies to all such cases.

Ejectment to recover a mining claim.

The case was tried before a jury, who, under the instruction of the Court, returned a verdict for the plaintiff. It seems that one Matteson, in 1853, was possessed of a certain piece of mining ground, and in consideration of a note made by one Head and one Flippen, with one Grier as surety, in July of the same year, executed and delivered a bill of sale of the ground to Head and Flippen, jointly. Evidence was offered, in the course of the trial, tending to show, if credited, that Head and Flippen, after getting the bill of sale, went to the ground, not far off, and found some other persons in possession. They then returned to Matteson, and informed him of the fact. The bargain was thereupon rescinded, the note destroyed, and Flippen agreed to destroy the bill as soon as he returned to his cabin, where it was. It had not been recorded. Matteson, Head, Flippen and others then determined to drive the persons in possession off the ground. They did so, and kept the possession themselves. Two or three days afterwards Flippen sold the claim, or his interest in it, to Clark, the plaintiff below. Matteson, shortly after this sale, sold the interest or share to Head, who thereby, as claimed, became owner of the entire claim. Head remained in possession, working this and other claims, forming a compact body or tract of land, for several years, and until sold to the defendant below. In December, 1857, Clark, the plaintiff, brought this suit.

It seems to be assumed, in the instructions and in the argument, that some proof was made that Flippen, at the time of the sale to Clark, was in possession, and showed Clark the bill of sale from Matteson, or that Clark saw it, or had knowledge of its existence and contents; and we assume that this is true.

The bill of sale from Matteson to Head and Flippen is not in the record. The bill of sale from Flippen to Clark is, in these words:

“NEVADA, July 5, 1854.

“Know all men by these presents, that in consideration of two hundred and fifty dollars, in hand paid and this day received, I hereby sell and transfer all my right, title and interest — said interest being one-fourth — in claim situated, etc., on Little Deer creek, and known as Booth & Co.’s claims, unto J. M. Clark; in token of which, I hereby set my hand and seal, this day.

“ (Signed)

WILLIAM H. FLIPPEN.

“G. H. GRANT, witness.”

No seal is affixed to the name of Flippen.

The first instruction of the Court was as follows:

“That if the jury believed from the testimony that Head and Flip-

---

Clark v. McElvy.

---

pen purchased two interests in the ground in dispute, gave a joint note with Grier as security, and received a joint bill of sale; that on finding other parties claimed the ground, they returned to Matteson, from whom the ground had been purchased; that an agreement was then made to cancel and annul the sale of said claims, for the surrender of the bill of sale, and that the joint note was given up and canceled, but the bill of sale, being away, was not given up—then as between the parties, and all parties having notice, these acts worked as a cancellation of the bill of sale. But if, notwithstanding such agreement, Flippen neglected to destroy the bill of sale, as he had promised, and that Clark, upon the strength of the bill of sale, knowing it had been executed, and not knowing of the agreement to cancel, was induced thereby to purchase—then he would be entitled to recover against a subsequent purchaser of the same interest from Matteson; and at request of defendants' counsel, the Court said to the jury, that if Clark was not induced to purchase by the bill of sale, (or if the bill of sale was not the principal inducement to the privileges) then those holding under Matteson subsequently are not estopped from setting up claim against Clark."

Plaintiff had judgment, and the defendants appealed.

The instructions were erroneous.

1st. Because thereby the jury was required to regard "a bill of sale" for a mining claim in the light of a negotiable instrument, and the purchaser in good faith, from the holder of such bill of sale of the land mentioned in the same, in like position with, and with like rights to, an endorser in good faith of a bill of exchange.

The doctrine of caveat emptor is entirely ignored in the instructions, and the whole case made to turn with the jury upon the question whether the purchaser Clark had notice that his grantor had no title.

The instructions required the jury, after finding that the sale had been revoked or cancelled by mutual agreement and concurrence, and that the interest before intended to be conveyed had reverted or remained in Matteson, leaving none in Flippen, plaintiff's grantor, at the time of sale to plaintiff; further and also to find that the bill of sale

Clark v. McElvy.

---

had been destroyed, and that Clark, plaintiff, did not know that his grantor had no title.

How could the interest of the parties be affected by the destruction of a bill of sale of a mining claim, when the contract intended to be expressed in such instructions had been revoked by the parties to it?

A contract may be rescinded by consent of the parties, and this is an elementary rule of law applicable alike where real or personal property is the subject of the agreement. 1 Parsons on Cont. 190.

When a contract is rescinded, it cannot be rescinded as to one of the parties, and remain in force as to the other; and this proposition logically results from the well established rule that there must be mutuality in every agreement. The surrender and destruction of the note, pursuant to the agreement to annul the bargain, worked a cancellation in toto.

If the contract was rescinded as to Matteson, it was rescinded as to Flippen, and this left Flippen no interest whatever in the subject of the contract — the mining claims.

Flippen having no interest, could convey none: "nemo plus juris in alium transferre potest quam ipse habet." Broom's Legal Max. 354.

The only exceptions to this principle controlling the transfer of property are —

1st. That in favor of a bona fide purchaser of goods in market overt.

2d. That in favor of a bona fide purchaser of a negotiable instrument, bill of exchange, etc.

3d. That in favor of a bona fide purchaser of a bill of lading.

There is no market overt in this State, or in any State of America.

It is wholly unstained by reason or judicial ruling (unless in this instance) that "a bill of sale" for a mining claim, so long as it is not destroyed, is a negotiable instrument; and that the holder thereof, without right or title to the lands mentioned in it, can by reason of such holding convey such lands to one whose innocence equals his simplicity in purchasing without inquiring as to the title of such holder.

The learned Judge in the Court below seems to have regarded the bill of sale as a negotiable instrument, and that its transfer carried the land mentioned in it to a purchaser without notice of the defect of the holder's title.

Clark v. McElvy.

Is a mining claim land or personal property? Until the question is otherwise decided, I must hold the opinion that its characteristics are those of realty. This Court seems to have so regarded a mining claim in the case of The Merced Mining Co. v. Fremont, 7 Cal. Rep. 317.

If a mining claim is real estate, a bill of sale, not being an instrument under seal, conveys no title, and imparts notice to no one. Neither the instruction of such an instrument, therefore, nor the execution of a like one reconveying, was required in this case to produce a rescission of the contract; and one with knowledge of all the acts, or the whole transaction between the parties, could become a purchaser in good faith from Matteson, the original owner, and acquire title.

2d. The instructions of the Court were erroneous, because contradictory to and irreconcilable with those given at defendant's request.

The latter rendered the finding of title in Flippen, plaintiff grantor, at the time of the pretended and false sale to plaintiff, indispensably necessary to a verdict for plaintiff. Those which were immediately afterwards given on the Court's own suggestion, completely ignored that requisite, and placed plaintiff's right to recover alone on the grounds of the destruction of the bill of sale, and that plaintiff had no notice that his grantor had no title.

The first proposition of the judge's oral charge is, in substance, that parties to an agreement and their privies with notice are bound by such agreement. We apprehend that this doctrine, as applied to the case at bar, will not be questioned. See Hostler v. Hays, 3 Cal. 302; Barroilhet v. Battelle, 7 Cal. 450; Bird v. Lisbros, 9 Cal. R. 1.

The second section of the oral charge, if taken by itself, may be questionable law; but if wrong, the error is against the plaintiff and in favor of the defendants.

This is an action of ejectment, and under the pleadings we have only to establish title in ourselves or in our grantor; but the instruction is to the effect that we must prove: 1st. That at the time of our purchase we believed Flippen had no title. 2d. That we were induced to purchase by the first bill of sale. 3d. That we were ignorant of the agreement existing between Matteson and Flippen, our grantor, to destroy a certain instrument. All this was certainly against a plaintiff who had only to prove title. Belief, inducement and ignorance are issues alike foreign to the case presented by the pleas, and maintained by the proof; and the rule is well established that the verdict will not be disturbed unless the instruction prejudice the party complaining. See 4 B. Mon. Rep. 386.

Clark v. McElvy.

If, however, this oral charge be examined in connection with the written instructions which follow, it will be seen that as a whole they embody the law of this case. Says the Court, through defendants' written instructions: "If Clark's grantor parted with his title before his sale to Clark, you must find for defendant." Any doubts which the jury may have entertained from the oral charge of the judge, were fully corrected by the full and positive instructions which followed. The rule is too well established to require argument, that instructions must be construed together. Although some single propositions may be incorrect, yet, if from the whole it appears that the law was correctly given, the verdict will not be disturbed. Dwinelle v. Henriquez, 1 Cal. 388; Carrington v. Pacific Mail Steamship Company, 1 Cal. 475; Haskell v. McHenry, 4 Cal. 411.

The rule in all these cases appears to be this: that if, from the whole charge construed together, the law was correctly given, an incidental error will not vitiate the verdict.

In the case of Cunningham v. Dorsey, 6 Cal. 19, a new trial was granted, though an erroneous instruction was given with a correct one upon the same point. It will be seen, upon an examination of that case, that the only question was the amount of damage sustained by the plaintiff, and the error of the Court was in giving the measure of damages sustained by the plaintiff. The rule of computation was exclusively a question of law, and the verdict of the jury was directly dependent upon this. In such a case, the Court may properly decide that the true rule upon this point being absolutely necessary to the determination of the case, and there being nothing in the verdict to decide by which instruction the jury were governed, a new trial must be had. In that case, also, both instructions were in writing, and with the jury in their deliberations. But in the case at bar, the correct rule alone was in writing, and the oral error, if it existed, was lost to all save the ear of the defendant's attorney.

BALDWIN, J., after stating the facts, delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., and FIELD, J., concurring.

It is not very material, in the view we have taken of this case, whether we regard these mining claims as real or personal estate. The bill of sale from Matteson to Flippen and Head may be left out of the question. The bill from Flippen to Clark only purports to convey to the latter the right, title and interest — whatever that was — of the grantor. If Flippen had no real interest, by reason of the cancellation of the contract of sale, he could convey none, by such a contract as that in evidence, to his grantee.

The bill of sale, not being under seal, even if it were otherwise sufficient to pass the legal title to real estate, it did not pass any in this instance; it passed only an equity, and this equity is subordinate to the legal title or to any superior equity. This was decided in the case of Dupont v. Wertheman, 10 Cal. 354. In such case, as shown in the case cited, the assignee stands in the shoes of his assignor.

The instrument does not pretend to be a conveyance of the land, but only of the right, title and interest in it, and this without warranty. It is held in such cases that the instrument only conveys the present right or title of the party granting. The purchaser takes the risk of any infirmities or defects of title which may exist. (Adams v. Cuddy, 13 Pick. 463; Morse v. Godfrey, 3 Story's R. 364; 1 Cowen, 613; 9 Ib. 13; 4 Kent, 261; 12 Pick. 47; 13 Ib. 116, 460; 14 Johns. 193; 20 Ib. 478; and 11 Sergt. and R., 389, cited in case of Dupont v. Wertheman.) The doctrine of caveat emptor applies in every such case. It was the duty of Clark, under such circumstances, to inquire of Matteson into the true state of the title; or if he buys only the interest of the grantor without such inquiry, he must run the risk of his speculation. The title being really in Matteson, or Matteson, after the cancellation, having on the hypothesis of fact assumed the superior equity, Clark would get nothing by his purchase under the contract evidenced by this bill of sale. The defendant succeeding to the title of Matteson, has the same rights.

There is nothing in the point made by the respondent, that no exception was taken to separate portions of the charge. It will be seen that the charge is so connected as that each part relates to the rest, and the substance of it opposes the view we have just presented. Nor is there anything in the point that the Court gave the instructions asked by the defendant; which, considered alone, seem to place the law substantially as we have given it. If the instructions were directly contradictory this would be a good ground for reversal. If to be taken altogether, the one set qualifying the others, then the error we have pointed out exists.

Pilot Rock Creek Canal Co. v. Chapman.

We are not to be understood as expressing any opinion, or giving any intimation whatever as to the facts of this case. It is for the jury to pass upon them. The parties are entitled to have the law applicable to any supposed hypothesis of fact of which there is legal evidence, distinctly given to the jury, that they may apply the law to the proofs.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded.

THE PILOT ROCK CREEK CANAL CO. v. CHAPMAN et als.

The granting or refusing a continuance rests in the sound discretion of the Court below; and even when the facts show that the action of the Court below approached nearly to an arbitrary exercise of its discretion, that action will not be reviewed unless there has been a motion for a new trial, and the application supported by the affidavits of the absent witnesses, if such affidavits can be obtained, or if not, then it should be shown to the Court that they cannot be obtained. Unless this be done, this Court will not interfere, in civil cases, with the action of the lower Court.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Eleventh Judicial District, County of El Dorado.

This was an action brought to recover damage done to a ditch by reason of defendants mining in the cañon above, and running down sediment and earth into the ditch.

Defendants alleged that they were miners, and claimed priority of location and working their claim.

When the case was called for trial, defendants moved for a continuance of the case on the ground of absent witnesses. This motion was based on the affidavit of one of the defendants, showing diligence in attempting to obtain the testimony of such absent witnesses, and the nature of the proof. The Court denied the motion for a continuance, and the cause was tried by a jury, who rendered a verdict for the plaintiff, and judgment was entered therein. Defendants moved for a new trial on the papers in the case, which was denied, and they appealed.

Pilot Rock Creek Canal Co. v. Chapman.

---

John Hume for Appellants.

Sanderson & Newell for Respondent.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — FIELD, J., concurring.

The first assignment of error in this case is for the refusal of the Court below to grant a continuance on the affidavit of the defendant.

In the case of Musgrove v. Perkins (9 Cal. 211) we held that "the granting or refusal of a continuance rests in the sound discretion of the Court below; and its ruling will not be reviewed except for the most cogent reasons. The Court below is apprised of all the circumstances of the case and the previous proceedings, and is, therefore, better able to decide upon the propriety of granting the application than an appellate Court; and when it exercises a reasonable, and not an arbitrary discretion, its action will not be disturbed." It is true that the facts in this case show that the action of the Court approached very closely the line within which, it is intimated, this Court will interfere. But in such cases we think the party whose application has been refused should move the Court for a new trial, and support the application by the affidavits of the absent witnesses, if such affidavits can be obtained, or it should be shown to the Court that they cannot be obtained. Unless this be done, this Court will not interfere, in civil cases, with the action of the lower Court.

The second assignment of error is without merit. It has nowhere been held that a defendant is not responsible for injuries done the ditch of another by the deposit of mud and sediment in it. The doctrine of the Bear River Company v. York Mining Company, 8 Cal. 327, probably went quite as far as it ought to have gone, when confined to the express points there announced, and we certainly feel no disposition to extend it further.

Judgment affirmed.

Dye v. Dye.

DYE v. DYE.

In an action for the division of the common property of husband and wife after a decree of divorce, the plaintiff, to bring herself within the provisions of the Act "defining the rights of husband and wife," passed April 17th, 1850, must affirmatively state such facts as give her the right to the property under the Act.

It is not material where the marriage was solemnized, if the parties afterwards, and after the passage of the Act, resided and acquired the property here.

There is no presumption of law that a marriage took place at any particular point, nor that property, especially money "and other personal property," was acquired in any particular locality.

When a pleader wishes to avail himself of a statutory privilege, or right given by particular facts, he must show the facts; those facts which the statute requires as the foundation of the right must be stated in the complaint.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, County of San Francisco.

This bill was filed by complainant for a division of common property, upon the allegation of a dissolution, by a decree of the Twelfth District Court, of the matrimonial union once existing between these parties. The decree was procured at the instance of the defendant. The bill states "that at the time of the rendition of said decree, the said Job F. Dye was in possession and held a large amount of property; all of which said property was acquired after the marriage and during the coverture with your complainant, to wit: a rancho, situated in the county of Tehama and State aforesaid, containing eleven leagues of land; one hundred acres of land situated in the county of Sacramento; a house and lot, situated in the town of Monterey; two hundred head of horses; two thousand head of horned cattle; two thousand head of sheep; ten thousand dollars in cash, and other personal property; which said property is common property, as made by the statute of this State." The marriage is alleged to have taken place on the ——— day of ———, 1838; where, is not stated, nor the then residence of the parties. To this complaint the defendant demurred, upon several grounds. The demurrer was sustained and the plaintiff appealed.

Thompson, Irving & Pate for Appellant.

The objection urged by the respondent's counsel is, that there is no averment that the property was acquired subsequent to the Act passed seventeenth of April, 1850; that this Act only affects property acquired since the passage of the Act.

Dye v. Dye.

---

We deny this to be the true construction of the law. The language of the twelfth section of the statute provides that in case of a dissolution of the marriage, the common property shall be equally divided between the parties. It makes no distinction whatever between property acquired previous to the Act and the property acquired since.

It applies to all the common property: we are aware that some doubt has been raised as to this construction of the statute. By reference to the fifteenth section, where it is provided "that the rights of husband and wife, married in this State, prior to the passage of this Act, or married out of this State, who shall reside and acquire property herein, shall also be determined by the provisions of this Act, with respect to such property as shall be hereafter acquired, unless so far as such provisions may be in conflict with the stipulations of any marriage contract."

We submit, to construe the language of this section as is contended for by the respondent, would be to bring it directly in conflict with the twelfth section, which provides for a division of "the common property," that is, common property acquired before as well as since the passage of this Act.

It would be doing injustice to the Legislature, to suppose that after having provided for a divorce, for the causes set forth in the statute, it has made no provision as to the disposition of any property held by parties in common at the time of the passage of the Act; that it had provided, with jealous care, for the equal division of the property to be acquired, but had made no provision as to the disposition of that held at the time of the passage of the Act.

At the time of the passage of this law, perhaps one-half of the property in the State was held as common property between the husband and wife. Can we suppose that it was not the intention of the Legislature to make some provision in reference to interests so large? Let us see the consequences of the construction contended by the respondent.

The Legislature has provided for a divorce for certain cases.

The husband and wife are entitled to certain property in common. She institutes her suit for a divorce, establishes her right to a divorce

Dye v. Dye.

---

She asks a division of the common property. She is told that the Act "which grants a right to a divorce, gives the Court no power to decree a division of the common property held by herself and husband before the Act."

Thus, the marital tie having been dissolved, the husband is discharged from his marital obligations to provide for the wife. The common property remains in the same state, that is, under the power of the husband, with an absolute right of disposition. Suppose, on the other hand, that the husband institutes his suit, and obtains the divorce; the same consequences would ensue. This is the case presented by the record.

The husband has been discharged of all his marital obligations, and now claims all the common property. Should the construction contended for by the respondent be sanctioned by the Court, the Act providing for a divorce would, in many cases, act as a confiscation of the rights of the wife, and a bestowal of the same upon the husband, whilst it would often furnish the strongest inducements to the husband to obtain a divorce, and thus appropriate to himself the result of the joint acquisitions of himself and wife.

There is no averment in the complaint, or anything to show, that the property was acquired by the defendant subsequent to the passage of the Act of April 17, 1850.

The plaintiff, irrespective of this statute, can have no possible claim on the property of the defendant. By section 15 of this Act it will be found that "the rights of husband and wife, married in this State prior to the passage of this Act, or married out of this State, who shall reside and acquire property herein, shall also be determined by the provisions of this Act, with respect to such property as shall be hereafter acquired, unless so far as such provisions may be in conflict with the stipulations of any marriage contract."

It will thus be seen that the Act operates prospectively; it only affects property acquired after its passage; as indeed, if it had operated retrospectively, it would be unconstitutional.

We suppose the complaint ought to contain every averment necessary to show a cause of action in the plaintiff; but the very essence of the cause in this case is wanting; that is, an averment that the property was acquired since the statute went into operation; and also that it was not acquired by any of the modes that would constitute it separate property. What judgment could the Court render upon the complaint as it stands? It certainly could not adjudge that the property therein referred to was common property, for the want of an allegation showing that it came within the provisions of the statute. It might have been acquired at any time from the year 1838, the time of the marriage, up to the year 1850; and yet the plaintiff could have no claim upon it, there having been no community of property until the passage of the Act in question. The Court, to render judgment for the plaintiff, would have to assume the fact of its being acquired subsequent to April 17, 1850; and also to assume that it was not acquired by gift, bequest, devise, or descent; neither of which assumptions the Court will indulge in.

Dye v. Dye.

Every allegation must be direct and positive and not argumentative, or by way of recital, or inference. Suppose the action was by a wife, against a person who had levied on her separate property, as the property of her husband, and she, to show that the property was hers, averred that it was acquired by her after marriage; would that be sufficient? Would she not have to aver that she acquired it by gift, bequest, devise, or descent?

A person claiming a right derived from a statute, must bring himself, by an express averment, within its provisions.

BALDWIN, J., after stating the facts, delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., and FIELD, J., concurring.

It will be perceived that the plaintiff deduces her right from the statute of this State. This statute was passed April 17th, 1850 (C. L., p. 814). Sections 14 and 15 provide that, in every marriage hereafter contracted in this State the rights of husband and wife shall be governed by the Act; which Act makes property acquired after April 17th, 1850, in this State, by husband and wife, who had been married in this State theretofore, or who had married out of the State before that time, but who resided and acquired property in the State,

---

governed by the Act. To bring herself within the provisions of the Act, therefore, the facts must be stated which give the right to the wife by the terms of the statute. It is not material where the marriage was solemnized, if the parties afterwards, and after the passage of the Act, resided and acquired the property here; but this is nowhere stated. It may be true, as the plaintiff's counsel in an ingenious argument has suggested, that the Mexican law was the same as ours. But we apprehend, that neither by the Mexican law nor by our statute, if a marriage takes place in a State retaining the common law system in respect to the relation of husband and wife, would personal property, acquired by either spouse in the place of the matrimonial domicil, and removed or brought into California, be common property; nor even if personal property were brought here by the husband, when he was residing and had married in New York, would it be common property. It is, however, obvious that the plaintiff counts upon a statutory right; she claims her title through the statute. The statute was passed in 1850, and refers to and embraces property acquired after that time. It gives the right only to property acquired under particular circumstances. The plaintiff, counting upon and claiming through this statute, is not at liberty to seek any other or different source of title. Taking the averment most strongly against the pleader, we must infer that the property was acquired since the passage of this Act, since we can scarcely conclude that she claims under a statute which has nothing to do with the property she claims. What facts, then, does the statute make essential to give her this right? The language is plain: whether married in this State or in any other State, prior to the passage of the Act, the rights of property acquired after the passage of the Act are determined by this Statute; but the statute does not affect property after acquired in this State, if acquired by a husband or wife whose marriage occurred elsewhere, unless they "resided and acquired the property herein." There is no presumption of law that a marriage took place at any particular point, nor that property, especially money "and other personal property," was acquired in any particular locality. When a pleader wishes to avail himself of a statutory privilege or right, given by particular facts, he must show the facts. The Court pronounces upon the law, or the legal effect of these facts. The only question in this connection is whether, in a bill of this sort, it is sufficient to aver, in general terms, that the plaintiff is entitled, under the statute, to certain property, describing it as "common property."

---

Dye v. Dye.

It is said in Mann v. Morewood, (5 Sand. 516) that the facts which the code requires to be stated, as constituting a cause of action, "can only mean real traversable facts, as distinguished from propositions or conclusions of law; since it is the former, and not the latter, that can alone, with any propriety, be said to constitute the cause of action." So in Adams v. Holley, administratrix, (12 How. Pr. R. 330) it was held that a count was fatally defective which averred the plaintiff to be the owner of certain effects; the Court saying: "The defendant has the right to be informed how and when the plaintiff became the owner of the rights and interests of the respective proprietors. The plaintiff only alleges that he is the owner, etc., which is only a legal conclusion. He should state some issuable fact, by which it would appear that he was the owner." In Thomas v. Desmond, (12 How. Pr. 321) the same question arose on the same words: "The allegation (of ownership) is only a conclusion of law. The defendant has a right to be informed by the complaint how the plaintiff became the owner of the demand—whether by purchase, assignment, operation of law, or how otherwise. Some fact or facts should be stated, by which it would appear how he became such owner." (See also, Russell v. Clapp, 7 Barb. 482; Bently v. Jones, 4 How. Pr. R. 202; McMurray v. Gifford, 5 Ib. 14; Parker v. Totten, 10 Ib. 233.)

The averment that particular property is common property amounts, in the connection in which it is used, to the same general claim of ownership. It could only, under the statute or the civil law, be such by virtue of particular facts or relations; and it is necessary for these to appear, to enable the Court to pronounce whether it be such. According to the argument, it would do for the late wife, in a proceeding of this sort, to omit every averment except the fact of marriage and dissolution, and the averment that there was "common property" now held by the husband. We think this cannot be maintained.

It is insisted, however, that the demurrer, on the general ground that there are not facts sufficient, etc., contains several specifications, and that these do not contain any sufficient grounds of objection, and that this Court will not look to any other. The first specification is "that there is no averment that the plaintiff is now or was the owner of the real or personal property referred to in the complaint." If, as we have shown, the mere general averment that this was common property is no averment of any issuable fact, but a conclusion of law, then it would seem the defendant is right in objecting to the complaint that it contains no averment of title.

Dye v. Dye.

The second specification is "that there is no averment or anything to show that said property was acquired subsequent to the passage of the Act of April 17th, 1850, referred to in said complaint."

We have already argued to show that the plaintiff, resting upon this statute, must show herself within it. If, in some respects, the Mexican law was the same as the statute, it was not, we believe, in all respects, (see Panaud v. Jones, 1 Cal. 488,) nor was it, in respect to all property acquired by the parties during the coverture within the Mexican dominions. If, as suggested, the rule as to real estate when the matrimonial domicile is elsewhere, would be the same under the statute and under the Mexican law preceding it — the lex rei sitæ governing the marital right — it is not the case in respect to personal property. But as the plaintiff has chosen to rest her case upon the statute, those facts which the statute requires as the foundation of the right must be stated in the complaint.

The other grounds of demurrer, we are inclined to think, are not well taken.

But we express no opinion in regard to those which would conclude, as if hereafter we should be called upon to pass upon the question, and it becomes necessary to decide them.

The judgment is affirmed.

---

People v. Supervisors of El Dorado Co.

---

PEOPLE ex rel. RAUN AND PLANT v. THE BOARD OF SUPERVISORS OF EL DORADO COUNTY.

The Board of Supervisors of a county possesses no power to allow the County Auditor compensation for the issuance and cancellation of warrants drawn on the County Treasurer.

Such a claim is not authorized by law, and the power of the Board to allow accounts against the county is confined to those "legally chargeable."

County warrants acquire no greater validity in the hands of third parties than they originally possessed in the hands of the first holder, no matter for what consideration they may have been transferred, or in what faith they may have been taken. If illegal when issued, they are illegal for all time.

The protection which attends the purchaser of negotiable paper before maturity, without notice of the illegality of its consideration, does not extend to like purchasers of county warrants.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Eleventh Judicial District, County of El Dorado.

This is a proceeding to review by certiorari the action of the Board of Supervisors of El Dorado County, in allowing the Auditor of that county seventy-five cents for each warrant issued by him from the first of October, 1855, to the nineteenth of January, 1857. The allowance was made on the affidavit of the Auditor that, in the discharge of the duties of his office, he had performed a large amount of service between those dates in the issuance and cancellation of warrants, for which he had received no compensation. The allowance was by a resolution of the Board, and was accompanied by an order authorizing the Auditor to draw his warrant upon the County Treasurer, payable to himself or bearer, in pursuance of the resolution. No statement was made, either in his affidavit or in the resolution or order of the Board, of the number of the warrants issued and cancelled, or of the amount which the Auditor claimed for his services.

Upon the entry of the order, the Auditor drew a warrant in favor of himself for the sum of $2,327.25, and presented the same to the Treasurer of the county, by whom it was duly indorsed as "presented, and not paid for want of funds."

The writ in the present case was granted upon the petition of the relators, who are residents and tax-payers of the county, and at the same time an injunction was issued restraining the Auditor from transferring and the Treasurer from paying the warrant. It subsequently appeared that the warrant had been sold and transferred previous to the issuance of the writ, for a valuable consideration, to one Miles Jewett, who became the purchaser without notice of the character of the services for which it was allowed; and upon his petition, he was permitted to intervene and contest the proceedings upon the return of the writ. The Court below adjudged the allowance to the Auditor illegal, and the warrant void, and perpetually enjoined the Treasurer from its payment, and directed the intervenor to produce and surrender the same for cancellation, and the Board of Supervisors at its next meeting to rescind and annul its resolution of allowance. From this judgment the appeal is taken.

---

Upon the facts in this case we make the following points:

1st. That the Board of Supervisors has allowed the account; that the same was a proper subject of adjudication by it, and its decision in the premises is final and conclusive.

2d. That at the time of the services for which said account was presented, there was no law requiring them to be performed by the Auditor; therefore that section 51 of the Fee Bill is not applicable to them. That the interests of the county required that they should be performed, and that it was competent for the Supervisors to have the same done; that to do this, they must procure the services of the Auditor; for such services the Auditor shall be allowed a compensation. The Board has made such allowance, and as of right and according to law it could do; and its decision as to the amount allowed is not the subject of review. (See Brady v. The Supervisors, 2 Sandford's Reports, page 473; directly in point.)

As to the intervenor, he is the innocent holder of the warrant; that the same is a negotiable paper, and although not collectible in the hands of Noteware, it is in the hands of the present holder.

The proceedings were irregular, null and void:

1st. Because said allowance was made without there having been

---

People v. Supervisors of El Dorado Co.

---

first presented to the Board on account or bill of particulars showing the nature and amount of the services for which compensation was claimed, as is required by law and the practice of the Board.

2d. Because there was no "examination or settlement," on the part of the Board, of the amount to which said Auditor was entitled, if any, for these pretended services, as required by law.

3d. Because the order does not specify the amount for which the Auditor was authorized to draw his warrant, but leaves the same to be ascertained and fixed by the Auditor himself; a proceeding alike opposed to law and common sense.

4th. Because the pretended services for which said allowance was made are not "legally chargeable against the county."

5th. Because in passing said order and making said allowance the Board acted without color of law, and exceeded its jurisdiction.

6th. Because the action of the Board, instead of being in conformity with and sustained by the law, is in direct conflict with the express provisions of the statute in such case made and provided.

7th. The action of the Board being illegal, and its order null and void, the warrant was also illegal, null and void; and therefore, Jewett, the intervenor, by his purchase took the warrant upon the same terms as its first holder. He does not occupy the position of an innocent holder of negotiable paper, without notice of some fraud thereto in the hands of his endorser; but his position is rather that of a holder of forged paper. That which never was a "legal charge," cannot be made so by a simple transfer from one hand to another. Besides, the warrant, as required by law, (Wood's Digest, page 695, sec. 14) should carry upon its face the evidence of its own legality. The warrant in question does not specify the "liability" for which it was drawn within the meaning of the statute. The warrant only says "for Auditor's services;" it should have said, "for Auditor's services in issuing county warrants;" nor does the warrant specify when the "liability" accrued. If these defects were not fatal to the legality of the warrant, they were at least sufficient to put the intervenor upon inquiry; and such inquiry would have resulted in safety to him.

Establish the doctrine that a county warrant, illegal at its birth, becomes legal by a transfer to the hands of a "so called" innocent holder, and corrupt officials, with a pliant or careless Board of Supervisors, will have the power to rob the County Treasury "ad libitum." Government can only be bound by its tribunals or agents when they act strictly within the powers delegated to them by law; and what those powers are, every citizen is bound to know, for "ignorantia legis neminem excusat." With these remarks we dismiss the case, so far as the intervenor's rights are concerned.

People v. Supervisors of El Dorado Co.

In passing the order under consideration, it is presumed that the Board acted under and by virtue of the second division of its powers and jurisdiction, which reads as follows:

"The Board of Supervisors shall have power and jurisdiction to examine, settle and allow all accounts legally chargeable against the county." Wood's Digest, 694, sec. 9.

When acting under this branch of its powers, the Board exercises "judicial functions." Brady v. Supervisors of New York, Sandford's Superior Court Reports, vol. 2, pages, 460, 472.

They must therefore be governed like other judicial tribunals by certain essential rules. They must require the presentation of an account or bill of particulars of services for which compensation is claimed, and have proof thereof. Wood's Digest, 696, sec. 24.

In this case there was no account presented, no examination, no computation, no proof, no settlement, and no allowance as the law required. Therefore there was nothing before the Board for it to act upon.

It is the duty of the Board to fix the amount of the allowance; it cannot delegate its powers to another. Its order must specify the nature of the services rendered, when rendered, and the amount allowed for the same.

This order fixes no amount, but leaves the same to be ascertained by the very party in whose favor the allowance is made; hence the order is irregular and a nullity, and the subsequent action of the Auditor in drawing the warrant without authority and illegal.

The services for which this allowance was made, were not a legal charge against the county. The Board could not therefore legally allow the same; and in doing so it exceeded its jurisdiction.

The Auditor accepted his office without any stipulation as to compensation for his services, other than such fees as the Government might see fit to allow him. The Auditor, therefore, can claim no fees except such as are allowed by law.

---

At the time these services were rendered, the Auditor was not authorized to issue county warrants. People v. Noteware, 8 Cal. 58.

Wood's Digest, 440, section 15, prescribes the fees which the County Auditor shall receive, and the services for which he can charge fees.

This section certainly does not allow the Auditor fees for issuing county warrants. He cannot charge any other fees than those specially set forth in the Act. Wood's Digest, 453, art. 2453, sec. 51; Ibid., 455, art. 2472, sec. 69.

FIELD, J., after stating the facts, delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., and BALDWIN, J., concurring.

The action of the Board is entirely indefensible. It has no support in any provision of law. From its commencement to its end it was illegal. In the first place, the affidavit of the Auditor presents no claim or account upon which the Board could act. It simply states that services have been rendered for which no compensation has been received. It does not give the amount or value of such services, or furnish any items which the Board could examine, settle and allow. In the second place, the allowance is not of any claim or demand, but only of a rate of compensation; seventy-five cents for each warrant. Of the number of warrants issued, no information appears to have been asked, and none given. To ascertain and determine this point no inquiry was had. The whole subject was turned over to the Auditor himself, the party for whose benefit the order was made. He was authorized to issue a warrant, and to insert such sum as, according to his system of examination and settlement, he should adjudge correct. In the third place, the services for which the allowance was made were not a legal charge against the county, and the power of the Supervisors to allow accounts is confined to those "legally chargeable." (Session Laws 1855, chap. 74, sec. 9.) The statute of 1855, regulating the fees of office, provides that the compensation to Auditors for specific services shall consist of certain fees, and that no fees shall be charged for any other services than those mentioned in that Act. Secs. 15, 51, 69.) The Auditor of El Dorado County accepted his office whilst

Ferris v. Coover.

---

this Act was in force, and his claim for compensation for the issuance and cancellation of warrants is not authorized by any of its clauses; it was not, therefore, "legally chargeable;" it was not a claim which the Board was empowered to "examine, settle and allow."

The purchaser, Jewett, is in no better position with the warrant than the Auditor would have been. County warrants acquire no greater validity in the hands of third parties than they originally possessed in the hands of the first holder, no matter for what consideration they may have been transferred, or in what faith they may have been taken. If illegal when issued, they are illegal for all time.

The protection which attends the purchaser of negotiable paper before maturity, without notice of the illegality of its consideration, does not extend to like purchasers of county warrants. Were this otherwise, it is easy to see that the county would be entirely at the mercy of the Board. A transfer of the warrant, no matter how illegal the claim for which it was issued, would leave the county remediless.

Judgment affirmed.

FERRIS v. COOVER.

The twenty-fifth section of the Act of Congress of 1789, commonly called the Judiciary Act, is constitutional.

In the exposition of Constitutions, as of inferior laws, the solemn, deliberate, and long-settled precedents of Courts, and the practice and acquiescence of Governments and people, should possess controlling weight.

This Court does not, however, recognize an unlimited right of appeal from its decisions to the Supreme Court of the United States. The Act gives no such right. The appellate power of the Supreme Court in this respect is strictly limited to the cases given in the Act. Like any other special authority, it is to be strictly pursued, and the record must show upon its face the facts which give the power. In a case falling within the provisions of section twenty-five, this Court acknowledges the right of appeal, but denies it in all other cases.

On application for a citation on production of a writ of error from the Clerk of the United States Court, and for a stay of proceedings in the Supreme Court of this State, the duty and power of issuing the citation devolves on the Chief Justice, as a chamber proceeding, and he must see, when he is required to act or authorized to proceed under the Federal law, that he is within that law.

A contrary doctrine would permit writs of error in every case, whether civil or criminal, and would delay the whole machinery of justice in the Courts of the State in every case, however destitute of any right to a writ of error.

An action of ejectment, raising the question whether a grant made by the Mexican

Ferris v. Coover.

Government passed title to the tract within the limits of the grant, is not a case in which a writ of error lies under the Judiciary Act.

The judiciary system created by the Constitution of the United States is entirely disconnected with, and independent of, the Judiciary of the several States.

Per Terry, C. J.

The appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States, conferred by the second section of article three of the Constitution does not extend to the State Courts, but is confined to the inferior Courts mentioned in the preceding section. Ib.

There is no provision in the Federal Constitution from which a supervisory power over the State Courts can be vested in the Supreme Court of the United States by any fair or legitimate implication or construction. Ib.

In a large class of cases the jurisdiction of the Federal and State Judiciary is concurrent, and in all such cases the judgment of the higher Courts of the system first acquiring jurisdiction is final and conclusive. Ib.

The Government of the United States is one of delegated powers; the right to decide ultimately upon the extent of powers granted has not been delegated to the United States, nor prohibited to the States, and is reserved to the States by the provisions of the tenth amendment to the Constitution; and therefore, the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States on such questions is not binding in the State Courts. Ib.

The right and jurisdiction to determine finally all controversies between her citizens, and all conflicting claims to property within her limits, is an essential element of sovereignty, which was possessed by each State before the adoption of the Constitution, and this right was not surrendered by that compact.

In answer to the suggestion that this question of jurisdiction is, so far as California is concerned, settled by the Act of the Legislature of 1855, it may only be said, that there is no provision in the Constitution which delegates to the Legislature of California the power to enlarge the jurisdiction of the Federal Courts. Ib.

MOTION for a citation to the respondent, on a writ of error from the United States Circuit Court for California to this Court.

A final judgment was rendered by the Court in the above case on the eighteenth ultimo, affirming the judgment of the Court below. For the facts, see 10 Cal. R. 589.

Afterwards the appellant obtained from the Clerk of the United States Circuit Court for California a writ of error, commanding the record to be sent before the Supreme Court of the United States, in order that the judgment of this Court may be there reviewed, and applied to one of the Associate Justices of this Court to fix the necessary bond, grant a stay of proceedings, and award a citation to the respondent to appear before the Supreme Court of the United States, and maintain the validity of his judgment. The Justice applied to ordered that the application should be argued before the Court, upon notice to respondent to show cause why it should not be granted.

The questions raised upon the argument of this motion are: First,

Ferris v. Coover.

---

the constitutionality of the twenty-fifth section of the Judiciary Act of 1789, which provides for an appeal from the highest State tribunals to the Supreme Court of the United States; second, whether, admitting the validity of the Act, the case under consideration is within its provisions; and third, whether the authority to determine this latter question can be properly exercised by this Court.

John H. McKune and — Weeks for the motion.

Thos. Sunderland, Contra.

' BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — FIELD, J., concurring.

In this case, after the rendition of a final judgment, the defendant has moved the Court, or one of the Justices thereof, to grant a citation, upon his production of a writ of error from the Clerk of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of California, and for a stay of proceedings under the judgment rendered by us.

The majority of this Court acknowledge the validity of the Act of Congress of the United States passed in 1789, commonly called the Judiciary Act, the twenty-fifth section of which is as follows:

"And be it further enacted, That a final judgment or decree in any suit, in the highest Court of Law or Equity of a State in which a decision in the suit could be had, where is drawn in question the validity of a treaty or statute of, or an authority exercised under any State, on the ground of their being repugnant to the Constitution, treaties or laws of the United States, and the decision is in favor of such their validity, or where is drawn in question the construction of any clause of the Constitution, or of a treaty, or statute of, or commission held under the United States, and the decision is against the title, right, privilege or exemption specially set up or claimed by either party, under such clause of the said Constitution, treaty, statute, or commission, may be re-examined and reversed or affirmed in the Supreme Court of the United States upon a writ of error, the citation being signed by the Chief Justice, or Judge, or Chancellor of the Court rendering or passing the judgment or decree complained of, or by a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, in the same manner and under the same regulations, and the writ shall have the same effect as if the judgment or decree complained of had been rendered or passed in a Circuit Court, and the proceeding upon the reversal shall also be the same, except that the Supreme Court, instead of remanding the cause for a final decision as before provided, may, at their discretion, if the cause shall have been once remanded before, proceed to a final decision of the same and award execution. But no other error shall be assigned or regarded as a ground of reversal in any such case as aforesaid than such as appears on the face of the record, and immediately respects the before mentioned questions of validity or construction of the said Constitution, treaties, commissions, or authorities in dispute."

Ferris v. Coover.

We do not propose, nor is it necessary for us to go into an examination of the question so fully and elaborately discussed, as to the constitutionality of this section of the Act. The argument upon that question has long since been exhausted. The intellects and the various and profound learning of the ablest jurists and statesmen of the Union, on one side or the other of this mooted question, have been called into requisition, and nothing new could now be said either in support of, or in opposition to, the validity of this law. It is enough for us to say that a long course of adjudication by Courts of the highest authority, State and National, commencing almost from the foundation of the Government, and the acquiescence of nearly all the State Governments, in all of their departments, have given to this doctrine a recognition so strong and authentic that we feel no disposition to deny it at this late day, even if the reasons for such denial were more cogent than they seem to us to be. We recognize the rule that, in the exposition of Constitutions, as of inferior laws, the solemn, deliberate, and long-settled precedents of Courts, and the practice and acquiescence of Governments and people should possess controlling weight. With all proper deference to opposing views, it appears to us that a just respect to such high authority, especially in cases of doubt, ought to conclude the action of Courts in favor of the principle so established, even when the individual opinions of the judges would be different were the question res integra. In this instance, we do not feel warranted, in the face of the elaborate and learned reasonings and repeated adjudications of the highest Courts and the most eminent Judges of the Union, to hold the clause of the Act clearly unconstitutional which they have pronounced clearly constitutional. Nor are we insensible to the benefits which flow from the decision which they have made. That there should be a central tribunal, having power to give authoritative exposition to the Constitution, and laws, and treaties of the United States, and which should also possess the power to secure to every citizen the rights to which he is entitled under them, seems to us highly expedient. The value of uniformity of decisions where the Constitution and laws of the Federal Government are to be expounded in cases of individual rights, and the importance of the principle that every citizen of the United States know the extent, and be protected by a tribunal of the highest authority and free from local prejudices or passions in the enjoyment of all the rights, exemptions and privileges with which the Constitution and laws of the Union invest him, cannot easily be exaggerated. Indeed, in order to render the Constitution and laws of the Federal Government the same things to the people of the United States, it is necessary that they receive their ultimate construction from the same tribunal; for there is but little practical difference between two or more different Constitutions and one Constitution variously and differently construed.

Ferris v. Coover.

But in holding the Judiciary Act of 1789 to be constitutional, we by no means recognize an unlimited right of appeal from the decisions of this Court to the Supreme Court of the United States. That Act gives no such right. The appellate power of the Supreme Court in this respect is strictly limited to the cases given in the Act. Like any other special authority, it is to be strictly pursued, and the record must show upon its face the facts which give the power. In a case falling within the provisions of the section quoted, we acknowledge the right of appeal. We deny it in all other cases. By the provisions of this section, in such cases, the Chief Justice of this Court is authorized to issue the citation. That duty or that power is cast upon him alone. The Associate Justices have nothing to do in the premises. The Act is his, as a chamber proceeding. But still the power is, in its nature, in some degree judicial. He must see, when he is required to act or authorized to proceed under the Federal law, that he is within the law. If there is much doubt or question as to the jurisdiction, he might, in his discretion, (and perhaps it would be advisable) issue the citation, leaving the fact of jurisdiction to be determined by the Supreme Court of the United States. This is what we understand Mr. Justice Johnson to mean in the case of Buel v. Van Ness (8 Wheat. 312). He says: "We see no reason why it should be so expressed. The writ of error is the act of the Court; its object is to cite the parties to this Court, and to bring up the record. How else is this Court to ascertain whether the judgment be final? Nor can there be any danger of its being hastily or erroneously used, since it must be allowed either by the presiding Judge of the State Court or a Judge of the Supreme Court of the United States."

Ferris v. Coover.

A contrary doctrine would be fraught with enormous and intolerable evils. If an appeal, with stay of execution, be matter of absolute right, then every case, civil or criminal, decided by the highest Court having jurisdiction in the State, could be taken up to the Federal Capital, and all proceedings suspended until its return. In every criminal case, the pretext would be that the law was ex post facto. It would be no answer to say that the record showed plainly the contrary; the reply to this would be, "The Supreme Court is to decide that question." And every civil case might be carried thither upon the ground of a supposed or asserted repugnance to some provision of the Federal Constitution or law, or of some treaty. That damages might be given for frivolous appeals would be no adequate protection against them, and in criminal cases no protection at all. The Supreme Court of the United States holds but one term in each year, and from the embarrassments and delays attending the taking of cases from this Court to that, especially in criminal cases, the recognition of this principle would produce the worst possible results. If the Chief Justice of this Court should err in deciding the case not to be appealable, the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States would not thereby be ousted. That Court could, on the inspection of the record, grant the writ, or issue the citation, and proceed to hear and determine the case.

In the present case we see no pretext for contending that this case is within the Act of 1789. No question is made by the record that any right claimed under the Constitution or under any law of Congress has been called in review and denied. The fact intimated that this may possibly be public land, if not the land of the plaintiff, is not a sufficient suggestion even to base an argument upon in favor of the jurisdiction. The authorities cited by the appellant only go to the extent of showing that where the record shows that the question giving jurisdiction must necessarily have been passed upon, in or by the judgment of the Court, the Supreme Court may take jurisdiction, although it does not appear in so many words that it was so passed upon, and decided against the validity of the claim set up. But here the record shows no such thing. The case before the Court is simply a claim for land made by one man and denied by another; the main question made being whether a grant of land by a Mexican Governor passed title to the land within the limits of the grant. The defendant nowhere sets up a law of the United States, the exemption privilege, or claim under which has been denied to him. If this record be the subject of appeal to the Supreme Court, we do not see why every ejectment suit would not be, and indeed, every other suit. For the pleadings, proofs, judgments and decision here do not put in issue any right or claim under any Federal law, organic or legislative.

Of this matter of issuing the citation, we, as a portion of the Supreme Court, or as Associate Justices of this Court, have nothing to do. But as the question was argued before us in open Court, and our opinions requested, we have thought proper to give our views upon the matter.

TERRY, C. J., after stating the facts, delivered the following dissenting opinion:

The questions raised upon the argument of this motion are: First, the constitutionality of the 25th section of the Judiciary Act of 1789, which provides for an appeal from the highest State tribunals to the Supreme Court of the United States; Second, whether, admitting the validity of the Act, the case under consideration is within its provisions; and Third, whether the authority to determine this latter question can be properly exercised by this Court.

While all the members of the Court agree as to the conclusion at which we have arrived, I have the misfortune to differ with my associates upon the first and third propositions.

Farris v. Coover.

I think, if we admit the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States over the judgments and decisions of this Court, it must follow that the province of determining the cases in which the jurisdiction can be exercised belongs to the appellate Court, and that a contrary doctrine would involve the inconsistency of allowing the jurisdiction of the superior to be defeated by the action of the inferior tribunal.

The constitutionality of the Judiciary Act has been the subject of much controversy between Federal Courts and the Supreme Courts of several of the States. Able arguments on both sides have been delivered from the Bench, by lawyers who have had few superiors in any age or country, and whose thorough and laborious investigations have so nearly exhausted the subject as to leave little to be said in support of either position, which has not already been so well expressed as to render presumptuous an attempt to add to the force and cogency of the reasoning. The controversy arose in the case of Martin v. Hunter, lessee, at a time when the judicial offices of the United States were filled by men who were identified with the Federal party.

The principles of this party, which favored a liberal interpretation of the provisions of the Constitution in favor of the powers of the General Government, found a zealous and able exponent in Mr. Justice Story, (see 1 Wheaton, 298) while those who contended for a strict construction of the instrument were no less ably represented by Justice Roane, of the Virginia Court of Appeals. (4 Mumford, page 1.)

The judgment of the Virginia Court of Appeals in the case referred to had been reversed by the Supreme Court of the United States, and the cause remanded to the State Court, with directions as to future proceedings. After full argument and mature deliberation, the Court of Appeals unanimously refused to obey this mandate; each of the Judges filed an opinion in the case, and the opinion of the Court was entered as follows, "The Court is unanimously of the opinion that the appellate power of the Supreme Court of the United States does not extend to this Court, under a sound construction of the Constitution of the United States; that so much of the twenty-fifth section of the Act of Congress to establish the judicial Courts of the United States as extends the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to this Court is not in pursuance of the Constitution of the United States; that the writ of error in this case was improvidently allowed under the authority of that Act; that the proceedings thereon in the Supreme Court were coram non jndice in relation to this Court; and that obedience to its mandate be declined by this Court." The case was again carried to the Supreme Court of the United States, where the judgment of the Court of Appeals was reversed; but no attempt was made to enforce obedience to the judgment on the part of the State Court, which remained contumacious. On the contrary, it was expressly admitted that that Court had no power to do so. (See opinion of Mr. Justice Johnson.) So that, according to the authority of that case, the judicial system of the United States presents the strange anomaly of a Court of final resort, vested with full and ample appellate jurisdiction, without the power of compelling obedience to its judgments and process on the part of the inferior tribunals. The claim of jurisdiction asserted by the Federal Court in Martin v. Hunter's Lessee was reaffirmed in later cases by the same tribunal, and with a few exceptions has been acquiesced in by the Courts of the various States, generally on the ground of stare decisis.

Ferris v. Coover.

It has never been admitted in Virginia, has always been repudiated by Georgia, and has lately been questioned in several other States. The decisions of the United States Supreme Court, on this question, embody the political principles of a party which has passed away. The reasoning by which it is attempted to sustain them is based upon rules of construction now universally regarded as unwarranted by the letter or spirit of the Constitution, and directly opposed to those adopted by the same tribunal in the late case of Dred Scott v. Sandford, (19 Howard and in a more recent case in 20 Howard, 393, in which the admiralty jurisdiction of State Courts is admitted, notwithstanding the 9th section of the Judiciary Act.

The force and authority of the opinions of the Supreme Court of the United States upon the question of jurisdiction, as well as all others of a political nature, is much weakened by the consideration that the political sentiments of the Judges in such cases necessarily gave direction to the decisions of the Court. The Legislative and Executive power of the Government had passed, or was rapidly passing into the hands of men entertaining opposite principles. Regarding the Judicial as the conservative department; believing the possession by the General Government of greater powers than those expressly granted by the Constitution to be absolutely necessary to its stability, they sought, by a latitudinarian construction of its provisions, to remedy the defects in that instrument, and by a course of judicial decisions to give direction to the future policy of the Union. In order to accomplish this end, the Court almost invariably upheld every assumption of power by the General Government, (however at variance with the limitations of the Constitution) including the alien and sedition law, the Embargo Act, the charter of a United States Bank, and a retrospective bankrupt law; the constitutionality of which Acts is supported by the same course of reasoning, and the same liberal construction of the implied powers of Congress, as is applied to the Judiciary Act of 1789.

Ferris v. Coover.

All the arguments adduced in favor of the claim of jurisdiction on the part of the Federal Court are answered, and the unconstitutionality of the 25th section of the Judiciary Act, to my mind, conclusively established, by the able opinions in Hunter v. Martin, 4 Mumford; Padelford, Fay & Co. v. Mayor and Aldermen of Savannah, 14 Geo. 438; Johnson v. Gordon, 4 Cal. 368; and the very elaborate opinion of Mr. Chief Justice Bartley, in the case of the Piqua Bank v. The Treasurer of Miami County, 6 Ohio State Rep. 342, in which all the authorities are collated.

The results of these authorities are:

1. That the judiciary system created by the Constitution of the United States is entirely disconnected with and independent of the judiciary of the several States.
2. That the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States, conferred by the 2d section of article 3d of the Constitution, does not extend to the State Courts, but is confined to the inferior Courts mentioned in the preceding section.

Ferris v. Coover.

---

3. That there is no provision in the Federal Constitution from which a supervisory power over the State Courts can be vested in the Supreme Court of the United States, by any fair or legitimate implication or construction.

4. That in a large class of cases the jurisdiction of the Federal and State judiciary is concurrent, and in all such cases the judgment of the highest Courts of the system first acquiring jurisdiction is final and conclusive.

5. That the Government of the United States is one of delegated powers; that the right to decide ultimately upon the extent of powers granted has not been delegated to the United States, nor prohibited to the States, and is reserved to the States by the provisions of the tenth amendment to the Constitution; and therefore, the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States on such questions is not binding on the State Courts.

6. That the right and jurisdiction to determine finally all controversies between her citizens, and all conflicting claims to property within her limits, is an essential element of sovereignty, which was possessed by each State before the adoption of the Constitution, and this right was not surrendered by that compact.

In answer to the suggestion that this question of jurisdiction is, so far as California is concerned, settled by the Act of the Legislature of 1855, I have only to say that there is no provision in the Constitution which delegates to the Legislature of California the power to enlarge the jurisdiction of the Federal Courts.

The question here raised was presented to the Court in Gordon v. Johnson (reported in 4 Cal. 368). In the opinion delivered in that case all the Judges who at the time constituted the Supreme Court of California concurred. Of the correctness of the principles there announced, I am entirely satisfied. Indeed, had the question been presented for the first time, the soundness of the opinion would scarcely have been questioned. As an original question, the entire independence of the State Judiciary is generally conceded by the bar: almost the only argument now advanced in support of the appellate power of the Federal Courts is that founded on expediency and long acquiescence.

Ferris v. Coover.

The expediency and policy of providing a tribunal with general appellate jurisdiction over a certain class of cases, whether they were originally instituted in the State or Federal Courts, in order that uniformity of decisions in such cases might be secured, was a question for the Convention which framed the Constitution; it is sufficient for me that they made no such provision. But it is said, the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States upon the point has so long been acquiesced in that it ought not now to be disturbed.

The answer to this proposition is, that if the doctrine that all usurpations of power which have been unwillingly acquiesced in for a length of time ripened by prescription into law had been acted on in the past, the principles of civil and religious liberty would have been as little understood, and the rights of man as little regarded in the nineteenth as in the tenth century; and if adopted for the future, will be an effectual bar to all progress.

This is not, in my opinion, one of those questions to which the doctrine of stare decisis ought to be applied. No interests which have grown up, no rights of property which may have been acquired under the rule established, would be endangered or lost by its abrogation. The effect of the contrary doctrine would be felt only by future litigants, and could not by possibility have a retroactive operation.

Hoary usurpations of power and jurisdiction on the part of the Federal Judiciary, or time-honored encroachments on the reserved rights of the sovereign States, are entitled to no additional respect on account of their antiquity, and should be as little regarded by the State tribunals if they were but things of yesterday.

It is the duty of Judges to decide all questions which arise in cases before them according to the Constitution and laws; and while the decisions of other tribunals should be respectfully considered, and all due weight given to them to which they may be entitled by reason of the learning and ability of the tribunal from which they emanate, yet respect for their authority, or a rigid adherence to precedent, should never be permitted to influence a Judge to go counter to his own convictions of the requirements of the Constitution and laws. For these reasons I think the application should be denied.

McDonald v. Maddux.

MCDONALD v. MADDUX, TREASURER OF SACRAMENTO COUNTY.

The Act of 1854, to fund the Floating Debt of the City and County of Sacramento, forbidding the redemption of any warrants accruing prior to a certain date, is obligatory upon County officers. The Legislature is the paramount political power, and can control and direct them in this respect.

The Board of Supervisors, therefore, has no power to direct and authorize the Treasurer to pay warrants in violation of the provisions of the statute.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Sixth Judicial District, County of Sacramento.

A statement of facts appears in the opinion of the Court.

W. S. Long for Appellant.

I. The plaintiff is not affected by the Funding Act of 1854; as section 8 of that Act clearly exempts him from its operation so far as the present case is concerned.

II. Neither is he affected by section 120 of the General Revenue Law of 1854, for the following reasons:

1st. That section has reference exclusively to revenue collected for that purpose.

2d. By the Act of 1855, creating Boards of Supervisors, and conferring upon them general supervision and control over the affairs of the county, they are made the fiscal agents of the county. If you take from them all discretionary power, as to the appropriation of its moneys, you necessarily weaken the energies of the Board, and defeat many of the purposes for which it was created.

3d. The Supreme Court has recognized in the case of Laforge v. McGee, 6 Cal. 285, the power that is here contended for, as residing in the Board of Supervisors.

If any additional authority were required to establish the proposition that the Board of Supervisors possessed the power exercised by it in passing the Order of March 16th, the following may be given:

In the case of Thompson v. Rowe, 2 Cal. 68, the Supreme Court says: "The Act concerning Courts of Justice and Judicial Officers, passed May 11th, 1851, confers general powers of taxation and appropriation upon the Court of Sessions for county purposes."

McDonald v. Maddux.

Section 25 of the Act of March 20th, 1855, creating Boards of Supervisors, is in the following language:

"The Board of Supervisors shall have and exercise in its county all jurisdiction and powers, other than criminal, conferred by any law on the Court of Sessions, or heretofore exercised by said Court under any statute, or by any statute provided to be exercised by said Court, when the same do not conflict with the provisions of this Act." See Laws of 1855, p. 56, sec. 25.

This section clearly gives to the Board of Supervisors the same power to appropriate the county revenue which the Court of Sessions possessed under the Act of March 11th, 1851.

Upton & Hereford for Respondent.

Appellant's counsel cites Laforge v. McGee, 6 Cal. 285, and Thompson v. Rowe, 2 Cal. 68. In the former case, the principal point decided is with respondent, viz., that the Legislature having appropriated the fund, the discretion of the Supervisors was at an end. The latter had reference to powers of the Court of Sessions, supposed to be conferred by the Act of May 11th, 1851, to appropriate the County revenue. That power was repealed prior to the passage of the Act of 1855, creating Boards of Supervisors.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — FIELD, J., concurring.

Proceeding for a mandamus to compel the County Treasurer of Sacramento to pay certain moneys.

The only facts necessary to be stated in order to show the application of the principle decided are these: In 1853, certain warrants were issued on the Treasurer of the County of Sacramento, of which the plaintiff is the holder. These warrants were presented in August, 1853, to one Rowe, then Treasurer of that county, and payment refused for want of funds, and the warrants registered according to law.

The complaint shows that there was received into the Treasury of the county, in 1853, a large sum of money, of the revenue of that year, properly applicable to the payment of these warrants, and a sufficient sum to have paid the same in the order of the registry; but the then Treasurer refused to pay the same; and that said Treasurer, after going out of office, paid to his successor, in lieu of money which he had not accounted for, on a settlement of his official business, some $3,426 in Sacramento County bonds of the funded bonds of that county, thereby transferring that sum from the General Fund of 1853 to the Sinking Fund of 1854; the effect of which was to destroy or divert the fund out of which the plaintiff was entitled to payment.

McDonald v. Maddux.

The complaint further states, that on the sixteenth of March, 1857, there was in the Treasury several thousand dollars belonging to the Sinking Fund, for the redemption of the funded bonds for the year 1853, and more than the amount necessary to redeem and pay off all the funded bonds of that year, which surplus was not appropriated by law to any other purpose; and for the purpose of supplying the deficiency in the General Fund of the year 1853, created by receiving from Cyrus Rowe the aforementioned bonds instead of money due the General Fund of 1853, the Board of Supervisors made an order on the sixteenth of March, 1857, that the Treasurer redeem out of said fund any outstanding warrants upon the General Fund of 1853, according to the date of the registry thereof.

If this order could be maintained, the plaintiff might, with much plausibility, insist upon his claim to the remedy he seeks.

But by the Act of 1854, entitled "An act to Fund the Floating Debt of Sacramento County, and to provide for the payment of the same," an obstacle which we consider insuperable is interposed. By the 8th section of that Act (Laws of 1854, p. 201) it is provided: "From and after the first day of May, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-four, it shall not be lawful for the County Treasurer of said county to redeem any warrants drawn for indebtedness accruing prior to the said first of May, excepting with the funds he may then have on hand, or which may be by him received after that date, properly belonging to the revenue of the county previous to said term."

Conceding the power of the Supervisors to dispose of the money of the county, not otherwise appropriated, to the payment of debts, in such order and in favor of such creditors as they may choose, it seems clear the Legislature, as the paramount political authority, may direct and control them in this respect.

Montgomery v. Tutt.

---

By this section the Treasurer is expressly inhibited from paying warrants issued on indebtedness accruing prior to the first May, 1854, except with funds then in hand, or subsequently received and belonging to the revenue of the county previously to 1854. This fund was collected in 1856, and belonged to the revenue of the county of that year. At any rate, there is no pretense that it belonged to the revenue of the county previously to the first of May, 1854.

We cannot see that the Supervisors had any right to order the Treasurer to do what the law expressly inhibited him from doing. Nor can there be any serious question of the power of the Legislature to direct in what manner the debts of the county shall be paid or its funds disbursed, subject to certain well known restrictions, which do not apply to this case.

The claim of the appellant seems to be a just one, and we could wish that the remedy he seeks were reconcilable with the law. But as it is, we must affirm the judgment below denying the mandamus.

MONTGOMERY v. TUTT, WILSON et als.

A writ of assistance is the appropriate remedy to place the purchaser of mortgaged premises, under a decree of foreclosure, in possession, after he has obtained the Sheriff's deed.

Under our system, the order to deliver possession should be first made, unless a direction to that effect is contained in the decree, and if upon its service that is disregarded, the Court can at once direct the writ to issue. If delivery of possession to the purchaser is directed by the decree, no preliminary order will be requisite, but upon proof of disobedience to the decree, the party will be entitled, as a matter of course, to the writ as against the defendant in the suit. When a mortgage is given as security for the purchase money of the mortgaged premises, no homestead can be carved out of the property so as to impair the rights of the mortgagee.

FIELD, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — BALDWIN, J., concurring.

The principal question presented by the appeal in this case is, whether the writ of assistance is the appropriate remedy to place the purchaser of mortgaged premises, under a decree of foreclosure, in possession, after he has obtained the Master's or Sheriff's deed. Of this there can be no doubt, as against the defendants in the suit, who are bound by the decree, and who refuse to surrender possession upon the order of the Court to that effect. The order, like the one made in this case, takes the place in our system of procedure of the judicial writ of injunction, used in the old Chancery practice, in the enforcement of decrees respecting lands. (Eden on Injunc., Waterm.'s Ed. 12.) "Injunctions of this sort," says Story, "are older than the time of Bacon, since in his ordinances, they are treated as a well known process. Indeed, they have been distinctly traced back to the reign of Elizabeth and Edward the Sixth, and even of Henry the Eighth." (Story's Equity, sec. 959.) The power of the Court to issue the judicial writ, or to make the order, and enforce the same by a writ of assistance, rests upon the obvious principle that the power of the Court to afford a remedy must be co-extensive with its jurisdiction over the subject matter. Where the Court possesses jurisdiction to make a decree, it possesses the power to enforce its execution. It is true that in the present case the decree does not contain a direction that the possession of the premises be delivered to the purchaser. It is usual to insert a clause to that effect, but it is not essential. It is necessarily implied in the direction for the sale and execution of a deed. The title held by the mortgagor, passes under the decree to the purchaser, upon the consummation of the sale by the Master's or Sheriff's deed. As against all the parties to the suit, the title is gone; and as the right to the possession, as against them, follows the title, it would be an useless and vexatious course to require the purchaser to obtain such possession by another suit. Such is not the course of procedure adopted by a Court of Equity. When that Court adjudges a title to either real or personal property, to be in one as against another, it enforces its judgment by giving the enjoyment of the right to the party in whose favor it has been decided. And when it decrees a sale, it transfers possession to the purchaser, as against the party whose interest has been sold. The question in this case has been fully considered by Chancellor Kent, in Kershaw v. Thompson (4 Johns. Ch. 609) in which all the leading authorities are cited and examined. "When the Court," says the Chancellor, "has obtained lawful jurisdiction of a case, and has investigated and decided upon its merits, it is not sufficient for the ends of justice, merely to declare the right, without affording the remedy. If it was to be understood, that after a decree and sale of mortgaged premises, the mortgagor or other party to the suit, or perhaps, those who have been let into the possession by the mortgagor, pendente lite, could withhold the possession in defiance of the authority of this Court, and compel the purchaser to resort to a Court of Law, I apprehend that the delay, and expense, and inconvenience of such a course of proceeding, would greatly impair the value and diminish the result of sales under a decree." (See also Ludlow v. Lansing, 1 Hop. Ch. 231.)

Montgomery v. Tutt.

---

---

Montgomery v. Tutt.

---

According to the old chancery practice, there was, first: the order for the delivery of possession; then an attachment for not complying with the order, which was seldom served and could be dispensed with; afterwards the injunction issued, which, if not obeyed, was followed by the writ of assistance. In our system, the order to deliver possession should be first made, unless a direction to that effect is contained in the decree, and if upon its service that is disregarded, the Court can at once direct the writ to issue. If delivery of possession to the purchaser is directed by the decree, no preliminary order will be requisite; but upon proof of disobedience to the decree, the party will be entitled, as a matter of course, to the writ as against the defendants in the suit. (Valentine v. Teller, 1 Hop. Ch. 422.)

The several objections taken by the appellant to the order, aside from the one made to the character of the remedy, are without merit and entitled to no consideration. There was no stay of proceedings on appeal from the decree; the presence of the appellant by his counsel and the argument of the motion by him, obviated the want of any notice of the motion; the allegation that the appellant lives with his parents, who claim the premises as a homestead, cannot avail him; the mortgage upon which the suit was brought being given as security for the purchase money of the premises, no homestead could be carved out of the property so as to impair the rights of the previous mortgagee; and the allegation of irregularity in the sale under the decree, rests without proof.

JENNY LIND CO. v. BOWER &amp; CO.

Where an ambiguity in an instrument of writing consists in the use of a word which has a settled meaning, but at the same time consistently admits of two interpretations, according to the subject matter in the contemplation of the contracting parties, it is not such a patent ambiguity as falls within the rule forbidding its explanation by parol testimony. It belongs to that intermediate class of cases which partake of the nature both of patent and latent ambiguities.

In an action concerning a disputed boundary between two mining claims, depending on an agreement between the parties, in which the word "north" was used, and parol evidence was admitted to prove that it was the custom of the locality to run boundary lines by the magnetic meridian, and that that was the understanding of the parties: Held, that such evidence was admissible, not to contradict or vary the term, but to ascertain the sense in which it was used. On a motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, the affidavit of one of the defendants as to what an absent witness will testify, is insufficient. It should be accompanied by the affidavit of the witness himself; if that cannot be obtained in time, additional time should be applied for.

This was an action to recover damages for an alleged trespass upon the mining grounds of the plaintiffs. The claims of the parties adjoin each other; and in June, 1857, they entered into a written agreement as to the dividing line between the claims, describing the same as commencing at a designated point, and "running thence north twenty-three degrees and fifteen minutes west, six hundred and forty-three feet to a pine stake," and "thence north forty-five degrees west to Devil's cañon;" and the principal question presented by the record relates to the admissibility of parol evidence to show that the last course of the dividing line thus agreed upon was run according to the magnetic, and not the true meridian. It appeared from evidence allowed on the trial, that it was the general custom at Forest Hill, where the ground in controversy is situated, to run boundary lines by the magnetic meridian; and from the testimony of a witness present at the execution of the agreement, that it was understood the line was to run "the way the needle points." The cause was tried by a jury, who returned a verdict as follows, to wit: "We, the jury, find for the plaintiffs, and assess their damages at $3,100. We further find, that the lines mentioned in the agreement introduced in the evidence in this case were to run by the magnetic meridian." Judgment was entered upon this verdict for the plaintiffs. Defendants moved the Court for a new trial on several grounds, and amongst others, on the ground of "newly discovered evidence, material to the defendants, which they could not with reasonable diligence have discovered and produced at the trial." The motion was supported by the affidavit of Marshall, one of the defendants; setting forth that since the trial of the cause, one Hoffman had informed him that he would testify to certain facts, which facts are set out in the affidavit; but affiant being ignorant of the law, did not know that Hoffman's affidavit as to what he would testify to was necessary, until it was too late to procure the same in time for the hearing of the motion. The affidavit sets out the residence of Hoffman, and alleges that if a new trial is granted, defendants will be able to produce his testimony at the trial.

The Court below overruled the motion, and the defendants appealed to this Court.

versation between plaintiffs and defendants showing how they understand it.

The books are full of cases sustaining the admissibility of each of these classes of evidence in similar cases. We shall refer to only a few.

1st. As to usage and custom of the particular district, 1 Greenleaf on Ev., secs. 292 and 295. The author in this last section speaks of the present case at bar — a word having two meanings, one technical and one common. C. and H., Notes to Phillips on Evidence, part 2, vol. 4, p. 505, part 2, note 954; Ashton v. Insurance Co., 7 Cowen, 202; 12 Wendell, 573; 2 Sumner's Rep. 569. In this case, Judge Story says parol proof may be admitted to ascertain the true meaning of a particular word, or words, in a given instrument, when the word or words have various senses — some common, some qualified, and some technical. 3 Barn. & Adol. 728; 4 N. & M. 602.

2d. As to the admissibility of the conversation between the parties to prove their understanding of the term. Waterman v. Johnson, 13 Pick. 261; Stone v. Clark, 1 Metcalf, 380; Birch v. Deipster, 4 Camp. Rep. 385; Gray v. Harper, 1 Story's Rep. 574; Ballenger v. Eckett, 16 Levy & Rowel, 422; Selden v. Williams, 9 Watts' R. P. 14.

The above cases are all directly to the point, and sustain the admission of the evidence. Should the Court desire to look further, we cite: Doe ex dem Gord v. Nud, 2 M. & W. 129; Osborne v. Wise, 7 Carr. & Payne, 761; 5 Pick. 34; 8 John. R. 116; 1 Mason, 10; 4 Hening & Munford, 283; 3 Rand. 83; Woods v. Lee, 5 Monroe, 59; 5 Mills & Law. R. 275; C. & H. Notes to Phillips, part 2, vol. 4, p. 535.

The Court will notice that the evidence was introduced, not to show what agreement the parties intended to make, but to show what agreement they did make.

The thing to be proved being, "how did the parties understand this term when they used it," can there be any better evidence of this than direct admissions by Phillips, one of the defendants. as to how it was understood?

The distinction in all the cases is this: you are not allowed to prove an express intention different from the agreement, or to vary it: but are allowed to prove, by any competent evidence, how the parties understood the ambiguous term.

Jenny Lind Co. v. Bower.

---

As to the affidavits of Marshall, one of defendants, concerning what Hoffman will testify:

1st. The Court cannot consider Marshall's affidavit, but Hoffman's should have been procured. Vol. 3, G. and W. on New Trials, 1065.

FIELD, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — BALDWIN, J., concurring.

This is an action to recover damages for an alleged trespass upon the mining ground of the plaintiffs. The claims of the parties adjoin each other, and in June, 1857, the parties entered into a written agreement as to the dividing line between their claims, describing the same as commencing at a designated point, and "running thence north twenty-three degrees and fifteen minutes west, six hundred and forty-three feet to a pine stake," and "thence north forty-five degrees west to Devil's cañon;" and the principal question presented by the record relates to the admissibility of parol evidence to show that the last course of the dividing line thus agreed upon was run according to the magnetic and not the true meridian. It appeared, from the evidence allowed on the trial, that it was the general custom at Forest Hill, where the ground in controversy is situated, to run boundary lines by the magnetic meridian, and from the testimony of a witness present at the execution of the agreement, that it was understood the line was to run "the way the needle points." It is true, parol evidence is inadmissible to contradict or vary the terms of a written agreement; but we do not perceive that the rule was violated in the present case. It was not to contradict or vary the meaning of the term north that the evidence was admitted, but to ascertain the sense in which it was used by the parties. The term has two meanings, one common and the other technical. Unprofessional men generally mean, in stating courses, the lines indicated by the compass, without making any allowance for variation in the needle; and even professional Surveyors, as appears from the evidence in the case, would not consider the true meridian as intended, unless specially so informed.

Jenny Lind Co. v. Bower.

The language of every instrument should be so construed, if possible, as to effectuate the intentions of the parties; and to ascertain the meaning attached to particular words, when such words are used in various senses, parol evidence is perfectly legitimate. And this evidence is received to explain, and not to contradict or vary the written language. The patent ambiguity, which according to the rules of Lord Bacon cannot be aided by averment, arises from uncertainty upon the face of the instrument in the application of the terms used, and not from uncertainty in the meaning of the terms themselves, when those terms are susceptible of two meanings. (See 2 Parsons, 69, and note.) In the present case the ambiguity lies in the word north; and yet it is not within the rule laid down by Bacon. It belongs to that "intermediate class of cases," of which Mr. Justice Story speaks in Peisch v. Dickson, (1 Mason, 11) "which partake of the nature both of patent and latent ambiguities; and that is," where the words are all sensible and have a settled meaning, but at the same time consistently admit of two interpretations, according to the subject matter in the contemplation of the parties. "In such a case, I should think," says the Justice, "that parol evidence might be admitted, to show the circumstances under which the contract was made and the subject matter to which the parties referred. For instance, the word 'freight' has several meanings, in common parlance; and if by a written contract a party were to assign his freight in a particular ship, it seems to me that parol evidence might be admitted of the circumstances under which the contract was made, to ascertain whether it referred to goods on board of the ship or an interest in the earnings of the ship; or in other words, to show in which sense the parties intended to use the term." (Goddard v. Bullock, 1 Nott & McCord; Smith v. Wilson, 3 Barn. & Adol. 728; Heald v. Cooper, 8 Greenl. 32; Clayton v. Gregson, 4 Ner. & Man. 602.)

And Cowen and Hill, after referring to the illustration given by Mr. Story, observe that this and other instances of a kindred character "fall exactly within the general definition of a patent ambiguity. The terms used have in themselves a doubtful meaning, and consistently admit of more than one interpretation, according to the subject matter in contemplation of the parties. The ambiguity is not latent in any proper sense; it arises from the known infirmity of language; it is inherent in the instrument; appearing on its face, and evincing a difficulty at the very moment of perusal. And yet it admits of explanation.

“It will not do to say, therefore, that a patent ambiguity (meaning thereby merely an ambiguity patent or appearing on the face of the instrument) cannot be explained by evidence aliunde; though such remarks are frequently found in the books.” (Notes to Phillips, part II, note 269.)

The motion for a new trial was properly overruled. The position of the boundary line was the principal question in the case, and upon this point several surveyors were examined, and upon their conflicting testimony the jury passed. The subsequent survey of one of the surveyors would only have corroborated the testimony of the defendants' witnesses, and correspondingly weakened the testimony adduced by the plaintiffs. We do not perceive that it would, taken in connection with the different starting point from the first survey, have materially changed the result.

Each of the surveyors testified to using the utmost care, and each was of opinion that his survey was correct. The Court below was in a better position to judge of the effect of Brewster's testimony in the case, and the probable result of his evidence after the second survey, than this Court, and we do not feel warranted in disturbing its action in the premises.

The affidavit of Marshall, as to the testimony which Hoffman would give, should have been accompanied by Hoffman's affidavit. Hoffman's absence at his residence at Forest Hill, and the consequent inability of Marshall to obtain the affidavit in time, was not a sufficient excuse for its non-production. If necessary, application should have been made to the Court for additional time to obtain and file it.

Judgment affirmed.

Johnson v. Johnson.

JOHNSON v. JOHNSON.

In an action for a division of the common property after a divorce, where it appeared that the property in question had been in the possession of the husband, before marriage, without title, and that he purchased the property and obtained deeds therefor after marriage, the purchase money being paid with the common funds: Held, that it was common property: Held, further, that the defendant having purchased, with the common funds, from another, under deed of warranty, he is estopped to deny, as far as plaintiff is concerned, that he acquired a good title by the purchase.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Sixth Judicial District, County of Sacramento.

A statement of facts appears in the opinion of the Court.

Crocker & Robinson for Appellant.

Counsel discussed at considerable length, and cited many authorities to sustain the proposition, that the partition and division of the common property of husband and wife, in case of divorce, must be made in the divorce suit, and that a separate action cannot be maintained. But as the Court did not pass upon that point directly, the argument is not given.

Second. That defendant owned the property before the marriage, and therefore is not common property.

The statute provides that "all property, both real and personal, owned by the husband before marriage, shall be his separate property." Wood's Dig. 487, art. 2605.

In this case the defendant owned the property before marriage. He had purchased it of a prior occupant, and had a deed of it, and was in possession, and had made valuable improvements on it. The purchases made of the McKees, as he avers, were merely to prevent litigation, and no title whatever was shown in them.

Conceding that this separate action will lie, this question becomes an important one. What is the nature of the title to real estate necessary to constitute a person an "owner" within the meaning of this statute, and of the words "property acquired after marriage," used in the succeeding section of the same statute? Must it be clear, unincumbered title, in fee simple? We contend that this is not necessary; that he becomes an "owner," or "acquires" the property by the purchase, or mere taking possession of the land. The possession of property is prima facie evidence of ownership. 2 Cal. Rep. 370; 4 Cal. Rep. 67, 70. All the decisions of this Court sustain this principle, so important to the welfare of this State.

Defendant being therefore the "owner," and having "acquired" this real estate before the marriage, it was his separate, and not the common property. He had a title, prima facie a good title; and even if it had been proved that some third person had a better title at that time, proof of that fact would not have transformed it from his separate into common property. It follows, therefore, that the real estate was not liable to be divided or partitioned between the parties.

Third. Her right, if any she has, is confined to one-half the money ($700) expended in procuring the deeds made during the marriage.

Under the second point we have shown that she could not hold any estate in the land itself; in other words, they were not jointly seized of these lots as common property, but the entire estate was vested in him as his separate property. But if the common property was used in paying off incumbrances, quieting adverse claims, or making improvements on the premises, then the question would arise, what are her rights in the matter? We contend that these expenditures of money from the common property can give her no estate in the land itself, but will merely give her a right to be paid the one-half of the amount of the common property thus appropriated by him.

Fourth. It was error to merely decree a conveyance to plaintiff of the interest acquired under the McKee deeds.

The decree in this form does not finally determine the rights of the parties; it does not put an end to the litigation, but only lays the foundation for another suit, to partition the property between the parties. The plaintiff brings her action for the express purpose of having the property divided. The defendant consents, if she has any rights, that that is the proper relief, not only for the plaintiff, but for the defendant. But the Court, by its decree, instead of dividing the property, merely decrees a conveyance. The division of the property is what both parties wish, and it is the appropriate relief. But under this decree they will be compelled to litigate nearly the whole matter over again, to procure a division.

Johnson v. Johnson.

It is the duty of a Court of Equity, when all the parties to a controversy are before it, to adjust the rights of all, and leave nothing open for future litigation. Ord v. McKee, 5 Cal. Rep. 515; Wilson v. Lanssen, 5 Cal. Rep. 114.

C. Cole for Respondent.

As to plaintiff's ownership. He had no title whatever to any part of the property till he obtained the McKee deeds. The so-called "deed" from Shaw was only a bill of sale of a mule and cart. It contains no words of grant or conveyance, and is not under seal. It could therefore pass no interest in real estate. Defendant succeeded Shaw in business, and to the possession of his shanty, which happened to be on one of the lots.

Another fact not to be overlooked is, that the instrument from Shaw was not either acknowledged or recorded till long after the marriage! The idea of converting it into a conveyance was an afterthought, but a failure.

But, say appellant's counsel, he was in possession of the property, or at least the part which Shaw occupied, and possession is prima facie evidence of ownership.

True; but possession is only prima facie evidence of title, while the proof is positive in this case that he was not the owner before marriage, nor till some time afterwards, but that John McKee and John Henry McKee were the owners.

There is not a particle of proof that appellant ever even claimed to be the owner of any portion of the real estate before the marriage, and he admits that he was not the owner by seeking and purchasing the McKee titles.

The deeds from the McKees were not mere quitclaims, or deeds of release, taken to quiet title, as defendant now pretends; but they were full deeds of bargain and sale, with covenants of warranty.

There is nothing in the evidence showing that those deeds were obtained simply to "prevent litigation;" but, on the contrary, it appears that they were sought for the purpose of acquiring ownership, which the appellant neither had, nor pretended to have, until he obtained them.

Johnson v. Johnson.

---

The appellant is estopped by purchasing the McKee warranty deeds from now denying the title thereby obtained; and hence the reason why the Court below ruled out all evidence to show a good title in the McKees.

It is a well established doctrine that "in an action for dower the grantee of the husband is estopped to deny that his grantor had title;" and surely the reason is stronger for denying to the husband, in an action of this kind, the right to question the title of his grantor.

The case of Sales v. Smith, 12 Wend. 57, goes to a much greater length than is demanded in this. It is there held that, "a party admitting the title to the land to be in another, and agreeing to purchase, is estopped from setting up title in himself under a deed which he had held for six years previous to such admission, and such estoppel extends to all claiming under him."

But the principle may be regarded as settled by this Court in the case of Ellis v. Jeans, 7 Cal. R. page 417.

"The fact that the plaintiff had purchased from Basye, and he from McDaniel, would estop the plaintiff, as between him and the Longs, from disputing the title of Baca to the land described in the deed to McDaniel, as the plaintiff was bound to know the contents of all the mesne conveyances through which he claimed. The plaintiff could not, then, rely upon any title under land warrants, so far as they were located upon the land described in the deed to McDaniel."

See further, 1 Greenleaf's Evidence, sec. 25; 4 Greenl. R. 214; 9 Wend. 209; 12 J. R. 201; 4 Barb. 419; 10 Wend. 414; 1 Comst. 525 and 242; 7 Wheat. 535 and 547.

Appellant will be deemed to have been holding under the McKees, and having purchased the Sutter title from them, he cannot now dispute that title as against them. But Mrs. Johnson claims under the McKee deeds, and is virtually their grantee. Can he dispute their title when set up by one of the grantees?

Her money, in equal proportions with his, was used to purchase that title, and the two are, in contemplation of our law, joint grantees, equal owners, tenants in common.

---

The covenants of warranty are still binding upon the McKees, and appellant cannot now say he got nothing by those deeds. He had nothing before, as is admitted; but he obtained a good title by them, as plaintiff offered to show on the trial.

If defendant could contest that title against others, he is estopped from denying it as against plaintiff, whose money was paid for it, and who is under our law to be deemed joint grantee with him. Her right to the premises is a vested right.

The appellant's third point. That Mrs. Johnson is only entitled to half the money that was paid for the land itself, is answered by the statute. (Wood's Dig., art. 2606.) "All property acquired after marriage by either husband or wife, except, &c., shall be common property."

She is as much entitled to the increase in value and profits as he.

Crocker & Robinson in reply.

It is urged that the appellant, by taking warranty deeds from the McKees, is estopped from saying that the title was not in them, and cites authorities to sustain this position.

The rule of law is settled in some cases, that the vendor of land is estopped from denying that he had title at the date of his conveyance; and some cases have gone so far as to hold that in a suit by the vendor or those claiming under him, against the vendee, who was let into possession by the vendor, the latter cannot dispute the title by which he was let into possession, until he has delivered up such possession to the vendor.

But we think no case can be found holding that a party in possession of land and claiming title, as in this case, taking a deed from a third party, is estopped from saying that he acquired no title by that deed; but on the contrary, there are numerous authorities which fully sustain the opposite.

The grantee of a deed may deny the seizin or title of his grantor, even though there be covenant of warranty in the deed. 4 Barbour S. C. Johnson v. Johnson.

TERRY, C. J., delivered the opinion of the Court — FIELD, J., and BALDWIN, J., concurring.

This is an action for the partition of common property; the marriage contract between the parties having been dissolved by decree of a competent Court.

It appears that at the time of the marriage, defendant was in possession of certain lots to which he had no title, his claim being based upon a paper not under seal, purporting to transfer a mule and dray, and an "interest in the possession of the lots." After the marriage, defendant purchased the lots, taking a deed with covenants of warranty, the purchase money being paid from common funds. The premises were occupied as a homestead until the dissolution of the marriage.

The defence set up is, that the lots are the separate property of the defendant, owned by him before marriage; that the purchase of an adverse claim, which was a cloud upon his title, did not change the character of the property; and that plaintiff was only entitled to claim the moiety of the money expended in the purchase of the outstanding title.

The Court below decreed the title purchased by the common fund to be common property, and directed defendant to convey to plaintiff one undivided one-half of the interest acquired by the purchase.

The objection to this decree is, that it does not finally determine the rights of the parties.

The Act defining the rights of husband and wife (Wood's Dig. 487) provides that "upon a dissolution of the marriage by the decree of any Court of competent jurisdiction, the common property shall be equally divided between the parties."

We think it clear, from the testimony, that the lots in question were common property; defendant had no pretense of title before coverture, and having, with the common fund, purchased from another under a deed of warranty, he is estopped to deny, as far as plaintiff is concerned, that he acquired a good title by the purchase.

Judgment reversed and case remanded, with directions that the Court below proceed to make a division of the premises in question as the common property of the parties, and respondent recover cost.

People v. Board of Supervisors San Francisco Co.

PEOPLE ex rel. O'DONNELL v. THE BOARD OF SUPERVISORS OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO.

An Act of the Legislature authorising and directing the Board of Supervisors of the City and County of San Francisco to audit and allow the claim of a judgment creditor is not unconstitutional, as being judicial in its character. The Legislature may as well control and direct in this matter as in any other matter of municipal regulation.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, County of San Francisco.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion of the Court.

F. P. Tracy for Appellant.

I. The Act of April 21st, 1858, for the relief of Hugh O'Donnell is unconstitutional.

1st. It is against the provisions for the protection of private property in the eighth and third sections of the Constitution of California. See sec. 37, art. 4.

2nd. It is an usurpation of judicial powers on the part of the Legislature contrary to article 3, Constitution of California.

II. It is submitted that: First, The City and County of San Francisco is a municipal corporation, and that, so far as the said city is concerned, (that being the corporation indebted) it is a corporation holding its property in fee, and having the sole right to administer that property under general laws. That it is not a political division of the State, merely, but as independent in its existence as any other corporation, and not subject to the control of the Legislature, except under such general laws as may be enacted, not for a special case, but for the general management of the affairs of the corporation.

If the city is a mere political division of the State, and has power to contract debts, then its debts are the debts of the State. Then the State can make no grant to the city of lands. The State cannot sue the city, nor can the city owe the State.

Then all sorts of absurdities follow, and the whole theory of municipal corporations, since the rise of cities in the middle ages, and their first resistance of the tyranny of the Legislature in the person of the Emperor, has been a mere delusion and fallacy.

---

Cities once incorporated have, like any other corporation, a distinct independent existence. The Legislature can only interfere with them by general laws, or amendments, or repeal of their charters. The Legislature cannot undertake to administer their local government, and act in the capacity of auditor of the demands against their treasuries.

The doctrine that the Legislature can, by an Act, undertake to determine that a municipal corporation owes a certain debt, and shall pay that debt in a certain manner, takes away all the rights and liberties of the city, and is revolutionary and dangerous.

It falls into the absurdity of saying that a municipal corporation owes so much money and that the Legislature has a right to so determine, because the municipal corporation is a mere political division of the State, and so incapable of owing anything.

The doctrine must go to the length that the Legislature might, by Act, transfer to and vest in any private individual the whole property of any city.

There are no authorities in this case. Like parricide, against which the Romans had no law, because the crime was thought impossible, such an usurpation by the Legislature has never been contemplated or guarded against, and no Supreme Court of any State ever had to pass upon a doctrine so monstrous as that contended for by this O'Donnell bill.

Shattuck, Spencer & Reichert and McDougal for Respondent.

It is contended by appellant, that the Legislature does not possess the power to direct or divert the revenues of the City and County of San Francisco to the payment of particular indebtedness.

It is conceded that the Legislature does possess the power over the State revenues. It was also distinctly admitted in argument that the Legislature possesses the same power over the county revenues, the counties being only subordinate, subject subdivisions of the State. It is contended, however, that cities (and therefore the City and County of San Francisco) furnish an exception to the rule, and that, as "municipal corporations," they had the control and direction of their revenues as charter rights. It is further suggested, that the creditors of the city, under the laws existing at the time of the passage of the Act in question, had acquired certain fixed or contract rights, with which legislation could not interfere.

People v. Board of Supervisors San Francisco Co.

---

It is submitted that the error of this position lies in this, that municipal corporations under our system are confounded with the "free cities" of Europe. With us, a State, a county, and city, are equally municipal corporations. It is true, we call a law erecting a city into a special department of the Government, a charter, but we do not use the term in which it is applied to a private corporation. We do not use it to describe the grant of a franchise. Our laws for the organization and administration of the affairs of counties are provisions, not concessions. So of our laws for the organization and administration of cities. Counties have their local government; their Boards of Supervisors, Sheriffs, Clerks, Courts and subordinate officials. They collect and disburse revenues, construct roads and bridges, license ferries, and do all other things required, in the way of local administration and government, under the authorization and direction of State legislation, which is not always general, but frequently particular as to counties. The interests and necessities of cities generally require more of local government and administration. Cities and counties do not differ in kind, but in degree.

The correctness of this position will not be disputed, upon careful consideration. It must follow, that if the revenues of counties may be directed, so may the revenues of cities.

Cities, as well as counties, are but parts of the general State government; the creatures of legislation, and as in their organized constitution subject, even to the extent of absolute repeal, so by the stronger reason subject in all matters of administration. If the notion advanced by defendant is true, then it would follow that the charter would not be subject to amendment, much less to repeal.

It is an error to suppose that the moneys in a City Treasury are the property of the corporation, in the same sense that property exists in individuals or private corporations; they are moneys collected by a subordinate department of government for the purposes of government, and to be distributed in obedience to the law, as it does or may exist for those purposes.

It is an error to suppose that any individual has a contract right in the general revenues collected for city, any more than for county and

People v. Board of Supervisors San Francisco Co.

State purposes. The necessities and obligation of government for general and local purposes are constantly changing, and to meet those necessities, provisions must be made. To make those provisions is the office of the Legislature.

This power has been exercised without question in every State of the Union, and in no State more frequently than our own during the brief period of our history. The history of legislation for the City of San Francisco furnishes a number of instances of the exercise of the same power questioned in this case.

This is not all the Legislature does in the premises; it takes the ascertainment of claims out of the hands of the Judiciary; invests a commission of its own appointment with this power; requires that the creditors shall take promises, not money, and then diverts a portion of the revenues to the payment of interest due them, and the residue is diverted to the payment of a distinct class of liabilities.

This, it is said, the Legislature may do, thereby levying the established legal rights of O'Donnell against the city as judicially determined. Yet the Legislature does not possess the power to partially retrace her steps and provide for the payment of an antecedent and just debt.

If it is admitted that the Government, as constituted, possesses all power not exclusively granted to the Federal Government, and not embraced within the inhibitions of the Federal or State Constitutions, and if this act is not the exercise of a judicial or executive power, how can this exercise of power by the Legislature be questioned? It does not interfere with the obligations of contracts, and we cannot perceive any other provision of the Federal or State Constitution bearing upon the question.

In reply to the second position assumed by the appellant, it would seem sufficient to remark, that the Judiciary had exhausted the power of its office when it pronounced the final judgment in favor of O'Donnell; that all that remained to be done was the enforcement of the adjudged right; that this exercise of power is in no respect judicial, as is manifest from the fact that it is a power which, in the given case, the Courts could not have exercised.

But if we consider for a moment what are the several and distinct constituent qualities of Legislative, Judicial and Executive power, we have a simple solution of any question on this point.

People v. Board of Supervisors San Francisco Co.

---

The office of the Legislature is to make LAWS — RULES regulating the relations and conduct of individuals; and REGULATIONS and provisions for the management and administration of Government in all its departments.

The office of legislation ceases when the statute is enacted.

The office of the Judiciary is to ascertain and pronounce upon questions of right or wrong, in pursuance of the established laws. When it has ascertained, and adjudged, and declared in the form of judgment, the application of the law to the case presented, the office of the Judiciary has ceased.

Neither the record of legislative action in the statute book, nor the record of the judgments of our Courts, have any greater efficiency than so many written or printed words, until the Executive power of Government is invoked.

It is the office of the Executive to see that the laws are executed. By laws, in this sense, are meant both statute law and the law of cases adjudged as determined by the sentence of the Court.

The various executive and administrative officers of Government are so many arms and members of the Executive body. They have nothing to do with legislation or judgment, further than by acts of recognition and execution.

In the present case, the claim of O'Donnell had been exhibited in the Courts and established against the defendant, but as the means of the defendant were subject to the regulations and provisions of then existing legislation, the power to discharge this liability did not exist without legislative aid. With this aid asked and granted, all that remained to be done was in the way of administration, just in the same manner and to the same extent as were it permissible to sue the State; and had O'Donnell recovered judgment against the State, and the Legislature had directed its payment, the auditing and payment of the amount out of the State Treasury would be a purely administrative act.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — FIELD, J., concurring.

People v. Board of Supervisors San Francisco Co.

The relator obtained a judgment against the late City of San Francisco for a sum of money, and the Legislature, on the twenty-first day of April, 1858, passed an Act, "whereby the Board of Supervisors of said city and county were authorized and directed to allow said O'Donnell the amount of his judgment," and also providing "that the Auditor of said city and county be authorized and directed to audit the sum so allowed and issue his warrant therefor; whereupon, and upon the presentation thereof, the Treasurer of said city and county shall pay the same as other indebtedness of the city and county aforesaid." The Board of Supervisors having refused to audit and allow this sum, as by the Act directed, this proceeding is taken to compel them to do so.

It is objected by the appellant's counsel that this Act is judicial in its character, and therefore, unconstitutional. We do not think so. The Legislature neither attempts to create or to adjudicate in respect to a debt against the corporation. It merely, in this instance, makes provision for the payment of a debt already created by the corporation and fixed by judgment. The duty and mode of the payment of debts of corporations of this sort are legitimate subjects of legislative direction. As all the powers and duties of these local governments come from legislative grant, and paying their debts is a legitimate function and duty, it is not possible for us to see why the Legislature may not as well control and direct in this matter as in any other matter of municipal regulation; nor can we see why it does not as well possess the power — whatever the expediency of its exercise in any instance — of making this provision in respect to a single debt of the municipality, as in regard to all its debts. In truth, so far as the record shows, (and we cannot look beyond it) there is no other judgment or even indebtedness. The interesting question argued at the bar, as to the extent of the power of the Legislature over the finances of the municipality, does not arise in this case; for this proceeding is only taken to compel the allowance and auditing of the claim by the proper authorities. It was clearly competent, we think, for the Legislature to direct this; and the judgment of the Court below only orders the defendants to obey the Act of the Legislature in this respect.

The judgment is affirmed.

Williams v. Price.

WILLIAMS v. PRICE.

A legatee who has been represented by counsel at the allowance of accounts against the estate will not be allowed, after a lapse of time, to come in and have the allowance set aside on a mere general averment of newly discovered evidence.

In such a case, it is not sufficient to allege ignorance at the time of allowance, but the plaintiff must go farther, and show that he could not, with the use of due diligence, unmixed with any negligence on his part, have made himself acquainted with, or ascertained the existence of the facts.

A general averment of such diligence will not do. The bill should state how and why the facts could not have been discovered at the time.

APPEAL from the Probate Court of the County of Sacramento.

Price and Williams were physicians and partners, and as such, joint contractors for the keeping and conducting of the Sacramento County Hospital. Williams died in 1855, leaving a will, by which one Stanley was appointed his executor. Stanley qualified and acted as such. W. G. Williams was made the sole legatee of the testator. Upon a settlement of the accounts of Price and Williams, made by the executor and Price, a balance of over $2,000 was found due to Price, and this sum was allowed by the executor as a claim against the testator's estate. This allowance was approved by the Probate Court; and on the final settlement of the estate in December, 1857, a decree was entered, among other things directing the payment of this balance by the executor. It seems that the attorneys of the legatee were present at this decree and settlement, and no objection was then interposed by them. Some three or four months afterward, the legatee, Williams, filed his petition in the Probate Court to set aside the decree of final settlement, so far as concerns this allowance to Price. The grounds were that the legatee was not personally present at the settlement; that certain Hospital furniture had been converted by Price, and not allowed for; that Price had failed to give the deceased the full benefit of the Hospital contract; that the deceased was entitled to a certain credit not given; that an item of $1,600 included in the settlement was presented to the executor more than ten months after the publication of notice of letters. etc., and several other objections of like kind. The petition also alleges that the petitioner's knowledge of all these facts was obtained after the final settlement of the estate was made. A demurrer was filed to this petition and overruled, and the defendant appealed to this Court.

Smith & Hardy for Appellant.

1. The Probate Court erred in overruling the demurrer to the petition of the legatee.

2. The Probate Court erred in making the order of the fourth of June, 1858.

Latham & Sunderland for Respondent.

BALDWIN, J., after stating the facts, delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., concurring.

It is not necessary to consider many of the questions made at the bar. The petition itself shows no grounds for the relief asked. The accounts having been settled by the executor and Price, with the approbation of the Court, and a final decree had, the accounts could not be reopened upon the showing made by the petition. The legatee having been notified, and appearing by his counsel, must be held concluded by the settlement and decree, even if he would not otherwise have been bound by the judgment; and this before the Probate Court as well as any other, and on the concession that the Probate Court, after this final decree and settlement, had jurisdiction of the subject. It would not be sufficient in an ordinary case of a bill for a new trial, to aver that the party thus represented was ignorant at the time of the trial (or settlement) of the facts. The bill must go further, and show that he could not with the use of due diligence, unmixed with any negligence on his part, have made himself acquainted with, or ascertained the existence of the facts. It is never tolerated to a party that he may go on and take his chances of a trial, and after it has gone against him, move to set it aside on grounds which he might have availed himself of by the exercise of a proper degree of diligence. Litigation would be endless if this were so, and a party encouraged in supineness and negligence.

It is true, the petition states that petitioner could not with any diligence have discovered the facts on which he relies; but this general averment will not do. The petition should state how and why the facts could not be discovered. Besides, this allegation is denied by the answer, and no proof made of it. It is not perceived why the attorneys of the legatee could not have ascertained all the facts, which do not seem difficult of ascertainment, even if the absence of the petitioner himself from the State prevented him from personally prosecuting the necessary inquiries. This view renders it unnecessary to examine the case upon the merits, though upon the proofs, we think the same result would follow.

Ritter v. Mason.

---

The judgment of the Probate Court is reversed, and the petition dismissed.

RITTER v. MASON.

A stipulation inserted in the transcript, and not embodied in a statement or bill of exceptions, forms no part of the record which this Court can notice.

Nor do affidavits used on motion to open the judgment, form any part of the record, where there is no certificate of the Judge or Clerk, or an admission of counsel that they were used for that purpose.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, County of San Francisco.

E. B. Mastick for Appellant.

J. B. Hart for Respondent.

FIELD, J., at the April Term, 1858, delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., and BURNETT, J., concurring.

The stipulations inserted in the transcript are not embodied in any statement or bill of exceptions, and form, therefore, no part of the record; and there is no certificate of the Judge or Clerk, or any admission of counsel, that the affidavits constitute the papers used on the motion to open the judgment. There is left for our consideration only the judgment roll, which discloses no error. Practice Act, section 346; Newland v. Kean, and Davis v. Stratton, January Term, 1856; Gates v. Buckingham, 4 Cal. 286.

Judgment affirmed.

People v. Buster.

---

PEOPLE v. BUSTER, LATE COUNTY TREASURER OF SONOMA COUNTY, AND HIS SURETIES.

A surety has a right to stand on the precise terms of his contract. He can be held to no other or different contract.

In the case of sureties on the official bond of a County Treasurer, they all contract together, and with reference to the common responsibility. In case of a breach or loss, each surety has his recourse for contribution on his fellows. The discharge of one of the obligors affects the contract as to all, and amounts to a release of all as to all future acts of such official.

Statutes in derogation of common law principles are construed with strictness, and sureties are favored in the law.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Seventh Judicial District, County of Sonoma.

A statement of the facts appears in the opinion of the Court.

Attorney General for Appellants.

The only serious question urged by respondents, as we understand, is to this effect: "That a discharge of one surety operated as a discharge of the whole."

In answer to which we say:

1st. That the discharge in the outset was void, because made by a Judicial officer, when the act was merely ministerial; and

2d. That the bonds given subsequent to the first were merely cumulative, and were the voluntary acts of defendants, made for the benefit of plaintiff, and not the sureties upon the original instrument or instruments.

The sections of the Act under which the proceedings of the pretended discharges were had, do not require the hearing of any evidence, or the doing of any act necessary to form an opinion in the nature of a judgment, and in fact require nothing in its nature judicial, but merely impose the performance of a certain act by the County Judge, upon presentation of a certain affidavit showing a state of facts named to him; he makes no inquiry in regard to the matter, does not hear the respective parties, and does not hear evidence or argument from the applicant, therefore the act is only ministerial.

We can see but little difference between the act spoken of and those usually conferred upon Boards of Supervisors; which latter this Court has determined could not be performed by the Courts of Sessions, because they were not judicial in their character.

People v. Buster.

---

That the act is ministerial, see 1 Kelly's Rep., page 579 (Georgia). The bonds are cumulative. See 9th Iredell, (N. C.) 71.

The language of the Act is, that any surety may apply for a discharge, leaving it optional with each and every one to make application, or not, as he might deem proper; and the bond being several, as well as joint, it cannot be objected that the relation of the sureties to each other is so affected as to render the instrument inoperative after the discharge of one. Section 211, page 77, Wood's Digest.

Baker & Howard for Appellants.

1st. It is manifest that the Legislature intended that the bond should remain in force as to all parties not discharged by the Court, and that the new bond is merely additional security acquired to the State or county. The discharge, in the language of the statute, is expressly limited to the sureties applying to be discharged. Wood's Digest, p. 79, art. 227.

2d. The general principle of law is, that a discharge of one surety by the obligee is a discharge of all. But it is submitted, that it would be competent for the Legislature, as to all future contracts, to change the rule, and parties would be held to contract with reference to the law. The rule has been changed in this State as to sureties on official bonds.

3d. The statute which authorizes the County Judge to discharge one surety and take another in his place, is prior in date to the execution of the bond in this case, and therefore the obligors contracted that, as to their co-obligors, they might be discharged and new obligors, substituted to their liability. This is as much a part of the contract as though it has been expressly incorporated into the bond. The Act of the Legislature is as much a part of the bond, and enters as fully into the contract, as though it had been recited in the bond in precise terms. McCracken v. Hayward, 2 How. U. S. R. 612.

4th. The discharge of the surety in this case is not the act of the obligor, but the act of the law; and it was the act of the defendants to elect to remain in the bond, and not join in the application for a discharge.

People v. Buxter.

5th. If the law enters into the contract, the substitution of the new bond did not vary the contract, or change the security or liability, without the consent of the obligor. He consented to the terms of the law, and therefore to the substitution of a co-obligor, by means of a new bond.

Campbell & Pratt for Respondents.

First — That a discharge of one surety on a joint and several bond, at common law, releases all the other co-sureties. Burchard v. Dias, 3 Denio R. 238.

Second — That this rule applies to bonds made to Government, under statutes, as well as to common law bonds. Ibid, 238; The State v. Polke et al., 7 Blackst. R. 27; Davis v. The People, 1 Gilman R. 409; The People v. Brown, 2 Doug. R. 9.

Third — That all the defendants, sureties, are discharged by the release of a portion of the number, and the approval and filing of new bonds. Wood's Digest, p. 77, art. 205. Official bonds of County officers to be approved by County Judge.

Idem, p. 80, art. 231, sec. 2, (under which the releases in these cases were made) authorizes any surety on the official bond of a County officer to be relieved from subsequent liabilities in the mode prescribed.

When the office shall be declared vacant, "unless within ten days such officer shall give (not a sufficient bond to make up for the deficiency occasioned by the retiring of the applicant bondsman, but) good and ample security for the discharge of his official duties, as required originally."

The Legislature would seem to have recognized the discharge of all the former sureties, and the necessity of new security, as "ample" as required "originally."

It can scarcely be contended, that the effect of the release of one surety should be to give the county greater security than it had originally; and yet this would be the effect if the new security, although "ample," should be held to be merely cumulative, and additional to

People v. Buster.

---

that claimed to be remaining in force against the non-applying bondsmen.

It is contended by plaintiff, on the authority of McCracken v. Hayward, that as defendants contracted with plaintiff, after the passage of the law authorizing the discharge of one or more sureties, the right of any portion of the sureties to such discharge became an element of the contract; and that knowing this, they agreed to remain and did remain, in law, liable, notwithstanding the discharge of their co-sureties.

The authority cited fails to establish the principle contended for.

Every co-surety in a common law bond contracts with full knowledge that the obligee can release any one of the sureties, and that the legal effect would be the discharge of all. And yet this principle of the common law cannot be urged as a reason why a surety is not discharged by the release of his co-surety.

The force of this last statement would seem to have been apprehended, as plaintiff is obliged to urge that the discharge of the sureties applying is not the act of the obligee, but of the law. It could with equal force be contended, that the release of one co-surety on a common law bond, through an authorized agent, is the act of the law. The County Judge is the authorized agent of the plaintiff in this behalf. In either case, the release is the act of the obligee, by his or its agent, the law merely declaring the effect of such act.

There is no privity of action among the sureties; it may equally as well be urged, that the sureties not applying for their discharge elected to avail themselves of the release resulting by law from the discharge of their co-sureties.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — FIELD, J., concurring.

This was an action brought against defendants as sureties on the official bond of one Buster, as Treasurer of Sonoma County. The breach alleged in the non-payment of certain moneys received by the Treasurer, and the defense set up is, that a portion of the sureties were discharged by proceedings taken in pursuance of the statute, and that the defalcation occurred after the release of such sureties and the giving of a new bond with other sureties. The Court below found, as matter of fact, that this defense was well founded, and as matter of law, that this released the co-sureties. The record shows that two or more of the sureties on the original bond applied to the Judge of the County Court to be released from their liability; that the Treasurer was ordered by the Judge to give a new bond, which he did, with Fisher and Ward as his sureties, and that the Judge received and approved the new bond, and formally released these sureties.

People v. Buster.

---

The provisions of the statute are as follows:

"ARTICLE 231, SECTION 2.—Any surety on the official bond of a city, county, or State officer, may be released from the liabilities thereon, afterwards accruing, by complying with the following provisions of this Act:

"SECTION 3. Such surety shall file with the Court, Judge, Board, officer, person or persons authorized by law to approve such official bond, a statement in writing setting forth the desire of the said surety to be relieved from all liabilities thereon afterwards arising, and the reasons therefor, which statement shall be subscribed and verified by the affidavit of the party filing the same.

"SECTION 4. A copy of the statement shall be served on the officer named in such official bond, and due return or affidavit of service made thereof, as in other cases.

"SECTION 5. In ten days after the service of such notice, the Court, Judge, Board, officer, person or persons with whom the same may be filed, shall make an order declaring such office vacant, and releasing such surety from all liability thereafter to arise on such official bond, and such office shall thereafter be held in law as vacant, and be immediately filled by election or appointment, as provided for by law, as in other cases of vacancy of such office, unless such officer shall have, before that time, given good and ample surety for the discharge of all his official duties as required originally.

"ARTICLE 232, SECTION 6. This Act shall not be so construed as to release any surety from damages or liabilities for acts, omissions or causes existing, or which arose before the making of such order, as aforesaid, but such legal proceedings may be had therefor, in all respects, as though no order had been made under the provisions of this Act." (Wood's Digest, p. 80.)

People v. Buster.

If we concede that the release of one surety by these statutory proceedings discharges the bond as to all, then the case is with the defendants. No order declaring the office vacant, after the application of these sureties for a discharge, was made. This omission of the Judge, however, would not affect the sureties. The question then arises as to the effect of this application and discharge of those sureties who were released, upon their associates. The defalcations complained of occurred after the release of these sureties. A surety has a right to stand on the precise terms of his contract. (10 John. R., 587.) He can be held to no other or different contract. In this case, the sureties all contracted together and with reference to the common responsibility. In case of a breach or loss, each surety had his recourse for contribution upon his fellows. The discharge of any one of the obligors affected the contract as to all. It made it, indeed, a different contract from that made by the parties.

The authorities which sustain these principles are numerous and decisive. (Averill v. Lyman, 18 Pick. 346; Goodman v. Smith, Ib. 416; Canegie v. Morrison, 2 Met. 381; Wiggins v. Tudor, 23 Pick. 434; Crane v. Roberts, 5 Greenl. 423; United States v. Thompson, Gilpin, 614; 14 Pick. 123; 17 Mass. 581; 13 Ib. 148; 7 Vermont, 324; 7 Johns. 207; 3 Denio, 238; 1 Gilman, 409; 7 Blackf. 27.)

If there were any doubt that the mere discharge of these sureties discharged the rest from liabilities accruing after their discharge, we think that the statute making it the duty of the Judge, when the application is made by a surety, as in this case, to declare the office vacant unless the new bond required be given, removes all difficulty. The Act contemplates that the new bond will be an ample security, and that no further acts will be done by the officer after the order declaring the vacancy, unless and until he executes the new bond. It does not appear by the statement of the case that the money, for embezzling which this action is brought, was in the hands of the officer before or at the time of these releases of these discharged sureties; but on the contrary, it appears that the funds were received by him afterwards.

The counsel for the appellant contends that the last bond is merely cumulative. We think, however, that neither the language nor the reason of the law supports the argument. The general statute in relation to official bonds in those provisions (Wood's Dig. pp. 78, 79) which require new bonds in certain cases, expressly declares that the original shall not be discharged or affected when the additional bond is given. The omission of this provision in the sections which touch cases like this is significant to show that a different intention existed. If such had been the intent, probably the Legislature would have only required the substitution of new sureties in the place of those applying for release; as it would not, probably, have been considered reasonable to multiply sureties upon every case of individual application for discharge. But when a new bond is required to be executed and approved, "in like manner as the original," it can scarcely, in such cases as this, be inferred that the Legislature meant to continue in force the old bond as a security for future liabilities, especially when that would be to innovate upon the established principles of the common law, by holding the contract binding after its terms had been essentially changed. Statutes in derogation of common law principles are construed with strictness, and sureties are favored in the law.

We are referred to but one case by the Attorney General; that of Poole v. Cox, in 9 Iredell, 71; but neither the facts nor the reasoning of that case are in point. The Court says: "The new bonds are not required for the relief of the sureties upon the first bonds, but are taken for the benefit of those who may be concerned in the proper discharge of the duties of the office; and when the office is to continue for more than a year, it was presumed that the bonds taken at first might become insufficient from the insolvency of the sureties or other causes; hence the Legislature took the precaution to require new bonds to be given from time to time, and the Courts, in order to give effect to the intention of the law makers, consider the new bonds not as taking the place of the old ones, but as additional thereto." The reasoning certainly has no application to the case before us, where, by a release of a portion of the sureties, a new contract is made for the rest, and they required to abide by the more onerous terms of the last contract. Although we do not dispute the proposition of the learned counsel, that the Legislature might have provided, by law passed prior to the making of this contract, that it should have this effect, yet we must look for some clear evidence that this was the Legislative design. The case in N. C. was merely the case of a Sheriff elected for two years, and giving bonds, and afterwards, in conformity with a law requiring a renewal of his bond, executing another bond, it was held, that the last bond was not in substitution of the first.

The consequences of the doctrine contended for might subject sureties to risks they never contemplated; for if twenty signed a bond, and nineteen should be secretly discharged — and no notice is necessary — the remaining surety might be bound for all the liabilities of the officer; or if not all, the effect would be to make him a co-surety with subsequent obligors, with whom he never consented to be bound.

The judgment below is affirmed.

Ex parte ELLIS, ON APPLICATION FOR HABEAS CORPUS.

The writ of habeas corpus should not issue to run out of the county, unless for good cause shown; as the absence, disability or refusal to act of the local Judge, or other reason, showing that the object and reason of the law requires its issuance.

If the local Judge refuses to act, then resort may be had to officers out of the county.

The Legislature can never have intended that a party imprisoned under sentence of conviction for a misdemeanor, should have the privilege of selecting from the judiciary of the whole State the individual to whom he prefers to make his application, however distant from the place of his detention, and compel the officer having him in charge to convey him, at the expense of the county.

It is the duty of the courts to execute all laws according to their true intent and meaning: that intent, when collected from the whole and every part of the statute taken together, must prevail, even over the literal sense of the terms, and control the strict letter of the law, when the letter would lead to possible injustice, contradiction and absurdity.

FIELD, J.—Although the Supreme Court may issue the writ of habeas corpus, its allowance in term time is not obligatory, but rests in the sound legal discretion of the Court. To allow it may be obligatory upon the Judges in their individual capacity.

Petition to this Court for a writ of Habeas Corpus.

Petitioner alleges that he is held in custody by the Sheriff of El Dorado County, under a warrant of commitment issued by a Justice of the Peace of the county, upon a conviction for a misdemeanor, for keeping the store and place of business of petitioner open for business purposes, and exposing his goods, wares and merchandise for sale, on the Christian Sabbath, or Sunday, contrary to the provisions of an Act, entitled "An Act to provide for the better observance of the Sabbath," approved April 10, 1858.*

Petitioner also alleges that the Justice acted without jurisdiction: that the act for which he was convicted constitutes no offense in law; and he asks a writ of habeas corpus returnable before the Supreme Court.

Samuel J. K. Handy for Petitioner.

TERRY, C. J., delivered the opinion of the Court — BALDWIN, J., concurring.

Petitioner alleges that he is held in custody by the Sheriff of El Dorado County, under a warrant of commitment issued by a Justice of the Peace of the county, upon a conviction for a misdemeanor. He also alleges that the Justice acted without jurisdiction; that the act for which he was convicted constitutes no offense in law; and he asks a writ of habeas corpus returnable before the Supreme Court.

The statute provides that the "writ of habeas corpus may be granted by the Supreme Court or any Judge thereof, or any District or County Court in term time, or by any Judge of such at any time, whether in term or vacation."

It also provides that the writ shall issue without delay; that it shall be served without delay, and that the Judge or Court who issued it shall immediately after the return proceed to hear and examine, etc.

In considering this application, a construction of the Act concerning habeas corpus will be necessary, in view of the frequency with which applications for the writ are made to this tribunal on the part of persons in custody in other counties.

A familiar rule in the construction of statutes is to give effect to the meaning and intention of the law maker; this may be gathered from the reason of the statute: "The motives which led to the making of it, the object in contemplation at the time the Act was passed." (Smith Com. 634.) Puffendorf says, that which helps us most in the discovery of the true meaning of the law is the reason of it, or the cause which moved the Legislature to enact it.

Ex parte Ellis; on application for Habeas Corpus.

The object of the statute concerning habeas corpus was to afford all persons illegally restrained of personal liberty an adequate and speedy remedy; therefore, in such cases, full and ample jurisdiction is given to all judicial officers except Justices of the Peace; and a speedy remedy to the party imprisoned is provided, by having in each county of the State at least one officer authorized to afford all the relief given by the statute.

The Legislature can never have intended that a party imprisoned under sentence of conviction for a misdemeanor should have the privilege of selecting from the judiciary of the whole State the individual to whom he prefers to make his application, however distant from the place of his detention, and compel the officer having him in charge to convey him, at the expense of the county, it may be from San Diego Klamath, in order that he might avail himself of a remedy which the local Judge of his county was equally authorized to grant.

Nor need he stop here; the refusal to discharge by one Judge is not a bar to another application before a different Judge. After failing in his first application, the party may sue out another writ before a different officer, and thus the term of his imprisonment may be passed in traveling from one part of the State to another, at the expense of the county in which he was convicted, to the entire subversion of justice. Such a construction would lead to manifest absurdity. As it is the duty of Courts to execute all laws according to their true intent and meaning, that intent, when collected from the whole and every part of the statute taken together, must prevail, even over the literal sense of the terms, and control the strict letter of the law, when the letter would lead to possible injustice, contradiction and absurdity.

“When a particular construction of a statute, applied to a case which it seems by its terms to include, there follows from such a construction and absurd consequence; respect for the Legislature will induce the Court from thence to conclude that some other construction, which will not produce such a consequence, ought to be adopted. Hence, every construction which leads to an absurdity ought to be rejected.” (Smith’s Com. 663.)

Ex parte Ellis, on application for Habeas Corpus.

"It is said that this rule should be followed, even in cases where there is neither obscurity nor anything equivocal in the law itself, for the reason that the absurdity of the literal sense of the law does not proceed merely from the obscurity or any other fault in the expression, but from the narrow limits of the human mind, which cannot foresee all cases and circumstances, or include all the consequences of what is ordained; that it is impossible for the Legislature to enter into immensity of detail. It can only make laws in a general manner, and in applying their acts to particular cases, the construction ought to be conformable to the intention of the Legislature. It cannot be presumed that the Legislature intended anything absurd. When, therefore, the words, when taken in their obvious and proper sense, lead to it, it is necessary to turn them from that sense just as far as is sufficient to avoid an absurdity, if from the whole perview of the law, and giving effect to all the words used in it, it may fairly be done." (Ib. 664 U. S. v. Fisher, 2 Cranch, 400.)

Testing the habeas corpus Act by these rules; looking at the evil provided against and the remedy afforded, the motives and objects of the Legislature in passing it, and the manifestly absurd consequence which may result from a different construction; we conclude that the writ of habeas corpus should not issue to run out of the county, unless for good cause shown — as the absence, disability or refusal to act of the local Judge — or other reason showing that the object and reason of the law requires its issuance.

This does not militate against the true and wise purposes of the Act, nor deny to any citizen the essential rights given him by the writ of habeas corpus. The application to the local Judge may be made speedily and his answer soon given. If he refuses to act, then resort may be had to officers out of the county. This secures the right of a citizen and of the people, and deprives a process intended to be used for beneficial purposes of the power to injure the public interests by possible escapes, and delays, and onerous costs. The mere caprice of the prisoner ought not to prevail against the interests of the people and the public convenience.

Petition denied.

FIELD, J. — This is a petition for a writ of habeas corpus. The petitioner alleges that he is illegally restrained of his liberty by the Sheriff of El Dorado County, under a commitment of a Justice of the Peace. No reason is assigned for not presenting the petition, in the first instance, to the Judge of that county, or to the District Judge of the district in which that county is situated; and the question arises whether, under such circumstances, this Court should exercise its discretion, and allow the writ.

It is true, the writ of habeas corpus is one of right, to which every person unlawfully restrained of his liberty is entitled ex merito justitiæ. It is true, the privilege of the writ is an express constitutional right at all times, except in cases of rebellion or invasion, when the public safety may require its suspension. (Const., article 1, section 5.) But like any other constitutional right, its privilege is to be exercised in a reasonable manner. Local Judges of the county and district are as fully competent to inquire into the causes of an alleged illegal restraint as this Court, and ought to be applied to in the first instance. Although this Court may issue the writ, its allowance in term time is not obligatory. That must rest in the sound legal discretion of the Court. To allow it may be obligatory upon the Judges in their individual capacity, but no such obligation lies upon the Court.

The statute of New York, in force in 1810, like the statute of this State, imposed a heavy penalty upon the Judges for the refusal of the writ on a proper application: and yet in Yates v. Lansing, (5 Johns. 297) Kent, C. J., said: "The Chancellor and Judges may refuse such a writ at their discretion, if applied for a term time, and the penalty will not attach;" and subsequently, in the matter of Ferguson, (9 Johns. 239) the Supreme Court refused the writ to a soldier of the U. S. army. In that matter Kent, C. J., placed his decision on the want of jurisdiction, but Thompson, J., said: "The objections herein stated by the Chief Justice against the jurisdiction of this Court are entitled to great consideration, and as the allowance of the writ, in term time, rests in sound legal discretion, and as the party may have relief by application to one of the Judges of the Supreme Court of the United States, or of the District Court for this district, where jurisdiction in this case is unquestionable, I think the application ought to be denied." The three other Judges, Spencer, Van Ness, and Yates, all concurred in the judgment upon the grounds assigned by Justice Thompson.

There are obvious reasons why the allowance of the writ by the Court should rest in its discretion. They can be issued by the local Judges of the county and district. The causes of the restraint of the petitioners can be inquired into as fully by those Judges as by this Court. The expenses of transporting parties from extreme portions of the State under the writ, to be again in the greater number of instances retransported back, would subject the counties to oppressive burdens. and the time of this Court, were these writs allowed as a matter of course, would be occupied to the exclusion of matters pressing upon its attention, to the serious inconvenience of litigants and the public.

In the present case, no reason being assigned in the petition for the exercise of the discretion of the Court which may not be urged in every instance, I am of opinion that the writ should be disallowed.

FARLEY v. VAUGHN et al.

It would be a fraud, which no Court of Equity could tolerate, to hold that the vendor of land on a contract to convey, receiving a portion of the purchase money, and seeing the vendee expend large sums of money, improving the property, without objection, and not making any demand of the purchase money, should insist, because the vendee had not literally complied with the provisions of his contract on his part, on holding the whole contract forfeited, claim the land and the money paid and all the improvements, and deny all obligation on his part to comply with his engagements.

In such a case, where there has been a compliance with a reasonable understanding of the contract, and no injury done by the want of an exact compliance, a specific performance will be decreed.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District, County of Butte.

A statement of facts appears in the opinions of the Court.

Wm. H. Rhodes for Appellant.

First — The demurrer in the District Court ought to have been sustained:

---

Farley v. Vaughn.

---

1st. Because the complaint is a Bill in Equity, to obtain specific performance of an alleged agreement for the purchase of land; yet the complaint nowhere alleges that said agreement, or any note or memorandum thereof expressing the consideration, was in writing; nor does the said complaint set out any such agreement, as having been executed in writing.

The agreement therefore, if simply existing by parol, is void. Stat. Fraud. sec. 8. Wood's Dig., p. 106.

This statute has received a judicial interpretation at the hands of this Court, and the strict rule adopted (that no equitable construction can control) that unless the words of the statute are fully complied with, no relief will be granted. All equity usurpation is abrogated. Abell v. Calderwood, 4 Cal. 90.

2d. But if it be contended that the bond itself, which is copied in the complaint, is such a note or memorandum of the agreement as would fulfill the requirements of the statute, then the defendant contends that the bond does not express the consideration of the contract.

The language of the statute is not that the note, etc., must express a consideration, but "the consideration." The complaint sets forth "the consideration" of the contract for the sale of the land, as five hundred and thirty-three dollars. The consideration mentioned in the bond, is the payment within four months of the sum of three hundred and eighty dollars, in accordance with the provisions of two promissory notes.

3d. The complaint shows that the bond was not the contract. It alleges that it was executed after, and in "pursuance of the contract of purchase and sale," and not until the payment of one hundred and fifty dollars and the execution of two certain promissory notes.

4th. It also appears from the complaint itself, that a portion of the consideration of the purchase was by agreement paid to a Mr. Randall Hobart, yet this fact nowhere appears in writing, subscribed by the defendant.

The plaintiff therefore is not entitled to recover.

Secondly — The demurrer ought to have been sustained, upon the second ground:

1st. Because the plaintiff, by the allegations in his bill, presents to the Court a clear case of inexcusable laches. He admits that he did not pay the notes, or either of them when they fell due; yet he alleges that he knew precisely where they were.

---

Farley v. Vaughn.

---

He shows that the first note fell due on the thirteenth October, 1856, yet he avers no tender until the tenth February, 1857; that the second note fell due the thirteenth December, yet he did not offer to pay it till tenth February, 1857.

He shows furthermore, that the deed to be executed was to be executed "at the request of the plaintiff within four months," yet he does not show any such request until the tenth February, 1857, nearly two months after the time expired for the payment of the notes; and nearly a whole month after the period expired "within" which the request was limited to be made. The rule "that he who seeks equity must do equity," applies with full force to bills for a specific performance.

The party plaintiff must first show his own readiness and willingness to perform, before he can call upon the defendant to do so. Willard's Eq. Juris. 291; Brown v. Covillaud, 6 Cal. 566; Goodale v. West 5 Cal. 341; Story's Eq. J., sec. 771.

It may therefore be stated as a general principle, that a Court of Equity will in no case decree a specific performance where the plaintiff is in default, unless he comes into Court with clean hands, and makes a case fully excusing his negligence. See the case of Drew v. Duncan, 11 How. Pr. Rep. 279. In the case at bar the plaintiff admits his negligence, but endeavors to excuse it by setting up the peculiar circumstances inducing the delay. We shall therefore inquire Second, whether the matters set up are sufficient for that purpose?

The only reason alleged by the plaintiff is, "because at the time the contract was made, and at the time the notes fell due, the defendant, Vaughn, was not the holder of the legal title of said premises." To render this excuse of any avail, two things were indispensable prerequisites.

1st. That by the agreement for the purchase and sale, it was stipulated that the title conveyed should be the legal title; and

2d. That the deed agreed to be given should be such as at law would convey "the legal title."

---

Farley v. Vaughn.

---

Now the complaint nowhere alleges that the defendant agreed to convey "the legal title" of the land to the plaintiff; no agreement to that effect is set out, and we may reasonably conclude, therefore, that none such was made.

With regard to the second prerequisite, we have written testimony to guide us; indeed, aside from the bond itself, the complaint contains an allegation that the defendant agreed to execute to the plaintiff, for the consideration set out, a quitclaim deed to the premises.

The inquiry then presents itself: What are the nature, requisites, and effect of a quitclaim deed?

The deed which seems to have been agreed on, or at least which is tendered by plaintiff to defendant to execute, and which has been fully set out in the complaint, contains only the following form of conveyance: "By these presents, I do hereby remise, release, and quitclaim, etc., all my right, title, interest, estate, claim, and demand, both at law and in equity, and as well in possession as in expectancy," to which there is no habendum and tenendum, and no covenants of warranty attached. 2 Hill. on Real Prop. 318, and note (a); Doyle v. Knapp, 3 Scam. 338; 2 Hill. Real Prop. 318; Fray v. Pierce, 7 Mass. 381; Russell v. Coffin, 8 Pick. 143; 12 Iredell, 184; 12 New H. 291; 2 Hill. R. Prop. 399, and note (a); Allen v. Holden, 20 Pick. 458; Sweet v. Brown, 12 Met. 175; 2 Hill. R. Prop. 423; Gayley v. Price. 16 John. 269; 12 Ib. 442.

This general rule of law is not changed in any respect by our statute. The statute refers only to "conveyances purporting to convey the real estate in fee simple absolute," and prescribes that all subsequently acquired titles "shall immediately pass to the grantee." Wood's Dig., p. 103, art. 370.

The statutes of Missouri contain the same provision verbatim; Mo. Rev. Stat. 119; and yet it is held that the act does not apply to a quitclaim deed. Boge v. Shoab, 13 Mo. 365.

Hence the excuse set up for non-performance on the part of the plaintiff amounts to nothing, and should be entirely disregarded by the Court.

But the plaintiff had no right to postpone payment for any purpose, under the agreement as set out. He shows that possession was delivered to him, and that from a very small portion of the land sold he was deriving an income of fifty dollars per month.

Farley v. Vaughn.

---

Robinson & Beatty for Respondent.

From the first passage of the statute of frauds, in the reign of Charles the Second, down to this time, there has been one uniform current of decisions by all the Chancellors, without one dissenting voice, either in England or in America, so far as we are aware, declaring that they will enforce contracts by a decree for a specific performance, whenever there is an agreement in writing (whether expressed in one instrument or several referring to each other, and connecting themselves as part of one transaction) from which the Court can infer by proper rules of construction and interpretation, that there has been an agreement on one part to buy and on the other to sell. No set form of words is required to make a contract for the sale of land valid. 24th Wendell, p. 41; Story's Equity Jurisprudence, sec. 715.

A consideration expressed in a contract for the sale of land is, so far as that contract is concerned, the consideration. It is the consideration of that contract. Douglass v. Howland, 24th Wendell, p. 44.

In this case it is contended that the plaintiff has no equitable claim to relief, for two reasons. First, because he did not pay the amount of the purchase price the day it fell due; and second, (the appellant only slightly alludes to this objection) that the condition of the parties was altered before a compliance with the terms of the contract was demanded to be complied with.

With regard to the first point, there is no conflict of authorities; time is not of the essence of an ordinary contract for the sale and purchase of land. See Story's Equity Jurisprudence, secs. 775 and 776, and the notes and authorities there cited. There is no pretense in this case that there is anything in the form of the contract making time an essential part of the agreement. The only ground here relied on is the great lapse of time which transpired after the day the contract was to have been performed before a tender of the money and request for the deed was made by the plaintiff. The time within which the deed was to have been made, according to the original contract, expired on the thirteenth day of January. On the sixteenth day of February, just one month and three days after, the money was tendered for the notes and a deed demanded. Now, in all the cases which we have examined, where great lapse of time has been assigned for a refusal to enforce a contract in a Court of Equity, we remember none where the time was less than seven years, (Brown v. Covillaud excepted) and in most of the cases the time elapsed has been from ten to twenty years. In Brown v. Covillaud the time elapsed before demand was over four years from the making of the contract, and over three years after the last of the purchase money fell due. Yet the Court lays but little stress in its decision on the lapse of time. The main points in this case are, that the plaintiff took advantage of the unsettled state of the country to avail himself of the chances, either to hold under his purchase, or disclaim the title of the vendor and hold as a settler, as future events might show would be most profitable to him.

Farley v. Vaughn.

As for the change of the condition of the parties in relation to title, the facts of this case are a sufficient answer to any objection on that head. The bond is dated thirteenth of October, 1856. The deed is to be made within four months, at the request of plaintiff. If he did not ask it sooner, the deed should have been executed on the thirteenth of January, 1857. The sale of the defendant, Vaughn, by the administrator, was confirmed on the fifteenth of January, 1857, eight days before the time of executing the deed. Had Vaughn made his deed on that day, although he had no legal title, still he had a fixed and certain equity which would have passed to Farley, and entitle him to receive the deed from the administrator; or if the administrator still proceeded to make the deed to Vaughn it would have passed to plaintiff under the operation of our statute. See Wood's Dig., p. 103, art. 370.

No principle is better settled than this: that Courts, in interpreting written contracts, will not only look to the language of the contract itself, but will look to all the surrounding circumstances connected with the parties of the contract, and the subject matter of the contract. The law on this subject is well collated in Parsons on Contracts, vol. 2d, from page 69 to 78, inclusive. Now, if the Court takes into consideration the fact that Vaughn had bought this land at administrator's sale; that this was the only claim or title which he set up to it; that the law requires that a certain time shall elapse after the administrator's sale before the same shall be confirmed; that the plaintiff was put in possession at the time of his purchase; that when he purchased and took possession he paid one hundred and fifty dollars to the administrator, who sold the land to Vaughn; there is no difficulty in understanding the contract.

In the case of Calmes v. Birch, 4th Bibb, 453, Ch. Justice Boyle (who stands pre-eminent among the Kentucky jurists) says: "As far as we are aware, there is no example of a Court of Equity refusing, on the ground of lapse of time, its aid to one who has been in continual possession."

In the case of Kercheval v. Swope & Clift, reported in the 6th vol. of Monroe's Reports, (Kentucky) page 362, we have a case almost exactly like this.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., concurring — FIELD, J., having been consulted in the Court below, did not sit in the case.

This was a bill filed for a specific performance of a contract for the sale of certain real estate. A demurrer was interposed to the bill and overruled. The question here is as to the sufficiency of facts stated to sustain the judgment of the Court. The bill charges that about the thirteenth of September, 1856, the plaintiff entered into a contract with the defendant, Vaughn, for the purchase of the real estate in dispute; the purchase was in consideration of five hundred and thirty-three dollars, to be paid thereafter by the plaintiff to defendant, and the bill avers that, in consideration of this sum, the defendant sold the undivided half of the property; that in pursuance of this contract the plaintiff, on the thirteenth of September, 1856, paid to one Hobart one hundred and fifty dollars, for the use of the defendant, which was agreed to be paid and taken as a part of the purchase money; that the plaintiff also made, at the same time, his two promissory notes—one for one hundred and sixty-three dollars, payable thirty days from date, with interest at three per cent. per month; and the other for two hundred and eight dollars and seventy-five cents, at ninety days; that Vaughn thereupon executed his bond, the condition of which was that if, within four months from date, (September 13th) upon the request of plaintiff, and the payment of three hundred and eighty dollars, according to the tenor of the notes before recited, Vaughn should make, execute and deliver to him a good and valid deed (quit-claim) of the land, describing it, and should also acknowledge the same to be his free act and deed, the obligation to be void—else to remain in force; that on and after, and in pursuance of this agreement, plaintiff was let into possession, and that, with one Lyman Bristol, who had bought the remaining interest of the defendant, he made valuable and permanent improvements, and with the knowledge and consent of Vaughn, caused the land to be surveyed into streets, etc., in accordance with the plan of the town of Oroville, where the land is situated, and also sold portions of it to other persons, who have made improvements. The bill further avers that at the time of this contract, and of the maturity of the notes, Vaughn was not the holder of the legal title to the premises, but claimed as a purchaser under a sale made by one Hobart, who was administrator of the estate of one Carlton deceased; and that, at the maturity of the notes, the sale by Carlton's administrator to Vaughn had not been confirmed, and no deed had been made by the administrator to Vaughn; that the sale was not confirmed until the fifth of January, 1857, and the deed to Vaughn was made on the seventeenth of the same month; that about the time of the maturity of the promissory notes, they were in possession of Hobart, Carlton's administrator, and that at said time plaintiff had caused to be deposited in a banking house in Oroville three hundred and eighty dollars for the payment of the notes, and which sum was subject to the order of Hobart, in case the sale of the land to Vaughn should be confirmed; that said Hobart did not draw the money from the house and apply the same to the payment of the notes, for the reason that the sale had not been confirmed, and for the reason that proceedings had been instituted for setting aside the administrator's sale. Plaintiff further avers that the notes have been since delivered back by Hobart to Vaughn; that the title of Vaughn has been perfected by the execution of the administrator's deed; that Vaughn has not at any time tendered to the plaintiff a good and sufficient deed of quitclaim and demanded payment of said notes; that on the tenth of February, 1857, plaintiff did tender to Vaughn the full amount due upon said two several promissory notes, with interest, and further tendered to Vaughn a quitclaim deed to be by Vaughn executed and delivered to plaintiff, which money Vaughn refused to accept, and also refused to execute the deed; the bill then alleges that the defendant conveyed a portion of the premises to Mrs. Newell, the other defendant. The bill also avers a readiness to pay the principal and interest due, etc.

Farley v. Vaughn.

---

The defendant, Vaughn, demurred to the complaint. Several causes of demurrer were assigned. 1. That the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; and this, because the complaint is upon a contract of sale of land, and no allegation that the same or any part thereof is in writing; nor is any such contract set out in the bond, nor any such consideration therein mentioned. 2. That there is no allegation of tender of payment of the notes at maturity, nor of actual payment; but on the contrary, plaintiff states that at the maturity of the notes the plaintiff caused three hundred and eighty dollars to be deposited, and to be paid in case the Probate sale was confirmed; yet the deed to be given was a mere quitclaim. 3. That the complaint disclosed laches, and set up no sufficient ground for relief in equity.

Upon the case thus made we will proceed to state the principles of law applicable to it; and consider whether by force of these the judgment of the Court below can be maintained.

It is not necessary to consider whether a mere oral contract for land may be specifically enforced in equity; or whether the circumstances of this case, if the contract existed merely in parol, would entitle the plaintiff to specific execution of the agreement. For here, there was an agreement in writing, under seal, apparently upon sufficient consideration, for the land sued for in the action. There is nothing in the point that the contract must state the precise consideration of the agreement, especially if the contract be under seal. This has been decided so often, that it would be a waste of time to consider the point further.

The main and only point worth considering is, whether, under the facts stated in the bill, the lapse of time intervening between the period mentioned in the contract and the date of the tender of the purchase money is sufficient to defeat the claim of the plaintiff to a specific performance.

About two months elapsed after the maturity of the notes, and about a month from the expiration of the four months mentioned in the contract, before the tender; and no special circumstances are shown even conducing to prove that any material change had happened in the meantime in the relations of these parties, or in the value of the property. On the contrary, there appears upon the face of the contract a very plain intimation that this contract was made in direct reference to the state of the title, and that the making of the deed by Vaughn was deferred until he could get the deed from the administrator of Carlton; for it seems that the parties knew that the title — or the only pretense of it on the part of Vaughn — was to be got from that source. The plaintiff paid a portion of the purchase money to the administrator; went into possession; made valuable improvements with the knowledge and consent of Vaughn; and a period of time after the maturity of the notes given for the making of the deed — the deed to be made on the request of the plaintiff — and in the meantime proceedings were going on in the Probate Court, which it was necessary should be terminated in order that the plaintiff might get any title at all. It is true that the defendant contracted to give a quitclaim deed; but the whole statement shows that what was meant by this was not a quitclaim deed of the right held at the time of the contract, or even at the time of the maturity of the notes, but of the interest to be obtained by the defendant at the time of request, after the expiration of the four months mentioned in the agreement.

This application is addressed to the discretion of the Court of Equity; and we think the facts stated in the bill are sufficient to account for the short delay occurring after the expiration of the time expressed in the contract. That period was not limited to four months, much less to the maturity of the notes. The phraseology adopted by the parties evidently contemplated that the time of demand or request by plaintiff for the deed might be extended beyond this period; and it is only fair to infer from the whole facts stated, that it was the understanding of the parties that if a demand was made within a reasonable time after the expiration of the four months this would be sufficient, and that this provision as to time was inserted in the paper in order that the title might be perfected under the Probate sale.

It seems to us that it would be a fraud which no Court of Equity could tolerate, to hold that the defendant, receiving a portion of the purchase money, and seeing the plaintiff expend large sums of money, improving the property without objection, and not making any demand of the purchase money, should insist, because the plaintiff had not literally complied with the provisions of his contract on his part, on holding the whole contract forfeited, claim the land and the money paid, and all the improvements, and deny all obligation on his part to comply with his engagements.

This case is widely different from the cases of Brown v. Covillaud and Green v. Covillaud. In those cases there had been long delay, to the injury of defendants, and no explanation of the delay, and there were suspicious circumstances.

This case in some of its features is not unlike the case of Beck v. Simmons (7 Ala. 76). That, it is true, was a case of attempted rescission of a contract for failure of compliance with the terms of agreement. The Court in that case says:

“It appears from the proof that it was well known at the time of the exchange that the title to the Kirkland tract was not in the plaintiff in error, but that the land belonged to certain minors, of whom the plaintiff was the guardian, and that it was expected and understood that he was to cause the land to be sold and procure the title. It would be contrary to equity and good conscience to permit one who proceeds so far in a purchase as to obtain possession, with knowledge of a defect in the title, to object afterwards the want of title as a reason for not complying with his contract.

“If he knows that the defect can only be obviated by a judicial proceeding, it is impossible to suppose that the time stipulated for the completion of the contract was considered by him an essential ingredient of the contract, as it could not be known what length of time it might take to obtain the title. The question, therefore, in such cases, is not whether the party was able to make the title on the day stipu-

Ritter v. Scannell.

lated, but whether there was unreasonable delay in obtaining it." (Selton v. Slade, 7 Vesey, 265; Colton v. Wilson, 3 P. Wms. 190.)

It would seem that this reasoning is as applicable to show that it would be as inequitable to hold the delay in applying for the title under the circumstances set forth here, as a ground to defeat the plaintiff's right to a title. No material injury is shown to have been done the defendant by this delay. From the terms of the contract, taken in connection with the payment of a portion of the purchase money to Hobart, Carlton's administrator, and the handing of the notes to him by the parties, and the want of any title in Vaughn except what he got, or was to get, from the administrator of the estate, it is fairly inferable that it was the understanding of these parties that the title was to be procured by Vaughn from the administrator before he made his deed to the plaintiff; and but a short period elapsed after it was so procured before it was demanded by the plaintiff. We see nothing in the recent case of Green v. Covillaud, 10 Cal. 317, which militates with this view. Indeed, in that case we studiously sought to exclude the presumption that the decision embraced cases of this sort.

The decree of the Court below is affirmed.

RITTER v. SCANNELL et al.

The lien of an attaching creditor of real estate takes effect immediately upon the levy of the attachment, and the deposit of a copy of the writ, together with a description of the land attached, with the County Recorder.

Such lien cannot be divested by the failure of the Sheriff to make a proper return of the writ.

Nor is it necessary, where the levy is made by posting a copy of the writ on the premises, that the return of the Sheriff should show that the premises were at the time unoccupied.

Our statute prescribes the manner in which real estate may be attached, but contains no express provision requiring that all the acts necessary to a valid levy shall be set out in the return; nor can such a rule be sustained.

The deposit in the Recorder's office of a copy of the writ, with a description of the property attached, is sufficient to operate as notice of the lien to third parties. A mistake in the date of the Sheriff's return may be corrected at any time.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, County of San Francisco.

Ritter v. Scannell.

---

This was a proceeding to enjoin the sale of certain real property under execution.

It appears that an attachment was levied on the premises on the thirteenth day of November, 1854, and a copy of the writ deposited in the Recorder's office on the same day, with the following return endorsed upon it:

"By virtue of the within writ I have, this thirteenth day of November, 1854, attached all the right, title and interest of the within named defendants, Isaac M. Merrill and Russel Warren, in and to all that piece or parcel of land, situated in the city and county of San Francisco, and marked and numbered on the official map of said city and county as one hundred vara lot No. 195; also, water lots 514 and 515, together with all improvements thereon."

The return to the attachment, which was filed in the Clerk's office on the eighteenth of December, 1854, is the same as the above, (except the date) with the addition of the words: "and being on the corner of Washington and Drumm streets, by posting a copy of the within writ on the above described land, and registered the same in the office of the County Recorder." This return is dated October 30th, 1854.

Plaintiff claims title under a mortgage executed and recorded December 9, 1854, and the question presented is whether the proceedings under the attachment constituted a valid levy, and created a lien on the premises prior to the plaintiff's mortgage.

The objections to the validity of the attachment are:

1st. That the return does not state with sufficient particularity the acts which constituted the levy.

2d. That the return is contradicted, in an important respect, by the copy filed in the Recorder's office.

Plaintiff had judgment, and the defendants appealed to this Court.

Nathaniel Bennett for Appellants.

Did the acts of the Sheriff before the ninth day of December create a lien in favor of the attaching creditor? The answer to this must depend entirely on the statute. The first subdivision of sec. 125 of the Practice Act is as follows:

"Real property shall be attached by leaving a copy of the writ with

Ritter v. Scannell.

the occupant thereof; or if there be no occupant, by posting a copy in a conspicuous place thereon, and filing a copy, together with a description of the property attached, with the Recorder of the County."

There is nothing here about the return of the Sheriff being necessary to create the lien. The lien exists as soon as these several acts are performed, and the plaintiff is driven to maintain the position that the failure of the Sheriff to make sufficient return destroys a lien already acquired under the attachment. The statute does not specify what evidence shall be required to prove the several acts necessary to be performed by the subdivision above quoted; and in the absence of any particular species of proof being required by statute, these acts may be proved the same as any other acts in pais.

The return of the Sheriff is nowhere made evidence, much less the sole evidence, of the performance of the acts mentioned in the first subdivision of sec. 125. It is doubtful whether it is even admissible as evidence; for this section does not mention the return as being any part of the execution of the writ of attachment. Posting a copy in case there be no occupant, and filing a copy with a description of the property attached with the Recorder, are the acts, and the only acts, necessary to create the lien. If these are performed, the lien becomes perfect, irrespective of a return, and may be proved like other facts, whether a return has been made or not.

We offered evidence to prove that all the acts specified in sub. 1 of sec. 125 had been strictly performed by the Sheriff. The Court rejected such evidence, on the ground that the Sheriff's return was the only admissible proof; whereas the Court ought to have permitted such evidence to be given.

As a preliminary observation before entering on the somewhat desultory argument which follows, we remark that a distinction is necessary to be made between the various decisions which have been made touching the point in dispute. These decisions are divided into six different classes: 1st. Where the return of the officer is offered in evidence against strangers to the suit; 2d. Where it comes up as between the parties to the proceeding in which the return is made, or their privies; 3d. Where the question arises in a suit or proceeding against the officer himself; 4th. Suits in which the rights of purchasers, under the process are involved; 5th. Where the question as to the right of the officer to amend his return arises; and 6th. What kind of evidence is admissible to prove the return of the officer.

Ritter v. Scannel.

Now, the decision in one of these classes cannot be taken or considered as decisive of any question arising in either of the other classes; and it will be found that the apparent contradiction and diversity between the various decisions have arisen from the neglect to make the proper distinction between the different classes of cases.

It requires but a little explanation to show that this case belongs to the fourth class above enumerated. The return is not offered in evidence against strangers to the suit, but is claimed to be the only evidence as against a party to the suit. This case does not then belong to the first class. The return does not come up between parties to the suit in which the return was made, nor their privies; for the plaintiffs were not parties nor privies to the attachment suit. The case, then, does not belong to the second class. Again: this suit is not against the officer who executed the writ of attachment, and therefore cannot come under the third class. It must consequently belong to the fourth class; for it is palpable that it cannot be brought under either the fifth or sixth class.

The defendants in this suit, then, are to be regarded in the light of purchasers. This action having been instituted to prevent them from becoming purchasers, they in fact, stand in a more favorable position than if the sale had been permitted to take place, and they had in fact become purchasers, and their title had then been questioned. For the plaintiff is obliged not only to make out the strict rule of law in his favor, but he must in addition to this show that he has some positive ground of equity upon which he may interfere in advance and prevent the sale. So that we may at least assume that the defendants stand in as favorable a position as purchasers: that is, as those who belong to the fourth class above mentioned.

The case of Wheaton v. Sutton, (4 Wheat. Rep. 503) is decisive of the point.

In Tennessee, also, it has been decided that the purchaser's title cannot be made to depend on the return (Mitchell v. Lipe, 8 Yerg. 179.) The same in New York, in which State the settled doctrine is, that it is enough for the purchaser that the officer had authority to sell, and did sell; (Jackson, ex dem. Kane v. Sternberg, 1 Johns. Cases, 153; and see Ingersoll v. Sawyer, 2 Pick. 279, 280) see also to same effect, Allen on Sheriffs, page 58, edition 1845.

Again, the case of Jackson v. Walker (4 Wend. 463) is, in principle, decisive of the case at bar. There it was held that the identity of property sold under execution might be shown by parol.

The whole doctrine is stated in Jackson v. Sternberg (1 Johns. Cas. 153, 155).

We offered to show that the Sheriff had authority to sell; that he had performed every act necessary to such authority; and consequently, under the above authorities, he should have been permitted to go on and sell and give a deed to the purchaser, irrespective of any return made or to be made. For his right to sell depends, not on his return, but on his acts which he has, in fact, performed.

It will be necessary to notice two cases decided in this Court. The one is Egerly & Hinckley v. Buchanan et al. (5 Cal. Rep. 53). That case does not control ours, for it belongs to the third class of cases above enumerated, it being a proceeding against the Sheriff himself, and his sureties; and as above stated, the rules applicable to these different classes are widely different.

The other case is Newhall v. Provost, (6 Cal. R. 85) the principle of which, when closely examined, will be found to be decisive of the present case, in our favor. It was there held that the Sheriff, after having made his return, could not amend it so as to affect the rights of parties which had been acquired before such amendment. It follows as a corollary from that decision that, if the Sheriff could not, by an amendment made under the direction of the Court, affect rights acquired before such amendment, he cannot by an original return affect rights which have been acquired before such return is made.

According to the principle of this decision, the rights of both parties to this suit must be ascertained by the state of facts existing before the return was made.

In that case the referee excluded the affidavits and evidence offered on behalf of the plaintiff, on the ground that such evidence tended to impeach the return of the Sheriff: just as in our case the Court over-

---

ruled the evidence which we offered, on the ground that it tended, if not to impeach, yet to supply defects in the return of the Sheriff. This Court decided in Newhall v. Provost, that the evidence rejected was admissible; and it follows therefrom that the evidence offered in our case and rejected, ought to have been received. See Watson Treatise on Sheriffs (pp. 72-7, Law Library, 52, 53, 72 and 73.)

John Satterlee for Appellants.

It is the service and execution of an attachment which gives the attaching creditor his lien or security, and not the return of the Sheriff.

The proper service of an attachment gives the attaching creditor a security which the Sheriff has not the power to divest him of, by a defective or false return.

The plaintiff's lien or security depends upon the service of the writ and not on the Sheriff's return. Prac. Act, sec. 125.

The Sheriff may release property attached after receiving from defendant an undertaking. Prac. Act, sec. 123.

But the statute does not say or imply, that he may or can release or discharge property by a defective or false return. All property "seized and held under attachment in the action, shall be liable to execution." Cal. Statutes of 1854, p. 62, sec. 24.

The attachment in this case was in fact perfectly executed, as to every body, on the thirteenth of November, 1854. There was no occupant of the lot.

A copy of the writ was posted in a conspicuous place on the lot.

A copy of the writ, with a description of the property attached, was filed with the Recorder of the county.

The mortgage under which the plaintiff claims, was executed and recorded, and the consideration therefore loaned, December 9th, 1854. At that time the Sheriff had made no return. The mortgagee had notice of the attachment. A copy of the writ, with a description of the lot attached, was on file with the County Recorder.

The Sheriff's return did not mislead the mortgagee. It (the return) was not made or filed until December 18th, 1854.

The filing of the copy of the writ, with a description of the property, with the County Recorder, as to subsequent purchasers or mortgagees, is a sufficient service of the attachment.

Ritter v. Scannel.

The service of a copy of the writ on an occupant, or posting a copy of the writ on the lot, is to give the occupant or owner notice. They are the only persons who can complain of the Sheriff's neglect to do this.

The Sheriff's return is not the only evidence of the service of the attachment. If the return be defective, the attaching creditor or the purchaser are the only persons who suffer inconvenience therefrom. They may be subjected to the trouble and expense of proving service by other evidence. A subsequent purchaser or incumbrancer is not wronged. His information is obtained at the County Recorder's office.

The return is not the only evidence, nor is it the highest evidence, unless the statute of California makes it so.

Nowhere by our statute is the return to any process made evidence, and least of all the only evidence.

The only provision of the statute as to Sheriff's return to an attachment, is to be found in the Prac. Act, sec. 141. "The Sheriff shall return the writ of attachment, &c., with a certificate of his proceedings endorsed thereon or attached thereto."

Under this section, we contend that the return of the Sheriff was sufficient of itself; that he returned all that he was required to return, and that whatever he returned beyond this was mere surplusage.

He is not required to state all the steps of his proceedings, nor the manner, nor course of his proceeding or proceedings.

Under the old system, the Sheriff was also required to return his proceeding on a fi. fa. He did this simply by the words "nulla bona" or "satisfied" or "satisfied in part," and "nulla bona as to the residue."

Here the Sheriff returns that he had "attached" the property. This is a certificate of his "proceedings," and all that was necessary.

If the statute had intended to require the Sheriff to certify fully the manner of his executing an attachment, it would have used the language of the statute of 1851, p. 191, sec. 6, with reference to returns to process generally, to wit: "A Sheriff to whom any process, writ, order or paper shall be delivered, shall execute it, &c., &c., and return it without delay to the proper court or officer, with his certificate endorsed thereon, of the manner of its service, &c."

Ritter v. Scannel.

---

The difference between the phraseology of these two statutes should be noticed; the one requiring a "certificate of the proceeding," and the other "a certificate of the manner of the service, &c."

If we are right in this construction, then the return itself of the Sheriff was sufficient proof, and the Court ought to have found in favor of the defendants upon the evidence actually admitted.

The cases decided in Massachusetts, cited by plaintiff's counsel, are cases in which the Courts there decided that purchasers at Sheriff's sales, under a fi. fa., in a peculiar kind of proceeding unknown in California, derived title from the Sheriff's return to the execution, and that certain defects in the return were fatal to purchaser's title.

Judge Satterlee discussed the points raised in the record, at great length, and referred to the following authorities. Ingersoll v. Sawyer, 2 Pick. 279; Cowen & Hill's N. Phil. ed., 3 vol., 2 part, N. 741, pp. 1092 and 1093; 6 Comyn's Dig. 233; 5 Coke, 90; Cro. Eliz. 209, 238; 1 Salk. 318; 2 N. Y. Stat. revised ed. 1836, pp. 288, 358; Stat. of Cal. p. 191, sec. 6; Prac. Act, sec. 141; 2 Caine's Cases, p. 63; 1 Burrill's Prac., ed. 1846, p. 304.

J. B. Hart for Respondent.

The acts necessary to make the attachment are, by leaving a copy of the writ with the occupant of the real estate, if there be one; if not, then by posting a copy in a conspicuous place thereon, and filing a copy, together with a description of the property attached, with the Recorder of the county.

The return is simply, that he had attached the property, not stating how: this I think is bad. It is well settled that the truth of the return of a Sheriff cannot be questioned by parol, and is conclusive against him. (Paxton v. Steckel, 2 Penn. State, 93; French v. Stanley, 21 Maine, 512; Haynes v. Small, 22 Maine, 14; Denny v. Willard, 11 Peck, 519.)

To permit a Sheriff to make his return to an attachment in a careless and reckless manner, and then after rights of third innocent parties have intervened, to prove by parol the act necessary to make the attachment good, "would be opening the door to infinite laxity and fraud, and mischiefs incalculable." The fact of leaving a copy of the writ with the occupant of the property, or posting a copy in a conspicuous place, if no occupants, is an act that renders the attachment good by being public, and calculated to give notice to the world of it, and enable parties to be on their guard in dealing for the property attached; and to omit it, renders it void as to third innocent parties. Now doing the thing the law requires, would give to third parties notice of the lien, and prevent them from dealing in regard to it. The return on the attachment is the record evidence of the fact, if it had been done; and its not having been so recorded in the return, the return itself is bad, and the attachment void for want of a proper record of the facts or acts that render the attachment perfect. If the truth of these important acts may depend upon the recollection of deputies, the acts of a Sheriff will always be made good, and frauds easily perpetrated in that way.

Ritter v. Scannel.

---

The rights acquired under the law of attachments are the creations of statute. The law should be strictly performed; and the return of the officer should show it.

The attachment confers rights upon the creditor so soon as executed and the return of it made; the property attached is held to pay the debt that may be recovered; it is like the equitable writ of sequestration; in that proceeding the property is taken possession of by the Court, through its officer, the change of possession is notorious; in that way the public are put upon their guard. Upon the vendi the property is ordered to be sold, and the acts of an officer on a vendi are like the proceeding on sequestration, public. The law of the English writ of elegit requires that the Sheriff should set out in his return every act necessary to show affirmatively that all the personal property (except the beasts of the plough) of the debtor was taken; a jury empaneled, who made inquiry of the goods and chattels of the debtor and appraised the same, and if not enough to pay the debt at the appraisement, then to inquire as to the land; and upon such inquisition that he delivered all the goods and chattels, (except the beasts of the plough) and a moiety of the lands to the plaintiff. The reason given why such particularity is required in the return is, that the inquisition and return constitute the title of the plaintiff to the property given him by the Sheriff. 3 Bacon, title Execution, article C., sec. 2, p. 688; 2 vol. Jacob. Dec. 371. The rule in regard to this writ is different from that applicable to the writ of fi. facias, because the return is not evidence of title to the purchaser, the sale and Sheriff's deed are sufficient evidence of title. If the purchaser can show that the Sheriff had authority to sell, it is enough; he need not look further. 5 Cow. Rep. 529. The proceedings on the writ of elegit operates a transfer of title by appraisement, from debtor to creditor of personal property, and transfers to creditor possession of moiety of real estate as tenant.

The fi. fa. takes from the debtor his personal property, and by the Sheriff it is sold to any one who may choose to become purchaser; this is a transaction between Sheriff and stranger; the other is between creditor and debtor. Through the agency of the Sheriff the lien of the attachment is intended to be given by acts that are public and notorious, and evidenced by the return; and without those acts appear affirmatively to have been done, there is no lien created.

TERRY, C. J., after stating the facts, delivered the opinion of the Court — BALDWIN, J., concurring.

The objections to the validity of the attachment are:

1st. That the return does not state with sufficient particularity the acts which constituted the levy.

2d. That the return is contradicted in an important respect by the copy filed in the Recorder's office.

Upon the first point it is contended that every act which is, under the statute, requisite to the validity of an attachment of real estate, should be affirmatively shown by the return; and that inasmuch as it is shown in this case that the levy was made by posting a copy of the writ on the premises, the return should show that the premises were at the time unoccupied, in which case only could a valid levy be made in the manner stated.

Our statute prescribes the manner in which real estate may be attached; but contains no express provision requiring that all the acts necessary to a valid levy shall be set out in the return, and we think the rule contended for was not contemplated by the Legislature.

 Ritter v. Scannell.

lated, but whether there was unreasonable delay in obtaining it." (Selton v. Slade, 7 Vesey, 265; Colton v. Wilson, 3 P. Wms. 190.)

It would seem that this reasoning is as applicable to show that it would be as inequitable to hold the delay in applying for the title under the circumstances set forth here, as a ground to defeat the plaintiff's right to a title. No material injury is shown to have been done the defendant by this delay. From the terms of the contract, taken in connection with the payment of a portion of the purchase money to Hobart, Carlton's administrator, and the handing of the notes to him by the parties, and the want of any title in Vaughn except what he got, or was to get, from the administrator of the estate, it is fairly inferable that it was the understanding of these parties that the title was to be procured by Vaughn from the administrator before he made his deed to the plaintiff; and but a short period elapsed after it was so procured before it was demanded by the plaintiff. We see nothing in the recent case of Green v. Covillaud, 10 Cal. 317, which militates with this view. Indeed, in that case we studiously sought to exclude the presumption that the decision embraced cases of this sort.

The decree of the Court below is affirmed.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, County of San Francisco.

---

---

This was a proceeding to enjoin the sale of certain real property under execution.

It appears that an attachment was levied on the premises on the thirteenth day of November, 1854, and a copy of the writ deposited in the Recorder's office on the same day, with the following return endorsed upon it:

"By virtue of the within writ I have, this thirteenth day of November, 1854, attached all the right, title and interest of the within named defendants, Isaac M. Merrill and Russel Warren, in and to all that piece or parcel of land, situated in the city and county of San Francisco, and marked and numbered on the official map of said city and county as one hundred vara lot No. 195; also, water lots 514 and 515, together with all improvements thereon."

The return to the attachment, which was filed in the Clerk's office on the eighteenth of December, 1854, is the same as the above, (except the date) with the addition of the words: "and being on the corner of Washington and Drumm streets, by posting a copy of the within writ on the above described land, and registered the same in the office of the County Recorder." This return is dated October 30th, 1854.

Plaintiff claims title under a mortgage executed and recorded December 9, 1854, and the question presented is whether the proceedings under the attachment constituted a valid levy, and created a lien on the premises prior to the plaintiff's mortgage.

The objections to the validity of the attachment are:

1st. That the return does not state with sufficient particularity the acts which constituted the levy.

2d. That the return is contradicted, in an important respect, by the copy filed in the Recorder's office.

Plaintiff had judgment, and the defendants appealed to this Court.

Nathaniel Bennett for Appellants.

Did the acts of the Sheriff before the ninth day of December create a lien in favor of the attaching creditor? The answer to this must depend entirely on the statute. The first subdivision of sec. 125 of the Practice Act is as follows:

"Real property shall be attached by leaving a copy of the writ with

Ritter v. Scannell.

the occupant thereof; or if there be no occupant, by posting a copy in a conspicuous place thereon, and filing a copy, together with a description of the property attached, with the Recorder of the County."

There is nothing here about the return of the Sheriff being necessary to create the lien. The lien exists as soon as these several acts are performed, and the plaintiff is driven to maintain the position that the failure of the Sheriff to make sufficient return destroys a lien already acquired under the attachment. The statute does not specify what evidence shall be required to prove the several acts necessary to be performed by the subdivision above quoted; and in the absence of any particular species of proof being required by statute, these acts may be proved the same as any other acts in pais.

The return of the Sheriff is nowhere made evidence, much less the sole evidence, of the performance of the acts mentioned in the first subdivision of sec. 125. It is doubtful whether it is even admissible as evidence; for this section does not mention the return as being any part of the execution of the writ of attachment. Posting a copy in case there be no occupant, and filing a copy with a description of the property attached with the Recorder, are the acts, and the only acts, necessary to create the lien. If these are performed, the lien becomes perfect, irrespective of a return, and may be proved like other facts, whether a return has been made or not.

We offered evidence to prove that all the acts specified in sub. 1 of sec. 125 had been strictly performed by the Sheriff. The Court rejected such evidence, on the ground that the Sheriff's return was the only admissible proof; whereas the Court ought to have permitted such evidence to be given.

As a preliminary observation before entering on the somewhat desultory argument which follows, we remark that a distinction is necessary to be made between the various decisions which have been made touching the point in dispute. These decisions are divided into six different classes: 1st. Where the return of the officer is offered in evidence against strangers to the suit; 2d. Where it comes up as between the parties to the proceeding in which the return is made, or their privies; 3d. Where the question arises in a suit or proceeding against the officer himself; 4th. Suits in which the rights of purchasers, under the process are involved; 5th. Where the question as to the right of the officer to amend his return arises; and 6th. What kind of evidence is admissible to prove the return of the officer.

Bitter v. Scannel.

Now, the decision in one of these classes cannot be taken or considered as decisive of any question arising in either of the other classes; and it will be found that the apparent contradiction and diversity between the various decisions have arisen from the neglect to make the proper distinction between the different classes of cases.

It requires but a little explanation to show that this case belongs to the fourth class above enumerated. The return is not offered in evidence against strangers to the suit, but is claimed to be the only evidence as against a party to the suit. This case does not then belong to the first class. The return does not come up between parties to the suit in which the return was made, nor their privies; for the plaintiffs were not parties nor privies to the attachment suit. The case, then, does not belong to the second class. Again: this suit is not against the officer who executed the writ of attachment, and therefore cannot come under the third class. It must consequently belong to the fourth class; for it is palpable that it cannot be brought under either the fifth or sixth class.

The defendants in this suit, then, are to be regarded in the light of purchasers. This action having been instituted to prevent them from becoming purchasers, they in fact, stand in a more favorable position than if the sale had been permitted to take place, and they had in fact become purchasers, and their title had then been questioned. For the plaintiff is obliged not only to make out the strict rule of law in his favor, but he must in addition to this show that he has some positive ground of equity upon which he may interfere in advance and prevent the sale. So that we may at least assume that the defendants stand in as favorable a position as purchasers: that is, as those who belong to the fourth class above mentioned.

The case of Wheaton v. Sutton, (4 Wheat. Rep. 503) is decisive of the point.

In Tennessee, also, it has been decided that the purchaser's title cannot be made to depend on the return (Mitchell v. Lipe, 8 Yerg. 179.) The same in New York, in which State the settled doctrine is, that it is enough for the purchaser that the officer had authority to sell, and did sell; (Jackson, ex dem. Kane v. Sternberg, 1 Johns. Cases, 153; and see Ingersoll v. Sawyer, 2 Pick. 279, 280) see also to same effect, Allen on Sheriffs, page 58, edition 1845.

---

Ritter v. Scannel.

---

Again, the case of Jackson v. Walker (4 Wend. 463) is, in principle, decisive of the case at bar. There it was held that the identity of property sold under execution might be shown by parol.

The whole doctrine is stated in Jackson v. Sternberg (1 Johns. Cas. 153, 155).

We offered to show that the Sheriff had authority to sell; that he had performed every act necessary to such authority; and consequently, under the above authorities, he should have been permitted to go on and sell and give a deed to the purchaser, irrespective of any return made or to be made. For his right to sell depends, not on his return, but on his acts which he has, in fact, performed.

It will be necessary to notice two cases decided in this Court. The one is Egerly & Hinckley v. Buchanan et al. (5 Cal. Rep. 53). That case does not control ours, for it belongs to the third class of cases above enumerated, it being a proceeding against the Sheriff himself, and his sureties; and as above stated, the rules applicable to these different classes are widely different.

The other case is Newhall v. Provost, (6 Cal. R. 85) the principle of which, when closely examined, will be found to be decisive of the present case, in our favor. It was there held that the Sheriff, after having made his return, could not amend it so as to affect the rights of parties which had been acquired before such amendment. It follows as a corollary from that decision that, if the Sheriff could not, by an amendment made under the direction of the Court, affect rights acquired before such amendment, he cannot by an original return affect rights which have been acquired before such return is made.

According to the principle of this decision, the rights of both parties to this suit must be ascertained by the state of facts existing before the return was made.

In that case the referee excluded the affidavits and evidence offered on behalf of the plaintiff, on the ground that such evidence tended to impeach the return of the Sheriff: just as in our case the Court over-

Ritter v. Scannel.

---

ruled the evidence which we offered, on the ground that it tended, if not to impeach, yet to supply defects in the return of the Sheriff. This Court decided in Newhall v. Provost, that the evidence rejected was admissible; and it follows therefrom that the evidence offered in our case and rejected, ought to have been received. See Watson Treatise on Sheriffs (pp. 72-7, Law Library, 52, 53, 72 and 73.)

John Satterlee for Appellants.

It is the service and execution of an attachment which gives the attaching creditor his lien or security, and not the return of the Sheriff.

The proper service of an attachment gives the attaching creditor a security which the Sheriff has not the power to divest him of, by a defective or false return.

The plaintiff's lien or security depends upon the service of the writ and not on the Sheriff's return. Prac. Act, sec. 125.

The Sheriff may release property attached after receiving from defendant an undertaking. Prac. Act, sec. 123.

But the statute does not say or imply, that he may or can release or discharge property by a defective or false return. All property "seized and held under attachment in the action, shall be liable to execution." Cal. Statutes of 1854, p. 62, sec. 24.

The attachment in this case was in fact perfectly executed, as to every body, on the thirteenth of November, 1854. There was no occupant of the lot.

A copy of the writ was posted in a conspicuous place on the lot.

A copy of the writ, with a description of the property attached, was filed with the Recorder of the county.

The mortgage under which the plaintiff claims, was executed and recorded, and the consideration therefore loaned, December 9th, 1854. At that time the Sheriff had made no return. The mortgagee had notice of the attachment. A copy of the writ, with a description of the lot attached, was on file with the County Recorder.

The Sheriff's return did not mislead the mortgagee. It (the return) was not made or filed until December 18th, 1854.

The filing of the copy of the writ, with a description of the property, with the County Recorder, as to subsequent purchasers or mortgagees, is a sufficient service of the attachment.

suing the corporation, as we are entitled to against any other private individual.

Treasury warrants, from their nature, must be considered as negotiable instruments. They are always drawn in payment of an outstanding debt or demand, and they are taken as payment. They have all the incidents of a bill of exchange.

The power to draw the warrants is expressly conferred by the Charter of 1851.

In every case in which this question has arisen, these securities have been governed by the same rule as bills of exchange, and no case can be found to the contrary.

The following cases are directly in point: Crawford v. Wilson, 2 English's (Arkansas) R. 219; Kelly v. Mayor of Brooklyn, 4 Hill, 265; Steel v. Davis Co., 2 Green (Iowa) R. 469.

The authorities cited by appellant to show that if one count is bad it vitiates the judgment, are inapplicable to this case. That doctrine is only applied where there is a verdict, either upon an issue, or upon a writ of inquiry after default. The reason of it is because it cannot be ascertained if the finding is upon the good or bad count.

But in cases where there is only a simple default, it is a confession by defendant of all the counts; and if there is one good count, it must be held sufficient to support the judgment.

Shafters, Park & Heydenfeldt on reargument.

The Court, in its opinion delivered in the above cause, says:

1. That it is doubtful whether the general counts in assumpsit will lie against a defendant in any case.

That point was made in Ruiz v. Norton, 4 Cal. 355, and it was decided that the common counts would lie, and the published reports show how largely that decision has been acted on.

This has never been a contested point since the organization of this Court, and hundreds of recoveries in this State rest upon similar pleadings.

In Jourdan v. Reynolds (6 Cal. 108) this Court said: "Where the entire performance of a special contract has been prevented by one of the parties, or where its terms have been afterwards waived by agreement of both parties, the action for the amount due for work and labor should be in the form of indebitatus assumpsit, and not upon the contract."

Hunt v. City of San Francisco.

In Reina v. Cross, (6 Cal. 29) opinion by Terry, C. J., there was a count for money had and received; no objection was taken to it as a common count per se, but it was held bad because it did not aver a demand.

In Lorraine v. Long (6 Cal. 452) this Court said: "Our practice, while it enlarges the field of remedy, does not take any pre-existing remedies by implication."

Under the New York Code, from which ours was mostly derived, the same construction has been given as here contended for. In the case of Allen v. Patterson, (3 Selden, 476) the Court of Appeals commences its opinion by referring to the requisition of the Code, that the complaint shall contain a plain and concise statement of facts, and it decides the common count in assumpsit in that case to be good.

If now, this declaration or complaint be tested by any rule, either of the statute or common law, as to the sufficiency of its averments, we apprehend that it will stand the test. It avers, first: That the defendant was indebted; second, the consideration for so much money paid, laid out and expended for said defendants at their request, for work and labor done and performed for defendants and at their request, for goods, wares and merchandise sold and delivered to defendants and at their request. It avers the amount of indebtedness, the promise to pay, the demand of payment, and the neglect and refusal to pay. If any statement of facts could by possibility be plainer and more concise, your petitioners lack the education and ability to detect it.

In the opinion of the Court, while it is admitted that indebitatus assumpsit lies against corporations generally, it is denied that it lies against a municipal.

We humbly suggest that the Court has fallen into an error in failing to recognize the two-fold character of a municipal corporation. It is evident, at a glance at the construction and purpose of these artificial creations, that they have two capacities: one that of a government, and the other that of a person; and this distinction has been twice specifically recognized in the decisions of this Court, and as a primary proposition it would seem not to be a subject of dispute.

Hunt v. City of San Francisco.

In the case of Holland v. The City of San Francisco (7 Cal. 361) this Court held: "A municipal corporation, from the nature of the ends intended to be accomplished by its creation, is a compound being, acting in different capacities.

"In addition to this government power, it also possesses the capacity to own and dispose of property like an individual.

"So also it follows that the city, in the proper form, could make the same binding admission not prejudicial to the rights of others that individuals could make."

The same doctrine is maintained by elementary writers: Angell on Corporations, p. 31.

And so it was said by Nelson, C. J., in Moodalay v. E. India Co., Brown Ch. R. 469.

In Poultney v. Wells, 1 Aikin, (Vt. R. 180) and in North Whitehall v. South Whitehall, (3 Serg. & Rawle, 116) the liability proceeded upon certain conditions fixed by statute. Indebitatus assumpsit was brought and the remedy held appropriate.

The citations from Kent in the opinion of the Court in this case, go to the question of the powers of a corporation, and not the question presented here, which is purely a question of pleading. We do not pretend that the city can enter into a contract without an ordinance, but having made the ordinance to borrow my money, or to obtain my labor, and having thus become indebted to me, I must of course bring assumpsit, for I have no other remedy; and this must be indebitatus assumpsit, unless there was a special contract, or in case of a special contract after its performance. The whole dispute resolves itself into a question of evidence, and cannot be tortured into a question of remedy; so when I bring my action of indebitatus assumpsit, the corporation may deny the authority for creating the liability — but that is matter of proof — and it is upon the proof I must fail or succeed, and not upon the pleadings. Surely, it will not be contended that I must set out the authority of an ordinance in the complaint.

The issue is simply one of indebtedness, and I must prove every thing which is necessary to sustain the affirmative of that issue; and we know of no case and of no class of cases in which one is required to set out all the proof in the pleadings.

Hunt v. City of San Francisco.

Having, as we think, established the validity of the remedy as far as the first count is concerned, we think it entirely unnecessary to enter into the consideration of the soundness of the second count. It may be, as has been held by the Court, defective for want of particularity in description of the warrants; but if we have one good count, that is all sufficient upon a judgment by default to support the judgment.

The authorities cited by the other side, to the effect that after verdict the judgment will be arrested if there is a bad count, has no application to a case of default. The reason for the doctrine alluded to, as given by the author cited, is because the Court cannot know whether the jury found on the good or the bad count. But in case of judgment by default, no such difficulty occurs, because by the default the defendant confesses to all the counts, and if there is a good one, it is well confessed to, and will support the judgment.

This case was originally argued and decided at the January Term, 1858: Chief Justice TERRY delivered the opinion of the Court, and BURNETT, J., concurred. The opinion of the Court as then delivered was to the effect, that the allegations in the complaint were not sufficient to sustain the judgment. At the October Term following, a reargument was had, and the following opinion rendered:

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — FIELD, J., concurring.

Judgment was taken by default in this case upon several of the common counts, and also a count in these words: "And the plaintiff further shows that said warrants came to and vested in said plaintiff by assignment, and that he became and is the legal owner and holder thereof, and that he has demanded payment of the City Treasurer of the same, who has neglected and refused to pay the same; of all of which said defendants had due notice."

It is assigned for error, on appeal from this judgment by the appellant, that this last count is fatally defective, as showing no cause of action; and therefore, the judgment by default is erroneous. It is also assigned that the judgment is erroneous, because default cannot be taken against a municipal corporation on the common counts.

Hunt v. City of San Francisco.

We think there is nothing in this last objection. We have held that the common counts, in the usual form adopted under the old system of pleading, are good in actions against private persons. (See cases cited on respondent's brief.) And we cannot see either the necessity or propriety of holding a different rule in respect to corporations of whatever kind. The rules of pleading are general. They were designed to embrace all persons, natural or artificial, capable of suing or of being sued. No exception is made of corporations by the statute, and we have no authority to interpolate any upon our system. If we were to make exceptions in their favor in the rules of pleading, we do not see why we might not, with the same propriety, make similar exceptions in the rules of evidence. This would be to break the harmony of the system, and to exercise legislative functions. This question was, in effect, decided in the case of the Gas Company v. The City of San Francisco. (9 Cal. Rep. 456.)

The other point is urged with more confidence. Assuming that the count set out on the warrants is fatally defective, the question arises whether the default and judgment on the money counts, or for the amount of them is erroneous. It will be observed that the money counts are each of them for the amount for which judgment was taken.

The appellant's counsel contends that where a verdict, on issue joined, or on a writ of inquiry of damages, is given upon several counts, one or more of which is bad, no judgment of the finding can be sustained on error; and that the same rule obtains where judgment is entered on default in like cases, under our Practice Act. The principle is unquestionably true in the cases of verdict, as the counsel has shown by the authorities cited; but this doctrine does not hold in regard to judgments where the law determines the fact and the amount of the recovery on default. The reason of the rule contended for in cases of verdict is, that it is not certain upon what basis, or upon which of the counts, the jury rests its finding. For all that appears, the jury may have found its verdict upon the bad count; and thus the defendant may be compelled to pay a judgment based upon no legal cause of action. But this reasoning does not hold where the law itself, upon an admitted cause of action, fixes the result. As we have often held, a default confesses all the issuable facts of the several causes of action counted upon. The default amounts, in this case, to a confession of indebtedness for the causes, and on the accounts, alleged in the complaint — one of which here is for money had and received, and another for goods, etc., furnished the defendant. The defendant cannot say, in answer to, or avoidance of, the effect of the admission, that it had also admitted an indebtedness for a cause which the law did not recognize as a sufficient basis for a judgment. It could not be heard to say, if it were in open Court — “I confess that I owe the plaintiff so much money, on a good cause of action — and also, so much on a bad, or badly stated cause of action; but no judgment can be rendered against me on this admission of the good cause, because I have also admitted an indebtedness on a bad or badly stated cause.” The several counts are distinct causes of action; and the fact that by reason of one of them having been imperfectly stated, no judgment could be rendered on that count, does not affect the right of plaintiff to take judgment on those which are rightly stated.

Hunt v. City of San Francisco.

There can be no difficulty in regard to the effect of the judgment; for as it is by operation of law that the judgment is rendered, the law itself determines the causes of action upon which it rests; and these are, in this instance, the good counts, or those which in law justify and authorize the finding. The cases cited by counsel for appellant do not militate against this view.

KEWEN v. JOHNSON.

EXECUTION, PROPERTY NOT LEVIABLE.

Property in-custody of the law not subject to execution.

APPEAL from the District Court of the First Judicial District, County of Los Angeles.

This was a motion made to the Court below, for an order to compel the defendant, as Clerk of the District Court, to pay over certain moneys in his hands to the plaintiff.

The motion was based on the following facts:

Goodwin & Co. commenced suit in the District Court of Los Angeles County, by attachment, against Lewis Glazer, to recover a sum of money. The attachment was levied by the Sheriff of Los Angeles County, on a stock of goods or merchandise, and also on two several promissory notes of five hundred dollars each. The goods being perishable property, were sold under the order of Court, and the proceeds of such sale, $1,222.55, were paid into Court, subject to the suit. On the twenty-first day of July, 1857, a second attachment was issued in said suit, and directed to the Sheriff of San Bernardino County, who levied the same on a stock of goods in that county. On the third of August, 1857, one Charles Glazer brought an action of replevin against the Sheriff of San Bernardino County, to recover said last mentioned stock of goods. A receiver was appointed in this suit, to take charge and sell the goods. The receiver sold the goods, and on the fifteenth of March, 1858, paid into Court the sum of $5,343.22, the proceeds of such sale. The defendant in the replevin suit subsequently obtained judgment, from which the plaintiff appealed to the Supreme Court, where the same was still pending at the time of the plaintiff's motion. No bond staying execution was given. On the eighth of April, 1858, Goodwin & Co. recovered judgment against Lewis Glazer, for the sum of $5,343.22 debt, and $358.31 costs; from which judgment Glazer appealed to the Supreme Court, and gave bond in the sum of three hundred dollars for the payment of cost, and recited in said bond that Charles Glazer had deposited in Court, on the part of appellant, the sum of $5,343.22, (this appears to be the same money paid into Court by the receiver) in the case of Charles Glazer v. The Sheriff of San Bernardino County.

The two promissory notes were sold by order of Court, and brought the sum of five hundred and forty-three dollars. On the seventh of May, 1858, the judge of said District Court made a chamber order, requiring the clerk to issue execution in the case of Goodwin & Co. v. Lewis Glazer, and to apply the deposit of $5,343.22 thereon: from which order Lewis Glazer appealed.

On the fifth day of March, 1858, Lewis Glazer, for value received, assigned to Kewen, the plaintiff, the sum of $1,222.55, with power to demand, receive and acquit for the same. Kewen made demand of defendant, Johnson, for this sum, which was refused, on the ground that said amount was in his custody as Clerk of the Court, and was subject to the attachment lien of Goodwin & Co. Kewen thereupon made his motion, which was based on notice and affidavit, to the District Court of Los Angeles County, for an order requiring the defendant, as such clerk, to pay over to him the amount, which was denied, and he appealed therefrom to this Court.

Geo. Cadwalader for Appellant.

TERRY, C. J., delivered the opinion of the Court — FIELD, J., concurring.

There is no error in the judgment. By the record it appears that the greater part of the money in the hands of the defendant, under the attachment in the case of Goodwin v. Glazer, 10 Cal. 333, is claimed by a third party, who has instituted suit to recover it, which suit is now pending and undetermined. If this suit should be determined in favor of the claimant, the sum in the hands of the defendant will be sufficient to satisfy the judgment.

Judgment affirmed.

Hunt v. Robinson.

---

HUNT v. ROBINSON et al.

T commenced suit against J by attachment; the writ was levied upon certain personal property by the plaintiff H, as Sheriff. M J, wife of J, claimed the property as a sole trader and brought her action of replevin for the property and obtained possession of the same by the delivery of an undertaking as required by sec. 102 of the code. The undertaking was executed by defendants R & S. The replevin suit was decided February 5th, 1855, in favor of H. T obtained judgment in the attachment suit against J, November 30th, 1854. On the eighteenth of February, 1855, executions in favor of other creditors of J, coming into the hands of H as Sheriff, he levied them on the same property and subsequently sold the property and paid the proceeds into Court. H then brought this suit against the sureties in the replevin bond: Held, that the lien of T's attachment continued after the replevy of the goods by M J.

When the same property came into the hands of H, as Sheriff, the condition of the replevin bond, to return the property, was fulfilled.

The primary object of the replevin suit is, the recovery of the thing itself. The value is received only in the alternative, that the property is not returned.

The possession obtained by the plaintiff in replevin is only temporary. It does not divest the title or discharge the lien.

In an action on a replevin bond, the defendant's liability is limited to the damage sustained by a failure to return the property.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Sixth Judicial District, County of Sacramento.

This was an action against the sureties on a replevin bond. The facts as detailed in the opinion of the Court are as follows:

Treadwell commenced suit against David Jones, by attachment, which was levied upon certain personal property by the plaintiff, Hunt, as Sheriff of Sacramento county. Mary Jones, wife of David Jones, claimed the property as a sole trader, and commenced her action of replevin, and obtained possession of the property, upon delivering an undertaking as required by the 102d section of the Practice Act, executed by defendants, Robinson & Skinker. The replevin suit was decided on the fifth of February, 1855, in favor of Hunt, and a motion made for a new trial by Mrs. Jones, which motion was pending until ninth March, 1855, when it was overruled. Treadwell obtained judgment against David Jones, November 30th, 1854, for $4,300. On the eighteenth of February, 1855, certain executions in favor of other creditors of David Jones, being in the hands of the plaintiff, Hunt, were levied by him upon the same property, and the property sold about the last of February. The Sheriff, being in doubt as to which of the several creditors were entitled to the proceeds of the sale, paid the money into the Sixth District Court, and filed his bill of interpleader, making Treadwell and the other creditors, parties. Upon the hearing, the District Court decided that the second class of creditors were entitled to the proceeds. From this decision no appeal was taken by any party. On the seventeenth of March, 1855, Hunt issued his execution upon the judgment obtained by him in the replevin suit, which was returned by the Coroner unsatisfied. The Sheriff then brought his suit against the sureties in the replevin bond, and obtained judgment against them for the assessed value of the property replevied, and for costs, and the defendants appealed to this Court.

---

The main question arising in this case, is whether the lien of Treadwell's attachment continued after the replevy of the goods by Mrs. Jones.

Mrs. Jones, as determined by the result of the replevin suit, had no title to the furniture, and therefore could not have conferred title upon a purchaser. She could not confer what she did not herself possess.

In the language of the Chief Justice in the case of Burckle v. Luce, 1st Comstock, on p. 171, she had a mere temporary right of possession, which expired upon the termination of that suit against her, and this is the only right which she could have transferred to a purchaser.

But, says respondent's counsel, our law looks upon the possessor of personal property as its owner.

It is true, possession is evidence of ownership, but it is prima facie only, not conclusive evidence. Mrs. Jones was in possession and for the time being entitled to the possession of the furniture; she could confer upon a purchaser no higher title than she possessed.

The case of Lockwood v. Perry, 9 Metcalf, 444, is directly in point, and establishes two of the points contended for by appellants:

1st. That Mrs. Jones could not sell the property attached, and make a title thereto, during the pendency of the action of replevin; and if she could not sell, she certainly could not give it away in payment of debts not her own, as that would be a fraud upon her sureties.

Hunt v. Robinson.

2d. That Hunt, the real owner, or having all the interests of the real owner, could not lawfully disturb her right of possession during the pendency of the action of replevin, and therefore could not levy upon it in favor of other creditors of David Jones.

We further contend on behalf of the appellants, that the lien of the first attachments still remained upon the property; and that although bonded upon the statute, it was still in the custody of the law, and could not be levied upon by any officer, nor sold by her.

In 1st Barnes Chy. 427; in 2d Dallas, 68; in Acker v. White, 25th Wendell, 614, and in some other cases, the Court, it is true, says the lien is discharged upon the execution of the replevin bond; while in Rives, &c. v. Owen, 6th Alabama, 46; Hagan v. Lucas, 10th Peters, 400; McRea, &c. v. McLean, 3d Porter, 138, and various other cases in Kentucky, Missouri, &c., it is held that notwithstanding the execution of the bond, the lien of the attachment still exists, and that goods so replevied cannot be levied upon or sold to satisfy other debts.

This peculiarity, however, will be observed in all the cases cited and relied upon by respondent's counsel, that although the Courts say the lien is gone, yet they arrive at the same conclusions to which those Courts arrive who hold that the lien continues; while following the language in 1 Brown's Chy., that the lien is gone, and thus yielding nominally to the authority of that case, they avoid the consequences of fraud and corruption to which that doctrine would necessarily lead, as is fully exemplified in this case, by holding that the plaintiff in replevin is substituted to all the rights of the Sheriff, and that the property thus replevied is not subject to levy and sale under any other execution.

In that case, White, claiming title, replevied the property out of the possession of Hillyer, Sheriff.

In this case, Mary Jones, claiming title, replevied the property out of the hands of Hunt, Sheriff.

In that case, after judgment, but pending a motion for a new trial, Acker, as Sheriff, under an execution against Jessup upon another judgment, levied upon the same property.

In this case, after judgment, but pending a motion for a new trial,

Hunt v. Robinson.

---

Hunt, as Sheriff, under an execution against David Jones upon another judgment, levied upon the same property.

The only difference between the two cases thus far, is this: that in the case of Acker v. White, the second execution was levied by a different officer; while in this case the two levies were made by the same officer, who must therefore have had actual notice of the first levy when he made the second.

Now, if Hunt could acquire no new title to the goods, by virtue of his second levy, he could only sell and dispose of the same in one of two ways; either, 1st, by virtue of his first levy, and in satisfaction of the debts to secure which that levy was made; in which event the condition of this bond would have been substantially complied with, and no action for a return could have been maintained upon it; or 2d, he must have sold them in his own wrong. The law permits no man to take advantage of his own wrong, and in neither event therefore can any suit be maintained upon the bond for a return of the goods.

But according to the third proposition of the Court in Acker v. White, and according to every principle of law and justice, if the appellants are compelled to pay the value of these goods, they will be entitled to the goods themselves. It is conceded, however, that they cannot get the goods, the respondent having sold them; and therefore, should the judgment of the Court below be permitted to stand, they would be compelled to pay for the goods and never enjoy the benefit of them.

Another case cited and relied upon by respondent's counsel, is the case of Burckle v. Luce, 1st Comstock, 163, and in this case we apprehend the counsel is more unfortunate even than in Acker v. White.

In this case Mrs. Seitz sued Luce in replevin for certain goods which he had levied upon as the property of Burckle. Upon giving the requisite bond, the goods were placed in her possession. A verdict was found for defendant, Luce, which was set aside and a new trial ordered. Before a new trial was had Mrs. Seitz died, and defendant, Luce, repossessed himself of the goods, and claimed to hold them by virtue of his first levy. Burckle and another, the executors of Mrs. Seitz, brought a second action of replevin against Luce for the goods; and upon the trial of this second action, asked the Court to instruct the jury, "that the execution of the writ of replevin brought by Mrs. Seitz, destroyed the lien of the fi. fa., and the defendant had no right to retake the property;" but the Court refused to give the instruction, and judgment went for the defendant, which on appeal was affirmed—thus denying the doctrine, that the lien of the levy is gone upon the execution of the bond in replevin.

---

In this case of Burckle v. Luce the Court reviews each of the cases cited by respondent's counsel, to wit: Bradyll v. Ball, 1 Bro. Chy., 427; Waglam v. Cowperthwaite, 2d Dallas, 68; Frey v. Lupee, 2d Dallas, 131, and Acker v. White, 25th Wendell, 614.

In further support of this position we refer the Court to the case of McRea v. McLean, 3 Porter, 138.

That portion of the argument of respondent's counsel (in favor of the position that the lien is gone upon the execution of the replevin bond) which is drawn from our attachment law, is exceedingly lame and unfortunate.

It is true, that under our attachment law, upon the execution of certain bonds by the defendant in attachment, the law provides that the property shall be released from the attachment. This provision of the attachment law is founded upon the same principle which controlled the decision of Bradyll v. Ball, Waglam v. Cowperthwaite, and other cases cited by respondent's counsel, in which the lien was held to be discharged upon the execution of the replevin bond, to wit: that the defendant in attachment is the general and real owner of the goods. In suits by attachment there is no controversy as to the ownership of the attached property; and therefore, upon giving other and adequate security for the payment of the debt, the goods attached are released—the only question being whether the defendant is or not indebted to the plaintiff.

But in the action of replevin an entirely different issue is presented—the title to, or the right to the possession of personal property—and the whole object of our statute in relation to the claim and delivery of personal property is to retain the control of it, that upon the determination of the suit the rightful owner may be placed in possession. While the object of an attachment is simply to secure the payment of a debt, which object is as well or better obtained by a deposit of money in the Court, the action of replevin is more in the nature of proceedings in rem, the chief object being the delivery of the property itself to the rightful owner, and only looks to the alternative of payment of its value when such delivery cannot possibly be made.

Hunt v. Robinson.

---

Respondent's counsel attempts to draw a distinction between the bond given in this case, and the bonds under consideration, in the cases relied upon by us, and says that two kinds of bonds have obtained in different States. One, a bond dissolving the attachment, and conditioned for the payment of such judgment as shall be recovered in the suit. The other, a bond variously styled a delivery, forthcoming or replevin bond, conditioned for the redelivery of the property to satisfy the execution, or more generally in the alternative, to redeliver the property or to pay the judgment.

In Drake on Attachment, we find that chap. 13th treats exclusively of these two kinds of bonds. He says: "In many of the States provisions exist, authorizing the attachment to be dissolved, upon the defendant giving bond, with approved security, for the payment of such judgment as may be recovered in the attachment suit" (Section 290.) This bond does not provide for a return of the property, but that the sureties will pay the judgment; and in section 297 he says "the obligation of this bond cannot be discharged by a surrender of the property attached," and therefore it is that the execution of such a bond dissolves the attachment. This is the kind of bond provided for in our statute, in cases of attachment—"that the sureties will on demand pay to the plaintiff the amount of judgment, &c.," not that they will return the property or pay the judgment. (Secs. 136, 137, Practice Act) Drake on Attachment, secs. 299, 303.

J. P. Treadwell for Respondent.

Property attached and replevied out of the hands of the officer, by a third person having no property in it, remains, after so replevied, liable to be seized on subsequent executions against the defendant in each attachment, he being owner thereof before forfeiture of the replevin bond; and in such case, the lien of the attachment on the property was discharged, when it was taken out of the hands of the officer on the writ of replevin.

The process of mesne attachment, as security for final judgment, is unknown to the common law. It is a new statute remedy and is to be strictly construed. The lien of an attachment has just the extent given to it by the statute providing for it, and no other, and cannot be extended to cases not provided for by the Act. 1 Cal. 163; 3 Cal. 365; 2 Cal. 24; 15 Mass. 205. The extent and duration of the lien in this State depend then on our own statute, to be strictly construed, and are not helped by any general principles.

Our statute provides that "personal property capable of manual delivery shall be attached by taking it into custody;" Prac. Act, sec. 125; and this is usually required whenever mesne attachments are allowed. And the attachment can be preserved only by keeping possession—must be actual, though it need not be the hand of the officer himself. He may substitute a third person to be his custodian, servant or bailee, to keep this custody for him.

The attachment on property delivered to him, is preserved only so long as the bailee keeps the actual custody; for if the bailee permit the goods to go back into the hands of the defendant in the attachment, as is usually the case, and the custody thereby be lost, the lien of the attachment is lost and the goods become liable to a fresh attachment, or seizure at the suit of another creditor of the owner. Drake on Attachment, secs. 315, 328; 14 Mass. 190.

But a means is provided by statute everywhere, where mesne attachments are allowed, for the defendant to regain the possession of his goods, on giving security, without waiting final judgment. One of two different courses of public policy is adopted in providing for this in the statutes of each State: either,

1. A bond dissolving the attachment, and conditioned for the payment of the amount of such judgment as shall be recovered in the attachment suit; or,

2. A bond variously styled a delivery, forthcoming, or replevin bond, conditioned for the redelivery of the property to the officer to satisfy the execution, or when the Court may direct; sometimes in the alternative to redeliver the property or pay the judgment in the attachment suit. And it is also given to enable an execution debtor to retain possession of his property levied upon until the day of sale;

---

the condition being in such case for the redelivery to the officer at the time and place of sale. A bond of the first description is provided for by the statutes of California, Maine, Massachusetts, New York, Louisiana, &c.; of the latter description, on the other hand, by the statutes of Alabama, Missouri, Virginia, &c. In each case the goods attached are released from custody; in the first, the attachment is released; in the latter, the custody only for the goods levied on or attached, the lien of the attachment usually continuing. But this difference depends, not on the difference in the words of the conditions of the bond, but upon the intent and object of the statute in each case in providing for the proceeding.

Only one of these two different courses of statute policy pertains in any one State; and there can be no mistaking which California has adopted. A defendant may apply for "the discharge of the attachment on filing an undertaking to pay the judgment;" and "if the application be granted, all the property attached shall be released from the attachment and delivered to the defendant." Laws, C. 543, sec. 136.

It will only be necessary to show that we are not mistaken in the character of the decisions so cited and relied on by the other side. The opinion of the majority of the Court in M'Rea v. M'Lean, 3 Port. 138, is: "That the giving a replevin bond under the attachment law of Alabama does not discharge the lien first acquired under the attachment;" and this is there put on the ground that "there is no difference in principle between the Act of 1818, under which the case arose, and the Act of 1833, which goes farther, and directs the Sheriff to suffer the property attached to remain in the possession and at the risk of the defendant." The other determinations in that Court relied upon are of the same character; but the case, 6 Alabama, 45, had decided the same point differently. The case of Lord v. Ramsey, 3 Mun. 417, was merely constructive of the intent of the statute of Virginia, in providing that property levied on might be retained by the owner, on giving bond for its forthcoming on the day of sale. Evans v. King, 7 Mo. R. 413.

The decision in Hagan v. Lucas, 10 Pet. 400, relied upon by appellants, was upon a statute of Alabama, and governed by the above noticed case of M'Rea v. M'Lean, the case, 3 Mun. 417, being cited in aid. The Court says: "In a late case (3 Pet. 138) the Supreme Court of Alabama decided the same question which is made on this bond, on a bond given for the delivery of property under the attachment law of that State. They decided that the giving of the bond did not release the goods from the lien of the attachment. A contrary decision had been given by the Court in a similar case; but on further examination, and more mature reflection, two of the three Judges made the above decision. This adjudication being made on the construction of a statutory proceeding, and by the Supreme Court of the State, forms a rule for the decision of this Court." "In fact, the bond under the Alabama statute is substantially a forthcoming (and not a replevin) bond." "The object of the Legislature in requiring this bond was to insure the safe-keeping and faithful return of the property to the Sheriff, should its return be required." The cases in 12 Sunder and M. and 6 Ala. 45, were also under the same statute.

Hunt v. Robinson.

---

The decisions are wholly inapplicable for the appellants. Admitting that they are the true expositions of the several statutes upon which, and in accordance with the policy of the States where they were made; yet they are of no weight against the corresponding provisions of our own law for the delivery of attached property to the defendant, that the attachment "shall be discharged."

It is nowhere contemplated by — the legislation of Alabama and Missouri finds no favor in — our statutes, that the lien of an attachment in any case survives a moment after the property passes by any means whatever out of the custody of the attaching officer. The contrary is everywhere implied.

If the levy of Mills and others be sustained, Treadwell and Argenti are sustained in this resort to the replevin bond against those who have enabled the property to be taken from the hands of the officer on a false claim; if it be decided that the lien of the first attachment continued after and must be pursued, then Mills and others have been successfully imposed upon by a secret lien or mortgage.

Dormant executions have ever been rigorously proscribed, and the priorities of their liens denied by the Courts as constructively fraudulent by mere delay, even where there is no concert or fraudulent intent. Kellogg v. Griffin, 17 J. R. 277; Knower v. Barnard, 5 Hill, 377; Kimball v. Mungor, 2 Hill, 364; Rice v. Serjeant, 7 Modern, 37.

It seems adjudged so early as 7 H. 4, (28) that where goods lawfully distrained for rent, and replevied, are seized and sold under execution against the plaintiff, this is a sufficient answer to call on the defendant to gager deliverance. Vid. Vine, 18, p. 588, (H.) Gager on Withernam.

Bradyll v. Ball, 1 Brown's Ch. R., 427, a leading case on the point now pursued, was decided on the unanimous opinion of the King's Bench, upon much consideration, and after argument by eminent counsel. The goods of a tenant were distrained for rent; he replevied them, giving a replevin bond, and pending the replevin suit he became a bankrupt, and the goods passed into the hands of his assignee. The landlord, the defendant, afterwards recovered a judgment in the replevin suit for a return of the goods. The goods had been sold by the assignee; and the landlord now brought a suit in equity against him, insisting that he retained a lien upon the goods by the distress after they were replevied, and when they went into the hands of the assignee, and had an equitable lien for a return, or the payment of the value of them out of the assets of the bankrupt. The Court of Chancery decided that there was no lien in equity if not at law, and directed an action at law against the assignee for money had and received to be brought, retaining the bill. The suit was brought accordingly; and the King's Bench were unanimously of opinion that the plaintiff had no lien upon the goods after they were delivered upon the writ of replevin, and that he was left to his remedy upon the replevin bond; and upon this the bill was dismissed.

"If the landlord distrain and the tenant replevy the goods, and afterwards becomes bankrupt, and the goods are sold by the assignees, and the defendant in replevin afterwards have judgment for a return, his only remedy is on the replevin bond, for he has no lien on the goods in the hands of the vendee." Brady on Distresses, p. 123; cites Cooke R. 219, 220; Waglam v. Cowperthwaite, 2 Dal. 68.

In Fry v. Leeper, 2 Dal. 131, this last decision is relied on; and the same Court decides: "The lien on the goods is discharged by the security given to the Sheriff; and as soon as they are delivered back to the plaintiff in replevin they are open to execution or distress." Buel v. Davenport, 1 Root R. 261.

Hunt v. Robinson.

In Acker v. White, 25 Wend. 614, it is said: "The replevin puts no end to the lien. * * The bond is substituted for the goods. * * Although the lien of the execution is gone, according to the cases cited, (1 Br. R. 427; 2 Dal. 68) it is because the bond is regarded as an equivalent security for satisfaction of the judgment to the extent of the value of the goods."

These decisions are stated and acquiesced in, though not the precise point before the Court, in Burckle v. Luce, 1 Comstock, 163; and 6 Hill, 557.

The opinion in this case was rendered at the October Term, 1857. Subsequently a reargument was had, and at the July Term, 1858, the Court refused to recede from its former opinion.

BURNETT, J., after stating the facts, delivered the opinion of the Court — FIELD, J., concurring.

The property having been attached as the property of David Jones by the Sheriff, the questions arising in this case are different, in some respects, from those arising in ordinary actions of replevin. In ordinary cases the property is not in the custody of the law by virtue of process, but in the possession of one of the claimants, each party claiming in his own right. In this case the Sheriff did not claim the property in his personal, but in his official capacity. He traced his only right to the property through Treadwell's attachment.

In the case of Brady v. Ball, 1 Brown's Ch. R. 427, it was held that where goods had been taken in distress for rent, and replevied by the tenant, the defendant in the suit and the owner of the goods, the distrainer had no lien on the goods, but was left to his remedy on the replevin bond. The decision was concurred in by the unanimous opinion of the Court of King's Bench.

So in the case of Waglam v. Cowperthwaite, 2 Dallas, 68, it was held by the Philadelphia Court of Common Pleas that the landlord, after the goods had been replevied by the tenant, had no lien upon them, but the sureties upon the replevin bonds were substituted in the place of the goods. The same point was held in a subsequent case, page 131.

Hunt v. Robinson.

In the case of Acker v. White, 25 Wend. 614, it appeared that Hillyer, as Sheriff, had levied upon certain goods as the property of Jessup, the defendant in the execution. White claimed the property as his own, and sued out a writ of replevin, executed the necessary replevin bond, and the property was delivered by the Coroner to White, who permitted Jessup to continue in the possession of it. Afterwards Acker, as Sheriff, levied upon the same goods under another execution against Jessup. White then sued Acker, and it was held that White had the right to the property. The Court decided that the lien of Hillyer's execution was lost, by the replevin suit in the case of White v. Hillyer; but that White possessed all the interest that Hillyer had under the execution, and if that was sufficient to defeat the subsequent levy by Acker, then it must equally inure to the benefit of White. The plaintiff in replevin, White, by virtue of replevin bond, was substituted to the rights of Hillyer, the Sheriff.

It will be perceived that the facts of that case are very similar to the circumstances of the case now under consideration. They are substantially the same, except in one important respect. In the case from Wendell the second levy was made against the will of the claimant in replevin, while in the present case, the levy of the second class of executions was made with the consent of the claimant.

If then, the lien of Treadwell's attachment was lost by the replevin suit of Mrs. Jones against the Sheriff, then she had the right to permit the second levy, and the Sheriff must seek his remedy upon the replevin bond. It must be conceded that this case of Acker v. White is a direct authority for the plaintiff, if it be admitted that the laws of New York were then substantially the same as the provisions of our Practice Act.

But in the subsequent case of Burckle v. Luce, (1 Com., 163) the Court of Appeals seem to have virtually overruled the decision in the case of Acker v. White. At least it would seem clear, that in the case of Burckle v. Luce, the Court lays down principles, that if legitimately applied, must overrule the position that the lien of the writ was lost by virtue of the undertaking in replevin.

Hunt v. Robinson.

---

The defendant, Luce, as Deputy Sheriff, levied upon certain property under an execution against Burckle. Mrs. Leitz claimed it, and brought replevin and obtained possession of the property. Before the replevin suit was finally determined, Mrs. Leitz died, leaving a will appointing the plaintiff as her executor. It was held that the suit abated by the death of Mrs. Leitz, and the lien of the execution revived.

"In my opinion," says Jewett, C. J., "the proceedings upon the writ of replevin conferred upon Mrs. Leitz a mere temporary right of possession, which expired with the abatement of the suit by her death, and that, when that event occurred, the lien of the execution revived: especially as the rights of no third person had intervened, under her, and the defendant was at liberty to retake the property by virtue of his former levy."

The learned Chief Justice refers to and approves of the opinion in the case of Lockwood v. Perry (9 Metcalf, 440).

In that case it appeared that Lockwood was in possession of two colts, which he claimed as his property. Barnes also claimed them, and brought replevin, and gained possession of the property. Lockwood ultimately prevailed in the replevin suit; but while it was pending, Barnes sold the colts to Perry. Lockwood brought suit against Perry and recovered the property, as it was held that Perry acquired no property by his purchase from Barnes, who had no title himself; and in the opinion of the Court it is said:

"It is doubtless true that the plaintiff in replevin has, by virtue of his writ, acquired the right of possession pending the action of replevin, and that the real owner cannot lawfully disturb that right during the pendency of that action, nor institute an action against a third person who may become possessed of the goods. And this is precisely the extent of the right exercised by force of a writ of replevin."

In the case of McRea & Augustin v. McLean (3 Porter, Ala. R. 138) the authorities were very fully considered. Watson attached certain slaves, the property of Thomas J. Augustin, and he replevied the property by giving the usual bond, with the plaintiffs as sureties, conditioned for the return of the goods, or the payment of any judgment rendered in the case. Suit was brought upon the bond, and the defendants in the Court below pleaded that while the Sheriff held the said slaves in his possession, at the suit of sundry other creditors against said Thomas J. Augustin, commenced by attachment, the defendants requested and notified the Sheriff to retain the slaves in his custody under the attachment of Watson, and that the Sheriff afterwards delivered the slaves to one Josiah Haice, who eluded and removed them from the state." The case was twice argued before the Supreme Court of Alabama, and it was finally held that the sureties were discharged, upon the ground that the giving of the attachment bond did not destroy the lien of the writ of attachment, and therefore, the Sheriff was bound to have retained the slaves under Watson's attachment. The Judge who delivered the opinion of the Court holds this language:

"That the property is to be at the risk of the debtor and his sureties pending the suit, I admit. That they should then have the privilege of returning it, the bond expressly stipulates; and that no principle of law, which will permit any other disposition of it, inconsistent with the lien, is to be tolerated, I do not hesitate to maintain."

The Chief Justice dissented from this opinion, but the principle was afterwards affirmed in the case of Rives & Owen v. Wilbame, 6 Ala. R. 45.

In the case of Evans v. King (7 Mo. R. 411) it was held, that where property of a defendant, attached in the hands of a third party, is retained by that person by giving bond and security for the forthcoming of the property, the attachment continues to be a lien on the property.

In the case of Hagan v. Lucas, 10 Peters, 400, it appears that several executions against Bynum & McDade were levied by the Sheriff upon certain slaves, on the 10th of October, 1833, and that Lucas claimed the property as his own, and gave bond and security to the Sheriff, for the forthcoming of the slaves if they should be found subject to the executions, and for all costs and charges for the delay, &c. The slaves were then delivered to Lucas, and the proceedings were returned to the Circuit Court of Montgomery county, Alabama.

---

An execution was afterwards issued against Bynum & McDade, upon a judgment against them in the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of Alabama, and levied upon the same slaves, still in the possession of Lucas, on the 19th of February, 1834. It was held by the Supreme Court of the United States, that the lien under the first execution continued, and that the property was still in the custody of the law, and not subject to a second levy, to the prejudice of the first. Mr. Justice McLean, in delivering the opinion of the Court, said: "On giving the bond the property is placed in the possession of the claimant. His custody is the custody of the Sheriff. The property is not withdrawn from the custody of the law. In the hands of the claimant, under the bond of its delivery to the Sheriff, the property is as far from the reach of other process as it would have been in the hands of the Sheriff."

In this case, it is true, the Court places its decision upon two grounds: 1st, upon its own view of the law; 2d, upon the ground that the construction of a statute of a State by the Supreme Court thereof forms a rule of decision for the Federal Courts.

The result of the authorities is very accurately stated by Mr. Drake, in his late work on Attachments, sections 290, 299, 303.

"In many of the States," he says, "provisions exist, authorizing an attachment to be dissolved, upon the defendant giving bond, with approved security, for payment of such judgment as may be recovered in the attachment suit."

Such, in substance is the bond required by the 137th section of the Practice Act. This is the bond to be given by the defendant in the attachment suit, not by the claimant of the property.

The author then treats of another class of bonds, and says, "this description is variously styled delivery, forthcoming or replevin bond. It is usually conditioned for the delivery of the property to the officer, either to satisfy the execution which the plaintiff may obtain in the cause, or when and where the Court may direct. Sometimes the alternative is embraced, of the delivery of the property or the satisfaction of the judgment recovered in the action."

In speaking of this description of bond, he says: "It differs, too, from that given for dissolving an attachment, in that it does not discharge the lien of the attachment, since the very object of the bond is to insure the faithful return of the property, if its return should be required."

Hunt v. Robinson.

It will be readily seen that this description of bonds, and the bond required in replevin suits prosecuted in this State, are substantially the same; the condition of the latter being "for the prosecution of the action, for a return of the property if return thereof be adjudged, and for the payment of such sums as may from any cause be recovered." The judgment in a replevin suit follows the verdict of the jury and the condition of the undertaking, and is in the alternative "for the possession of the property, or the value thereof in case a delivery cannot be had, and damages for the detention. Either party may or may not, claim damages for the detention of the property." Sections 177, 200. The execution on the judgment commands the Sheriff, first, to deliver the possession of the property, if it can be found, and if not, then to make the value of the property out of the personal and real property of the party against whom the judgment is given. Sec. 210.

That the effect of a replevin bond under our statute is not to divest either the title or the lien of the other party, would seem to be clear. The contest itself is about specific personal property. The recovery of the thing itself, and not damages in lieu thereof, is the primary object of the suit. The value is recovered only as an alternative, when delivery of the specific property cannot be had. The property is required to be particularly described in the execution.

Now, if the title could be divested by the delivery of the replevin bond, the primary object of the suit could be defeated. The unsuccessful party could always make his election to keep the property or pay the value. But this advantage was never intended to be given by the statute, to the party confessedly in the wrong.

The effect of the replevin bond is simply to give the party the possession of the property pending the litigation. The title is not changed. No sale made by the party in possession, and who afterwards turns out to have no right to the property, can convey any title to the purchaser. And if the title is not changed, as was held in the cases already cited, especially in that of Lockwood v. Perry, neither could the lien be affected in any way. The language of our statute is very strong. The Sheriff is commanded to deliver the possession of the property particularly described in the execution, and if a delivery cannot be had, then to make the assessed value. There is no reservation anywhere in favor of innocent purchasers. The property remains in the custody of the law, and all parties must take notice. It is certain that the unsuccessful party may deliver the property and discharge himself from so much of the judgment as is made up by the assessed value. The very reason why he may do this, is because the suit is about that specific property, and because the title is not affected by the replevin bond. But where property attached is released upon the bond of the defendant, he cannot discharge himself, or his sureties, by a delivery to the Sheriff of the same property, for the reason that the lien is gone. In the case of Nickerson v. Chatterton et al., 7 Cal. 568, we held that "when the plaintiff or defendant in the original suit obtains judgment for the delivery of the property, or if it cannot be found, then for its value, the title in the property vests in the party against whom the judgment is given, subject to the right of the successful party, to take it in discharge of so much of the judgment as is made up by the assessed value of the property."

If the title did not vest in the unsuccessful party until the judgment in the replevin suit, of course it did not vest in him upon the delivery of the replevin bond. And although the title vests upon the rendition of the judgment, the property is still subject to be taken by the successful party, until he makes his election to sue upon the undertaking in replevin. He may sue without issuing execution. But at any time before suit be brought, the successful party may take the property if to be found, and so too, the unsuccessful party may return it.

If the theory that the lien of the attachment is lost by virtue of the undertaking in replevin be taken as true, then it follows that the same property remains liable to seizure under any subsequent process against the same defendant. The claimant and his sureties, who have stipulated for the return of the property, would then be left to pay the judgment in the replevin suit, while, at the same time, they would not get the property to compensate them for the judgment. This would certainly place the claimant of property seized by an officer in a worse condition than that of an ordinary trespasser. When A takes the property of B, and the latter obtains judgment for the value of the property, if A pays the judgment he is entitled to the property. The law gives him the property for the judgment. But if the theory of the plaintiff be true, the unfortunate claimant must pay the judgment, and still lose the property. In claiming the property he assumes a double responsibility; while the defendant in the attachment or execution may be fortunate enough to obtain double the value of the property seized by the officer. In reference to such a theory Mr. Justice McLean, in the case of Hagan v. Lucas, already referred to, makes these forcible remarks:

“If the property be liable to execution, a levy must always produce a forfeiture of the condition of the bond; for a levy takes the property out of the possession of the claimant, and renders the performance of this bond impossible. Can a result so repugnant to equity and propriety as this be sustained? Is the law so inconsistent as to authorize the means by which the discharge of a legal obligation is defeated, and at the same time exact a penalty for the forfeiture? This would indeed be a reproach to the law and to justice.”

But the theory that the possession obtained by virtue of the writ of replevin is only temporary, and does not divest the title or discharge the lien, is the most logical, and at the same time, the most just to all parties. The party ultimately entitled to the property has a double security; while the party who replevies it does not incur the extraordinary risk of having to pay the judgment and also to lose the property. And the defendant, in the attachment or execution, has no opportunity to obtain two prices for his property.

If these views be correct, the lien of the attachment continued, and when the same property came again into the hands of the Sheriff, the condition of the replevin bond, to return the property, was fulfilled. The property was then liable to a second levy, but such second levy was subject to the levy under the prior attachment.

For these reasons the judgment of the Court below is reversed, and that Court will enter up judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the costs of the replevin suit, and also for costs in this suit, and the defendants will be entitled to the costs of this appeal.

A Justice of the Peace has the right to allow a complaint to be amended in all respects, so that the case may be determined on its merits; and this, whether the defect be in the statement of jurisdiction or any other fact. The greatest liberality and indulgence should be extended in all such applications.

APPEAL from the County Court of El Dorado County.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion of the Court.

Hall & McKune for Appellant.

T. H. Williams for Respondents.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., and FIELD, J., concurring.

This case, which comes here on appeal from the judgment of the County Court of El Dorado, to which Court it had been taken from a judgment of a Justice of the Peace, must be dismissed, for want of jurisdiction. It does not appear, from the papers, that the value of the subject of the controversy, exclusive or inclusive of costs, was two hundred dollars. The amendment of the complaint in the Justice's Court shows only that the plaintiff did not think the value of the claims was over two hundred dollars. But how much less than that sum, or what the real value, is not shown. But for this defect we should have felt compelled to reverse the judgment of the County Court, dismissing the proceeding for want of jurisdiction in the Justice. We think the Justice has the right to allow the complaint to be amended in all respects, so that the case may be determined on its substantial merits; and this, whether the defect be in the statement of jurisdictional or any other facts. The greatest liberality and indulgence should be extended in all such applications.

But we cannot now remedy this error of the County Court.

Appeal dismissed.

Bours v. Zachariah and Wife.

BOURS et al. v. ZACHARIAH AND WIFE.

The certificate of acknowledgment of a Notary Public to a deed is not an act in pais, which he may exercise by virtue of his office at any time while in office. A Notary derives his power to take and certify acknowledgments to deeds from the statute. He acts as under a special commission for that particular case — clothed with limited statutory power. He is to take the acknowledgment, and certify it as part of the same transaction. After taking the acknowledgment, and making and delivering the return, his functions cease, and he is discharged from all further authority, and cannot alter or amend his certificate.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifth Judicial District, County of San Joaquin.

This was a cross action to a bill to foreclose a mortgage. The facts are as follows:

The defendants, Zachariah and wife, executed and delivered to the plaintiffs two separate promissory notes, and two mortgages of different date to secure the payment of the notes. The first mortgage was to secure the payment of $1,000, and the second of $2,000. On the twelfth day of July, 1854, the first mortgage was acknowledged before a Notary Public, who entered the following certificate thereon:

"STATE OF CALIFORNIA, }
County of San Joaquin. }

"On this twelfth day of July, A. D. 1854, before me, came J. Zachariah, and M. A. Zachariah, his wife, to me known to be the individuals described in and who executed the within instrument, and acknowledged that they executed the same of their own free act and deed, and for the purposes therein mentioned; and M. A. Zachariah, being examined by me, after being made acquainted with the contents of this instrument, did acknowledge to me that she executed the same freely and voluntarily, and that she does not now wish to retract the execution of the same.

[L. s.] In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal, the day and year above written.

"J. G. JENKINS, Notary Public,

"San Joaquin County."

---

Bours v. Zachariah and Wife.

---

After the endorsement of this certificate on the mortgage, it was delivered by the Notary to the plaintiffs, who had the same recorded on the eighteenth day of July following. Subsequently, the plaintiffs becoming satisfied that the certificate of acknowledgment was defective, again presented the mortgage to the Notary, who endorsed a second certificate thereon in the form prescribed by law, which was also recorded on the fourteenth day of December, 1854.

The second mortgage was acknowledged before another Notary, on the twenty-third day of August, 1854, and he endorsed thereon the following certificate:

“ STATE OF CALIFORNIA, }
County of San Joaquin. }

“ On this twenty-third day of August, A. D. 1854, before me, came J. Zachariah and M. A. Zachariah, to me known to be the individuals described in and who executed the within instrument, and acknowledged that they executed the same of their own free act and deed, and for the purposes therein mentioned.

[L. s.] In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal, the day and year above written.

“ B. G. WIER, Notary Public.”

This mortgage was also delivered to the plaintiffs, and they had the same recorded. After it was recorded, at the request of the plaintiffs, the Notary endorsed a second certificate thereon, which was also recorded.

The defendants set up a right of homestead in a portion of the mortgaged premises, insisting that the original certificate of acknowledgment could not be amended nunc pro tunc. The defendants had judgment, and the plaintiffs appealed.

The only question in this case is, whether a Notary Public or other officer, taking the acknowledgment of a married woman, and making an erroneous certificate of such acknowledgment, could be permitted, during his continuance in office, but after the deed has passed from his possession, to correct the mistake and make the certificate conform to the facts as they originally existed.

Bours v. Zachariah and Wife.

---

A. C. Baine for Appellants.

On behalf of the appellants, we insist that the Notaries who took the acknowledgment of Mrs. Zachariah had the right to correct their certificates of her acknowledgment, so as to make them conform to the facts; and that such correction and amendment was done and made by the endorsement of the other certificates on the mortgages, by the Notaries, during their term of office.

The certificate of acknowledgment of a conveyance is an act "in pais," which may be corrected or amended by the officer who made it, at any time during the term of his office. (Jordan v. Corey, 2 Carter, Ind. R. 385; Elwood v. Block, 13 Barb. Sup. C. Rep. 50; and see 3 S. & M. Rep. 364.)

The case of Jordan v. Corey drew in question the validity of a deed, in the execution of which three married women had joined with their husbands in conveying lands in which the wives had an interest by descent. The certificate was defective in not stating that the wives were examined by the officer without the hearing of their husbands. Upon the question whether the officer who took the acknowledgment should be permitted to amend the certificate, on the trial in the Court below, the Court, by Judge Blackford, says: "We think the officers had the right, and indeed, that it was their duty to correct at any time any mistake in their certificate." The certificate of the officer is but a written statement of his official acts in taking the acknowledgment, which our statute requires the officer to make on, or attach to the instrument; but our statute is not imperative as to the time when it must be done. Nor does the certificate, when made, become matter of record and conclusive, but simply "prima facie" evidence of the facts therein stated. (Comp. Laws of Cal., page 518, sec. 31.)

Why may not a mistake in this certificate be corrected by the officer who made it, during his term of office, as well as the certificate of a Sheriff of his official acts after they have been endorsed by him?

The cases relied on in the Court below, by the respondents, are distinguishable from this. The decision in Elliott v. Piersoll, 1 Peters R. 338, was controlled by a statute of Virginia, which the Court said "was in force in Kentucky," and which required in express terms a record of her acknowledgment to make a deed binding upon a feme

Bours v. Zachariah and Wife.

---

covert and her heirs. The acknowledgment, certificate and recording became part and parcel of the instrument, and necessary to its validity as a deed between the parties thereto. But see Tucker's Commentaries, vol. 1, page 268, where it is said that "that statute refers to acknowledgments taken in open Court, and which were omitted to be entered on the record of proceedings, and not to acknowledgments before Justices 'in pais.'"

So with the cases to be found in the Connecticut Reports, of which the case of Pendleton v. Burton is a leading one: in it the Court says: "It is provided by statute that no deal shall be accounted complete in law to convey real estate, but such as is written, witnessed, acknowledged and recorded; the acknowledgment to be recorded must be in writing, and such is the invariable practice." In these cases as in Elliott v. Piersoll, the decision turns upon the statutory provision, making it essential to the validity of an instrument as a conveyance between the parties to it, that it should be acknowledged and recorded. The due recordation (which could not be legally done without a proper certificate) of the instrument being the last of a series of acts necessary to constitute the deed, must have the assent of the grantor to it, as much as any other one of the acts constituting the deed. But could it be said, if the Recorder, in endorsing his certificate of record on such a deed, should make a mistake, that the Recorder could not correct it? We apprehend not.

Under our statute, the recording of a deed is not essential to its validity in any case, as between the parties. (Comp. Laws of Cal. p. 516; sec. 19, p. 517; sec. 24; Hastings v. The City of Benicia, 5 Cal. R. 315.)

There is no obligation resting on the mortgagee to have his mortgage recorded. (Rose v. Munie, 4 Cal. R. 173.) The facts — that the recording of the mortgages in this case is not essential to their validity between the parties, and that the mortgagees were under no obligation to record their mortgages — distinguish this case from Elliott v. Piersoll and the cases in the Connecticut Reports. And the act of spreading the mortgages upon the book of records in the Recorder's office of the county was nugatory, and had no effect one way or the other upon the rights or liabilities of the parties thereto; nor upon the right—yea, the duty—of the Notaries to correct the mistake they made in their certificates of their official acts, in taking the acknowledgment of Mrs. M. A. Zachariah. These corrections were made in the other certificates endorsed on the mortgages by the officers who made the first, during the term of their office; and the facts therein stated not being contradicted by any evidence adduced on the part of the respondents, are proof of the execution and due acknowledgment of the mortgages in question by Mrs. M. A. Zachariah.

Bours v. Zachariah and Wife.

---

There is no provision in that statute requiring the acknowledgment to be certified or the mortgage to be recorded, to defeat this homestead exemption right. The Court can require no other act to give validity to the wife's waiver of her exemption right than the statute specifies. She conveyed no title by the mortgages, for she had none in the land, and claims none except under the Homestead Act. Section 15 of article 10 of the Constitution only authorizes the exemption from forced sale of the homestead and other property. It does not authorize the change of title of property by legislative enactment. Hence, Mrs. Zachariah conveyed no title by the mortgages, but assented to the mortgages of her husband, and assented thereto in the manner required by statute to waive her exemption right, vis: by signing and duly acknowledging them separately and apart from her husband. Will the Court go beyond the statute, and impose the further condition, and say that the acknowledgment must be certified, and certified at the time, and that too beyond the power of the officer to correct a mistake that he might make in the certificate? and this, not to pass title to real estate from her, but merely her assent to the act of her husband.

The Appellants contend that the Notary had a right, and that it was his duty to correct the certificate after it had been recorded; and they cite and rely entirely on the case of Jordan v. Corey, 2 Carter Ind. Rep. 385, in support of said position.

It is therefore necessary to examine the case with some attention.

The nature of the action, the facts in the case, and the points decided, were all radically and essentially different from the case now before this Court.

Bours v. Zachariah and Wife.

---

It bears indeed but a slight analogy to this case; and the only point in which it does resemble it, is more in the nature of a collateral issue, than in the substance of the action.

The action was not for the foreclosure of a mortgage, but was assumpsit on a promissory note. The note had been given for purchase money of land, with covenants of warranty.

The defense set up was, that the title to three-tenths of the land bought was defective, and therefore the note was without consideration, pro tanto.

The question about the validity of the conveyance of the married women, and the regularity of the acknowledgment, and the power of the Notary to amend the certificate, all came up collaterally.

The married women, themselves, were not before the Court, claiming the property and relying on the defective execution and acknowledgments and certificate.

It does not appear that there had been any eviction of defendants, and the Court might, perhaps equitably, have allowed an amendment in order to make the consideration for the note free from the difficulty set up.

But in this State, and by the rulings of this Court, no such defense could have been set up or allowed. No question about the validity of the acknowledgment could have been made, as long as the party remained in possession.

In Jackson v. Norton, 5 Cal. Rep. 262, it was held that the promise to pay and the warranty were independent covenants, and that until an eviction, the purchaser could not resist the payment of the purchase money; nor could he claim a pro rata deduction for a failure of title for part of the land sold.

It is now contended that if this case could be considered an authority on the question, that in one material respect it supports and sustains the case of respondents. In this respect it agrees with the decisions of other Courts.

In all other respects it is unsupported by any authority; it is inconsistent with, and repugnant to itself; it totally misapplies and perverts the case of Elliott v. Piersoll, which is cited to sustain it, and the principal points decided have been ruled directly contrary, not only by some of the most respectable of the State Courts, but by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Bours v. Zachariah and Wife.

---

Let us now analyze this case of Jordan v. Corey more minutely:

1st. There was no proof that the deeds had ever been recorded; and from the language of the case as reported, and the reasoning of the Court in rendering its decision, it would seem that they had not been recorded at the time of trial; nor is the opinion of the Court consistent with a different hypothesis. The plaintiff offered to prove at the trial that the acknowledgments were taken correctly in point of fact, but that, by a mistake, the officer had omitted to certify it correctly.

In the case now before the Court, there was no proof of any mistake, and no motion made at the trial to be allowed to amend the certificate.

The case of Jordan v. Corey was reversed solely on the ground that proof of a mistake should have been received, and the officer allowed to amend the certificate nunc pro tunc.

In this case there is no such error alleged, and there is no such ground of reversal.

In Jordan v. Corey it was not pretended that the officer had power to affix a new certificate at the request of the grantee; but only that he might amend the old one, on proving, in open Court, that there was a mistake in it.

In this case the appellants rely entirely on the second certificate, made six months after the mortgages had been recorded, to contradict the first certificate, made at the time of acknowledgment and before the recording thereof.

2d. The case of Jordan v. Corey, as far as it is a sound authority, is in favor of the respondents. The Court, on page 387, says:

"There can be no doubt that the certificate of the acknowledgment of a married woman as to her execution of a deed, must show by the facts stated in it, that she had been examined in the manner prescribed by the statute, or the deed as to her will not be valid. The certificates in question are defective for not showing that the married women were examined without the hearing of their husbands."

According to this, both the acknowledgment and certificate are a necessary part of the deed, and without which the deed will not be valid. The certificate was defective in one point, precisely as this certificate is, and the Court held, that as to the wife the conveyance would be void.

---

Bours v. Zachariah and Wife.

---

3d. The case of Jordan v. Corey is inconsistent and repugnant to itself. Whilst it decides that the certificate itself must show all the facts, it also holds that all the facts may be proven by parol evidence. Now, if one material fact, without which the certificate would be invalid, can be shown by parol evidence, why could not all the facts be made out in the same way?

The certificate in Jordan v. Corey did not state the material fact of an examination separate and apart from and without the hearing of the husband. The way the difficulty was gotten rid of was to allow the officer to prove that it was a mistake, and to correct it. If he could correct a mistake in this respect, he might in all other respects. He might, in fact, if there had been no certificate at all, have made out by parol evidence that there had been an acknowledgment, but that he had omitted or forgotten to certify the same.

Is not such a ruling in direct violation of the fundamental law of evidence, that written instruments cannot be altered by parol evidence? Is it not clearly manifest, that if a certificate to a formal written instrument can be altered by having words or sentences interpolated into it by showing a mistake, that this is allowing written evidence to be altered by parol evidence?

4th. The case of Jordan v. Corey is not supported by any authority, and is overwhelmed by opposing authority. In Elwood v. Klock, above cited, page 55, 13 Barb., (and a junior decision by two years) the Court says:

"I think the conveyance by a married woman can only become operative upon her private examination before a proper officer, duly certified by him; and that it cannot be established by parol evidence. A deed duly acknowledged may be read in evidence, without further evidence of its execution. But I apprehend, if the certificate omitted to state essential facts; as for instance, that the officer knew the grantor; that it could not be helped out by evidence of the fact omitted, so as to entitle the deed to be read in evidence in virtue of the certificate thus forfeited. The acknowledgment is a nullity unless properly certified."

Bours v. Zachariah and Wife.

---

The slightest examination of the case of Elliott v. Piersoll, 1 Pet. 328, will show that it is directly contrary to the doctrine laid down in Jordan v. Corey.

The Court says, page 341: "Had the Clerk the authority to alter the record of the certificate of the acknowledgment of the deed at any time after the record was made? We are of the opinion he had not."

But the Court, in the case of Jordan v. Corey, cited this case as an authority for saying he had. A more palpable and outrageous perversion of an authority cannot be found in all judicial annals than this.

The same doctrine was held by the Supreme Court of Connecticut in the case of Stanton v. Button, 2 Cow. 527.

The Court says: "A deed of land without a proper certificate of parties' acknowledgment, is inadmissible as evidence of title."

"An omission in the certificate cannot be supported by intendment or construction."

In the case of Pendleton v. Button, 3 Conn. 406, the Court says: "The acknowledgment of a deed must appear on the deed, and cannot be proved by parol evidence."

This is a leading case, and has been followed in numerous cases in the same Court. (See note at bottom of pages.)

Again, in the case of Hayden v. Westcott, 11 Conn. 129, the Court says: "The acknowledgment of the deed must appear on the deed; and no defect in the certificate can be helped by parol evidence."

The same doctrine has been held in numerous cases by the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania.

The case of Watson v. Bailey, 1 Binn. 470, is the leading case; Evans v. Commonwealth, 4 Sergeant & Rawle, 271; 6th Sergeant & Rawle, 48, Watson v. Mercer.

Another important case decided by the same Court is that of Jordan v. Jordan, 9 Serg. & R. 270.

This was a defective acknowledgment in the same point. As in this case, there was no separate examination of the wife; or if there was, the certificate of the magistrate did not show that fact. They offered at the trial to prove by the magistrate that there was such privy examination. The evidence was excluded at the trial, and held inadmissible.

---

On appeal, the Supreme Court says: "The Act directs the examination of the wife to be separate and apart from the husband; and that they were separate must appear on the face of the certificate, and not otherwise. I am, therefore, of opinion that the certificate of acknowledgment was defective. But it was attempted to supply the defect by parol evidence of the magistrate before whom the acknowledgment was made."

"The evidence was also rejected, and in my opinion with great propriety."

"There would be no certainty in titles if this kind of evidence was permitted."

The case of Elwood v. Klock, 13 Barbour, 50, cited by the appellants, contains no such doctrine as they contend for, but directly the contrary.

The case from the 3d Smed. & Marsh. 364, cited by appellants, was in respect to a notarial protest on a promissory note, and has not the most remote application to this case.

The next case relied on by appellants is that of Hastings v. City of Benicia, 5 Cal. Rep. 315. In this the rights of a married woman were not involved.

The case was first decided at the January Term, 1858 — Justice BURNETT delivering the opinion of the Court, and FIELD, J., concurring. The opinion of the Court at that term was to the effect, that where the rights of third parties had not attached, the officer making the certificate of acknowledgment might correct a mistake in his certificate at any time during his continuance in office. At the subsequent October Term a reargument was had, and the Court rendered the following opinion — BALDWIN, J., delivering the opinion of the Court — FIELD, J., concurring.

This controversy involves a lot of land claimed as a homestead by the wife, and the validity of which claim rests upon a single question raised by a single fact. The question is as to the power of a Notary

Public, who has taken the acknowledgment of the wife to a deed for land; made a certificate on the deed; and after the deed and certificate have passed from him and been recorded, to make and record a new certificate of acknowledgment—the first being fatally defective. The fact in connection with this principle is, that defendants, Zachariah and wife, made a paper, in form a mortgage, on a lot in Stockton, the homestead of these parties, to secure a debt due by Zachariah to the plaintiff below. This paper purports to have been acknowledged by the female defendant before one Weir, a Notary Public, about the time of its date; and a certificate of her acknowledgment is endorsed, by the officer, on the deed. But this certificate omits to state the fact that the wife was examined separately and apart from her husband and out of his hearing, and further, that in such examination she acknowledged that she executed the same freely and voluntarily, without fear or compulsion, or under undue influence of her husband, and that she did not wish to retract the execution of the same. Some six months afterwards a new certificate was made by the officer, and recorded.

It is not necessary to go into a review of the long list of cases which, in this State and elsewhere, hold the necessity of a compliance with all the substantial requirements of the Act regulating the manner of conveyances by married women, in order to give validity to such acts. The law, knowing the necessity of strictly guarding the wife from the influence of the husband, as indispensable to the existence of such a thing as a separate estate or a right of property in her, has, by a uniform and consistent policy, thrown safeguards around the acts of disposition of such estate, and exacted a strict respect to them. Our statute is explicit in this regard. The wife is protected from the influence of the husband and secured in the enjoyment of the freedom of her will, by the provision that she is to be examined by the officer apart from her husband, and that the officer shall state this fact in his certificate. It is contended, however, that this certificate may, when completed and recorded, and after it has left the hands of the officer, be altered or amended, or an entirely new certificate be made, and this, we presume—for we see no limitation to the principle—at any distance of time, at least, so long as he continues in office. The statute seems to contemplate but one certificate. It speaks of but one. That certificate is evidence for certain purposes; but what would be the effect if several certificates were allowed, some qualifying or contradicting the rest, might not be so easy to determine. If two could be given, why not a dozen?—if within six months, why not within six years? If the certificate amendatory of the former—why not in contradiction of it—denying all acknowledgment of the deed? If in respect to one class of deeds, why not to all? And what would this lead to, but the putting all land titles in the power of unscrupulous Notaries, or leaving them to the mercy of their memories? These certainly are serious questions. We should have some very strong reasons or weighty authorities to sustain a proposition out of which such results may grow. We have been furnished with only two cases which seem to approach the principle contended for by the appellants. This, itself, is no inconsiderable argument against the pretension. Very many controversies have grown out of the alleged defective acknowledgments, and most of these have been, perhaps, in consequence of misprision, or fault of the Notaries, or other officers certifying. Some of these have been hard cases upon purchasers. The rights of the wife have often, indeed, in most of the cases, been recognized and maintained. If the sense of the profession and the Bench had not been decidedly against the power of the officer to amend the certificate, it is very strange that the attempt had not been made to amend it; especially, as will be shown hereafter, as it has been frequently attempted to prove the facts omitted by parol; and that, too, by the evidence of the Notary. By how much speedier a process could all this have been effected, if a Notary's certificate could at once have been amended, or a new one made out.

Bours v. Zachariah and Wife.

The ground upon which the power in question is rested is, that the certificate of a Notary is an act, in pais, which he may exercise by virtue of his office, and at any time while in office; and that the amending of his acts is in pursuance of the same general authority which enables him to do them. But we think this is not correct. A Notary derives his power from the statute over these subjects. The special duty and authority of taking and certifying acknowledgments is given him. But he acts as an officer with a special authority for each particular case. He is, in other words, acting as under a special commission for that case—clothed with a limited statutory power. He is to take the acknowledgment, and certify it, as parts of the same transaction. After taking the acknowledgment and making and delivering the return, his functions cease, and he is discharged from all further authority. He has exhausted his whole power over the subject, as much as a special commissioner created for a particular purpose after the adjournment; or a Court, after the lapse of the term. If we were to look to analogies, we see nothing which upholds this pretension. If, as in some of the States, particular officers clothed with authority to take depositions, return them to Court, it would scarcely be contended they had the power, months afterwards, to amend them, or to make return of new facts not appearing on the return, when they closed the commission; nor could any other officer, except by virtue of some statutory power, after he had made return of his proceedings; nor officers charged with special inquisitions.

Bours v. Zachariah and Wife.

Elwood v. Block (13 Barb., S. C. R. 50) is a case not dissimilar to this, both in the facts and principles involved. Mrs. Elwood executed a quitclaim of the premises in dispute, but the acknowledgment was defective in the same respect as this mortgage. On the trial below, the defendant offered the Commissioner to prove — and he did — that he took the acknowledgment of Mrs. Elwood, and that the same was done in compliance with the provisions of the statute. The admissibility of this proof was the matter before the Court on appeal. The Court reviews the statutes of New York on this subject, and shows the various changes made in them. By the Act of 1771, it was provided that no estate of a femme covert should pass by her deed without a previous acknowledgment, made by her apart from her husband, and a certificate thereof purporting that she had been examined privately, endorsed on the deed, and signed by the officer, etc. The same provision was re-enacted in 1788, in 1801, and 1813. The Court says that, in the revision of the laws in 1830, the same provision was substantially re-enacted. That statute is given, which is almost identically the same as ours. It provides that no estate of a married woman shall pass by any conveyance not acknowledged as required by the Act; and that the officer who shall take acknowledgments shall endorse a certificate thereof, signed by himself, on the conveyance; and in such certificate shall set forth the matters therein before required to be done.

Bours v. Zachariah and Wife.

---

take the acknowledgment of femmes covert — the law being substantially the same as that of California as to the requisites of acknowledgments, etc. Some time afterwards, Elliott moved the County Court to amend the certificate endorsed on the deed, and for the deed and certificate, as amended, to be recorded — which motion was granted, and the new record made. The question of the validity of the deed to pass the estate of the wife arising on this state of facts, the Supreme Court of the United States, on appeal, affirmed the judgment below in favor of her title. The Supreme Court held that the County Court had no jurisdiction, and its order was void, for the reason that the statute had given this power to the Clerk, and the Court had no supervision over him in this respect. The appellants insisted that the order of the Court could be disregarded, and that the amendment stood as the act of the Clerk, having a right to amend his certificate on the back of the deed and make a record of it. The Court says:

“Had the Clerk authority to alter the record of his certificate of the acknowledgment of the deed at any time after the record was made? We are of opinion he had not; we are of opinion he acted ministerially and not judicially in the matter. Until his certificate of the acknowledgment of Elliott and wife was recorded, it was, in its nature, but an act in pais, and alterable at the pleasure of the officer. But the authority of the Clerk to make and record a certificate of the acknowledgment of the deed was functus officio as soon as the record was made. By the exertion of his authority, the authority itself became exhausted. The act had become matter of record, fixed, permanent and unalterable; and the remaining powers and duty of the Clerk were only to keep and preserve the record safely.

“If a Clerk may, after a deed, together with the acknowledgment or probate thereof, have been committed to record, under color of amendment, add anything to the record of the acknowledgment, we can see no just reason why he may not also subtract from it.

“The doctrine that a Clerk may at any time, without limitation, alter the record of the acknowledgment of a deed made in his office, it would be, in practice, of very dangerous consequence to the land titles of the county, and cannot receive the sanction of this Court.”

This language is relied on by appellant, as establishing the proposition that the mere taking of the acknowledgment is an act in pais and subject to be amended by the officer. But the words of the text must be altered before such a construction can be given; for, after the record by the Clerk in Elliott's case was made, the power of amendment ceased; the certificate was insufficient to entitle the deed to record as to Mrs. Elliott; yet it was recorded, and after the record it was held the Clerk's power over the subject ceased. Where is the difference between the Clerk's power ceasing on his recording the deed and certificate, and the Notary's power ceasing after the recording by the Clerk? The Court means no more than this; that while the deed and acknowledgment are in possession of the Clerk, and his office of properly certifying the acknowledgment and recording the papers unaccomplished, the matter was in fieri, and he might go on at any time before he finished the business, to complete it, just as in this case, if the Notary had retained the papers, and had, in attempting to write the certificate, made a mistake, he might have rectified it at any time before he discharged himself of the business; or delivered the papers for record, or possibly before they had been recorded. But it is not intimated that after the papers had gone from his to another officer's possession, and been delivered for record, or actually recorded, he still could control them. In such case "by the exertion of his authority the authority itself becomes exhausted." The whole reasoning of the Court, in the section quoted, is direct to show that the Notary could have no such authority; for all the evils which are so well stated would follow as well from permitting alteration of the record to be made by amendments of the Notary as of the Clerk. This singular result, too, would follow. Under our statute the Clerk can take the acknowledgment as well as the Notary. The Notary may amend the certificate, and therefore, the record, after the deed and certificate are recorded; but the Clerk, by the direct language of the decision cited, could not. The decision in 1 Peters, therefore, only amounts to this: that the act is in pais until some decisive act is done, showing that the officer has exercised his authority over the subject; such as recording the papers or the like; but after that, like other cases of special authority, the power once exercised is exhausted.

Bours v. Zachariah and Wife.

---

We do not deem it necessary to criticize the case of Jordan v.

Corey, in 2 Carter's Ind. Rep. 385. That case we think wholly unsupported by authority. (See also 2 Conn., 527; 3 Ib., 406; 11 Ib., 129; 1 Binney, 470; 9 S. and R., 270.) In this last case it was attempted to supply the defect by the evidence of the magistrate taking the acknowledgment. But the Court overruled the point, saying, "there would be no certainty in land titles if this kind of evidence were admitted." But if the principle contended for be true, why not suggest to or permit the officer, while denying him permission to state the facts validating the deed on oath, to certify them to the Court?

The fact that in some of the cases cited the statutes construed require the recording of the deed to give or complete the title, does not make the cases less authoritative; for the reasoning of the Judges does not rest upon this circumstance.

We decided at this term that the homestead must be conveyed in the same manner as the separate estate of the wife, so far as the certificate of acknowledgment is concerned.

The judgment of the District Court is affirmed.

LAWRENCE v. KNIGHT.

Where a lease contained the usual covenants for payment of rent, and re-entry for non-payment, and provided for the appraisement of improvements erected by the lessee, and payment of their value by the lessor at the expiration of the term, and the lessor re-entered for non-payment of rent: Held, that the lessee could not maintain an action upon being evicted, for the value of his improvements.

If the lessee has any remedy, he must wait till the expiration of the time fixed by his contract. He cannot by his own default change the terms of the contract in his own favor.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, County of San Francisco.

The facts upon which this case is made may be briefly stated thus: The defendant, in 1853, leased a lot in San Francisco to one Allen for a term of seven years; the contract provided that Allen should pay a ground rent of three hundred and fifty dollars per month; also, that lessee should erect certain buildings; these, at the end of the term, were to be appraised, and their value to be paid by the lessor. The interest of lessee was assigned and came to the hands of the present plaintiff. A clause of forfeiture for non-payment of rent was in the lease; and this condition having been broken by lessee or his assignee, the lessor re-entered.

Lawrence v. Knight.

---

The bill is filed by the plaintiff for the value of these improvements. The defendant demurred, and the Court below sustained the demurrer, and plaintiff appealed.

Heydenfeldt & Perley for Appellant.

1. The defendant, Knight, having terminated said lease by his own voluntary act, (in serving notice to that effect) is now estopped from denying the consequences of that act; that the "term" is at an end, and the proper remedy is by bill in equity. Humphreys v. Holtsenger, 3 Sneed, 228; Alston v. Boyd, 6 Humph. 505; Ridley v. McNary, 2 Humph. 174; Herring v. Bird, 4 Humph. 362; 6 Humph. 324; King v. Thompson, 9 Peters, 204; Ewing, Adm'r, v. Handloy, 4 Littell, 371; Bright v. Boyd, 1 Story, 494; Hall v. Delaplaine, 5 Wisconsin, 206; Berry v. Executor of Van Winkle, 1 Green Ch. (N. J.) 269; Copper & Colbath v. Wells & Hoe, Saxton, pt. 1, p. 10; 4 Edward's Ch. Rep.; and see Van Rennselaer heirs v. Peniman, 6 Wendell, 569.

2. "Term" is from the Latin "terminus," or end, and is the duration or continuance of the estate, and not of the time mentioned in the lease. A term of two years may be put an end to in one year or any less time, by forfeiture or otherwise. As to the signification of "term," see Taylor's Landlord and Tenant, sec. 16; 1 Hilliard on Real Property, 198, 201; 2 Story, sec. 1316.

3. The "term" being thus ended by his own act, prior to the time agreed upon by the parties for its termination, he is liable at once for the value of the improvements, as stipulated in said lease, in the same manner as if he had permitted said lease to expire by its own limitation. He cannot claim the benefits resulting from such termination of the lease, to wit: the possession of the improvements and their rents, relieved of its burthen; but must take it subject to the payment for the value of the improvements. Baroillhet v. Battelle et al., 7 Cal. R. 450; Gaskill v. Trainor, 3 Cal. R. 334; Gaskill v. Moore, 4 Cal. 233.

Lawrence v. Knight.

4. The sixty days mentioned in the lease, as the time when said appraisers were to be appointed prior to the end of said term, not having elapsed between the time when Knight gave notice that he intended to claim a forfeiture and the time of his re-entry into possession of said leasehold premises, said plaintiff is thereby released from the performance of such impossible act, the defendant having put it out of plaintiff's power to comply with such condition.

5. The appointing appraisers was an act to be done by defendant, the same being a benefit to him. Because it was only upon condition that said appraisement be made, that said defendant was entitled to an extension of time for the payment of said appraised amount.

Shattuck, Spencer & Reichert for Respondent.

The demurrer raises the following questions: First, Can a lessee, who has forfeited the lease by the non-payment of rent, and that forfeiture has been judicially declared, maintain an action on the covenants of the lessor, to be performed only when the term is to be complete and ended?

Second. If such an action can be maintained, can it be done when the term is ended by the default of the lessee in refusing to pay rent, or only when the term has expired by limitation?

These are questions of practical importance, and if new, might be interesting; but they have both been settled by this Court in Whipley v. Dewey et als., 8 Cal. R. 38.

This lease, as the times changed, bore a high ground rent. It had years yet to run. The lessee, or assignee, refuses to pay that rent. The landlord, after waiting for months in vain for his rents, declares a forfeiture by its terms, and re-enters, thereby losing his high rent for the balance of the term.

The buildings are newer, and therefore, are worth more now than they will be at the end of the term.

It is also supposable, that at the end of the term building material and labor will be cheaper than at present, and the building, therefore, worth less than it is now, irrespective of its age.

Lawrence v. Knight.

Now, if the lessee can, by his own wrong, terminate a lease, and then take advantage of that wrong and have his building valued in its newer state, and compel his landlord, not only to pay him this extra price, but to pay him this years before the time contracted for, it would be a wonderful way to rid one's self of a lease that, by the change of times, had become onerous.

Third. We submit, that having forfeited the lease on his part, and rendered it void as to time, the lessee cannot afterward sue upon it. It is dead as to him, and he cannot invoke its aid.

This suit is founded on a contract rendered void as to the plaintiff by its own terms and by his own showing. It cannot be sustained, and the demurrer is properly interposed. The plaintiff cannot now, or at any future time, sustain a suit upon this dead contract.

If he has any rights, they are at the end of the term, and in equity, not in law. If, at the end of the term, he can show that the building is worth more to the landlord than he has lost in rents by the default of the plaintiff, an account can then be taken; but not now, for the reason that it cannot now be ascertained what the building will be worth then, nor how much the landlord will lose in the way of rents.

Fourth. In reviewing briefly the points taken by the appellant, we may observe as to the first, that the proposition is wrongly stated.

Knight did not terminate the lease "by his own voluntary act." He was satisfied with it; did not wish to terminate it, but the appellant would not comply with its terms; refused to pay rent; and to re-enter was the landlord's only remedy. It is an abuse of terms to call that a voluntary act for which he should suffer; that was forced upon him by the bad conduct of the lessee. Second. The cases cited to support the proposition are inapplicable.

Those decisions point to two classes of cases:

1. Where one has contracted for the purchase of land, and under such contract has gone into possession and made improvements, increasing the value of the land: upon a rescission of the contract, the value of the improvements shall be set off against the rents and profits.

2. Where one has placed a relative in possession of land, under the idea that it will be donated, and valuable improvements are made with this expectation, if the donation fails, the value of the improvements shall be paid for.

Lawrence v. Knight.

---

All this is reasonable, but none of the cases or principles apply to this.

The explanation of the word term, under the second head or point, is likewise erroneous. "A term signifies, not only the limitation of time, but the estate and interest that pass for such time." Taylor's Landlord and Tenant, sec. 16.

To limit it, therefore, to the estate is erroneous. The end of the term, as found in the lease, evidently means the end of the time mentioned therein: the time when the lease expires by its terms, and not the ending of the estate by the default of the lessee.

The estate may be forfeited, but the time when the lease ends, and when the landlord is to perform his covenants, is certain and fixed by the lease.

The authorities cited do not sustain the third proposition of the appellant. Baroillhet v. Battelle, 7 Cal. R. 480, decides that where the lessee mortgages the building for the payment of rent, the landlord may foreclose such mortgage for rent in arrear; nothing more. Gaskill v. Trainor, 3 Cal. R. 334, simply shows that the non-payment of rent will not work a forfeiture of the lease, unless the rent be demanded as at common law. Gaskill v. Moore, 4 Cal. R. 283, only decides that a mechanic's lien upon a leasehold estate is not destroyed by a forfeiture of the lease and a subsequent improvement by the landlord.

It is submitted that neither of these cases supports the proposition; much less is it supported by its own reasoning.

The fourth and fifth propositions of appellant are sustained by no authority, and seemingly are not sound.

BALDWIN, J., after stating the facts, delivered the opinion of the Court — FIELD, J., concurring.

We think the demurrer was rightly sustained. The argument of the respondent we think conclusive, to show that the plaintiff or his assignee can be in no better situation, after having violated the contract of lease, than if they had complied with it. If they had complied with it, the buildings would have been appraised at the end of the term and at their then value, which probably would have been very different from the present value. The only remedy of the lessor for the recovery of his rent was the re-entry. This remedy was secured to him by contract. Because he has availed himself of his clear right, he does not subject himself to an entire change of the contract, both as to time of payment and amount. If this were so, all a lessee would have to do, under a contract of this sort, to rid himself, at any time, of a bad bargain, would be to refuse to pay his rent, and claim at once payment for his improvements; an operation by which he might make, and could not lose.

If the plaintiff has any remedy, he must wait until the time expires which the contract has fixed. He cannot, by his own default, change in his own favor the terms of the contract, and fix upon the lessor a contract he never made.

Judgment affirmed.

SCRIBER v. MASTEN.

Where the defendant contracted with a factor who was in his debt for certain goods, but before he took them away was informed that a portion of them belonged to another, his taking such portion was an unlawful assumption of ownership, and a conversion of the property.

A notice of the ownership of the goods which would put the defendant on inquiry is sufficient.

In such a case, no demand is necessary previous to bringing suit.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District, County of Butte.

This was an action to recover damage for the wrongful taking of certain goods, the property of plaintiff.

The cause was tried in the Court below without a jury, and from the finding of the Judge, the following facts appear:

Abel & Monty were commission merchants, doing business in Oroville, Butte county, and were also doing a general mercantile business, buying and selling on their own account. In February, 1857, the plaintiff, Scriber, left at their house a lot of merchandise to be sold on commission. In May, 1857, Abel & Monty became embarrassed, and their goods in the store were attached by Stewart & Co. On the eleventh day of May, defendant, Masten, being also a creditor of Abel & Monty, made an arrangement with them and with Stewart & Co., to the effect that Abel & Monty should give their notes, with Masten as endorser, to Stewart & Co. for about $2,100, and Stewart & Co. should dismiss the attachment, and Abel & Monty should make a transfer of the goods to Masten. This was done; during the negotiation, Monty informed Masten that there were some goods in the store left them on commission. On the same day Masten took possession of the goods, and on the next day removed them, together with those left by plaintiff to be sold on commission. Abel & Monty were present when the goods were removed, and objected to the removal of certain articles belonging to plaintiff; but their objection was not heeded by Masten; whereupon Scriber brought this action against Masten to recover the value of the goods left by him with Abel & Monty. No demand was made of Masten previous to the bringing of suit. Plaintiff had judgment in the Court below, and defendant appealed.

---

Scriber v. Masten.

---

Messick & Sweesey for Appellant.

The Court erred in rendering a judgment for the plaintiff:

1st. Because the Court finds that there was no demand and refusal shown.

2d. Because Abel & Monty were not technical factors, and the notice given to Masten at the time of the transfer, "that there were some goods in the store left them on commission," without stating what they were or where they were, was insufficient to render his possession of the goods tortious. 7 Term R. 360; 6 Cal. R. 383; 5 Cal. R. 404.

3d. Because the findings show that the defendant took possession of the store and all the goods, under such insufficient notice, and had possession of the same a day before Abel & Monty objected to the removal of the butter and cheese.

4th. The transfer was good, at least to the interest Abel & Monty

Scriber v. Masten.

---

had in the goods left on commission, for storage, commissions, etc., and Masten had a right to take possession.

5. Masten having taken possession of the store and the goods of the plaintiff, intermixed with those he purchased, it was his duty to exercise ordinary care in the protection and preservation of the same; he therefore was not liable in any action, though he removed them, without a demand and refusal, so long as no actual conversion is shown.

6. To enable the plaintiff to recover, he should have averred and shown that he had discharged all lien or claim of the factor, to either the factor, his transferee or pawnee, or that he had made tender thereof. 5 Durnford & East, 644.

Winans for Respondent.

The only question in this case is, whether a demand and refusal was necessary, under the facts set forth in the findings of the Court, to fix defendant's liability. The proposition of defendant's counsel, that it was necessary to make a tender of commissions before plaintiff's right of action could accrue, being entirely novel and utterly unsupported by any authority in the books, we shall not discuss. Undoubtedly, a factor has a lien on his principal's goods for his commissions, but it is for the factor to assert that lien where it exists.

It is contended that as the property was delivered to defendant on the day before he undertook to move it, and was ordered not to remove it by Monty, therefore he came rightfully in possession, and a demand and refusal were necessary to constitute a conversion. To this we answer, first, he did not come into the possession of it; and secondly, if he did, a subsequent removal after notice of plaintiff's ownership was per se a conversion of it.

First. We contend that there was no delivery to defendant of the goods in question belonging to plaintiff.

The Court simply finds that Abel & Monty delivered to defendant all "the goods." What goods? Why, the goods they sold to him. What goods did they sell to him? All the goods in the store belonging to them.

Defendant therefore, in fact, never had any delivery to him of plaintiff's goods, and therefore, in taking possession of them, committed a tort. But assuming that he did come into possession by delivery to him from Abel & Monty; the very assumption of that possession by defendant was a conversion. Abel & Monty had no right to sell their principal's goods, and defendant, knowing that they were the goods of another party, had no right to buy them. His very purchase, under such circumstances, was tantamount to a conversion. Cowan's Treatise, vol. 1st, p. 231; see same authority, pp. 340, 341, 342, 343; Durell v. Mosier, 8th Johnson, 445; Evrard v. Coffin, 6th Wendell, 603.

Scriber v. Masten.

"The assuming a right to dispose of property, or exercising a dominion over it to the exclusion or in defiance of plaintiff's right, is a conversion. Bristol v. Burt, 7th Johnson, 254, and cases there cited; Reynolds v. Shuler, 5th of Cowan, 323; and see as particularly applicable to the present case, Connah v. Hale, 23d Wendell, 462.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — FIELD, J., concurring.

This appeal is without merit. The unlawful assumption by defendant of the ownership or dominion of the plaintiff's property, was a conversion of it. If the defendant did not know, at the time he contracted with the factors, his debtors, that plaintiff owned the goods he knew it before he removed them. If the factors had a lien for commissions, under the circumstances, the defendant, who took away the goods, and subjected the plaintiff to the cost and trouble of getting them back or recovering their value, had not. There was no necessity of any demand against a conscious wrong doer.

Whether the notice given by the factors to the defendant was so precise as to identify, with exactness, the goods in controversy, it was certainly enough to put the defendant on inquiry, and this inquiry would have easily given him the proper information. If he chose to proceed without making inquiry, and to remove all the goods, he is responsible for the consequences.

Judgment affirmed.

Montgomery v. Tutt.

---

MONTGOMERY v. TUTT *et als.

An acknowledgment of service of summons is only sufficient when reduced to writing and subscribed by the party. A verbal acknowledgment is not sufficient. The general rule of Courts of Equity in foreclosure suits is, that all persons materially interested should be made parties, in order that complete justice may be done and multiplicity of suits avoided.

It is not, however, absolutely essential in all cases to make subsequent incumbrancers, prior to suit of foreclosure, parties to the suit. If not so made, they are not bound by the decree; but they are not necessary parties to a decree as between the mortgagor and mortgagee; and in many cases where the value of the property is less than the mortgage, it may be unimportant to the mortgagee to make them parties, and it would be a great hardship to compel him to make them so.

Their equity of redemption from the foreclosure, if not made parties, continues, and this they can assert at any time within the period allowed by the Statute of Limitations.

The equity of redemption of a subsequent incumbrancer who has been made a party and had his day in Court, is by the decree taken away, leaving only the statutory right.

In an action of foreclosure of mortgage, when there are several subsequent incumbrancers, who have been duly served with process and suffered default, and one who was not served, and when it appears that the property has not been sold under the decree for a sum less than the amount due upon the mortgage, and no question as to the regularity or fairness of the sale is made, the defendants so served are not in the position to complain that their co-defendant was not properly served.

In an action against the maker of a note or the acceptor of a bill of exchange, in which the place of payment is fixed, it is not necessary to aver presentment at that place and refusal to pay.

The failure to make presentment at the place named would not discharge the debt, but could only be pleaded in defense as to the question of costs and damages. Wild et al. v. Van Valkenburgh (7 Cal. 166) overruled.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District, County of Colusa.

This was a suit to foreclose a mortgage executed by the defendant, Tutt, upon certain premises situated in Colusa County, to secure the payment of his promissory note to the plaintiff. The note bears date on the fourth of February, 1856, and is for the sum of $6,900, payable to the plaintiff or order, one year from the seventh of March, 1856, at the banking house of D. O. Mills & Co., at Sacramento city, with interest at the rate of three per cent. a month, to be paid at its maturity, with four hundred and twenty dollars for the use of the interest in the meantime. The mortgage bears the same date, and was duly acknowledged and recorded. The complaint sets forth the note and mortgage, and alleges the maturity and non-payment of the note, and the non-payment of any interest thereon, and that since the execution of the mortgage the defendants, Wilson, Jordan, Middlemass and Page, administrators of the estate of Coonce, "have acquired, or claim to have acquired, some interest in the premises," and are therefore made parties; and concludes with a prayer for a personal judgment against the defendant, Tutt, and for the foreclosure of the mortgage and sale of the mortgaged premises, and execution against his property for any balance of the judgment remaining unsatisfied out of the proceeds; and for general relief.

Montgomery v. Tutt.

---

The defendants, Tutt, Jordan, Wilson and Page were personally served with summons; and the Sheriff's certificate states that service was made on the defendant Middlemass "by an acknowledgment from him." Page demurred to the complaint, and his demurrer being sustained, the suit was discontinued as to him. The default of the other defendants was taken, and a personal judgment rendered against the defendant Tutt for the sum of $12,339.27, with a decree directing a sale of the mortgaged premises, the application of the proceeds to the satisfaction of the judgment, the surplus to go to the mortgagor, and execution to issue for any deficiency, and adjudging that the defendants be barred and foreclosed of all equity of redemption in the premises from and after the delivery of the deed to the purchaser at the sale.

From this judgment and decree the appeal is taken. Pending the appeal, the defendant Tutt has filed a release of errors. The other defendants assign as errors, 1st. The want of proof of service of summons on the defendant Middlemass; 2d. Want of entry of the default of the defendants; 3d. Excess in the personal judgment against defendant Tutt, and its rendition without proof of the amount due; 4th. The foreclosure of their equity of redemption; and 5th. Want of any averment in the complaint of a presentation of the note for payment at the banking house in the City of Sacramento, where, by its terms, it is made payable.

All of the appellants were necessary parties. The complaint directly avers their interest in the subject of the controversy; and the "general rule is, that for the purpose of effecting an equitable adjustment among all persons interested in the mortgaged property, all parties in interest shall be made also parties to the suit. * * When all parties in interest are before the Court, the decree will be made such as to satisfy all their mutual and respective equities." 2 Hilliard on Mortgages, 110. To the same in effect, but more in extenso, is 1 Daniell's Chan. 240. The former authority is among the latest, if not the latest, upon the subject.

---

Montgomery & Tutt

It is, however, insisted for the respondent, that the authorities are very conflicting upon the point, and of course, that their weight preponderates in his favor. From a careful examination of the collation cited in Story's Equity Pleadings, section 193, and the notes appended, we have been forced to a different conclusion. In fact, it would appear that Justice Story conceived his first doubts in view of Mr. Calvert's authority.

It will also be observed that Mr. Calvert's views were only expressed in regard to questions arising between an elder and younger mortgagor, and can have no direct application to other cases. Here it is not averred that the appellants are mortgagees, and it is to be taken most strongly against the pleader. They are to be taken not as mortgagees, and in fact, were not. But even regarding them as such, the case is not within the purview of any of the authorities cited. There may be, and are, cases in which a subsequent mortgagee is not a necessary party; and there may be, and are, cases in which, from the existence of particular facts, he is an essential party.

Regarding the appellants as severally holding younger mortgages, whether they are of equal or diverse execution and effect, justice cannot be dispensed without having all in Court. Each has the right of redemption, and is subject to contribute towards the redemption of the whole, according to the equities of all. A fortiori, it is palpably inequitable to bring in some of such younger mortgagees, and leave others out, so as to throw the whole burden upon the former.

In Daniell's Chan. 261, it is said, that "The mortgagee is entitled to insist that the whole mortgaged estate be redeemed together; and for the purpose that all the persons interested in the several estates or mortgages should be made parties to a bill seeking an account or redemption." And he adds, that the owner of a part of an estate mortgaged for the same sum must bring in the owner of the remainder.

---

In a late case, Vice Chancellor Bruce held that even subsequent judgment creditors are necessary parties. Cited in 2 Hilliard on Mortgages, 115, 116.

So, if the right of redemption, as in this case, become "severed after the mortgage," all must be made parties. Ibid. 118.

So it is irregular to proceed against one alone for a foreclosure, when another is in possession under his claim; and here such possession is averred. Ibid. 119.

We think it unnecessary to encumber this argument with citations of other authorities. We believe that a plain and common sense application of these elementary propositions will unmistakably take this case without the range of those cited for the respondent.

The New York cases of Cox v. Wheeler and Andrews v. Wolcott, cited by the counsel, have no application. In neither were the facts even remotely like these. The first was the case of foreclosure in pais, under the statute of that State. In both the mortgages had been given to secure debts to become due by instalments. Sales had been made to enforce payment of the first instalments; and the principal question was whether the purchasers took subject to the incumbrances for the secured instalments, or relieved therefrom. In neither is the question of parties mentioned otherwise than incidentally, and the head notes give no intimation that such a question was before the Court.

It is said that Middlemass is not prejudiced; for the decree is void as against him for the want of service of process. We reply, that he is prejudiced. He had a right to be in Court, and to be there by regular process. He cannot rightfully be subjected to the costs of that and of this Court. If any decree at all was taken, he had a right to exact an adjustment of all equities between himself and all the others, and that none should be taken which did not adjust such equities.

All Courts, and especially those of equity, aid in bringing litigation to an end, and are averse to the unnecessary creation of costs. It is said that the other appellants are not prejudiced, for they had both the equitable and statutory right to redeem. We reply, all the considerations applied to Middlemass; and further, we insist that they were prejudiced by a decree which was null as against Middlemass, which determined their right of redemption, and failed to adjust any of the equities between him and themselves.

This case does not stand as if the respondent had sued the mortgagor alone. He sued all, and averred the interest of all in the property. They had a right to expect and demand that he should proceed regularly against all; that they should not be bound by the decree, unless all the interested of all were bound. There is a marked difference between a case which omits the mention of other parties or the statement of facts showing that others are interested, and one in which the bill itself charges the interests and parties.

That as to the first assignment of error, we admit that there was no sufficient service of process on the defendant, Middlemass, and as to him, the said decree must be reversed or reframed. Whether the reversal of the decree as to Middlemass will affect the validity of the decree as to the other defendants, depends on several propositions, which we will proceed to discuss.

The first of these propositions is, whether subsequent incumbrancers are necessary parties to a bill of foreclosure, or only proper parties?

On the first proposition, we admit the authorities are conflicting.

Many of the books say, all subsequent incumbrancers are necessary parties. A much larger number says, they are not necessary but convenient parties. The authorities are collated by Story in his work on Equity Pleading, section 193, and the notes thereto. Story, in his last note to this section, (fifth edition of the work) quotes approvingly from Mr. Calvert's work on Parties in Equity. Calvert concludes from a review of all the authorities, that subsequent mortgagees are not necessary parties. It must be admitted that it has been the almost universal practice in this State, not to make subsequent mortgagees parties. There is certainly no adjudication in this State determining that they are necessary. If the Court were now to render such a decision, it would disturb a large amount of property, and no beneficial result would be attained.

But if we examine those authorities which say they are necessary parties, we will find that term needs qualification. Some of the cases go to this extent, that the Chancellor, if he discovers from the pleadings that there are subsequent incumbrancers who are not parties to the suit, will order them to be brought in, and will refuse to proceed with the case until they are made parties. These cases are quoted to show that subsequent incumbrancers are necessary parties. But it may well be, that the same Court which would, before decree, require the parties to be brought in, would not reverse the decree nor set it aside after it had been rendered and a sale made under it. We apprehend that few, if any, cases can be found, which have gone this length; and if any have gone to this length, it is because the decree has been so drawn that it might be dangerous in its operation to the party or parties not before the Court.

Montgomery v. Tutt.

In this case we propose to show that no injury could accrue to Middlemass, by letting the decree stand as to the other defendants.

In Cox v. Wheeler, 7th Paige's Rep., page 250, Vice Chancellor Denio, in giving his opinion, says: "The purchaser would acquire by the sale all the title which the mortgagor had at the time of the execution of the mortgage, discharged from the incumbrance of the mortgage; or in other words, the purchaser would acquire the whole estate and interest of the mortgagor and of the mortgagee."

The Chancellor and other Vice Chancellors seem to have concurred in this view.

In 16th Barbour's Rep., page 25, in the case of Andrews v. Wolcott, Gridley, J., says: "It is a mistake to say that the purchaser only takes the title of the mortgagor. He takes the title of both the mortgagor and mortgagee united. If there be any covenants, they run with the land and become vested with the purchaser at the mortgage sale, and he may maintain an action upon them."

Then it appears to us that the effect of a sale under this decree would be the same as to title, whether any of the defendants except Tutt were or were not before the Court. It would pass all the title which either Tutt or Montgomery had the day the mortgage was executed, and nothing more. As to the other defendants except Middlemass, they, having been served with process, would be barred the equity of redemption, unless they should come in within the statutory time and redeem. In regard to Middlemass, he would stand on the same footing as if he had not been made a party. He would be allowed the statutory time to redeem, after being brought properly before the Court.

Montgomery v. Tutt.

---

The next question is, can the decree in its present form (it being corrected, so far as it bars the right of redemption of Middlemass) injure Middlemass? If the purchaser under that decree either brings ejectment, or asks the Court leave to sue out a writ of assistance against Middlemass, if he has or claims a title distinct from and superior to that of Montgomery and Tutt, he can defend under it. He is not barred or estopped by the decree. If he acknowledges holding under the mortgagor or mortgagee, he can, if it is attempted to turn him out, file his bill to redeem and ask a stay of proceedings: and the Court would allow him to redeem, even giving him time within the statutory limit of six months, on a proper showing.

As to the other defendants who have been served, they admit the truth of the allegations in the bill. They hold, as their silence admits, in subordination to the mortgage title. All the interest they can have in this litigation arises from their right to redeem. They have been brought before the Court and notified of what is being done. They have two methods of redeeming. One is, to come into Court with the money, make the redemption under the supervision of the Court, and pray for a proper decree fixing their respective rights. Or failing to do this, they may make the statutory redemption at any time within six months after the sale. Failing to answer, they waived their right to pay into Court. The statutory redemption is a thing done without the interposition of the Court, and the fact as to whether or not Middlemass was before the Court, could neither aid nor hinder the other defendants in exercising their rights.

The next assignment of error is, that no default was taken against the defendants. To this we have two answers.

1st. There was a default taken: and

2d. It would make no difference if there was no default.

The entering of a default is only to take away the right of filing an answer, which can be done at any time before the default is taken or judgment rendered. No answer was filed before the signing of the decree. That would be as good as if forty defaults were taken.

Montgomery v. Tutt.

---

FIELD, J., after stating the facts, delivered the opinion of the Court — BALDWIN, J., concurring.

The first assignment of errors is well taken. An acknowledgment of service is only sufficient when reduced to writing and subscribed by the party. (Prac. Act, sec. 33.) A verbal acknowledgment to the Sheriff will not suffice. The decree is, therefore, invalid as against Middlemass. Over him the Court never acquired jurisdiction. So far as he is concerned the decree must be reversed. This disposition of the case as to Middlemass raises the inquiry, how far the reversal as to him can affect the decree as to the other defendants; and this involves a consideration of the question whether he was an indispensable party to the foreclosure. It does not appear what was the nature of the interest he possessed or asserted in the mortgaged premises, whether that of subsequent purchaser or incumbrancer. The complaint simply alleges that he and the other defendants, since the execution of the mortgage, have acquired, or claim to have acquired, some interest in the premises. The brief of counsel speaks of him as a subsequent incumbrancer, and we will assume this to be the fact in the consideration of the case.

The general rule of Courts of Equity is, that all persons materially interested in the subject matter of the suit ought to be made parties. in order that complete justice may be done, and a multiplicity of suits avoided; and this requires subsequent incumbrancers, existing at the filing of the bill, to be made parties in a suit for a foreclosure of a mortgage. They are interested in the property, and unless made parties, their rights will not be affected by the decree; and to this extent they are necessary parties. This is the view taken by this Court in Whitney v. Higgins, 10 Cal. R. 547. The purchaser, under the decree, takes a title only as against the parties to the suit; and that it may possess stability and security, all persons interested in the estate, at the time suit is instituted, whether purchasers, heirs, devisees, remaindermen, reversioners, or incumbrancers, should be made parties. And it is the general practice, when it appears before decree that there are such persons not made parties, for the Court to order the case to stand over until they are brought in; but the practice is not imperative. It was remarked long ago, by Lord Alvanley, in the Bishop of Winchester v. Beavor, (3 Ves. 317) that it was the usual and common practice, almost without exception, to make all incumbrancers parties; but he hoped the Court was not "bound to insist upon all incumbrancers being parties." It is true, the language of many of the adjudged cases would seem to indicate that subsequent incumbrancers are necessary, in the sense that they are indispensable parties; but, as is justly observed by Mr. Justice Story, "perhaps the solicitude of Courts of Equity to make a final settlement of the rights of all persons interested in such a suit, has carried them to an extent scarcely justifiable in point of principle or convenience." (Story's Equity Plead., sec. 193, note 2.)

The cases are not easily reconcilable. That subsequent incumbrancers are proper parties is clear; that they are necessary parties to a complete adjustment of all interests in the property is equally clear; that the Chancellor would be justified in ordering them to be brought in when not made parties, is also clear; but we do not think they are in all cases indispensable parties to a decree determining the rights of the parties before the Court as between themselves. The property mortgaged may be insufficient to cover the debt secured; the incumbrancers may be so numerous and their claims so large, that the parties possessing the latest liens could, by no possibility, receive any portion of the proceeds of the sale. It would be not only a great inconvenience, but a great hardship, to compel the mortgagee in such case to bring in all such persons who have acquired, without any fault of his, liens upon the property. As the foreclosure suit is prosecuted for his benefit, the expenses of making the subsequent incumbrancers parties must fall upon the estate, and in instances within our experience would have exhausted its entire proceeds. We do not think, then, that subsequent incumbrancers are indispensable parties. If not made parties, their rights cannot be affected; they are not bound by the decree; their equity of redemption from the purchaser continues, and this they can assert at any time within the period allowed by the

It appears from the allegations of the complaint, which are to be taken as confessed by the defendants who were properly served and suffered default, that the plaintiff sold the property in controversy to Tutt, and took at the time the mortgage in suit as security for the purchase money, and that the interests of the other defendants were acquired subsequently. It appears also that the property has been sold under the decree for a sum less than the amount due upon the mortgage, and no question as to the regularity or fairness of the sale is made. Those defendants are not, therefore, in a position to complain that their co-defendant was not properly served with process. They set up no defense under or in connection with him to defeat the decree, or lessen the amount found due on the mortgage; and the decree does not undertake to determine any rights as between the defendants.

The next assignment of errors is the want of any entry of the default of the defendants. To this there are two conclusive answers. 1st. That the default was entered, and the counsel of the appellant is mistaken in his statement; and 2d. It would be of no consequence if it had not been entered. The entry of the default only cuts off the right to answer, and this is as effectually done by the decree.

There is an excess of two hundred and twenty-three dollars in the amount of the personal judgment against defendant, Tutt. The error arose from allowing interest at the rate of ten per cent. a year upon the amount of interest due at the maturity of the note. Interest upon interest already due cannot be allowed, except in pursuance of a written engagement of the parties. (Act to reg. Int., Wood's Dig. 551.) The interest upon the note should have been calculated at the rate of three per cent. a month from its date to the date of the entry of the decree, and then added to the principal. The amount thus found due, added to the four hundred and twenty dollars, with interest at ten per cent. a year from the maturity of the note, would have made up the true amount for which judgment should have been rendered. The error is not one, however, of which the defendants can take advantage. The defendant, Tutt, has released all errors. The defendant, Middlemass, is not bound by the judgment; and in case he should seek to enforce his equity of redemption, the true amount to be paid by him can then be ascertained. The other defendants have lost their right of redemption. Their statutory right is gone from the lapse of six months since the sale under the decree; and their equitable right, as distinct from their statutory right, is gone, for they have had their day in Court, and it is barred by the decree. (Whitney v. Higgins, 10 Cal. 554.)

The decree recites that the case was considered "upon the pleadings and evidence." This is sufficient to show that the requisite proof was presented to the Court of the amount due, even if any proof had been necessary upon the default of the defendants. But even were this otherwise, the presumption would be indulged to support the proceedings that the Court below was informed of the matter in a proper and regular manner. (Crane v. Brannan, 3 Cal. 192.)

The clause in the decree foreclosing the equity of redemption of the defendants is an useless formula, which does not enlarge the effect of the decree, or any rights of the purchaser under it. (McMillan v. Richards, 9 Cal. 412.) The equitable right to redeem property sold under a decree of foreclosure held by subsequent incumbrancers is merged into the statutory right, not by any force given to the language of the decree, but by the fact that they have had their day in Court, and an opportunity of setting up any equities they possessed. After the decree, they stand as to their right of redemption in the same position as ordinary judgment debtors.

The question presented by the last assignment of errors, is, whether any averment in the complaint of the presentation of the note at the place where by its terms it was made payable was essential. We pass over the objection that the question cannot be raised for the first time on appeal, and upon which we express no opinion, as it is not pressed by counsel, and will consider the question as if regularly taken in the Court below. The question has been frequently discussed in the Courts of the several States, and in the Federal Courts; and at this day it is the received doctrine in the United States, that in a suit against the maker of a promissory note, or the acceptor of a bill of exchange—and there is no distinction between the two classes of cases —payable at a particular place, it is unnecessary to aver a presentation for payment at the place in the complaint, or to prove such presentation at the trial. The rule is different in England as to promissory notes, as we shall hereafter observe. The American doctrine proceeds upon the ground that the maker or acceptor is the principal debtor; that the debt is not discharged as to him by the omission or neglect to demand payment when it becomes due at the place where the same is payable; that it is due generally, and will continue due until paid, though the creditor is not present at the time and place designated to receive payment; and that it is matter of defense on the part of the maker or acceptor to show his readiness with the funds at the time and place, and the omission or neglect of the plaintiff to present the paper for payment; and such defense will be only a bar of the damages and costs, and not of the debt.

Montgomery v. Tutt.

The question as to the necessity of proof of demand of payment at the place designated arose before the Supreme Court of New York, in 1809, in a suit against the acceptor of a bill of exchange, payable at a mercantile house in London (Foden et al. v. Sharp, 4 Johns. 183) and the Court said: "The holder of a bill of exchange need not show a demand of payment of the acceptor any more than of the maker of a note. It is the business of the acceptor to show that he was ready at the day and place appointed, but that no one came to receive the money, and that he was always ready afterwards to pay." In Wolcott v. Van Santvoord (17 Johns. 248) the precise question involved in the case at bar was decided. That was an action against the acceptor of an inland bill, payable at the Bank of Utica, and the declaration contained no averment of demand at the bank, or at any particular place, and for want of the averment the defendant demurred. The Court gave judgment for the plaintiff, and Mr. Chief Justice Spencer, who delivered the prevailing opinion, reviews the English cases, and shows their contradictory character on the necessity of the averment or proof. "The non-attendance," says the Chief Justice, "of the holder of the bill at the time and place of payment can produce no worse consequences to him than if he had attended, and the acceptor had also been present and tendered the money, which the holder had refused to accept. Under such a state of facts, what is the legal consequence?

Montgomery v. Tutt.

---

It is perfectly well settled that when a debt or duty exists, such as the payment of a sum of money, a tender of the money, though it be refused, does not extinguish the debt or duty, but it remains obligatory on the party owing the debt or duty; as if an obligation be for the payment of a less sum, this being a duty and part of the obligation, shall not be lost by tender and refusal; for if he pleads a tender, he shall say uncore prius." Com. Dig., tit. Condition, L. 4, Co. Lit. 207-a.) In Giles v. Hartie (1 Lord Raym. 254) Holt, C. J., ruled that "though a tender is made, and the plaintiff refuses the money, yet the tender cannot be pleaded in bar of the action, neither in debt nor assumpsit, but in bar of the damages only; for the debtor shall, nevertheless, pay his debt. This is a principle too familiar to every lawyer to require a statement of the numerous authorities to support it. Nor is it necessary, where a regular tender has been made, and a refusal to accept it, for the plaintiff to make a special demand subsequently, and before he brings his action; the action itself is a demand." And in reference to the case of Bowes v. Howe, in the Exchequer Chamber (5 Taunt. 30) in which it was decided that in an action against the maker of the note by the payee or bearer, where the place of payment is designated, a presentation at that place for its payment is a condition precedent, and an omission to aver such presentment in the declaration is fatal in arrest of judgment or in error, the Chief Justice remarks: "It is perfectly certain that the Exchequer Chamber did not proceed on the ground that the debt demanded was a collateral obligation or promise. They not only do not say so, but the case did not admit of their saying so, for the action there was against the makers of a note payable at the Workington Bank; and I never can conceive that decision to be law, that a mere failure to present a note at the time and place of payment, and making a demand, shall exonerate the party forever, though the debt or duty remains; the principle of it is that the undertaking was a condition precedent, and that the duty could not be enforced without a strict compliance with the condition; and it goes the whole length of deciding that even a subsequent demand or any other form of action would be ineffectual. For if the condition must be averred and proved, and there has, in fact, been no demand, the holder of the note must be remediless. From such a doctrine I entirely dissent, and must think that the time and place of payment are merely modal, forming no essential part of the contract; that it is incumbent on the defendant, whether the payee was at the place at the time appointed or not, to show in his defense that he was there ready and willing to pay, and that the payee did not come, etc.; that the consequences of the absence of the payee, under such circumstances, unless he makes a subsequent special demand, and there be then a refusal, are merely that he must be content with receiving the sum originally payable; and if he sue, without having made a special demand, he loses all claim to damages and costs, and will himself be subject to them.

---

Montgomery v. Tutt.

In Caldwell v. Cassidy (8 Cowan, 271) the same question arose in a suit against the maker of a promissory note, payable at the Franklin Bank, New York. The defendant pleaded that he was at the time and place of payment mentioned in the note, ready and willing to pay the money, and ever since had been and was then ready and willing to pay at the bank, but that the plaintiff never demanded payment nor presented the note for payment at the bank. On demurrer the plea was held bad in being in bar of the action and not of the damages, and in not showing the defendant was ready by bringing the money into Court, and the plaintiff had judgment. In the opinion of the Court, Savage, C. J., says: "Whatever be the rule in other Courts, the rule of this Court must be considered settled in the case of Wolcott v. Van Santvoord; that when a promissory note is payable at a particular place on a day certain, the holder of the note is not bound to make a demand at the time and place, by way of condition precedent to the bringing of an action against the maker. But if the maker was ready to pay at the time and place, he may plead it as he would plead a tender, in bar of damages and costs, by bringing the money into Court."

In Green v. Goings, decided in 1850, (7 Barb. 653) the same rule as to the proof of presentation is maintained. In that case the draft was accepted, payable at the Onondaga County Bank, and the Court held that as between the acceptor and endorser, the acceptor was liable without demand of payment, although the draft was accepted payable at a particular place; that in such cases the acceptor is the principal debtor liable without demand, a suit as in other cases of a precedent debt or duty being a sufficient demand: citing the cases above from Johnson and Cowan.

Montgomery v. Tutt.

---

The same question came before the Supreme Court of Massachusetts in 1812, in Ruggles v. Patten, (8 Mass. 479) in a suit against the maker of a promissory note payable at the Penobscot Bank, kept at Buckstown. The defendant pleaded that he was present at the maturity of the note at the Bank, ready and willing to pay according to the tenor of his promise, in one of the several counts of the declaration, and that the plaintiff was not there ready or present to receive the payment; and on demurrer, the Court held that this was no bar to an action on a promise to pay money, and that the issue tendered was an immaterial one.

In Carley v. Vance (17 Mass. 389) the question was again presented in a suit against the maker of a note, payable "at Mr. E. L.'s counting-room, in Cross street, Boston." The defendant pleaded a deposit of the funds before the maturity of the note with E. L. for its payment, and that E. L. was ready with the money to pay the note at his counting-room on the day it became due, but that the plaintiff was not there to receive it; and on demurrer the plea was held bad for want of proffert of the money. The Court, in its opinion, says: "The objection taken in this case to the declaration for the want of an allegation of a demand at the time and place appointed for payment, cannot, we think, be maintained. It is difficult to reconcile all the cases; but the weight of authority is opposed to the objection, and it has no foundation in principle."

The same rule as to the proof of demand of payment was maintained in 1834, in Payson v. Whitcomb, (15 Pick. 212) in which the Court observes, that whatever may be considered the law in England on the point, it has been settled in Massachusetts that no such demand is necessary.

In Maine the same rule prevails. (Bacon v. Dyer, 3 Fair. 19; Remick v. O'Kyle et al., Ibid 340; McKenney v. Whipple, 21 Maine, 98.) In Remick v. O'Kyle, the Supreme Court of that State held that in an action against the maker of a promissory note, payable at a particular time and place, it is unnecessary to aver a presentment at such time or place; and when such averment is made, the plaintiff

 Montgomery v. Tutt.

---

may recover without offering proof in its support, inasmuch as it may be stricken out, and still leave the declaration sufficient.

The same doctrine is maintained in the Courts of the other New England States. (Eastman v. Fifield, 3 N. H. 333; Otis v. Barton, 10 N. H. 433; Hart et al. v. Green, 8 Vt. 191; Eldred v. Hawes, 4 Conn. 465.)

In this last case Mr. Chief Justice Hosmer, of the Supreme Court of Connecticut, after referring to the diversity and contrariety of opinion expressed by the English Judges on the subject in question, and citing the cases of Wolcott v. Van Santvoord (17 John. 248) and Carley v. Vance, (17 Mass. 389) observes that the weight of decision appears to be much against the legal necessity of averring a demand at the place appointed for payment, and says:

“On principle, I am led to a similar result. What was the intent and understanding of the parties in rendering the note payable at a certain place? Was it that the debt should be lost if there was not a strict presentment and demand on the day and at the place of payment; or was it only that the debtor should stand excused of damages and costs if he were ready to pay the money at that place according to his contract?”

“In support of the rigid construction, rendering the demand a condition precedent, there are the words of the contract only; but that a presentment and demand were not understood to be an essential part of the contract, the subject matter and the effects and consequences make it abundantly manifest.

“It can scarcely be believed that the creditor should agree with his debtor, or that the latter should request an agreement, if through accident or negligence the demand were not strictly made at the time and place prescribed, that an honest debt should be forever lost; and yet, on this foundation rests the defendant’s objection. In subversion of this idea it is indisputably established, where a mere duty is promised to be paid upon request, (and every promissory note presupposes an antecedent debt) that no actual request is necessary. 1 Sand. 32. And although this rule may be varied by an express agreement of the parties, yet such an agreement should appear with unquestionable force.”

Montgomery v. Tutt.

"It may, however, be inquired; if the specification of place in the contract was not intended to form a condition precedent, by binding down the party to a strict demand at the place, what else could it intend? This question proceeds on the supposition that the insertion of the place of payment in the note could subserve no valuable purpose but the one for which the defendant insists. In contravention of this idea, it is very apparent that the mentioning of a place of payment is attended with important uses. It enlarges the privilege of a promisee of a note, by conferring on him a right to expect a reception of his money at a specified place other than that with which the law had invested him. It imparts a privilege to the maker of a note, by authorizing payment at a certain place, and not limiting him to a personal demand; and often relieves him from the risk attendant on keeping a large sum of money in his house. Superadded to this, it confers on him the power, by a readiness to discharge his contract at the place prescribed, to prevent the accumulation of interest or the burden of costs. To assert that this construction of the contract is free from all possible inconveniences, I do not feel myself justified; but it is demonstrably clear that the inconveniences are less to the debtor than the loss of the debt, which attends the other construction, would be to the creditor."

In Weed v. Van Houten (4 Halsted, 189) the question was presented to the Supreme Court of New Jersey; and the Chief Justice in his opinion, after a review of numerous English and American cases, expresses his entire concurrence in the rule established by the American decisions, which he is satisfied is most conformable to sound reason; most conducive to public convenience; best supported by the general principles and doctrines of the law, and most assimilated to the decisions which bear analogy more or less directly to the subject.

The same rule is established by the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, in Fitler v. Beckley, 2 Watts & Sgt. 458; by the Supreme Court of Ohio, in Administrators of Conn. v. Executors of Gana, 1 Ham. 483; by the Supreme Court of Illinois, in Butterfield v. Kinzie, 1 Scam. 445; by the Supreme Court of Tennessee, in McNairy v. Bell, 1 Yerger, 502, and Mulkerrin v. Hannum, 2 Yerger, 81; by the Court of Appeals of Virginia, in Watkins v. Crouch & Co., 5

Montgomery v. Tutt.

---

Leigh, 522; by the Court of Appeals of Maryland, in Bowrie v. Duval, 1 Gill & John. 181; by the Supreme Court of Texas, in Edwards v. Husbrook, 2 Texas, 578; by the Supreme Court of Mississippi, in Washington v. Planters' Bank, 1 How. 230; by the Supreme Court of Alabama, in Irwin, Admr., v. Withers, 1 Stewart, 234, and in Evans v. Gordon, 8 Porter, 142; and by the Supreme Court of the United States, in Wallace v. McConnell, 13 Peters, 136.

The ruling of the Courts of Indiana, Louisiana, and of this State, form, so far as we are able to ascertain, the only exceptions to the otherwise uniform current of decisions in the United States on the question under consideration. After the Supreme Court of Indiana had laid down the rule that the presentation at the place of payment must be averred and proved, (Palmer v. Hughes, 1 Black. 328) the Legislature, probably finding it worked only inconvenience and injustice, interfered and changed the rule. (Rev. Stat., 1843, p. 711.)

The decisions of the Supreme Court of Louisiana do not present the question in any new light from the earlier English cases. (Mellon v. Croghan, 3 Martin, 422; Warren v. Alnutt, 12 La. 454; Frenes y Carrillo v. Bank of United States, 10 Rob. 533.)

In England, previous to the decision of the case of Rowe v. Young by the House of Lords in 1820, (2 Brod. and Bing. 165) there was great diversity and contrariety of opinion on the question among the Judges. In Callaghan v. Aylett, (3 Taunton, 397) decided by the Common Pleas in 1811, it was held in an action against the acceptor of a bill payable generally, but accepted payable at a particular place, that the plaintiff must prove a presentation at the place designated.

In the same year the King's Bench held, in Fenton v. Goundry, 13 East. 449, that it was unnecessary to aver a presentation at the particular place where by the acceptance the bill was made payable; that the acceptance bound the party generally and universally, and that the action itself was a demand upon the party sued. Previous to this decision, Lord Ellenborough had held at nisi prius, in 1808, in Lyon v. Sundins, (1 Camp. 423) that the acceptor of a bill payable at a particular place was liable universally; that the place of acceptance formed no part of the contract, and did not require to be set out in the declaration; and in 1810, in Nicholas v. Bowers,

(2 Camp. 498) that there was no necessity of proving, in a suit against the maker of a promissory note, the presentment at the place designated. In this last case, the counsel for the plaintiff stated that he had a witness in Court to prove the presentation at the banker's the day the note became due; but Ellenborough replied that he was afraid to admit such testimony, lest doubts should arise as to its necessity. In Wild v. Rennards, 1 Camp. 425, tried in 1809, Bayley, Judge, made a similar ruling.

In Sanderson v. Bowes, (14 East. 516) subsequent to the decision of Fenton v. Goundry, the King's Bench held on demurrer that a promissory note of the defendants', payable by its terms at their banking house at Workington, must be demanded there to give the holder a right of action if it be not paid. The Court draws a distinction between that case and Fenton v. Goundry, in this: that in the latter case the place was not designated in the body of the bill, but only in the acceptance; and in Dickenson v. Bowes, (16 East. 112) decided in 1812, the same ruling was made by the Court.

Subsequently to the decision in Fenton v. Goundry by the King's Bench, the question again arose before the Common Pleas, in 1814, in Gamon v. Schomoll, (5 Taunt. 344) and that Court reiterated its former opinion, and held that the acceptance payable at a particular place was a qualification of the contract, and therefore the presentation of the bill at such place was a condition precedent which must be averred and proved, whether the action be against the drawer or acceptor. (5 Taunt. 30.)

In Bowes v. Howe, decided in the Exchequer Chamber, in 1813, it was held, in an action against the maker of a promissory note payable at a particular place, that the presentment at the place must be averred and proved.

These were the principal cases in which the English Judges and Courts had expressed their opinion previous to the decision of Rowe v. Young. Between the King's Bench and the Common Pleas there was a conflict of opinion. Whether the decisions of the Court of King's Bench in Fenton v. Goundry and Sanderson v. Bowes, or of Ellenborough in Lyon v. Sanders, and of Bayley, J., in Wilds v. Rennards, can be reconciled, we do not propose to consider. In the actual conflict between the two Courts, and the seeming conflict of the King's Bench with itself, and with the decisions of its Judges at nisi prius, the case of Rowe v. Young was brought before the House of Lords. That was an action against the acceptor of a bill payable generally, and accepted payable at a particular place. The principal questions involved were, whether a presentment for payment at the place designated, and the averment of such presentment in the declaration, were necessary; and whether the acceptance was to be considered as a qualified acceptance or a general acceptance, with an additional engagement or direction for its payment at the designated place. The opinions of the twelve Judges were asked on the questions. Eight of the Judges were of opinion that the presentment and averment were unnecessary to hold the acceptor, and four that they were necessary; and yet the judgment was reversed in accordance with the views of the minority, sustained by the opinions of Eldon and Resedale.

Montgomery v. Tutt.

---

To our minds, the prevailing opinion of Lord Eldon is unsatisfactory; and does not meet the arguments advanced in the opinions of several of the law Judges. As to the decision of the highest tribunal in the realm, it is of course binding upon the Courts of England; but as an exposition of the law, in the face of the able opinions of the eight Judges, its weight in this country can be slight, and none as against the general current of adjudications of the American Courts. We have referred to these decisions of the English Courts, because upon their authority the opinion of this Court in Wild v. Van Valkenburgh (7 Cal. 166) is based. The decision in this case has never met the approval of the profession, and has been the occasion of constant inconvenience and frequent injustice, and we have no hesitation in overruling it.

Immediately following the decision of the House of Lords in Rowe v. Young, it was found expedient, either from the injustice the rule established would work upon past, or the inconvenience it would create as to future contracts, to change the rule by legislative enactment; and by 1 and 2 Geo. IV (ch. 78) it was provided: "That after the first of August, 1821, if any person shall accept a bill of exchange, payable at the house of a banker or other place, without further expression in his acceptance, such acceptance shall be deemed and taken to be, to all intents and purposes, a general acceptance of such bill. But if the acceptor shall in his acceptance express that he accepts the bill payable at a banker's house, or other place only, and not otherwise or elsewhere, such acceptance shall be a qualified acceptance of such bill; and the acceptor shall not be liable to pay the bill, except in default of payment, when such payment shall have been first duly demanded at such banker's house or other place.

The question under consideration is at best only one of construction. What is the meaning of the parties in designating the place of payment in promissory notes, or in the body or acceptance of bills of exchange, according to commercial usage? We are confident that it is not to insert a condition precedent, so that upon failure of the holder to attend at the designated place he shall forfeit his entire demand. No such intention exists, either with the maker or receiver of the note or bill. A note thus framed, or a bill thus accepted, is like any other contract to pay at a designated place. The undertaking of the parties, and the legal effect of such contracts is this: that if ready at the time and place with the funds, the obligor has so far satisfied the contract that he cannot be responsible for any future damages, either as costs of suit or interest for delay; not that he is thereby discharged of the debt. No one would receive an obligation depending upon such a contingency for its ultimate satisfaction. The insertion of the place of payment is usually made for the convenience of one of the parties, and is given and received with that understanding and none other.

It follows from the views we have taken of the questions in this case that the judgment must be reversed as to the defendant, Middlemass, and affirmed as to the other defendants.

Ordered accordingly.

FUNKENSTEIN v. ELGUTTER.

APPEAL JUDGMENT—Judgment of County Court reversed, with directions to dismiss appeal from Justice's Court.

APPEAL from the County Court of San Francisco County.

This action was originally commenced in a Justice's Court on a promissory note for two hundred dollars. Summons was duly issued and returned served personally on all the defendants, who failed to appear, and judgment was taken against them by default. Defendants appealed from the whole judgment of the Justice, on questions of both law and fact. No statement of the grounds upon which the appellants intended to rely in the County Court was filed with the Justice.

On the calling of the case in the County Court, the respondent moved to dismiss the appeal, on the ground that an appeal could not be taken from a Justice's judgment rendered by default, on questions of both law and fact; which motion was denied by the Court, and respondent excepted.

The County Court allowed the defendant, Newburger, to answer, and ordered a trial anew. The cause was tried without a jury, and judgment rendered for the defendant; from which the plaintiff appealed to this Court.

H. Lee & E. D. Sawyer for Appellant.

1st. The County Court erred in refusing to dismiss the appeal from the judgment of the Justice.

2d. The Court erred in trying the case anew, as there was no issue of fact in the Justice's Court from which defendants could appeal. Nor could the Court try said cause on questions of law, as appellant had filed no statement of the grounds upon which he intended to rely. The People ex rel. Jones v. The County Court of El Dorado County, 10 Cal. 19.

FIELD, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — BALDWIN, J., concurring.

Ordered that the judgment of the County Court be reversed, with directions to dismiss the appeal from the Justice's Court, on the authority of The People v. The County Court of El Dorado Co., 10 Cal. 19.

PEOPLE ex rel. FOWLER v. WELLS.

At the general election held in Yuba County in September, 1855, W was elected County Treasurer of that county for two years from the date of his election, and until his successor was chosen and qualified. On the twenty-eighth day of April, 1857, a special Act was passed, extending the term of this officer to the first Monday in January, 1858. On the seventh of May, 1857, W resigned, and S P W was appointed by the Board of Supervisors in his stead. At the general election in September, 1857, F received the majority of votes for that office, for the unexpired term of W, and claimed the office: Held, that the appointee held for the balance of the extended term, and that there was no vacancy to be filled at the election in September, 1857.

It is a well settled rule of construction, that statutes upon the same subject matter must be construed together, and that a general provision must be controlled by one that is special.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Tenth Judicial District, County of Yuba.

At the general election held in Yuba County in September, 1855, A. F. Williams was duly elected County Treasurer of that county for the term of two years from the time of his election, and until his successor was chosen and qualified. On the twenty-eighth day of April, 1857, a special Act was passed, extending the term of this officer to the first Monday in January, 1858. On the seventh day of May, 1857, Williams resigned, and the defendant was appointed by the Board of Supervisors in his stead. At the general election in September, 1857, the relator received a majority of votes for the short term, and having properly qualified, demanded the office of the defendant. This demand being refused, this proceeding was instituted. Judgment was had for defendant, and the People appealed.

T. B. Beardon for Appellants.

I. No proclamation was necessary to the validity of this election. We contend that the election was perfectly valid without any order of the Supervisors; that no notice of such election by the Supervisors was necessary or required.

In the first place, let us inquire in what cases an order or proclamation for an election is necessary, and when unnecessary.

Notice of the election must be given by the Supervisors when the election is a special election, and not otherwise.

People v. Wells.

---

An election is special whenever the time, place and officers are not provided for by law.

Now if the time, place and officers of the election were provided for by law in this instance, then the election at which the relator claims to have been elected was a general election, and good without the order or intervention of the Supervisors. Vide People v. Brenham, 3 Cal. R. 491.

The election in question was a general election —

I. Because the time, place and officers were provided for by law.

1st. The time was fixed by law; the defendant had been appointed to fill a vacancy occasioned by a resignation; the law provides that such appointments may be made by the Supervisors, but that they shall expire at the next general election. Wood's Digest, art. 2,884.

Now the law prescribed that the next general election should be held on the second day of September, A. D. 1857; so that defendant's term of office was as well defined as though he had been holding a full term by virtue of a general election; he was an incumbent in office, whose term expired on a day certain, which day was fixed by the statute.

2d. The places and officers of election were the same as those provided for the general election.

II. This was a general election, because it was an election to choose a successor to an incumbent in office whose term had expired by limitation of law, and the law gives notice of all such elections.

It was not to fill a vacancy caused by resignation, death or removal, for the defendant himself had been appointed to fill such a vacancy: now if the law, instead of giving to the Supervisors the power to fill vacancies in county offices — had required that an election should be held for that purpose — then such an election would have been a special election, inasmuch as neither the time, place or officers were provided for by law.

Again: this was a vacancy occasioned by operation of law; because, when Williams resigned and the defendant was appointed to fill the vacancy created thereby, the law expressly limited his term of office till the general election next succeeding his appointment; and the law provided that at such general election the unexpired term should be filled by the people.

---

Then where is the difference or distinction between an election to fill a full term and an election to fill an unexpired term, when the law equally prescribes the time when both such elections shall be held?

If notice by the Supervisors is not necessary in the former, why should it be required in the latter?

In the case of The People v. Porter, 6 Cal. R., page 26, speaking of the decision in the case of The People v. Brenham, 3 Cal. R., 491, Judge Terry says: "I understand the decision to apply only to general elections to fill vacancies occasioned by operation of law; the question involved was the validity of an election held under the Charter of the City of San Francisco, to fill vacancies occasioned, not by resignation, but by reason of the expiration of the term for which the incumbent was elected; the Court properly ruled that the failure of the incumbent to give the required notice could not deprive the people of their right under the law to elect their officers."

In this case the election was not to fill a vacancy occasioned by resignation, but to elect a successor to an incumbent whose term of office had expired by "operation of law."

In what respect was the order of the Supervisors, or a notice by them, necessary or material in this election? Could they have given the electors any other notice than the law had already given them? Could they have conferred upon the electors any other right than they already possessed? Could they have appointed any other time or place for the election? Could they have done anything in relation to the election which the law had not already provided?

For authorities, we refer to Wood's Digest, articles 2, 113 to 2,119; People v. Brenham, 3 Cal. R. 480; Dickey v. Hurlbut, 5 Cal. R. 334; Ex parte, Heath, et al., 3 Hill, 42; People v. Fitch, 1 Cal. 520; People v. Peck et al., 11 Wendell, 604; People v. Porter, 6 Cal. R. 26.

II. It is argued that there was no vacancy in this office at the date of the general election; that the defendant held over under the Act of 1850, concerning the office of County Treasurer, until the first of January, 1858, or until the expiration of the term for which Williams had been elected.

We contend that this position is not tenable, and cannot be maintained upon principle or authority.

So much of the Act concerning Treasurers, passed in 1850, as conferred upon the Court of Sessions the power to fill a vacancy in that office, by appointment for the balance of the term, was afterwards repealed. On the eleventh of April, 1850, after the passage of the above named Act, but at the same session, the Legislature passed an Act concerning Offices; and in providing a mode for filling vacancies in county offices, prescribed that the County Judge should order an election to fill the vacancy. See section 53, Act concerning Offices 1850.

In 1851, on the twenty-eighth of April, another Act concerning Offices was passed, repealing the one of 1850; and section 47 of that Act provides that, in case of a vacancy in the office of District Attorney, County Clerk, or any other county office, except County Judge, the Court of Sessions shall fill such vacancy by appointment until the next general election.

In 1855, on the eighth of February, it having been previously decided by this Court that Courts of Sessions had no authority to exercise such a power, the Legislature amended the 47th section of the Act of 1851, concerning Offices; and again, on the twentieth day of March, 1855, the Legislature passed an Act to create a Board of Supervisors in the counties of this State, etc., and section 20 of that Act prescribes that, in case of a vacancy in any county office, except that of County Judge, the Board of Supervisors shall appoint some suitable person until the next general election.

Now, although the 4th section of the Act concerning County Treasurers, passed in 1850, has never been expressly repealed, yet we think it beyond question that it is clearly repealed by implication.

In order to ascertain whether or not a former statute has been repealed by implication, we think we can safely follow the following rules of law, supported, as we believe, by an unbroken current of authorities, and founded upon the soundest principles of reason and justice.

1st. If a provision in one statute be inserted in another, but varying in its terms, it shows a different intention in the Legislature. (Rutland v. Mendon, 1 Pick. 154-6; opinions of the Justices, 7 Mass. 523.)

People v. Wells.

---

2nd. In construing a statute the Court must consider its policy, and give to it such construction as may appear best calculated to advance the intention of the Legislature. (Allen v. Parrish, 3 Ham. 198.)

3rd. When the provisions of two statutes are so far inconsistent that both cannot be enforced, the latter must prevail. (Ludlow v. Johnson, 3 Ham. 553.)

4th. A special statute is merged in a subsequent general statute, if the provisions of the two are repugnant. (Gage v. Courrier, 4 Pick. 399; 3 How. U. S. C. 636.)

5th. A subsequent statute revising the subject matter of a former one, and evidently intended as a substitute for it, must operate to repeal the former, to the extent to which its provisions are revised. (Commonwealth v. Crowley, 1 Ashmead, 179; Dobbins v. Supervisors, 5 Cal. 414; 11 Mass. 545; Commonwealth v. Kinsball, 21 Pick.— conclusion of the opinion; 3 Alabama, 626; 5 Hill, 221.)

6th. A general system of legislation upon the same subject matter should be taken into consideration, in order to aid in the construction of one statute relating to the same subject. (3 Mass. 17, 21; 8 Mass. 418; 1 Pick. 248; 10 Pick. 235.)

Now the policy of the law is evidently to favor the election, by the people, of all officers; and whenever the Courts can advance this policy, without doing violence to a plain provision of the statute, they will certainly do so.

But again: we say that the Supervisors have not the power to appoint in any instance for the balance of the unexpired term; the only authority they have in the matter is conferred upon them by sections 20 and 25 of the Act concerning Supervisors: the first enables the Board to fill the vacancy until the next general election, and the latter gives to it all powers and jurisdiction, other than criminal, before that time conferred by any law upon the Court of Sessions, so far as the same do not conflict with the provisions of that Act (the Act concerning Boards of Supervisors).

Now it will not be pretended that the Board of Supervisors derives its power to appoint for the unexpired term from the 20th section; then the question arises; is it authorized to do so under the general saving-clause in the 25th section? We contend not. Because that section was only designed to invest the Board with such jurisdiction and power, other than criminal, theretofore conferred upon the Court of Sessions, as might not be in conflict with the preceding sections of the Act. Now section 20 expressly limits their power of appointment, and is in direct conflict with the 4th section of the Act concerning County Treasurer, which enables the Court of Sessions to appoint for the balance of the term.

Then if we are correct in assuming that the 4th section of one Act is in conflict with the 20th section of the other, how can it be contended that the Board of Supervisors had the same unlimited power to appoint in case of a vacancy in the County Treasurer's office as was given to the Court of Sessions in that particular?

An enlargement or extension of such a power beyond the letter of the statute should not be encouraged or allowed.

At best, it is an extraordinary power, and only given to prevent an interregnum in office, and to avoid the inconvenience and expense of special elections.

Messick & Swesey for Respondent.

I. The defendant was lawfully entitled, under the law, to hold the office by virtue of his appointment in any event, until January, A. D. 1858, long after this suit was commenced.

II. But if he could not so hold till January, 1858, still he was entitled and required to hold until some one possessing the right and qualifications to take the office from him, demanded it, and no one demanded it but the relator, and he was not entitled or qualified to take it.

III. The first question to arise, as well under our plan of treating the question, as under the assignment of errors by plaintiff is, up to what time did the appointment of Wells give him a right to possess the office?

The Board of Supervisors of Yuba County appointed him under the authority conferred upon them for that purpose by section 20 of the "Act creating a Board of Supervisors in the counties, &c." (Laws, 1855, p. 55; Wood's Digest, p. 696; and see section 25 of same Act, p. 66; Wood's Digest, p. 697.

These statutes, together with the Act of April, A. D. 1857, defining

People v. Wells.

the time when the persons elected shall enter upon the office, are in pari materia, and as such, must be construed together, so as to harmonize and give effect to each.

Smith, in his "Commentaries on Constitutional Construction," section 639, says: "That several Acts in pari materia, and relating to the same subject, are to be taken together, and comprised in the construction of them, because they are considered as having one object in view, and as acting upon one system, has been declared in several cases." See also section 640.

Again, the rule is laid down in the case of the United States v. Freeman (3 Howard, 564) as follows: "The correct rule of interpretation is, that if divers statutes relate to the same thing, they ought all to be taken into consideration in construing any one of them; and it is an established rule of law, that all Acts in pari materia, are to be taken together, as if they were one law."

In the ninth volume of Bacon's Abridgment, (edition of 1854) page 243, the rule is laid down as follows:

"It is an established rule of law, that all Acts in pari materia are to be taken together, as if they were one law."

Also, Rex v. Locdale, 1 Burrows, 447; 4 D. & East, (4th Term R.) 450.

Hence, under the rule as thus laid down, if section 4 of the Act concerning County Treasurers, secs. 20 and 25 of the Act concerning Boards of Supervisors, and the Act of April, 1857, be read together as one Act, the soundness of our construction is apparent.

All the power with which the Court of Sessions was endowed, except criminal jurisdiction, was transferred to the Board of Supervisors by section 25 of the Act concerning Supervisors, and the tenure and term of their appointee as County Treasurer, must be determined by section 4 of the special Act concerning County Treasurers, defining the term of his office as such appointee. The special Act referring to his office must control, no matter how the other county officers, not specially provided for, may be affected by the latter part of section 20 of the Supervisor Act. (Sedgwick on Statute and Constitutional Construction, page 123.) Again: it would seem that the Legislature intended all along to except this office from any limitation by a general Act; for the same Legislature which passed the Act concerning County Treasurers, and thereby made the office appointive in case of vacancy, passed the Act of 1850, concerning Offices. Laws of 1850, page 209.

People v. Wells.

---

The argument that the appointment reached only to election day, proves too much, and leads to much trouble and absurdity.

The case of the People v. Mott, 3 Cal. 504, cited by appellant, has no bearing on this question. That was decided upon the ground that the office was a constitutional office, and the Constitution provides the term of the appointee, by saying that the commission of Mott "should expire" at the next general election.

In the case of Powers v. Hunt (2 Humphrey, 24) the Constitution itself defined the time which the appointee should hold, and declared after a vacancy occurred, and an appointment thereto, "such office shall be filled by the qualified voters at the first election for any of the county officers."

But again: our construction of the law in this matter is sustained by the Act of April, 1857, in that it makes the term of every person thereafter elected to this office, to commence on the first Monday of January following his election. The fact that no exception is made, shows that none was intended to exist. The fact that by this law every person elected thereto was not to take the office till January following his election, proves that the Legislature did not intend that any person required to take it before, should be elected.

Again: our Constitution, art. 40, sec. 6, provides that the County Treasurers shall be elected or appointed as the Legislature shall direct; and by sec. 7, that the duration of the office, if not declared by law, shall be held during the pleasure of the appointing power for any term not exceeding four years.

We have shown that the duration cannot be held to be fixed by sec. 20, but is by sec. 4. But suppose it was not so fixed; then of course by the Constitution, Wells would hold during the pleasure of the Board. He was appointed in the place of Williams, resigned, and in default of any steps taken by them to provide another to fill the office before January, 1858, their pleasure must be deemed to have been that Wells hold till that time.

II. But if he could not so hold till January, 1858, still he was entitled and required to hold until some one possessing the right and qualifications to take the office from him, demanded it; and no one demanded it but the relator, and he was not entitled or qualified to take it.

The office of County Treasurer is not simply a franchise in the nature of office, the possession of which is only a matter of advantage to the incumbent, but is a trust charged with duties and responsibilities of great importance to the public which cannot be neglected without serious public inconvenience and detriment.

The custody and preservation of the public funds are with this office.

It will not probably be denied that the incumbent might hold as a locum tenens beyond the exact limit of his term; in other words, till his successor was qualified. No person is provided by law to whom he can deliver the office and effects on going out, but "his successor," which more than implies that he shall keep them till a successor is provided, except in case of death, when his legal representatives will take charge of the same, and deliver over to a successor when he appears. Act concerning County Treasurers, sec. 17; Wood's Dig., p. 714, art. 3432.

Even if this were not so, this action being only upon the relation of Fowler, and predicating defendant's liability to oust upon relator's right to enter, is not in the form to oust the defendant simply, and leave the office empty.

But again: if Williams' term was not terminated by election day, but ran to January, 1858, and Wells had no right to hold the balance of the extended term, and there had been any law for electing some one to fill the balance of that unexpired term, we say such an election was a special election. People v. Porter (6 Cal. 38).

Section 30 of the Act concerning Officers (Wood's Dig., p. 559) declares when vacancies occur in office.

Sections 3 and 4 of the Act concerning Elections (Wood's Dig., p. 375) mentions only two kinds of vacancies in office to be filled; one occurring by the expiration of "the full term thereof," and the other by some other means, as death, resignation, etc.

It is clear that every election to fill a vacancy occurring otherwise than by the expiration of "the full term" is, under the Act, a special election, for the validity of which there must be an order therefor by the Board of Supervisors, designating the office to be filled, and the time of holding the election, (section 9, Act concerning Elections, Wood's Dig., p. 375) and a publication of such order as notice for ten days in the county, (Section 6, Act concerning Elections).

There must have been a time fixed by the proper officers; (section 3) that it may have come on the day for general election, cannot dispense with these requirements. People v. Porter, 6 Cal. 28. But none of these things were done, says the report of the Referee.

Hence, unless the period of Wells holding the office was a full term, the election was unauthorized, and the relator could take nothing by virtue thereof.

At the July Term, 1858, BURNETT, J., after stating the facts, delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., concurring.

The only question to determine is, whether there was any vacancy in the office at the time of the general election in 1857. It will be remembered that, before the resignation of Williams, the term of his office had been extended by the special Act of April 28th, 1857.

By the provisions of section 4 of the Act of March 27, 1850, concerning the office of County Treasurer, it is provided that vacancies in the office shall be filled by appointment of the Court of Sessions, and that the appointee should hold for the remainder of the term. (Wood's Dig. 712.) By the Act of March 20, 1855, to create a Board of Supervisors, it is enacted that "when a vacancy shall occur in any county or township office, except the office of County Judge or Supervisor, the Board of Supervisors shall appoint some suitable person, an elector of the county, to fill the vacancy until the next general election." And by the same Act it is also provided that "the Board of Supervisors shall have and exercise, in its county, all jurisdiction and powers, other than criminal, conferred by any law on the Court of Sessions, or heretofore exercised by said Court, under any statute, or by any statute provided to be exercised by said Court, when the same does not conflict with the provisions of this Act." (Wood's Dig., pp. 696-7, secs. 20 and 25.)

It is a well settled rule of construction, that statutes upon the same subject matter must be construed together, and that a general provision must be controlled by one that is special. (Smith's Com., sec. 639; The People v. Phoenix, 6 Cal. Rep. 92; Lucas, Turner & Co. v. Payne & Dewey, 7 Cal. Rep. 96.) The provision that the appointee to fill the office of County Treasurer shall hold for the remainder of the term is special, and relates only to that particular office, while the provisions of the twentieth section of the Act to create a Board of Supervisors are general, and must be controlled by the former. The twenty-fifth section of the latter Act merely confers the power of filling the vacancy upon the Board of Supervisors, but does not in any way affect the duration of the term of the person appointed. The agent for exercising this power is changed, but the power and effect of its exercise remain as before. (The People v. Phoenix, 6 Cal. Rep. 94.) The case referred to fully sustains the view we have taken.

There was no vacancy to fill by election, and no error in the judgment of the District Court.

GRAY v. GRAY et al. AND EATON v. PALMER et al.

A motion to amend the judgment of the Supreme Court must be made within the ten days allowed for filing a petition for rehearing.

Section 510 of the Code, which provides that the party who obtains a judgment shall, within two days after the verdict or judgment, file with the Clerk his bill of costs, does not apply to costs on appeal to the Supreme Court.

The costs upon an appeal are properly the costs in this Court and the costs of making up the appeal in the Court below, including the cost of making out the transcript.

Where a case is remanded for further proceedings, and costs awarded in this Court in general terms, the costs on appeal only are included, leaving the costs of the former trial to abide the event of the suit.

MOTION on the part of plaintiff, Eaton, to correct the remittitur.

Glassell and Leigh for the Motion.

BURNETT, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, at the July Term, 1858 — TERRY, C. J., and FIELD, J., concurring.

The remittitur in this case followed the decision of the Court, and is in strict conformity therewith. If any one or more of the parties had desired a modification of the judgment, as to costs, the proper application should have been made within the ten days allowed for filing a petition for a rehearing.

It is objected on the part of Eaton, who makes this motion, that no bill of costs was filed in this Court, as required by section 510 of the Code. We think that section does not apply to costs upon appeal. The costs upon appeal are properly the costs in this Court, and the costs of making up the appeal in the Court below, including the cost of making out the transcript.

If we were to require a bill of costs to be filed in this Court, the result would be exceedingly oppressive upon members of the bar. The Code requires the bill to be filed within two days after the decision; and as decisions are made from time to time in vacation, attorneys residing out of this city could not file their memorandums of costs within the time limited.

Where a case is remanded for further proceedings, and costs awarded in this Court in general terms, we mean only to include the costs upon appeal, leaving the costs of the former trial to abide the event of the suit.

Motion denied.

CHANDLER v. BOOTH.

Where A, who carried on a printing office, and was indebted to the hands of the office, placed in the hands of B a certain amount of money, with directions to B to pay the hands, which B neglected to do, and where there was no evidence showing that the hands agreed to look to B for their money, or that A was indebted to the hands in an amount equal or approximate to the sum in B's hands, and the money was subsequently attached in the hands of B at the suit of C against A: Held, that the money was liable to the attachment.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Sixth Judicial District, County of Sacramento.

The facts appear in the opinion of the Court.

Wallace & Rayle for Appellant.

Winans & Hyer for Respondent.

TERRY, C. J., delivered the opinion of the Court — BALDWIN, J., concurring.

Plaintiff in a suit against James Allen attached certain moneys in the hands of defendant. After the judgment against Allen the defendant was examined, and having denied his indebtedness to Allen, this suit was instituted by permission of the Court.

It appears that Allen placed in the hands of defendant a State Controller's warrant for the sum of $1,600, with directions to sell the same, and pay the proceeds to the "boys in the office," meaning the employes in a printing office conducted by Allen.

It did not appear that any portion of the proceeds had been so paid; that defendant had ever become liable to the hands in the office, by their knowledge of and consent to the arrangement between defendant and Allen, or that Allen was indebted to such hands in an amount equal or approximating to the sum in the hands of defendant.

We think the evidence produced by the plaintiff sufficient prima facie to entitle him to a verdict, and that the Court erred in ordering a non-suit.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded.

Hardy v. Hunt.

HARDY v. HUNT.

A party placing money in the hands of another for the purpose of making a bet on an election, in the name of the bailee, but for the benefit of the bailor, may retract the illegal act of making the bet, and does not forfeit the money by reason of the illegality of the purpose for which it was deposited.

The bailor does not part with the ownership by allowing it to be used for his benefit, though in the name of another. The money in the hands of the agent remains, as between him and the principal, the money of the principal.

Upon the retraction of the wager, the right to the possession of the money is in the agent or bailee, and he may maintain an action for it where the bailor interposes no objection.

Nor can an attaching creditor of the bailee, levying on the money in the hands of a stakeholder with whom it had been deposited by the bailee, claim that the bailor is estopped by having allowed the bailee to use the money in his own name, when the specific money was in question and could be distinguished. The creditor had not been misled by acts or declarations of the bailor, nor had he given credit to the bailor by reason thereof.

The stakeholder being informed of the rights of the bailor, was bound to protect those rights by resisting, in some way, the proceedings against him as a garnishee, the bailor being no party thereto; nor will he be protected by a judgment improperly entered against him, ordering him to pay the money to the attaching creditor.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Sixth Judicial District, County of Sacramento.

The facts are, that some time in August, 1857, plaintiff gave one O'Brien a check upon a banker, payable to the order of O'Brien, for five hundred dollars. This was done to enable O'Brien to bet that sum with one Harris on the election for Sheriff of Sacramento County. O'Brien undertook to make the bet for plaintiff — the plaintiff charging O'Brien to make the bet in his (O'Brien's) own name, and not disclose the plaintiff's connection with it. O'Brien drew the money on the check and put it in his pocket, together with a small amount of his own, and made the bet. It was agreed that O'Brien and Harris should deposit with the defendant, Hunt, a check on the bank for one hundred dollars each as a forfeit, and the other four hundred dollars should be deposited with Hunt, as stakeholder, on the following Monday. O'Brien then deposited four hundred dollars with Hunt, to be held by him, as stakeholder, in the event that Harris put up his four hundred dollars on the day named. The terms of the bet were reduced to writing — parties appearing to be Harris on the one side, and O'Brien on the other — the paper being signed by both of them.

---

Afterwards, and before the election, attachments issuing out of a Justice's Court against O'Brien were served upon Hunt, under the 126th section of the Practice Act. By agreement between O'Brien and Harris, the latter was permitted to withdraw his five hundred dollars from the hands of Hunt. After the attachment was levied upon Hunt, he was informed by O'Brien that the bet was made for the plaintiff, and Hunt replied that he had suspected as much all along. The suits against O'Brien, in the Justice's Court, went to judgment; and upon proceedings supplementary to execution, Hunt was cited before the Justice by whom the judgments had been rendered. At this examination Hardy desired to appear by counsel, but was informed by the Justice that he had no standing in Court. When Hunt appeared before the Justice he was aware of Hardy's position. Upon a statement of the facts, Hunt was ordered to pay over, and did pay over to the judgment creditors of O'Brien, the sum of four hundred and twenty-two dollars and thirty cents, and the balance of the five hundred dollars he paid over to plaintiff, without prejudice to the merits of this controversy.

The questions raised upon this state of facts are these: First, can Hardy maintain an action for this money deposited by O'Brien in his own name? Second, is Hunt protected by this judgment of the Justice of the Peace in paying over the money?

Winans for Appellant.

1st. No action can be brought by the plaintiff against the stakeholder after the event has been decided. See Vischer v. Yates, 11 Johns. 23.

The action was brought by the loser to recover back his deposit, not by the winner.

The decision of Kent, C. J., in that case, that after the event the loser might recover back his deposit from the stakeholder, was subsequently overruled, and the doctrine laid down, that after the event no action could be maintained against the stakeholder by either party. *Yates v. Hardy v. Hunt.

2nd. Defendant's liability to the creditors of O'Brien was established:

I. By his answer to the Constable when garnisheed, that the money was O'Brien's.

II. By the testimony which he gave, and in accordance with the facts was compelled to give, on his subsequent examination before the Justice, under proceedings supplementary to execution; and

III. By the judgment rendered against him on such examination. Jackson v. Bank of U. S., 10 Penn. State Rep., p. 61, and Drake on Attachments, sec. 469.

3d. A party who permits another to deal with property as if such property were that other's own, is compelled to lose it if that other person sell it or so dispose of it as to place it beyond that party's reach. Dyer v. Pierson, 3 B. & C. 38; Borson v. Coles, 6 Maule & Sel. 23, 24; Williams v. Burton, 3 Bing. 169.

4th. Plaintiff having instructed O'Brien to simulate ownership of the money, and O'Brien's creditors having been thereby induced to seize it as his property, plaintiff is estopped by his own act from now setting up ownership in himself. Mitchell v. Reed, 9 Cal. 204.

5th. There is no privity of contract between plaintiff and defendant.

Plaintiff having drawn his check in favor of O'Brien, which O'Brien endorsed and drew out the money from the bank, thereby made that money O'Brien's own, and O'Brien thus became a debtor to plaintiff for the same; and having, subsequently, deposited it with the stakeholder as his own and not as a special deposit, plaintiff cannot pursue the said money as a fund, nor hold defendant liable for having paid it over to O'Brien's creditors, in obedience to the judgment rendered by the Justice against defendant. The mere casual notice from plaintiff to defendant in the Court room of the Justice, that the money belonged to him, could not create a privity of contract between them. Argenti v. Brannan, 5 Cal. 351, 353.

Smith & Hardy for Respondent.

In the case cited by counsel from 12 Metcalf, 397, the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, so far from sustaining his position, decides emphatically that, "in no proper sense can the stakeholder be regarded as a party to the illegal contract, or in pari delicto. He is a mere depository of both parties, &c." 12 Metcalf, 402, 403.

---

Hardy v. Hunt.

---

In Massachusetts the Supreme Court held: "That an action for money had and received would lie for each party for the amount deposited by him." Ball v. Gilbert, 12 Metcalf, 403, 404.

The opinion of Senator Sanford in Foote v. Yates, cited by counsel, 12 Johnson, is a happy commentary upon the justice of this plea, and we think with that Senator that the plea "never will be tolerated while common sense and common honesty hold their proper dominion among mankind."

As to defendant's liability to the creditors of O'Brien, we hardly deem it worthy serious consideration.

If O'Brien were the agent of respondent, and by virtue of such agency the deposit could be claimed by respondent, O'Brien's creditors certainly could not attach it.

The fact that O'Brien was in possession of the money, and that he called it his, did not give any rights to persons who were not misled by some act of respondent. Black v. Zachariah, 3 Howard, (S. C. R.) 511.

In "The United States v. Vaughn, 3 Binney, 394," an attachment had been levied on shares of stock standing on the books of the bank in the name of the debtor, but the stock belonged to other parties. The decision was that the attachment was improperly levied and therefore was defeated.

In this case there is no pretense of fraud or injury. No suspicion of interest in O'Brien, but simply a naked agency; and no pretense that respondent ever intimated to any one that the money was O'Brien's; respondent never represented it as such. He only told O'Brien to bet for him with his money, and O'Brien never gained credit, nor were the creditors of O'Brien deceived in any way.

It is true, as argued by counsel, that a party who permits another to deal with property as his own, to the injury of another, must lose his property. But the Court below negatives every pretense of injury to the attaching creditors by any permission of respondent.

In the case of Mitchell v. Reed, 9 Cal. 204, the rule was carried to its fullest extent, if the decision did not go beyond the law; but in that case, Mitchell had repeatedly represented the property to be Haskell's, and had as often denied that the liquors seized were his own. His declarations were open, express and notorious. Here, the only words importing anything like admission of O'Brien's right was a confidential charge that the bet be made in O'Brien's name; but plaintiff never called it O'Brien's money; never declared that it was not his own but another's; nor did his confidential order to his agent go to the ears of the attaching creditors.* They acted on appearances, not on admissions; nor were those appearances sufficient.

It is urged, last, that there is no privity between Hardy and Hunt, and therefore, that no suit can be maintained. This question is put at rest by the general rule of agency: that, though a contract be made by an agent in his own name, the principal may assume it and sue or be sued on it as if his name appeared; the only question being, Was it the principal's contract?

In Vischer v. Yates, 11 Johnson, p. 28, the very case at bar was decided by Chancellor Kent.

In that case the bet was made in the name of the agent, who also bet the money of other parties in the same bet, and all in his own name; and the Court allowed each principal to sue for his own money so wagered.

This doctrine was afterwards affirmed in the Court of Errors of New York, in Foote v. Yates, 12 Johnson, p. 10. See also, Duke of Norfolk v. Worthy, 1 Campbell, N. P. 337.

This Court adhered to the same rule in the case of the People v. Wright's Adm'r, (Houghtaling) 7 Cal. 348.

In Massachusetts, where an agent had bet off money as his own which had been entrusted to him as a carrier, the principal was permitted to and did sue and recover the same from the winner. Mason v. Waite, 17 Mass. R. 560.

BALDWIN, J., after stating the facts, delivered the opinion of the Court — FIELD, J., concurring.

There can be no doubt that the wager was illegal and void, as against public policy; the direct effect of such wagers being to affect the purity of elections. This has been often — indeed, we believe, universally—held, whenever the question has arisen. If this suit had been to recover a wager of this sort, the action could not be maintained. But this is not the question: The party depositing the money for this illegal purpose, may retract the illegal act. The money is not forfeited for the benefit of the stakeholder. (Vischer v. Yates, 11 John. 29.) He holds it as bailee of the depositor, who may resume it at any time before it is paid over to the winner. In this case, it seems, the wager was terminated before the election, by the proceedings taken at the instance of O'Brien's creditors.

Hardy v. Hunt.

It is not necessary to consider the illegal nature of these proceedings further, so far as Hardy is concerned; for the case stands as to him as if this money was placed by him in the hands of O'Brien for a lawful purpose. It would then be the ordinary case of one man putting in the hands of another a sum of money to be used for a particular purpose, by the bailee, in his own name; or, as was said by the Chief Justice from the Bench, like the case of an attorney depositing his client's money in bank in his own name, at the request, express or implied, of the principal. In such case, as to third persons, there is no reason for saying that the money is liable for the debts of the attorney. The doctrine of estoppel in pais has no application. If A consents, for one particular purpose, that B may use his property as his, A's own, as to that purpose, those dealing with B on the faith that the property is B's, may hold A to this representation; or, if A represents to C that particular property is D's, C may hold this as an estoppel if he deals with D on the faith of this declaration. But this does not authorize others, to whom the representation is not made, especially those who know the true state of facts, to deal with the property or attach or levy on it as the custodian's own. The doctrine of estoppel in pais is thus stated by Greenleaf on Evidence, vol. 1st, sec. 204:

“With regard, then, to the conclusiveness of admissions, it is first to be considered that the genius and policy of the law favor the investigation of truth by all expedient and convenient methods; and that the doctrine of estoppels, by which further investigation is precluded, being an exception to the general rule founded on convenience and for the prevention of fraud, is not to be extended beyond the reasons on which it was founded. It is also to be observed that estoppels bind only parties and privies — not strangers.” (See note 2 for illustrations, Coke Lit., 302-a.)

Hardy v. Hunt.

---

Again, in sec. 207, the author says:

“Admissions which have been acted on by others are conclusive against the party making them, in all cases between him and the person whose conduct he has thus influenced. It is of no importance whether they were made in express language to the person himself or implied from the open and general conduct of the party. For in the latter case the implied declaration may be considered as addressed to every one, in particular, who may have occasion to act upon it. In such cases the party is estopped, on grounds of public policy and good faith, from repudiating his own representations.”

These citations show clearly that there is no such doctrine in the law of evidence as that a casual or other declaration or act, made or done by a party, which another may happen to hear of, which would authorize the latter, without seeking further information, to go on and act as if it were true, and hold the author concluded by it. If this were so, the number of parol estoppels might be so enlarged as to make almost every act or admission an estoppel. It would be scarcely safe to say or do anything in reference to his rights or property, lest he might be held to some estoppel in favor of parties who had no relations with him at the time of these acts or declarations. (See also, Black v. Zachariah, 3 How. U. S. 511; U. S. v. Vaughn, 3 Binney, 394.)

There is no difficulty in distinguishing this money. The plaintiff did not part with the ownership by allowing it to be used for his benefit, though in the name of another. It was to be used for this one purpose — not invested, or changed, or further dealt with. The money in the hands of the agent remained, as between him and the principal, the money of the principal. Upon the retraction of the wager, if not before, the right to its possession was in the plaintiff. This identical money was, it seems, deposited with the stakeholder. We cannot see why the plaintiff did not have a right of action for it — especially as O'Brien interposes no objections. And so are the authorities (11

Hardy v. Hunt.

John. 28; 12 John. 10; 1 Campbell, 337; 17 Mass. 560; 7 Cal. 348.)

The judgment of the Justice was no protection to Hunt. Hardy was not a party to the judgment. On the contrary, the Justice refused to permit him to contest. Hunt, knowing the facts — if he is to be considered as a garnishee — should have set them up in some way, in resistance to the proceeding; if necessary, perhaps he might have filed an interpleader for his protection; or at least, appealed from this irregular and unauthorized judgment. In Oldham v. Ledhelter (1 How. Miss. R. 47) the Court of Errors and Appeals of Mississippi says: "The garnishee is regarded by the law somewhat in the light of a trustee, and is bound to protect, by legal and appropriate steps, the rights of all parties to the goods or credits attached in his hands; and if, after notice, though execution may have been awarded against him, he shall satisfy the judgment, it will be in his own wrong, and constitutes no valid defense to the claim of the assignee. This position is fully sustained by an authority in 1 Washington C. C. R. 425; and in 4 Greenleaf, 435, it was held, etc. The decision in the case of Prescott v. Hall (17 Johnson, 290) is in accordance with these authorities." In this case it was held the garnishee should have protected himself by a bill of interpleader; and failing to make the defense, he was held liable. Yarborough v. Thompson (3 S. and M. 291) affirms the same general doctrine.

If it be contended that the title to this money passed by a levy of the attachment, the answer is, that if this could be under any circumstances, it did not in this instance, because the money was not the property of O'Brien.

On the whole case, we think the judgment should be affirmed.

People v. Fogg.

---

PEOPLE ex rel. TALLANT & WILDE, v. FOGG, TREASURER
OF CONTRA COSTA COUNTY.

A writ will not lie against a County Treasurer to compel him to pay interest due on county bonds.

The Treasurer is not an independent officer in respect to his charge and control of the county funds; but in his disbursements, acts on the warrants of the Auditor on claims audited by the Board of Supervisors.

In such a case, the Treasurer is not, in respect to interest money, placed in any direct relation with the creditors; and he is not intrusted with a mere ministerial duty of holding it or paying it to them on demand.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Seventh Judicial District, County of Contra Costa.

This was an application for a writ of mandamus against the Treasurer of the County of Contra Costa. The application is based upon the following grounds:

The County of Contra Costa, having a large outstanding indebtedness in the shape of warrants drawn on the Treasurer, the Legislature of this State, on the fourteenth day of February, 1855, passed an Act to fund such indebtedness, entitled "An Act to fund the Debts of Contra Costa County, and to provide for the payment of the same."

Pursuant to the Act, such warrants were presented to Commissioners therein provided for, and by them examined and determined to be true and correct warrants. That the said warrants were delivered up and surrendered by the holders of them; and bonds with coupons annexed thereto were thereupon issued, as directed by the said Act, and delivered to the holders of the said warrants as a substitute therefor.

The interest, for the payment of which the coupons were annexed, was made payable on the first days of January and July in each year, at the city of New York, without naming any particular place in that city at which, or any person by whom, to be paid.

By the 9th section of that Act, in addition to the ordinary taxes, a special tax, to be called the interest tax, of thirty cents on each one hundred dollars of taxable property, was directed to be collected in the same manner with ordinary revenues of said county, for the payment of the interest upon the said bonds; which tax was to be paid to the Treasurer of the county.

On the fourteenth of April, 1858, there was in the hands of the defendant, as Treasurer, about $3,000 of this tax. The relators were then, and still are, the holders of a large amount of said bonds, upon which there was then due for interest the sum of $3,100, and for which they then held coupons for that amount. On that day they presented such coupons to the defendant, at his office in said county, and demanded from him payment of the same, or so much of them as the interest fund or tax in his hands for that purpose would pay; which the defendant then and there refused to do.

It further appears, that the interest on the said bonds had been paid up to January 1st, 1856, in the city of New York; but all the interest accruing and due on the said bonds on the first of July, 1856, and since that time, has not been paid; nor have any funds been sent to that city for the payment of such interest, nor any arrangement there made for such payment.

The writ was denied by the Court below, and the relators appealed to this Court.

Currey & Reynolds for Appellants.

I. It is objected by the defendant that, as County Treasurer, he is not authorized to apply such funds to the payment of the coupons, or to the interest upon the bonds, until the Board of Supervisors shall have first made arrangements for such payment; and then, only upon the warrant of the County Auditor, or the order of the Board of Supervisors.

This objection involves the construction of the Funding Act of 1855, (Laws of 1855, page 9) under which these bonds and coupons were issued.

The bonds issued under that Act were founded upon warrants previously drawn by the Auditor of the county upon the Treasurer, which were then an existing and outstanding indebtedness against the county; and which the Treasurer was bound to pay on demand, without further action by any officer or Board of the county. He was the only officer who could pay them, or upon whom any demand could be made by the holders of them for payment.

The Act for funding this indebtedness was a proposition on the part of the county to the holders of these warrants to substitute bonds in their place, with certain conditions and covenants. When the holder of the warrants accepted the proposition, it then became a contract between the parties, binding upon both. Among the conditions, the time of payment of the principal was to be extended to the year 1870; and the interest to be paid on the first days of January and July in each and every year. There are no terms of the Act, or stipulation in the contract, for the exchange of these securities, by which the holders of the warrants were to relinquish any of their former rights. The warrants with interest were to be paid out of the general fund, on demand by the Treasurer. The interest upon the bonds is to be paid at fixed periods out of a particular fund, expressly created and to be applied by the Act and the terms of the contract for that purpose. The holder of the warrants received payment directly from the Treasurer, and looked only to him for such payment. That right has never been relinquished by him in the exchange under the Act; and he has, therefore, the right to require the payment of his interest upon his bonds from the same direct source and from the same officer, especially when that officer is made and is, in fact, the only legal custodian of that fund, as of all other funds belonging to the county.

People v. Fogg.

It is true, the Act of 1855 does not in express terms direct who shall pay the interest upon the bonds. The Treasurer is to receive and pay out all the moneys of the county. (Wood's Dig., p. 712, art. 3421.) The 9th section of the Act of 1855 requires that the tax constituting the interest fund shall, when collected, be immediately paid to the Treasurer, to be by him applied to the payment of the interest on the bonds. This officer was required by law to pay the warrants on their presentment, which were his authority for such payment. That officer then being the legal receiver, and the only officer authorized to pay out any of the moneys of the county, was bound to pay the interest on the bonds, on the holder presenting to him the coupons, which are also his authority for such payment.

That the Treasurer must pay this interest upon the presentment of the coupons to him, is further made clear from the 4th section of the Act. That section declares that the Treasurer shall cancel the cou*pons on their being paid.* Now, if he do not pay them, how is he to know they are paid, or to have their possession, so as to cancel them? If the County Judge or any other officer were to pay them, that officer would have the possession of them; and then, in that event, the Act would have directed the officer paying and having their possession to cancel them.

But it is contended on the part of the defendant, that by the 10th section of the Act of 1855, the appellants should have first applied to the Supervisors; and that payment of the coupons could only be made upon their warrant.

This position we deny, and insist that it is against every fair construction of the Act.

If it requires a warrant from the Supervisors, on whom shall it be drawn, or to whom shall it be payable? Certainly not on the Treasurer to give him power to pay, for that power is conferred on him by his general duties and powers as Treasurer. He does not require it to authorize him to pay the coupons, if he be the proper officer to pay; because the coupons themselves are his authority to pay under the Act of 1855, they being a substitute and in the place of the warrants which were payable on presentment, without any further warrant or direction from any source.

On a careful examination of the Act of 1855, it will be found that the Treasurer is the only person to pay these coupons, and that he must pay them to the holder on presentment and demand of payment from the interest fund in his hands, without any further directions or authority from any other officer or Board of the county.

The first part of section 10 of the Act directs that the Supervisors shall make arrangements for the payment of the interest; and the exercise of the power so conferred upon them depends upon certain conditions; and those conditions, which set in operation these powers, can only exist when the tax authorized and directed by the ninth section of the Act is first raised, and is insufficient. By that section, the tax raised and constituting this interest fund is to be paid to the Treasurer, and by him applied to the payment of the coupons; and in the event that fund is insufficient, then the Supervisors are to make the arrangements directed in the tenth section; then the conditions exist to set in operation the powers of the Supervisors under that Act. Therefore, then, under the tenth section:

1. The Supervisors are, sixty days before the interest becomes due, to see if there be sufficient of the interest fund in the hands of the Treasurer to pay such interest. If there be, then they have nothing further to do; if not, then they are to make arrangements to have sufficient in that fund for that purpose, and that section points out the way for those officers to proceed.

2. It will be perceived that there are different funds belonging to the county, which are distinct and separate, one from the other, and created for different objects; and so to be kept and disbursed by the Treasurer, although that Treasurer may be one and the same person; and therefore, that officer is required to keep the interest fund wholly separate and distinct from the general fund, in the same manner as if such fund were kept by a different officer or person.

If, therefore, the Supervisors on examination find that the interest fund in the hands of the Treasurer is insufficient to meet the interest on the bonds, they are then required to draw their warrant on the Treasurer of the general fund for such sum as will supply the deficiency of the interest fund; and it is the duty of the Treasurer of the general fund to pay such warrant; that is, as the Treasurer of the general fund, he must, upon the authority of that warrant, transfer the amount of such warrant from the general fund to the interest fund for the payment of such interest. But yet, as the Treasurer of the county, and general custodian of all the moneys of the county, he still holds the same money, it only being transferred from one to the other fund, as required by law.

3. In the event that both of these funds prove inadequate to pay the interest, then the Supervisors are to make such contracts and arrangements, in the name and behalf of and for said county, as may be necessary for the payment of said interest, and the protection of the faith of the said county. By this power they may loan the money, or by any other legitimate means may procure the necessary amount to provide for the deficiency of this interest fund, and protect the faith of the county; and when so procured and provided for, the amount must be paid to the Treasurer; and no other officer by any law is authorized to have the custody of this, or of any other money of the county, or to pay out or disburse them for any purpose.

People v. Fogg.

---

The respondent's counsel say that: "It is made the duty of the Supervisors to have first drawn from the County Treasurer all the money in the interest fund to meet the maturing coupons."

The Act nowhere so declares. The directions in the Act to the Supervisors first to draw their warrant, are contained only in the proviso at the end of the tenth section, which is as follows:

"Provided, That said County Judge (amended By-laws, 1855, p. 211) shall have first drawn from the County Treasurer such sums as may be in the County Treasury subject to and provided for the payment of said interest by the provisions of this Act."

This proviso applies only to the last clause of that section; to that part which authorizes and empowers the Supervisors to make contracts and arrangements for the protection of the faith of the county, in the event that the interest fund and general fund shall be insufficient. This proviso was added by the Legislature to prohibit them from loaning or otherwise pledging the credit of the county, until they had first exhausted the interest fund and general fund for the payment of the interest; and only in the event that those funds were insufficient, could they proceed to raise any money by loan or contract.

W. W. Theobalds for Respondent.

As against the County Treasurer, this writ of mandamus is unauthorized by law and misdirected. "This writ," says Blackstone, vol. 3d, p. 110, Comm., "issues in all cases where the party hath a right to have anything done, and hath no other specific means of compelling its performance." It is, in its nature, "a command, directed to any person, corporation or Court, requiring some particular thing which appertains to their office and duty," and which is "consonant to right and justice." It issues, says our Practice Act, sections 467 and 468, "to compel the performance of an act which the law specially enjoins as a duty resulting from an office, trust or station," and "in all cases where there is not a plain, speedy and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law." It only lies where there is a "specific legal right, and no specific legal remedy." People v. Olds, 3 Cal. Rep., p

171, and cases there cited, particularly the full note in Fish v. Weatherwax, 2d Johnson's New York Cases. Officers vested with discretionary powers can be forced to act, but not directed how to act. Mere ministerial agents can only be compelled to do specific legal duties. And the right to demand their performance must be complete and perfect, not inchoate. If there is any other remedy, by action or otherwise, or any other act or acts or conditions precedent to be performed, these modes and means must first be tried before this writ can issue and compel the performance of a particular act by a subordinate ministerial officer. Only on failure of all other means and remedies, and on the due fulfillment of all conditions precedent, can this writ be legitimately employed. It is purely an exceptional, supplementary and residuary remedy to prevent "a failure of justice and defect of police." As authorities, see cases just cited, and People v. Trustees of Brooklyn, 1 Wendell, p. 318; Boyce v. Russell, 2 Cowen, p. 444; and People v. Bell, 4 Cal. Rep., pp. 178 and 179. Before this writ issued in this case, there should have preceded it the due performance of all the conditions of the law merchant, of the law under which appellants claim, and of the contract on the face of the coupons. The Treasurer is the receiving and disbursing officer of the funds of the county; but only as a mere ministerial agent and special depository, under the orders and warrants of the Supervisors and Auditor. (Wood's Digest, p. 713, sec. 6, and pp. 715 and 716, sec. 1, of Act of 1857.) The direction to the Treasurer to pay on order or warrant excludes his right to pay without order or warrant. Such is the general law that prescribes his mode of action, and the duties of his office. But the special law that defines what he is to do, as to this claim, and fixes the rights and duties of the coupon-holders, as well as those of the Supervisors, and binds them all, being at once the contract and the law of the contract, vis: the Act of February 14th, 1855, obligates the Treasurer, in section 13, to follow precisely and only the mode pointed out in said law — and, while in section 9 it appropriates the interest fund to the coupon-holders, prescribes in section 10 prior duties upon the County Judge, or, as amended by Act of April 30th, 1855, upon the Board of Supervisors, before the Treasurer can be compelled to act. These prerequisites to be observed under the general law and under the special law of this case are conditions precedent to the Treasurer's action, and especially to his enforced action by this writ.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., concurring.

We have felt a strong disposition to reverse this case, and give the relator the relief he seeks; for, upon the transcript, it seems eminently due, as well to the relator as the character of the County of Contra Costa, that the interest on the bonds of the county should be paid according to the contract. But we are unable to see how we can do this consistently with law.

The remedy of mandamus against the Treasurer rests upon the idea that he has the control of this money, and is merely charged with the ministerial duty of paying it out to the holders of these coupons on demand. But this is not so. By the Act of 1855, "to Fund the Debt of Contra Costa County, and to provide for the payment of the same," (Acts of 1855, p. 9) it is provided:

"SEC. 10. It shall be the duty of the County Judge of said County of Contra Costa, to make certain arrangements for the payment of the interest on said bonds when the same shall fall due, at least sixty days before the time of payment; and in the event that the said interest fund is insufficient, the said County Judge shall draw a warrant on the County Treasurer of Contra Costa County on the general fund of said county for such purpose, and said County Treasurer shall forthwith pay such warrant; and in the event that these funds prove inadequate, the said County Judge is hereby authorized, empowered and required to make such contracts and arrangements in the name, behalf, and for said county as may be necessary for the payment of said interest, and the protection of the faith of the County of Contra Costa; provided, that said County Judge shall have first drawn from the County Treasurer such sums as may be in the County Treasury subject to, and provided for, the payment of said interest by the provisions of this Act."

"SEC. 13. This Act shall take effect from and after its passage, and it shall not be lawful for the County Treasurer to pay or liquidate any of the indebtedness of said County of Contra Costa, which occurred prior to the first day of February, 1855, in any other manner than herein provided."

People v. Fogg.

---

By an amendatory Act, passed February 14th, 1855, (p. 211) and before, so far as appears, any action of the creditors under the first statute, (sec. 1) it is declared that section tenth of said Act shall read as follows: "It shall be the duty of the Board of Supervisors of Contra Costa County to make certain arrangements for the payment of the interest on said bonds, when the same shall fall due, at least sixty days before the time of payment: and in the event that the said interest fund is insufficient, the Board of Supervisors shall draw a warrant on the County Treasurer of Contra Costa County, on the general fund of said county, for such purposes; and said County Treasurer shall forthwith pay such warrant; and in the event that those funds prove inadequate, the Board of Supervisors is hereby authorized, empowered and required to make such contract and agreements in the name, behalf, and for said county, as may be necessary for the payment of said interest, and the protection of the faith of the County of Contra Costa; provided, that the said Board of Supervisors shall have first drawn from the County Treasurer such sums as may be in the County Treasury, subject to and provided for the payment of said interest by the provisions of said Act."

By the general law (Wood's Digest, 713-716) the Treasurer is not an independent officer in respect to his charge and control of the county funds, but, in his disbursements, acts on the warrants of the Auditor on claims audited by the Board of Supervisors. Leaving out of consideration, therefore, the Act of 1858, it sufficiently appears that the Treasurer is not, in respect to this interest money, placed in any direct relation with the creditors, and that he is not trusted with a mere ministerial act of holding it for or paying it to them on demand. It follows, therefore, that a writ of mandamus directed to the Treasurer is not the proper remedy. (4 Cal. 178-9.)

The judgment is affirmed.

Moore v. Sample.

MOORE et al. v. SEMPLE *et als.

No errors can be assigned, which this Court will notice, on an instrument not embodied in the statement on appeal, or a bill of exceptions. The omission of the words "be sold" in a judgment of foreclosure, after the description of the premises, is a mere clerical error, which will not affect the judgment.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District, County of Colusa.

This was an action brought to obtain a decree of foreclosure upon note and mortgage, and a sale of the mortgaged premises.

Semple and five others made a joint and several note, payable to Moore & Allen on the fourteenth day of July, 1856. Afterward, Semple executed a mortgage to secure the payment of the note, and further agreed to pay attorney's fees. Moore & Allen brought a joint action on these instruments, and Semple filed a demurrer for several grounds. But, before the trial, a stipulation in writing was entered into between the plaintiffs and all the defendants, that a joint judgment should be rendered against all the defendants for the principal, interest and attorney's fee—the attorney's fee being liquidated, and the amount paid; the interest also fixed at a different rate, and a different sum on which said interest should be calculated was also agreed upon. This agreement was not embodied in a statement on appeal, nor was there any bill of exceptions setting it forth, showing in what manner the agreement came before the Court below. The agreement simply forms a part of the record sent up without explanation.

The decree of foreclosure after the entry of the judgment against the defendants, proceeded as follows: "And it is further ordered, adjudged and decreed, that the said mortgage be foreclosed, and that the said mortgaged premises, to wit, all the right, title * * of C. D. Semple of, in, and to" (here follows a description of the premises) at the end of which the words "be sold" were omitted.

The points made by appellants in this Court were:

1st. That the decree differed from the terms of the written agreement of the parties.

---

Fremont v. Early.

---

2d. The decree is void for uncertainty, in this: it does not direct the mortgaged premises to "be sold."

D. C. Semple, in person, for Appellants.

J. S. Belcher for Respondents.

FIELD, J., at the April Term, 1858, delivered the opinion of the Court—TERRY, C. J., and BURNETT, J., concurring.

The agreement inserted among the papers forms no part of the record. It is not embodied in any statement or bill of exceptions, and possesses, therefore, no verity upon which any errors can be assigned which this Court can notice. Gates v. Buckingham, 4 Cal. 286; Davis v. Stratton et al., and Flint v. Haight et al., January Term, 1856.

The decree is substantially for the sale of the mortgaged premises. It specifically directs judgment for the amount of the note, the application of the proceeds of sale of the premises to its satisfaction, the disposition of any surplus, and execution for any deficiency. The omission of the words "be sold" after the description of the premises, is a mere clerical error, which does not affect the decree.

Judgment affirmed, with five per cent. damages.

FREMONT v. THE COUNTY OF MARIPOSA AND EARLY, SHERIFF.

A taxpayer cannot enjoin the collection of the tax due the county, on the ground that he has, in former years, paid into the County Treasury taxes assessed on his property, which were illegally assessed and collected.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Thirteenth Judicial District, County of Mariposa.

This was a bill filed by the plaintiff to restrain the collection of taxes by the Sheriff for the year 1856, upon the ground that taxes for the years 1851-2-3 and 4 had been illegally exacted of plaintiff and paid by him into the County Treasury; and that the county was insolvent. The bill prays that this amount (some $13,800) may be adjudged a debt against the county, and so much as necessary set off against the taxes assessed against the plaintiff for the year 1856, and a decree for the balance rendered in his favor. The defendants answered, denying generally that any illegal tax had been exacted of the plaintiff; and also, that the county was insolvent. There was no proof taken, the Court passing upon the motion for the injunction on bill and answer. The Court below granted the injunction and defendants appealed to this Court.

Wade & Flower for Appellants.

C. T. Botts for Respondent.

BALDWIN, J., after stating the facts, delivered the opinion of the Court — FIELD, J., concurring.

If the collection of the taxes of the plaintiff could be enjoined at all, it is clear that they could not be under the facts of this case.

If every taxpayer could interfere in this way to arrest the proceedings of the Tax Collector, upon the pretense that he held an unliquidated claim on the county, it is evident that it would embarrass and confuse the whole fiscal system of the county. No apology could be given for such a proceeding, except that it was necessary to protect the plaintiff from what would otherwise be an irremediable evil. But this could not be, unless the county were shown to be insolvent. This has not been shown in this case; for, though the charge is made, it is denied, and there is no proof of it.

The order for granting the injunction is dissolved, and the cause remanded.

Stephens v. Mansfield.

STEPHENS v. MANSFIELD.

Plaintiff was in possession of a tract of land (a part of the public domain of the United States) under a deed of purchase from another, who at the date of the deed was also in possession, which deed was duly recorded; and after being so possessed for several months, he made a verbal sale of the land to one H, for the consideration of $600; and H, after remaining in possession for two years, sold the premises to defendant: Held, that plaintiff's transfer of the land to H did not amount to an abandonment.

There can be no such thing as an abandonment of land in favor of a particular individual, and for a consideration.

Abandonment must be made by the owner, without being pressed by any duty, necessity or utility to himself, but simply because he desires no longer to possess the thing; and further, it must be made without any desire that any other person shall acquire the same.

Where plaintiff had possession under a deed duly recorded, and the defendant having entered with notice of, and in subordination to, plaintiff's title, cannot be permitted to deny it in an action of ejectment.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Eleventh Judicial District, County of El Dorado.

This was an action of ejectment, for a lot in Placerville.

From the findings of the Court it appears, that in 1852, plaintiff purchased the premises in question from one Jane A. Shearer, who was in possession; that his deed was recorded, and that he remained in possession under it for some months, when he made a verbal sale of the lot to one Alex. Hunter, for the sum of six hundred dollars, to be paid thereafter, with interest at the rate of two or three per cent. per month; that in July, 1853, about three hundred dollars of the purchase money was paid by Hunter, and the balance has not been paid; that Hunter put valuable improvements on the lot and occupied it, claiming to be owner for about two years, when he sold to defendant.

The Court below gave judgment for defendant, upon the ground that the land in dispute was a part of the public domain of the United States, and that the act of the plaintiff in transferring the possession to Hunter amounted to abandonment of his interest in the premises.

Robinson & Beatty for Appellant.

1. The Court below erred in treating a verbal sale of land as an abandonment.

2. The judgment is inconsistent with the facts found, and erroneous.

Sanderson & Hewes for Respondent.

The points upon which respondent relies are briefly as follows:

1. That the verbal contract between Hunter and Stephens conferred a valid title.

2. That if that contract was within the statute of frauds, and consequently void, that Stephens must be presumed to have and actually did abandon all right to the lot long before we became the possessors of it.

The bargain, sale or arrangement made between Hunter and Stephens, transferred Stephens' rights to the lot to Hunter.

The plaintiff cannot deny the recitals of the deed from Jane Shearer; he claims under it. That deed admits the fee of the lot to be in the United States; besides the "Settler's Act" presumes it to be public land; the pleading and proof establish that fact. In 1852, then, Stephens was a mere occupant of the land; had simply the right of possession; was a tenant at will of the United States.

"The occupancy of the public lands of the United States constitutes a tenancy at will." Duncan v. Potts, 5 Ala. 82.

"The interest of a tenant at will in real estate is not such an interest as can be assigned; an agreement to transfer such interest is not therefore within the statute of frauds." Whittemore v. Foster, 4 N. H. 484.

"A verbal sale of a pre-emptor's claim to improvements, to a purchaser who takes immediate possession, confers a valid title." Bledsoe v. Cains, 10 Texas, 455.

The Legislature have treated "possessory claims to public lands" as personal property, and so declared it.

In 1853, the Legislature provided for mortgages "upon possessory claims to public lands, all buildings and improvements on such lands, all quartz claims, and all other such personal property, &c." Comp. Laws, 711.

True, that this Court, in Winans v. Christy, 4 Cal. R. 70, says that defendants in ejectment are not permitted to show that the fee of the land is in the United States. But in Anderson v. Parker, 6 Cal. R. 197, they very clearly intimate, if they do not expressly hold a different doctrine. And Winans v. Christy does not apply to this case; the defendant does not offer to show that the fee is in the United States; the plaintiff does that when he introduces his deed.

Stephens v. Mansfield.

Again: Hunter and Stephens treated Stephens' interest in the lot as personalty. We conceive that an agreement between parties will be presumed valid, as amounting to a binding contract, if such presumption violates no rule of law.

We submit also, that if the agreement between Stephens and Hunter is susceptible of such a construction, that the subsequently acquired rights to the lot by innocent third persons can be preserved, that that construction will be given to it; and in this connection we are brought to an examination of the second point, or the question of abandonment. The District Judge bases his opinion and decision of the case solely upon this point, and we deem it unnecessary to more than refer the Court to his opinion.

Every circumstance in the case shows that Stephens gave up, abandoned, left (without the intention of returning) the lot to Hunter.

"The inference of abandonment may arise from a single act, and determines the right of property from the day of the act." Davis v. Butler, 6 Cal. 510.

"Where a party can show no title but a prior possession, that will fail, if it be shown that he voluntarily abandoned his possession without the intention of returning." Bequette v. Caulfield, 4 Cal. 278.

We think that the case of Moore v. Small, 9 Barr, 194, recognizes the doctrine, that one may for a consideration abandon an inchoate right to land.

This case was decided at the July Term, 1858, but was suspended by a petition for a new hearing, which was denied at the subsequent April Term.

TERRY, C. J., after stating the facts, delivered the opinion of the Court — FIELD, J., concurring.

We think the ruling of the Court below clearly erroneous. Admitting the interest of plaintiff in the premises such as could be divested by abandonment, there can be no such thing as abandonment in favor of a particular individual, or for a consideration. Such act would be a gift or sale. An abandonment is "the relinquishment of a right, the giving up of something to which we are entitled." Bouv.

Waring v. Crow.

"Abandonment must be made by the owner, without being pressed by any duty, necessity or utility to himself, but simply because he desires no longer to possess the thing; and further, it must be made without any desire that any other person shall acquire the same; for if it were made for a consideration it would be a sale or barter, and if without consideration, but with an intention that some other person should become the possessor, it would be a gift." Ib.

Stephens transferred the possession to Hunter for the consideration of six hundred dollars; this fact is entirely inconsistent with the idea of abandonment.

The question as to the ownership in fee of the land in controversy could not arise in this action. Plaintiff had possession under a deed duly recorded, and the defendant, having entered with notice of, and in subordination to plaintiff's title, cannot be permitted to deny it in this action.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded.

WARING v. CROW.

In an action of ejectment to recover an undivided interest in a mining claim, it is not necessary to make parties defendants in such action, who are in possession of such claim, holding other undivided interests, and who claim no right to the interest sued for.

It is only necessary, in such a case, for the plaintiff to sue the party who interferes with his rights.

Where the Court instructed the jury in such action, that "where an abandonment is sought to be established by the act of the party, the intention alone governs; and if such party leave a mining claim, with the intention not to return, his abandonment is as complete, if it exist for a minute or a second, as though it continued for years; but if he left with the intention of returning, he might do so at any time within five years; provided, there was no rule, usage or custom of miners of such a notorious character as to raise a presumption of an intention to abandon:" Held, that the question of abandonment was fairly left to the jury.

The purchaser of a mining claim can only acquire, by such purchase, such right or title as his vendor had at the time of sale.

Possession of one partner or tenant in common of a mining claim is the possession of all.

---

Waring v. Crow.

---

Where the tenant in common, or partner, goes away and remains absent from the premises, leaving his associates in possession, it creates no presumption of abandonment; nor does his refusal to pay, or delay in paying the expenses of the business, or the assessments, create of itself a forfeiture.

In order to the enforcement of the forfeiture of the interest in the claim, some appropriate action by suit must be taken to liquidate the demand, and sell the property, or there must be at least clear and unequivocal proof of abandonment.

The mere passive acquiescence of the other partners or tenants in common in a sale of the interest of the plaintiff by a party having no title, cannot confer any upon the vendee.

Where a party's rights to a mining claim are fixed by the rules of property, which are a part of the general law of the land, they cannot be divested by any mere neighborhood custom or regulation.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Ninth Judicial District, County of Shasta.

This was an action of ejectment to recover possession of one undivided fourth interest in four mining claims, and also one undivided forty-eighth part of a flume for conducting water to said claims.

The complaint alleges that the plaintiff, on the first day of June, 1857, was the owner and in possession of, and ever since has been and still is, the owner of the following described premises situated in said County of Shasta, to wit: one undivided fourth part of four mining claims situated on Lone Hill, etc., also the one undivided forty-eighth part of a certain flume leading (conducting) water from the Clear Creek Ditch to said Lone Hill, for the purpose of working the mining claims on said hill, etc.; which said one-fourth interest in said four mining claims, and one forty-eighth interest in said flume, was and is of the value of eight hundred dollars. That said defendant, on the first day of July, 1857, "forcibly and unlawfully entered upon, took possession of, and ousted the said plaintiff from the said premises, and that defendant unlawfully withholds the possession of the said above described premises from said plaintiff, who ever since has been, and still is, entitled to the possession thereof; and the rents and profits of said premises have been and are of the value of one hundred dollars per month." The complaint further charges that said defendant now is, and has been for many months past, extracting the gold from said claims, and converting the same to his own use, and that he threatens to continue so to do. It also charges that defendant is insolvent, and prays an injunction, and that a receiver may be appointed, judgment for restitution and for damages. The complaint was sworn to. The Court below issued the injunction and appointed a receiver upon the facts set forth in the complaint.

Waring v. Crow.

---

The defendant demurred to this complaint, and assigned three grounds of demurrer:

1. There is a defect of parties defendants in said action in this, that the owners of the other three-fourths of the claims mentioned in said complaint are not named as co-defendants, and that their interests are wholly unrepresented, etc.

2. Several causes of action have been improperly united in this, to wit: 1st. For the possession of the claims; 2d. For the rents and profits arising therefrom; 3d. For damages.

3. The complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, in this, to wit: as to who the other parties are holding and owning the other three-fourths; that defendant is in possession of only one-fourth interest in the claims.

Complaint does not show that defendant is not entitled to some portion of the claims, or that he is not in possession in common with others. Nor does it state that plaintiff is entitled to the possession by virtue of any title or prior possession, or that plaintiff has complied with the laws, rules and regulations of the mining district in which said claims are situated, or that he holds said claims by virtue of said laws, rules and regulations.

At the time of filing the demurrer, the defendant filed his answer setting up title in himself and others to said claim, and also raised the same points in his answer as those raised by the demurrer.

The demurrer was overruled, and the cause tried by a jury.

The Court instructed the jury in substance, as follows:

1. Prior possession of a mining claim gives prior right to the prior possession, of which the party cannot be divested, except by his own act, or by abandonment or the lapse of time, or by the superior landlord or owner of the soil.

2. An abandonment may be proved by the acts of the parties, or by their declaration coupled with acts. If the jury believe from the evidence, plaintiff was first in possession of the claims, and abandoned them, and while the premises were thus abandoned the defendants, or those under whom he claims, took possession, the defendant must recover; but if the jury believe from the evidence, that after plaintiff did abandon them he again returned and took possession, and was in possession by himself or agent at the time the defendant entered, then defendant is a wrongdoer, and plaintiff is entitled to recover.

Waring v. Crow.

3d. Where an abandonment is sought to be established by the act of the party, the intention alone governs. If a party leave a claim with the intention not to return, his abandonment is as complete, if it exist for a minute or a second, as though it continued for years; but if he left with the intention of returning, he might do so at any time within five years; provided there was no rule, usage or custom of miners of such a notorious character as to raise a presumption of an intention to abandon.

4th. Where a party has once acquired a right by possession to a mining claim, no mining law can divest him of that right unless he assisted in the passage of such law; in which case he would be considered a party to the contract.

Mining laws may be given in evidence to prove a custom in respect to size of claim, or to raise a presumption of abandonment, where such laws have a universal notoriety throughout such district; or if they have not, then proof must be given that the party sought to be bound had actual notice of them.

5. The possession of one tenant in common is the possession of all.

6. A purchaser of a mining claim only acquires such right or title from his vendor as he had at the time of such purchase.

7. The power to occupy for another gives no right to such agent to sell; but there must be a special agency for such purpose.

8. One who might by inquiry ascertain what rights his vendor has, and neglects to make such inquiry, is not an innocent purchaser.

Plaintiff had verdict and judgment, and the defendant appealed to this Court.

Isaac Boggs for Appellant.

I. The Court erred in overruling the defendant's demurrer to the complaint.

There was a non-joinder of parties defendant.

Waring v. Crow.

---

The plaintiff should have brought his suit against his copartners for his undivided interest in said claims, and for an accounting of the proceeds. Schelper v. Evans et al., 4 Cal., page 212.

Ejectments will not lie for the possession of a mining claim where the facts show that the claim is undivided and held in common by four copartners, three of whom stand by and acquiesce in the sale and purchase by an innocent person in good faith.

If one of the copartners suffer thereby, he must bring a suit against his copartners. An action of ejectment may be sustained on the ground of a prior possession alone; but to continue such possession there must be an actual bona fide occupation or possessio pedis; a subjection of it to the will and control of the possessor as contradistinguished from the mere assertion of title. See Plume v. Seward et al., 4 Cal. 94.

2d. The evidence shows that plaintiff had abandoned his interest in the claim, and the instructions of the Court on this head were wrong.

"Abandonment may arise from a single act, or from a series of acts; and a party once having abandoned his claim, will not be permitted to come within the time allowed for commencing civil action to re-assert his claim, to the prejudice of those who may have in the meantime appropriated it." Davis v. Butler, 6 Cal. R. 510.

Where prior possession is relied upon, it will fail, if it be shown that he voluntarily abandoned his possession. Bequette v. Caulfield, 4 Cal. 278.

It cannot be contended in this case that defendant is a trespasser or wrongdoer, because he came into possession of said claims with a full knowledge of three-fourths of plaintiff's copartners by purchase, and with their full knowledge and consent, and under color of title.

Before plaintiff can seek equity he must first do equity. He should first have tendered his proportion of all the expenses of opening up of said claims and of reconstructing said flume.

3d. In the case of Hix v. Bell, 3 Cal. 219, this Court has decided the question of the admissibility of miners' laws governing the particular localities. I do not conceive, in the introduction of those laws as evidence, that it is necessary to show when the meeting was held, how many were present, whether each and every person present acquiesced in such laws, nor whether the books have been kept in any particular style and form.

Waring v. Crow.

---

It is sufficient to show that there are laws and customs by which the miners are governed; no matter how they are formed, so they are generally acquiesced in by those following the occupation of mining. Upon this point the Hon. Judge erred in instructing the jury.

4th. The mines belong to the General Government, and are free for her citizens to enter and extract the precious metals. The doctrine of tenants in common does not apply to this class of cases, any more than it applies to barter and trade.

R. T. Sprague for Respondent. No brief in the record.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., concurring.

Ejectment for the recovery of mining claim.

The plaintiff in this suit sues for the recovery of a certain interest in mining claims in Shasta, the title to which he asserts to have been in himself and several others, in certain fixed proportions.

It is objected that the plaintiff cannot recover because he has not joined the other owners or claimants. We do not consider this point well taken. In order to a full vindication of plaintiff's rights, and full investigation of the merits of the controversy, it was only necessary to sue the party who interfered with the plaintiff's property, or did him wrong. The object of the plaintiff in the suit was not a partition of the common property, but to settle the right of the plaintiff, as against an adverse claimant, to his share and proportion; and this object could be effectually attained by the plaintiff in the form adopted. The question of abandonment was fairly left to the jury, as also the right of the defendant under the bill of sale from Julian. The claims, it seems, were held in possession by the partners and associates of the plaintiff; they, as such partners, were tenants in common, and it is well settled that the possession of one partner or tenant in common is the possession of all. The mere fact that one tenant in common, or partner, goes away and remains absent from the premises of the joint business or property, leaving his associates in possession, creates no presumption of abandonment; nor does his refusal to pay, or delay in paying the expenses of the business, or the assessments, create of itself a forfeiture. In order to the enforcement of the claim, some appropriate action by suit must be taken to liquidate the demand, and sell the property, or there must be at least clear and unequivocal proof of abandonment.

McMillan and Wife v. Reynolds.

---

It is too clear for argument, that the mere passive acquiescence of the other partners or tenants in common in a sale of the interest of the plaintiff by a party having no title, cannot confer any upon the vendee. This would be to make title to property pass, not by the act or assent of the owner, but by the silence of his associates.

The plaintiff's right having been fixed by these rules of property, which are a part of the general law of the land, could not be divested by any mere neighborhood custom or regulation, even if there were better proof than appears in the record of the existence of such. Nor do we see anything to prove that, by the mining regulations of the vicinity, the possession and working of the claim by a portion was not a sufficient possession and working for all; or that the mere temporary absence of one partner was a forfeiture of his interest, and that a stranger could then come in and appropriate his share.

On the whole, we think the learned Judge below presented the law fairly and clearly to the jury, and that their finding was in accordance with law and justice.

Judgment affirmed.

McMILLAN AND WIFE v. REYNOLDS.

The affidavit of service of summons must show affirmatively, compliance with all the requirements of the law.

An affidavit which avers that affiant on the day named "served the summons in this action upon the defendant, Mary B. McMillan, at her residence in the city of San Francisco, by delivering and leaving with her a copy thereof, attached to a copy of the amended complaint filed in this action," is insufficient.

Where judgment of foreclosure was obtained on such service, and the premises sold under the judgment to a party who was at the time of such purchase cognizant of the fact of such defective service, and also that the defendant was a married woman, and where the defendant has a valid defense to such action, the judgment will be set aside.

APPEAL from the Twelfth District Court, County of San Francisco.

McMillan and Wife v. Reynolds.

---

This was a bill in equity to quiet title to a lot of land in the city of San Francisco.

The facts are as follows: In 1854 the plaintiffs were possessed of a lot of land in the city of San Francisco, which they occupied as a homestead. In December of that year they executed a mortgage of the premises to Mills and Vantine, to secure a debt of the husband. In April, 1858, Mills and Vantine, by the defendant in this action as their attorney, brought an action of foreclosure upon the mortgage against the present plaintiffs. In that action the only evidence of service of the summons and complaint on Mary B. McMillan, is the affidavit of one J. G. Gould, which is as follows:

"City and County of San Francisco, ss.: James G. Gould, of said city, being duly sworn, says, that on the fourteenth day of July, 1855, he served the summons in this action upon the defendant, Mary B. McMillan, at her residence in the city of San Francisco, by delivering and leaving with her a copy thereof; attached to a copy of the amended complaint in this action.

"J. G. GOULD.

"Sworn to before me, August 6, 1855."

"OTMAR CALEB, D. C."

Mary B. McMillan did not appear in the action, and a default was taken against her, and a decree of foreclosure rendered, and the property sold to the defendant, Reynolds, who acted as the attorney in obtaining the decree. Reynolds was about taking possession of the premises, in pursuance of his purchase, when plaintiffs commenced this action.

Among other allegations in plaintiffs' complaint, they allege that Mary B. McMillan did not sign or acknowledge the mortgage deed; and it is found by the jury, on a special issue submitted to them, that she "was not examined separate and apart, and without the hearing of her husband."

Defendant had judgment in the Court below, and the plaintiffs appealed to this Court, and assigned as error among others, the following:

McMillan and Wife v. Reynolds.

---

1. The Court erred in ruling that there was jurisdiction of the person of Mrs. Mary B. McMillan in said suit of Mills and Vantine.

2. The Court erred in rendering judgment for the defendant, when it should have been rendered for the plaintiffs

Shattuck, Spencer & Reichert, for Appellants.

1. The acts of a Court, though of general jurisdiction, are void unless it has jurisdiction of the person, and the record must show such jurisdiction. Farmers' Loan and Trust Co. v. McKinney, 6 McLean, 1; Foster v. Glazner, 27 Ala. 391; Joyce v. Joyce, 5 Cal. 449; Sheldon v. Newton, 3 Ohio N. S. 494.

2. The return of service of process made by a private person, must show that the provisions of the statute have been complied with, or the Court gains no jurisdiction of the person served. Our Practice Act, sec. 28, requires that a private individual serving process must be a white person, twenty-one years old, capable of being a witness in the case, and must serve the summons attached to a certified copy of the complaint; and if the defendant be unlearned, the nature of the suit shall be explained. Sec. 646, Practice Act.

3. The summons and evidence of service in this case are so deficient as to give no jurisdiction to the Court. See State v. Woodruff, 2 Cal. 241; Joyce v. Joyce, 5 Ib. 449; Harvey v. Bestic, 1 How. Miss. R. 106; Smith v. Cohen, 3 Ib. 39; Fathern v. Long, 5 Ib. 661; Collins v. Hoyt, 1 Lundes & Marsh, 515; Eshridge v. Jones, Ib. 595; Ditch v. Edwards, 1 Scammon, 127; Ogle v. Coffin, Ib. 239; Townsend v. Griggs, 2 Ib. 365; Billingale v. Geer, 3 Ib. 575; 1 English (Arkansas) R. 382, 552; 2 Ib. 44; Vaughan v. Brown, 4 English, 20.

The above authorities all show that the statute relative to the service of process must be fully complied with, or a judgment by default is "coram non judice" and void.

The fourth rule of the Twelfth District Court also requires that the certificate made by a private person should show that the defendant served was personally known to him. This, too, is wanting.

Too much caution cannot be observed in holding private persons serving process strictly to the law.

McMillan and Wife v. Reynolds.

---

If a Sheriff should show by his return a strict compliance, how much more a private individual.

Verbal testimony after the decree could not relate back so as to give the Court jurisdiction, but only increased the error. Plaintiffs' objection to its introduction should have been sustained. Besides, that testimony, if added to the return, would not be sufficient. He did not serve a certified copy. He did not explain it to her.

Giles H. Gray for Respondent.

1. The summons was properly served on Mary B. McMillan in the foreclosure suit.

The affidavit is such as is required by the statute. P. A., sec. 28. It shows the personal receipt by defendant, Mary B. McMillan, of the summons, and a copy of complaint; and it shows that she received the same, within the city of San Francisco, no portion of the limits of which is three miles distant from the County Clerk's office.

2. This affidavit was sufficient to authorize a judgment. If there is any defect in the service, as for example, if served by a negro, or by a minor, or if the defendant have any exemption from service, as being a legislator, or member of Congress, just before the commencement of the session; and if none of these defects appear in the return on the summons, then, although the defendant has good ground for arrest of judgment, his privilege must be pleaded, and shown to the Court by motion. Whitwell v. Barbier, 7 Cal.; Wheeler v. Reynolds, 8 Cowan, 311. Also, see Foot v. Stevens, 17 Wend. 485; Yates v. Lansing, 9 Johns., p. 437; Peacock v. Bell, 1 Saund. 74; Shumway v. Stillman, 4 Cowan, 296; Hart v. Seixas, 21 Wend. 40; Bloom v. Burdick, 1 Hill R. 139; Wright v. Douglass, 10 Barb. S. C. 110; Wells v. Mason, 4 Scam. 279; Huntington v. Charlotte, 15; Vance v. Funk, 2 Scam. 263; Hubbard v. Harris, 2 Scam. 279; Varney v. Vosch, 3 Hill S. C. 237.

A complete answer to all that is said about the defects in the affidavit of service is: that the Court acquired jurisdiction from the time of service, and not from the date of the return.

In Whitwell v. Barbier, supra, the Court says: "The defendant having been summoned to appear on a certain day, it cannot be said that the Court had no jurisdiction of the person so as to make its judgment void."

---

McMillan and Wife v. Reynolds.

---

Again, in the 35th section of the Practice Act, "from the time of service of the summons and copy of complaint in a civil action, the Court shall be deemed to have acquired jurisdiction, and a control of all the subsequent proceedings."

1st. It is argued that if the return of service was not made as required by statute, a default rendered would be void. This is not the true rule, but the law is: that a default rendered without jurisdiction is void. in a Court of general jurisdiction; if the record is silent. and yet a judgment is rendered, it will be presumed that the Court had jurisdiction, until the contrary appears, and that due proof of service was made. Grignon v. Astor, 2 How. U. S. R., p. 291, and cases cited. Whitwell v. Barbier, cited by plaintiffs here, does not apply to this principle.

3. The last proposition which we shall present to the Court is a general one. It is:

That being purchaser at a Sheriff's sale, we are not bound to go beyond the record itself; and to support this, we cite Reardon v. Lancey's heirs, 2 Bibb, 262. The Court says: "How far the proceedings in the case under which the land in contest was sold were correct, will be unnecessary to determine; for by the execution, the Sheriff had authority to sell; and if the property sold be by law liable to execution, the right of purchase cannot be shaken, however erroneous the judgment might have been; for if the sale could afterwards be avoided, few would be willing to purchase under execution, and property sold in that way would be frequently sacrificed, greatly to the prejudice of debtor and creditor."

Also, Woodcock v. Bennett, 1 Cowan, 724; Coleman v. Trabue, 2 Bibb, 518; Brown v. Combs, 7 B. Monroe, 318; Doe v. Natchez Ins. Co., 8 Smedes & M., p. 179; Wood v. Jackson, 8 Wend., p. 36.

Again, in Grignon's Lessee v. Astor, 2 How. U. S. R., p. 341, the Court says: "A purchaser under it (the decree) is not bound to look beyond the decree, if there is error in it of the most palpable kind, if the Court which rendered it has, in the exercise of jurisdiction, disregarded, misconstrued or disobeyed the plain provisions of the law, which gave them power to hear and determine the case before them; the title of a purchaser is as much protected as if the adjudication would stand the test of a writ of error; so where an appeal is given, but not taken in the time prescribed by law."

McMillan and Wife v. Reynolds.

---

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., concurring.

This bill was filed to quiet title to a lot in San Francisco. This lot was a homestead of the plaintiffs. A bill was filed by one Mills to foreclose a mortgage on this lot made by McMillan and wife, as charged, and a judgment of foreclosure had by plaintiff in this last suit. It is averred, however, that no service of process was had in that suit on the wife. In the record of that suit, the affidavit of one Gould appears, in these words:

"City and County of San Francisco, ss.: James G. Gould, of said city, being duly sworn, says: that on the fourteenth day of July, 1855, he served the summons in this action upon the defendant, Mary B. McMillan, at her residence in the city of San Francisco, by delivering and leaving with her a copy thereof, attached to a copy of the amended complaint filed in this action.

(Signed)

"J. G. GOULD.

"Sworn before me, August 6, 1855.

"OTMAR CALER, D. C."

The decree, so far as this defendant is concerned, was by default. The bill in the case now before us avers that the wife never signed or duly acknowledged the deed; and it is found by the jury, on a special issue, that she was not examined privately and separately as the statute requires. Under judgment in the foreclosure suit, the lot was sold; and the defendant, the purchaser at the sale, who had been the attorney for plaintiff in the last named case, was about taking possession. The bill was filed to prevent him, and remove the cloud from the plaintiff's title. Many other facts appear in the record, and several questions are made; but in the view we have taken of the case, it is sufficient to consider a single one, namely: was this a sufficient service to give the Court jurisdiction in the case of Mills and plaintiff to uphold that judgment?

McMillan, and Wife v. Reynolds.

The Practice Act, sec. 28, provides that "service of summons may be made by," among other persons, "any white male citizen over twenty-one years of age, who is competent to be a witness on the trial of the action, except as hereinafter provided: a copy of the complaint, certified by the Clerk, shall be served with the summons."

The affidavit is alleged to be defective in not showing that the person serving it was a white male citizen, or over twenty-one years of age, or competent to testify, or that a certified copy of the complaint accompanied the summons. These defects, especially as against a purchaser who, in this case, was cognizant of these irregularities, and where the rights of a feme covert are involved, it is contended, invalidate the proceedings. And we think the point well taken. We have not time to review all of the authorities upon this subject, though we have examined a large number. We think the result of the whole is, that the judgments of Courts are not binding unless jurisdiction be first had of the person of the party to be affected by them. This jurisdiction is given in this State by a form of notice prescribed by statute. The statute in such cases must be substantially pursued. Where a general power of serving process is given to an officer, a general return of service is sufficient; but where the power to serve process is exceptional, and given only on prescribed conditions, there the authority is special, and the particular facts must be shown in order to give effect to the service.

The service being authorized, in other words, in a given case, that case must be shown by the record in order to give the jurisdiction, which results only from the legal notice. Thus, in Mississippi, where if personal service cannot be had, service may be made by leaving a copy at the dwelling of the defendant with a member of the family, being a free white person over sixteen, the Court said: "If the defendant be not personally served, then no such service is sufficient, unless it be exactly such service as the law has made good. If by the return it appears that the defendant was not personally served, then, of course, nothing short of an entire fulfillment of one of the other modes will be sufficient." (5 How. 664; 1 S. and M. 520; Ib. 595.) In Ditch v. Edwards (1 Scammon R. 127) the return to a summons was made by the Deputy Sheriff in his own name; the Court held the proceedings coram non judice, and void. See also, 2 Scammon, 365, to like effect. The right to serve process does not belong to every private individual; it is restricted to a particular class; and as to them, the right is given to be exercised only under particular circumstances. In order to a legal service, the service must be, of course, by some one authorized, as well as by personal capacity to act, as by the existence of the particular facts which impart the authority or control the mode of action. The mere fact that A serves a paper, is not even prima facie evidence of his right to serve it. He must be the person described in the statute, and must act in the manner prescribed by law. This is necessary in order to give him his authority, and this must appear by the record in order to show the authority. The validity of the act depends upon its being authorized, and this must appear in the record. From anything that appears on the return, or by the affidavit, this man Gould neither had authority to serve this process, nor did he serve it in the right way. Nor is this defect remedied by his testimony on the trial of this case below. He does not show a service of a certified copy of the complaint. Nor if he had, do we think it admissible, in this collateral way, to amend the record of the first case. If it can be amended at all, or this patent defect be cured, it must be by direct proceeding.

McMillan and Wife v. Reynolds.

---

While some of our reasoning goes beyond the necessities of this case, we limit the force of this opinion, as an expressed adjudication, to the precise question before us; which is, that as against a purchaser cognizant of the facts, and in favor of married women, (whose rights are favored in the law) and on a showing of a valid defense to the action, a judgment obtained under the circumstances of this is invalid on a bill filed by her in equity directly impeaching it.

The judgment of the Court below is reversed, and the cause remanded for judgment in pursuance of this opinion.

Fremont v. Boling.

FREMONT v. BOLING.

A. Sheriff, whose term of office has expired, has no right to collect the State and County tax, as unfinished business, from the assessment list which came into his hands while in office.

The taxes of 1855, after March, 1856, are not of the unfinished business of the outgoing Sheriff, for the reason that after the settlement of the Sheriff with the County Auditor in March, the delinquent taxes of that year are transferred to the tax list of the succeeding year, and it is made the duty of the then Sheriff to proceed to collect such delinquent tax as other taxes.

There is no irreconcilable conflict between the amendatory Act of 1853 and the Revenue Acts of 1853 and 1854. The provision that the Sheriff going out of office shall continue to collect the taxes coming to his hands before his term expired, was intended to provide for the period intervening between October and March, the time of his settlement.

In such a case, the party who is about to be injured by the sale of his property, has a right to an injunction against the person offering to sell, to prevent the sale.

APPEAL from the Thirteenth District Court, County of Mariposa.

This was a bill for an injunction to prevent the defendant from selling certain property of plaintiff's for the delinquent tax of 1855.

The statement of facts in this case was agreed to, and as disclosed by that agreement, is as follows: In 1855 the plaintiff was the owner of a large tract of land known as "Las Mariposas." In that year, the property was assessed for State and County taxes, and the amount of tax due thereon was $8,000. The defendant, Boling, was the Sheriff of Mariposa County, where the land is located, during the years 1854 and 1855, and until the month of October, 1855, at which time Thomas Early, his successor, qualified and entered upon the discharge of the duties of such office. The assessment roll for the year 1855 came into the hands of the defendant, Boling, during that year, and before his term of office expired, and never was delivered to his successor. In January, 1858, defendant had advertised the property "Las Mariposas" for sale, for the delinquent tax for 1855, and was proceeding to sell the same as former Sheriff, claiming a right to do so, as unfinished business of his office, when he was restrained by this action.

The judge below made an order citing the defendant to appear at a time and place to show cause why an injunction should not issue; and in the mean time restrained the defendant from selling. At the time and place appointed, and after hearing of the parties, the Judge ordered the injunction to issue, upon the plaintiff giving bond; which was done.

Fremont v. Boring.

---

At a final hearing, plaintiff had judgment for his costs, and the injunction was made perpetual: defendant appealed to this Court.

The question presented to this Court is, whether the defendant, as former Sheriff, could collect the tax as unfinished business of his office, after the expiration of his term of office.

B. B. Harris for the Appellant, argued:

I. The law does not authorize, and will not tolerate interference in the first instance, and before the time and right of a hearing with the matters and property of persons, either by extraordinary writs or provisional remedies, unless previous indemnity or "compensation" is given or tendered them. And in attachment, injunction, replevin and other like cases, this indemnity or compensation has been repeatedly decided by Courts to be the bond on which such process is contemplated to be grounded. In this case, the defendant has been restrained and damaged by order of the Court from doing certain acts, without having any such previous security; said restraining orders being nothing more or less than a temporary injunction.

II. The plaintiff is not the proper person to raise the question of rights of office in this case; the Sheriff incumbent is the person; and the remedy should be by quo warranto action for usurpation, or payment of taxes under protest and writ by injunction. (Minturn et al. v. Hayes, Sheriff, 2 Cal. R. 590.)

III. It is shown in the complaint that the advertisement of sale had commenced. Now an execution being one entire thing, the officer making the levy, is in legal contemplation, the one to finish the sale; or what in this case is still stronger, the officer advertising the sale must be the one to complete it, otherwise the law would be inconsistent, and would work repugnancy, ambiguity and confusion, and thereby divest obedience to a command in fieri and the rights under it, and devolve the same upon another and different person. (People ex rel. Dunn v. Boring, 8 Cal. R. 406; Manlove v. White, 8 Cal. R. 376.)

The Sheriff could not, in March following the levy, have inducted in the list to be handed in by him under the revenue law of 1853 and section 96 of the Act of 1854, the taxes due on the premises in question, because the same were then in the course of sale for the taxes in question, and in the Courts of Law; and this would have been a very good defense against charging them in the delinquent list of the year 1856, especially if the legality of the assessment or of the taxes was then in judicial controversy.

Fremont v. Boling.

---

Admitting the allegations of the complaint to be true, section 23 of the revenue law of 1857 provides that a person acting de facto as an officer, is sufficient, etc.; 2 Kent, edition 8, 339.

The authority of an officer cannot be collaterally attacked (13 Wend. 491-4; 8 Paige, 428, etc., and sec. 23, Laws of 1857) make this a ground of defense to the suit upon the Sheriff's deed; therefore, there could be no "cloud upon the title." (7 Johns. 549; 9 Ib. 135; 13 Wend. 491; 7 Cal. Rep. 393; Doane v. Scannell, Ib. 432, and People v. Same, 8 Paige, 328.) The assessment is proper. See Palmer v. Boling et als., 8 Cal. 384. (This case where Palmer was plaintiff.) The imposition of taxes belongs exclusively to the Legislature; their collection to the executive officers; and the judiciary is limited to the inquiry whether they have been constitutionally imposed, legally assessed and the law observed in their collection, all of which are purely legal questions and of equity cognizance. (Brooklyn v. Mergrole, 26 Wend. 132; Van Doran v. Mayor, &c., 9 Paige, 138; Wiggins v. Mayer, 9 Paige, 16; 4 Barb., S. C. Rep. 9 and 17; 3 Ohio Rep. 370; McCay v. Chilicothe.)

Attorney General for Appellant.

I have but little to add to that which has already been so well said by Mr. Harris, in support of this appeal.

All of the questions involved in this case were made and passed upon favorably to this appellant in the case of Palmer et al. v. Boling, 8 Cal. 384, except as to whether section 33 of the Act of April 29, 1857, "To provide revenue for the support of the government of this State," applies to the assessment and collection of the taxes due from respondent to the government in this particular instance.

The sole question in my mind is, whether or not the Act of the Legislature referred to is retrospective in its operation. I maintain that it is not, cannot be, and was not so intended by the Legislature.

Fremont v. Bolling.

---

"The general rule is, that no statute is to have a retrospective action beyond the time of its commencement." It is a well established principle, "that all laws are to commence in futuro and operate prospectively."

And a Court will never hold that the Legislature intended a retrospective action, unless such intention is clearly expressed in the Act. (Dash v. Van Kleeck, 7 John. Rep., from page 491 to 512, inclusive) — opinions of Justice Thompson and Chief Justice Kent.

That the Legislature did not intend this Act as retrospective, seems clear from the language employed.

By the provisions of the 39th section of the Act of April 29th, 1851, concerning Sheriffs, it was provided that the former Sheriff should complete the execution of all final process which he had begun to execute; and by the explanatory Act of May 18, 1853, the collection of taxes was construed to be unfinished business." (Manlove v. White, 8 Cal., p. 376.) No time has ever been specified in which unfinished business, generally, shall be completed; and unless some particular statute has fixed a limitation as applicable to this case, the old Sheriff may still finish the business of collecting the tax from respondent.

I have not been able to find any such statute. It is true, that the revenue laws then in existence required this defendant to make a final settlement with the Auditor and Treasurer on the first Monday in March succeeding the receipt by him of the assessment roll, and to return his delinquent list. But such requirement could not with any sort of justice, either to the officer or the government, be deemed to apply to such a case as this; for the officer had been restrained by a Court of Justice at the instance of parties in interest with Fremont from enforcing the law.

The Sheriff of a county can only enforce the collection of taxes by virtue of express law; and upon examination, you will find that the assessment roll (which is his authority for collection) must reach him in one of two ways.

1st. By the hand of the Auditor, who delivers him the roll of that year; and 2nd, by the hand of his predecessor in office, who delivers the unfinished roll of collections.

Fremont v. Boling.

---

Now, suppose that the decree in this case should be confirmed at this term of the Court, upon the ground that appellant is not the proper collector, (and none other is urged) could we proceed to collect the taxes (which were properly assessed, see Palmer v. Boling) by the hand of the present Sheriff of Mariposa? I answer not, because:

1st. He had not received the assessment as a part of the roll of this year; and 2nd. It cannot pass to him as the successor of appellant, and as unfinished business, for the reason that the Act of 1857 before referred to, is not upon principle, nor in terms retrospective, and therefore does not apply to this case; then as a consequence, the tax could not be enforced at all. (See Manlove v. White.) And in this connection I will add, that I have not been able to find any provision of the statute authorizing a continuance of the delinquent list "ad infinitum;" on the contrary, it seems that only the delinquencies of the next preceding year are placed upon the roll; therefore, if appellant cannot collect this tax, then no one can.

The point made by appellant is this: That prior to the expiration of his term of office, the delinquent tax list for the year 1855 was placed in his hands for collection, and that he had a right to collect said taxes as part of the unfinished business of his office.

Now I reply to this, that he was no officer of the law at the time he sought to sell the respondent's property for taxes, and that the collection of the same was not part of the unfinished business of his office.

The proper solution of this question depends on the various Acts of the Legislature of this State concerning Sheriffs, taken in connection with the different Revenue Acts from 1853 to 1857.

By the Act of 1851, concerning Sheriffs, page 195, sec. 39, it is provided that "notwithstanding the election of a new Sheriff, the former Sheriff shall complete the execution of all final process, which he has begun to execute."

In 1853, an explanatory Act was passed by the Legislature, and is found on page 275, Acts of 1853. This Act has but a simple section, and provides as follows:

"That the 39th section of the Act of 1851, concerning Sheriffs, shall

Fremont v. Boring.

be so construed as to include in its meaning the collection of all taxes put into the hands of the Sheriff for collection previous to the expiration of his term of office."

It is under this Act of 1851, and the explanatory Act of 1853, above cited, that the appellant contends for the right in 1858, (two years after he was functus officio) to sell plaintiff's property for the taxes of 1855.

The appellant proceeded precisely as if there were the sole legislative provisions having any bearing on the question. He utterly ignores all contemporary and subsequent legislation, qualifying or repealing the aforesaid Acts.

But the slightest examination of the Revenue Acts of 1853, 1854 and 1857, will show that the right here claimed by appellant to act as Sheriff, and sell land for taxes, is utterly baseless, and without a shadow of foundation.

The Revenue Act of 1853, page 262, sec. 39, and the Revenue Act of 1854, sec. 96, page 111, are precisely alike in these two sections.

The sections provide, that on the first Monday of March in each year, the Sheriff shall attend at the office of the County Auditor, and the Sheriff shall then and there make a final settlement for the year for the amount of all taxes with which he stands charged, as follows:

"The Auditor shall take from the duplicates in the hands of the Sheriff for collection, a list of all such taxes thereon, describing the property on which delinquent taxes are charged, and shall note the reason assigned by the Sheriff why such taxes could not be collected.

"After deducting the amount returned delinquent, and the fees for collecting allowed to the Sheriff, the Sheriff shall be held liable for the balance."

"The Auditor shall thereupon balance the Sheriff's account by crediting the Sheriff with the amount of delinquent taxes, and with all money paid to the Treasurer, together with his commissions for collecting.

"No further taxes shall be collectible on such duplicates; but whatever taxes may remain uncollected on the delinquent list on the final settlement, on the first day of March, shall be placed in the tax list of the succeeding year, and the Sheriff shall immediately proceed to collect the same."

Fremont v. Boling.

---

Now, even supposing that the repealing Act of 1857 had not been passed, or that that Act has not the force and effect of a direct repeal of the explanatory Act concerning Sheriffs, passed May 18th, 1853, (Acts of 1853, p. 275) which I construe it has, in what condition would the above sections of the Revenue Acts of 1853 and 1854 leave this assumed authority of appellant to sell respondent's land for taxes.

The Revenue Act of 1853 was contemporaneous with the explanatory Act concerning Sheriffs, and was in force at the time appellant was elected. The Revenue Act of 1854 was passed during his term of office.

It cannot, then, be doubted that these are all Acts in pari materia, and are to be taken and construed together. And it is to be observed that there is no conflict between them; they may all stand together by giving to each a reasonable and just construction.

And it is submitted that this is the true meaning and construction of said Acts.

By the explanatory Act of 1853, Sheriffs were allowed to collect taxes as a part of the unfinished business of their office.

The Revenue Acts of 1853 and 1854 operated as a limitation on this right.

The retiring Sheriffs went out of office in September; but this does not prevent them from collecting taxes on the tax list which had been put into their hands prior to the expiration of their term of office. They had this right and privilege until the first Monday of March succeeding the expiration of their term. On that day their functions expired. They had to make final settlement with the Auditor and Treasurer. They had to show why they had not collected the delinquent taxes; and on this showing they were credited with all such taxes, discharged from all liability, and the amount of the delinquent tax was added to the assessment roll of the succeeding year.

Now, if Boling can collect the delinquent taxes of 1855, it must be on the old duplicate list placed in his hands prior to the expiration of his term of office. But how can this be done, when that duplicate assessment roll, as the record shows, was returned and filed in the proper office according to law, on the first Monday of March, 1856?

Fremont v. Boling.

1st. It is said that an injunction will not lie to restrain a sale of property for taxes, on the ground that if the said rule is void, it will not cloud plaintiff's title, and the case of DeWitt v. Hayes is cited by Harris in his argument on file.

This doctrine was overthrown by the Court in Palmer v. Boling, 8 Cal. 388.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., and FIELD, J., concurring.

The defendant was Sheriff of Mariposa County in August, 1855, at which time there came to his hands the assessment list of the taxes due the State and county. The plaintiff below was assessed on the estate called Las Mariposas, for $5,000. The defendant was succeeded in October, 1855, by one Early, as Sheriff of Mariposa County. The bill was filed in January, 1858, at which time the defendant claimed to be former Sheriff, and as such, entitled to collect this tax as unfinished business of his office; when he was arrested in his proceedings, to sell the land of plaintiff, by this injunction. The only question in the case is, whether the defendant, under the circumstances, had the right to collect; and in order to do this, to sell property for delinquent taxes due during his term, but not collected while in office. And the solution of this question involves the construction of the various Revenue Acts of this State. A review of these will settle this controversy.

By the Act of 1851 (Acts, p. 184, sec. 39) it is provided that, notwithstanding the election and qualification of a new Sheriff, the former Sheriff shall return all process and orders before and after judgment which he has fully executed, and shall complete the execution of all final process which he has begun to execute." In 1853, an Act was passed explanatory of this Act, as follows: SEC. 1. The thirty-ninth section of an Act, entitled, "An Act concerning Sheriffs, passed April 29th, 1851, shall be so construed as to include in its meaning the collection of all taxes put into the hands of the Sheriff for collection previous to the expiration of his term of office." (Acts of 1853, p. 275.)

By the 33d section of the Revenue Act of 1857 (Acts of 1857,

Fremont v. Bolling

---

p. 386) it is provided, "except in those counties where, by special Act, it is provided that some other person shall be Tax Collector, the Sheriff of each county shall be Tax Collector in his county, and shall collect all taxes except municipal taxes and poll taxes. But the fact that any assessment roll or tax list has been put for collection in the hands of any Sheriff whose term of office is about to expire, or shall expire before the collection is so completed, shall not be so construed as to make the collection of taxes on each assessment roll or tax list unfinished business of the office, to be completed after his term of office expires; but said roll shall be handed over to his successor in office, at the same time and in the same manner as other books and papers belonging to the county; and the fact that any assessment roll or tax list was so handed over shall not in any manner invalidate it, but the succeeding Sheriff or Tax Collector shall proceed to enforce the collection, in the same manner as though it had been first placed in his hands. And any sale made, or certificate of sale or deed given by such succeeding officer, shall be as valid, and shall have the same force and effect, as though the act had been done by the officer who originally had possession of the list." These are the provisions in reference to the office and duties of Sheriff. But they do not stand alone. They are to be taken in connection with other acts in connection with the collection of taxes. The Revenue Act of 1853 (Acts, p. 262, sec. 39) provides that on the first Monday in March, in each year, the Sheriff, the County Treasurer and County Auditor shall attend at the office of the County Auditor, and the Sheriff shall then and there make a final settlement for the year with the said Auditor and Treasurer, for the amount of all taxes with which said Sheriff stands charged, in the manner following: 1. The Auditor shall take from the duplicate in the hands of the Sheriff, for collection, a list of all such taxes therein, describing the property on which such delinquent taxes are charged as the same is described in said duplicate, and shall note therein, in a marginal column, the reason assigned by the Sheriff, etc. 2. The Auditor shall forthwith record such list of delinquencies in his office, and thereupon forward the same to the Controller of State. 3. After deducting the amount returned delinquent, and the fees for the collection, returned by the Sheriff from the several charges taxed on the duplicate, in a just, ratable proportion, the Sheriff shall be held liable for the balance, and shall thereupon pay such balance to the Treasurer. The Auditor shall thereupon balance the Sheriff's account by crediting the Sheriff with the amount of delinquent taxes, and with all moneys paid to the Treasurer, together with his commissions for collecting. No further taxes shall be collected on such duplicate; but whatever taxes may remain uncollected on the delinquent list in the final settlement, on the first day of March, shall be placed in the tax list of the succeeding year, and the Sheriff shall immediately proceed to collect the same, and on the first Monday in June and September proceed to pay over, etc., etc. The Revenue Act of 1854 (Acts, p. 111, sec. 96) is identical in this respect with the Act of 1853.

---

Fremont v. Belling.

Taking, as we must, all these acts in pari materia, and it seems to us beyond question that the Sheriff of 1855 has no right to collect the taxes in 1858. The taxes of 1855, after March, 1856, are not of the unfinished business of his office, for the plain reason that after the settlement in March—which seems to have been designed to be a final settlement—the delinquent taxes of that year go on the tax list of the succeeding year, and the Sheriff—meaning the Sheriff in office—shall proceed to collect them as other taxes. It certainly was not contemplated that these delinquent taxes shall be collected by two or more Sheriffs. And to remove all doubt, it is expressly said that after this settlement “no more taxes shall be collectible on this duplicate;” they are to be put on another list, and collectible as a portion of the revenues of the year for which that list is made. The policy of the Act is as plain as its language. The Legislature meant to avoid the confusion of partial collections of taxes and of various collectors. It designed to prescribe a simple system of assessments, collections and settlements. No mode is provided for further or renewed settlements. After a great length of time, the Sheriff's bond might become insufficient. Small remnants of taxes on an old tax list might be overlooked. Confusion would grow out of the retaining of a partial collection of taxes by an old Sheriff, while there is no apparent object in the old Sheriff's keeping this petty appendage to the office, which, in a great majority of instances, would be more trouble than it is worth. The simple process of adding to the new list the uncollected taxes removes all this difficulty, and makes a complete and comprehensive fiscal system.

Fremont v. Boling.

---

Nor is there any irreconcilable conflict between the amendatory Act of 1853 and the Revenue Acts of 1853 and 1854. The provision that the Sheriff going out of office shall continue to collect the taxes coming to his hands before his term expired, was intended to provide for the period intervening between October and March, the time of his settlement. To authorize him, in other words, to collect the taxes upon his duplicate; not to give him authority to collect taxes upon a part of another list coming to the hands of another and different officer. This is shown as well by the express language of contemporaneous Acts, as by the obvious reason of the thing. Even if the construction were more doubtful, the rule which requires us to construe all these Acts in regard to the same subject matter as if they were one law, each provision, sentence and word qualifying the rest, would force us to this construction in order to reconcile their various parts. But the construction needs no straining of words.

It by no means follows, that because defendant Boling cannot lawfully collect these taxes, they must be lost. We see no difficulty in the way of their collection, if they were otherwise lawful.

The other points of the appellant are not well taken. Boling was not de facto Sheriff in 1858, or any Sheriff at all. Any person else might have taken the tax list and proceeded as legally to sell any other man's property. He claims to act by virtue of law, when he has no right to act.

HORR et al. v. BARKER *et als.

Hutchinson v. Beurs et al. (6 Cal. R. 333) affirmed.

The rule that a factor cannot pledge the goods of his principal is, in this State, confined to technical factors, when the rights of third parties are involved. When A has six hundred barrels of flour on storage, and he sells to B one hundred, to C two hundred, and to D three hundred, and gives each a delivery order upon his warehouseman, and the purchasers all surrender their several orders to the warehouseman, without making any separation of each lot from the common mass, but voluntarily leave the flour standing on the books of the warehouseman to the credit of each purchaser for his proper number of barrels, it is a complete delivery to each purchaser and will pass the title to each. The separation by the purchasers of their various lots is a mere matter of convenience among themselves, not affecting their rights as to their vendor or a mere trespasser.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, County of San Francisco.

This case was before this Court upon a former occasion. (8 Cal. R. 503.) Upon another trial in the District Court, some additional facts were proven. The material facts, as they now appear, were substantially these: In December, 1858, Hussey, Bond & Hale sold to Barker & Paddock 6,649 barrels of flour, then on store with Tilden & Little. The sale was negotiated through J. R. West, a broker. There was evidence tending to show that it was understood between Hussey, Bond & Hale, Barker & Paddock, and West, that the sale should be kept secret, for the reason that, if known, so large a sale might affect the market, among dealers in the article. The flour sold was of two different brands, Gallego and Haxall. West was employed by Barker & Paddock to sell the flour for them. Hussey, Bond & Hale drew delivery orders, from time to time, in favor of West, upon Tilden & Little, for a large portion of the flour. One order for another large portion was drawn in favor of Barker & Paddock, who endorsed it to West. Those orders were delivered by West to Tilden & Little, and then credited West, on their books, with the flour specified in the orders. In March, 1854, the plaintiffs loaned West two different sums, making together the sum of $11,500, and received in pledge 1,544 barrels of flour, for the delivery of which they took two warehouse receipts, issued by Tilden & Little to West. These receipts plaintiff surrendered to Tilden & Little, taking from them, in their own names, two warehouse receipts, dated May 17th, 1854; one for three hundred and twenty-four barrels Haxall, and the other for 1,220 barrels Gallego flour. West was in the habit of selling flour and drawing delivery orders on Tilden & Little, who were accustomed to deliver the flour called for by such orders, if required, and charging West's flour account; or if the purchaser preferred to leave the flour on storage, the quantity called for was placed to the credit of the purchaser on the books of Tilden & Little, and a warehouse receipt issued to him, if required; but no designation or setting apart of any particular barrels was made. On the twenty-ninth September, 1854, West sold to the plaintiffs five hundred barrels of Gallego flour, and drew a delivery order upon Tilden & Little for the same, "to be inspected superfine." The order was surrendered by plaintiffs to Tilden & Little on the same day, and they transferred on their books four hundred and eighty barrels to the credit of plaintiffs. The reason they did not transfer to plaintiffs the other twenty barrels, was the fact that West had previously drawn orders for all the flour on storage in his name, except the four hundred and eighty barrels. The 1,220 and the four hundred and eighty barrels of Gallego flour were part and parcel of the original pile, containing 4,135 barrels, and had never been separated from the mass. After the twenty-ninth of September, and up to the seventeenth of October, 1854, plaintiffs had inspected and separated from the mass three hundred and eighty of the four hundred and eighty barrels. On the seventeenth of October, and before the seizure by the Sheriff, the plaintiffs were in the act of completing the inspection and removal of the residue of the four hundred and eighty barrels, when the defendants forbade the plaintiffs from proceeding any further; whereupon the plaintiffs claimed the Haxall and Gallego flour as their own, and demanded the same should be given to them, which was refused by Tilden & Little at the defendants' command; after which the Sheriff took possession of the flour at the suit of Barker & Paddock against Tilden & Little.

Horr v. Barker.

---

Of the original pile of 4,135 barrels of Gallego flour, there had been previously withdrawn from the warehouse all excepting 1,682 barrels, of which number 1,320 stood on Tilden & Little's books in the name of plaintiffs, two hundred in the name of McCreery, eighty-nine in the name of Adams, Welsh & Co., and seventy-three in the name of C. C. Hunter, all remaining together in the same mass. It appeared that ninety per cent. of both the Gallego and Haxall flour was of the quality called superfine, and ten per cent. of the quality called bad; and that the difference in value was one dollar per barrel.

It also appeared that West, during the years 1854-5, occasionally bought and sold flour on his own account. It was also shown that it was customary in San Francisco for goods to be stored in the name of the factor.

The Court charged the jury "that plaintiffs had made out title to the property described in the complaint, to wit: 1,320 barrels of Gallego flour, and three hundred and twenty-four barrels of Haxall flour; and that they were entitled to recover," to which the defendants excepted. The plaintiffs had judgment, and the defendants appealed.

Delos Lake and Crittenden for Appellant.

1. West was intrusted with the possession of the flour as the factor or agent of Barker & Paddock. no title vested in the pledgees, for want of a separation or other identification of the property.

It being parcel of a larger quantity of different and unascertained quantity, quality and value, and not being selected or separated so as to enable the plaintiffs to identify any portion as their property, the sale or pledge was incomplete. Rapebye v. McKee, 6 Cow. 250; Suydam v. Jenkins, 4 Sandford, 609; Story on Sales, sec. 296 and note and sec. 340; Outwater v. Dodge, 7 Cow. 85; Austin v. Cranen, 4 Taunt. 644; *White v. 3. The property being parcel of a larger quantity in mass could not be recovered in replevin. It is not specific property, and it is impossible for the officer to execute the writ. The officer would have been justified in refusing to execute the order; there being no specific 1,644 barrels of flour, it was not his business to make partition of the whole lot. Dewiett v. Morris, 13 Wend. 496.

4. The property having been delivered to Barker & Paddock, under and by virtue of process in a previous action of replevin, instituted by Barker & Paddock against Tilden & Little, and they holding possession by virtue of the delivery under such process, it could not be re-replevied by the plaintiff in the action. Lockwood v. Perry, 9 Metcalf, 44; Morris v. Dewitt, 5 Wend. 71.

I. Where segregation is necessary, it can be accomplished by disintegration.

II. The possession of a warehouse receipt or of an order upon a warehouseman accepted by him, is evidence of title to the goods specified therein in such possessor, and has not merely the qualified effect of proving a symbolical delivery to a possession of the property specified, by the holders of such paper.

In this conclusion as to segregation; four different Judges of this Court have concurred, two of whom new upon the Bench declined to listen to argument in extenso upon the side of the plaintiffs, saying in substance that they were satisfied upon this question, with the former decisions.

Herr v. Barker.

---

Upon the question of the character and effect of warehouse receipts and cognate papers among commercial men, the same state of opinion must have existed.

The question was involved in the first decision, and was directly passed upon in the second.

Upon all authority, these questions must be regarded as closed, for this cause. Dewey v. Gray, 2 Cal. R. 374; Clary v. Hoagland, 6 Cal. R. 685.

The defendants, therefore, find it necessary to bring forward some new matter; and make substantially two points, which they claim exempt their case from the effects of the former decisions; these are,

1. The pendency of the action of these defendants against Tilden & Little, and defendants' possession of the flour in dispute under it at the time of the commencement of this action.

2. The fact that West was a mere agent, and pledged the flour (1,220 barrels Gallego and three hundred and twenty-four barrels Harall) instead of selling the same to the plaintiffs.

The plaintiffs contend that neither of these circumstances is available for the defendants.

The first objection, if correct in its principle, is available only as a matter of abatement, and should have been so plead.

The whole law of the case cited by the defendants upon this point, is canvassed in Hunt v. Robinson & Skinker, ante 262; and the precise point is ruled in our favor in Rhodes v. Pattison, 3 Cal. 469; Stimpson v. Reynolds, 14 Barb. R. 506; Hoyt v. Van Alstyne, 15 id. 568; Shipman v. Clark et al., 4 Denio, 446.

2d. If this objection is a valid bar to the action, still it should be specially plead. 1 Chitt's Plead. 591; Gould Plead'g, 339, sec. 45; 12 Wend. 496.

The second new point of the defendants — that as between defendants and West, the latter had only authority to sell as the agent of defendants, and therefore, his pledge is invalid — we believe to be, under the circumstances of this case, entirely unsound.

While it may be admitted that no one can grant what is not his, not can he do anything for another without being authorized by that other, yet we allege that the principle has its exceptions and qualifications, and is subject to and is controlled by the following, which is of universal application, viz: that all agents must be held to have all those powers, rights and relations which their principal has seemed to confer upon them, or of which he has created the appearance.

Herr v. Barker.

In relation to a bailment or deposit of personal property in the hands of an agent, two predicaments may exist.

1st. The agent may be a mere depositary and have a naked possession.

2d. Added to possession, he may have other indicia usually accompanying and characterizing the absolute ownership.

Under the first of these conditions, that of mere possession, all the cases cited by defendants, properly arrange themselves. Pickering v. Busk, 15 East, 38.

In this case our general proposition is fully maintained, and the inhibition to pledge by factors and brokers, is confined to those having a naked possession, and whose business character was notorious.

McCombie v. Davies, 6 East, 538. The plaintiff never, in any way, interfered with the property nor with the evidences of title, never knew of the agent's wrongful act until after its performance — a broker purchased with plaintiff's money, and without the knowledge or aid of plaintiff, converted the property by pledging it to defendant.

Martini v. Coles et al., 1 M. & S. 140. The several Judges confine the exception from liability in favor of the principal to mere naked possession in the factor. In this case, however, there was no pledge: a mere conversion.

Boyson et al. v. Coles, 6 M. & S. 14. All the Judges concur in saying, if the principal arms the agents with the indicia of property, such act enables them to deal with it to others as their own.

Kingford et al. v. Merry, 38 E. L. & Eq. 582. This case is put distinctly upon the ground of a fraud having been committed against the principals, and not that they had furnished the means for the fraud.

Warner v. Martin, 11 How. R. 209. The general doctrine as to factors and other agents, stated: "there were no indicia of title issued on the part of the owner; he merely parted with the possession." Justice Wayne's opinion, p. 220.

---

Horr v. Barker.

---

Covill v. Hill, 4 Denio, 327. This case is put entirely upon the ground that the owner of the property had done nothing by which others could have been misled.

Saltus v. Everett, 15 Wend. 474, and 20 Ib. 267-285. The decision of the Superior Court was to the effect that naked possession empowered an agent to bind the property to all intents. While this extreme doctrine is not sustained, a bill of lading was considered sufficient as evidence of title.

Root v. French, 13 Wend. 572, holds that a fraudulent purchaser may sell or hypothecate to another.

We insist that West was not an agent with a mere possession; he had by the direct act and consent of the defendants, for the purpose of giving him the apparent ownership of the flour, indicia of title — universally recognized as such — and the only way that defendants can escape all the consequences of an assumption of the right of an entire owner on the part of West, is by showing notice to plaintiffs, which notice is negatived by the case.

All the cases before cited, rightly understood, are authorities for the plaintiffs upon both points; in addition we cite the following: Wilkes v. Fountain & Ferris, 5 T. R. 335; Gibson v. Stevens, 8 How. 384; Gardner v. Howland, 2 Pick. 599; Brower v. Peabody, 3 Kern. R. 121; Bank of Rochester v. Jones, 4 Coma. 497.

Upon the question of West's power, thus armed, Mowry v. Walsh, 8 Cow. p. 238, is in pari materia, and is universally approved so. Root v. French, 13 Wend. 572, 4 Denio, 327; 20 Wend. 267, and 38 Eng. L. & Eq. 582, supra, and wherever it is cited or spoken of, it is treated as a decision at common law, and not under any statute.

In addition, we have to say that the doctrine for which we contend cannot be denied without subverting Ruiz v. Norton, 4 Cal. R. 355-8; Coit v. Humbert, 5 Cal. R. 260; Leet v. Wadsworth, 5 Cal. R. 460; Hutchinson v. Bowers, 6 Cal. R. 383; Jarvis v. Rogers, 13 Mass. R. 105.

All the cases cited by defendants, it is believed, were cases between the vendor and vendee, directly, and are put upon the ground that the vendor never intended to part with the possession.

Horr v. Barker.

---

White v. Wilkes, 5 Taunt. 176. The whole bulk, a part of which was in dispute, remained in the possession of the vendor in full ownership. It was a case of a liquid, which makes the difficulty much greater than in the case of a solid substance. "Per Ch. J."

Shepley v. Davis, 5 Taunt. 617, is put upon the character of the delivery order of vendor, and that of non-compliance of vendee with the terms of sale, and that vendor rightfully rescinded.

Busk v. Davis, 2 M. & S. 397. The same point as in the last preceding case. The Court, Le Blanc and Bayley, Justices, takes the precise distinctions made by this Court in its last decision in the case at bar. "The question is between vendor and vendee. The difficulty arises from not keeping that correctly in view."

Austin v. Craver, 4 Taunt. 644, is put solely upon the ground that the property in dispute was not in esse at the time of alleged sale, and that therefore it was a mere executory contract to sell and deliver in futuro. The same in principle as Suydam v. Jenkins, 3 Sand. 614; Andrews v. Dietrich, 14 Wend. 31; Ward v. Shaw, 7 Wend. 404, and other cases cited, are put upon the ground that vendor had not parted with the possession except as to a bailee.

Wood v. McGee, 7 Ohio, 128, (7 Ham. 466) is another case where the bulk remained in the possession of the vendor.

Reverting to the old cases of Whitehouse v. Frost, 12 East, 614; Jackson v. Anderson, 4 Taunt. 24, we find the precise facts passed upon involved here.

The bulk out of which a parcel is sold had passed from the possession and ownership of the vendor. In Busk v. Davis, this very distinction is taken, as in the cases cited by defendants, and sustained.

Oliphant v. Baker, 5 Denio, 379; Crofoot v. Bennett, 2 Coms. 258; Riddle v. Varnum, 20 Pick. 280, all put the solution of the question, Does the title pass? upon the intention of the parties. The vendors remaining in possession, is only evidence as to intention. This case, October Term, 1857, p. 467.

Horr v. Barker.

petition for a new hearing was filed, which was pending when the tenth volume went to press. Petition was denied at the April Term of that year.)

BURNETT, J., after stating the facts, delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., concurring.

The first point made by defendants is, that West, being only employed to sell, had no right to pledge, not even to persons ignorant of the fact that he was not the owner.

In the case of Martine v. Coles, (1 M. & S. 145) Lord Ellenborough said:

"But it has been decided ever since the case of Patterson v. Tash, that a factor cannot pledge. Perhaps it would have been as well if it had been originally decided, that when it was equivocal whether a person was authorized to act as principal or factor, a pledge made by such a person, free from any circumstances of fraud, was valid. But it is idle now to speculate on this subject, since a long series of cases has decided that a factor cannot pledge."

Le Blank, J., in the same case, said:

"Whether it might not originally have better answered the purposes of commerce to have considered a person in the situation of Vos, having the apparent symbol of property, as the true owner in respect to that person who deals with him under an ignorance of his real character, is a question upon which it is now too late to speculate; since it has been established by a series of decisions, that a factor has no authority to pledge, whether the person to whom he pledges has or has not a knowledge of his being factor."

Bayley, J., also said that "a factor has authority to sell, but not to pledge; and, therefore, a person who takes a pawn of a factor takes it at his peril. If the principal does anything to induce the person to believe the factor really the principal, that would be a different case. Cases may, perhaps, exist where a principal would be bound by a pledge made by his factor."

It is very evident that the Judges thought the rule, as originally established, was a hard one; but they feel themselves constrained to adhere to a long series of decisions. The Acts of IV Geo., 4 C. 83,

Horr v. Barker.

---

and of VI Geo., 4 C. 94, were subsequently passed, modifying this rule. (Phillip v. Huth, 6 Mees. and W. 594, 596.) A statute of similar import was passed in New York in 1830. (1 R. S., 2d Ed., p. 1762; Warner v. Martin, 11 How., U. S., 228.)

In this State we have no statute upon this subject, and the harshness and injustice of the rule, as originally established in England under the views there taken of the commercial policy of that country, (and which reasons are inapplicable to our condition) induced this Court, in the case of Hutchinson v. Bours, (6 Cal. Rep. 383) to confine the rule to a technical factor, "where his only business is to sell goods consigned to him for that purpose." We see no sufficient reason for deviating from the doctrine of that case.

The next point that requires examination is, the objection that no title vested in plaintiffs for want of segregation: the flour being of different qualities, though all of the same brand, was placed in one pile by itself. In the former opinion we said: "The title to the entire lot had passed from West to the different purchasers, and the flour remained with Tilden & Little, in the same state it would have been in had each purchaser first separated his number of barrels from the mass, and then they had all put them together afterwards."

We have examined the most important authorities referred to, and see no reason to change our former opinion. West had a certain number of barrels on store in one mass; and as he sold different portions of this mass to different purchasers, he drew a delivery order for each parcel. Those several orders were surrendered by the purchasers to the warehousemen, who credited each purchaser with the number of barrels to which he was entitled. This the parties had the right to do. There was nothing improper in this voluntary act. It was matter of convenience to all. When each purchaser presented his delivery order from West, he was entitled to a separation of his number of barrels from the mass, or not, at his election. Each purchaser knew the exact condition of the flour, and each had the right to let his portion remain in the general mass. When West had drawn for the whole amount, and the last purchaser had surrendered his order, there was nothing further for West to do. The purchasers could not call on West to separate each portion from the mass, because each purchaser had voluntarily taken his portion in the mass. After surrendering their several orders, and taking a credit on the books of Tilden & Little, the purchasers had no further claim upon West. When A has six hundred barrels of flour on store, and he sells to B one hundred, to C two hundred, and to D three hundred, and gives each a delivery order upon his warehousemen, and the purchasers all surrender their several orders without making any separation, but voluntarily leave the flour standing on the books to the credit of each for his proper number, we confess we cannot see what further act A has to perform, or why there is not a complete delivery to each purchaser. If the purchasers choose to leave their flour in the mass, and to trust to each other, it is their right to do so, and the seller has nothing further to do in the matter of delivery. The title has completely passed from the seller to the purchasers, respectively.

Horr v. Barker.

And the fact that the flour was of different qualities can make no difference under the circumstances of this case. The plaintiffs had possession of a certain number of barrels under the pledge, and a certain number under their purchase; they had voluntarily received the four hundred and eighty barrels without inspection. By this act they waived the inspection as a condition precedent to delivery. After having received the four hundred and eighty barrels, by having it placed to their credit on Tilden & Little's books, the plaintiffs could only look to West upon his covenant, that the flour should inspect superfine. Considering the dealings between West and the plaintiffs, they had the right to select the four hundred and eighty barrels from the whole mass received by them from West, so as to place all the bad flour among that which was pledged to them. This was what they were doing when they were forbidden by the defendants.

The reasoning of the Supreme Court of Ohio, in the case of Woods v. McGee, (7 Ohio, 467) commenting upon the decision of the Court of Appeals of Virginia in the case of Pleasants v. Pendleton (6 Rand. 473) does not seem to us to be conclusive.

"It is impossible," says the Court, "to answer the difficult inquiry, if a part only of the flour had been burnt, in that case on whom would the loss have fallen? If A, being the owner of two thousand barrels of flour, sells one thousand to B, but without anything being done to ascertain the identity and individuality of the part sold, and one thousand barrels are consumed by fire, what is there to determine that one thousand are the property of the vendor, and that he shall bear the loss?"

Horr v. Barker.

It appears to us that the Court sacrificed the common sense and justice of that case to the misapplication of a good principle, when confined to proper circumstances. Suppose A sells and delivers one thousand barrels to B, and five hundred to C, and that the two purchasers afterwards put their flour together in one mass, all being of the same brand, and without marks to distinguish one brand from another in case of partial loss upon whom would it fall? It would seem to be a very inadequate system of jurisprudence that could not give a solution to that question. The parties had a just right to do what they did do; and common justice would say, they should each bear the loss in proportion to his interest in the whole. And what possible difference can it make if one of the parties be the seller and the other the purchaser? In this latter case, as in the former, they are each the separate owner of a specified number of barrels. The seller has a thousand barrels in a warehouse in one mass and sells to a purchaser a portion, and gives him a delivery order, which he presents and takes a warehouse receipt in his own name, leaving the flour in the mass. From the transaction, it is clear that it is the mutual agreement of the seller and purchaser that the property should remain together; for the plain reason that practical common sense will not dispute about the separate identity of two or more things that are all just alike. In all such cases, we conceive it to be the duty of the Courts to look to the intention of the parties. They are competent to contract, and they have a practical knowledge of the best method of carrying out their intentions; and the Courts should give effect to such intentions when ascertained. If the parties consider it a delivery, it should be held to be such, as between them, or as between them and mere trespassers.

The next point which requires notice is, the objection that the property in controversy, being parcel of a large quantity, could not be recovered in replevin.

If the views we have taken be correct, that the title had passed

Brotherton v. Hart.

---

from West to the several purchasers, then there was nothing in the state of the pleadings that would warrant the defendants in raising this question. If we consider, for the sake of argument only, that the other owners should have been joined in the action, either as plaintiffs or defendants, this objection should have been set up in the answer.

The only remaining objection made by the learned counsel of defendants which is necessary to notice is, that the property, having been delivered to Barker & Paddock by virtue of process issued in their previous action of replevin against Tilden & Little, it could not be replevied by the plaintiffs in this action. This objection, whether sufficient or otherwise, was not affirmatively set up in the answer, and the proof offered was properly rejected.

Judgment affirmed.

BROTHERTON v. HART *et al.

Where the parties in the Court below stipulated that a motion for a new trial should be denied, they cannot question, in this Court, the correctness of an order denying such motion.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, County of San Francisco.

D. W. Perley for Appellants.

E. A. Lawrence for Respondent.

TERRY, C. J., at the July Term, 1858, delivered the opinion of the Court—FIELD, J., concurring.

In this case the parties, by stipulation, consented that the motion for a new trial should be denied. Having consented to the order, they cannot now question its correctness. (Meerholts v. Sessions, 9 Cal. 277.)

Judgment affirmed.

HYDE v. HYDE.

Judgment reversed, with directions to enter decree according to evidence.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, County of San Francisco.

J. B. Hart for Appellant.

—— ——— for Respondent.

TERRY, C. J., at the July Term, 1858, delivered the opinion of the Court — FIELD, J., and BURNETT, J., concurring.

We think the evidence reported by the referee sufficiently establishes the allegation of the complaint, and entitles the plaintiff to the relief prayed for.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded, with directions to the Court below to enter a decree in accordance with the prayer of the complaint.

BROOKS v. PARK.

Where the evidence fully warranted the report of the referee, the judgment will be affirmed.

APPEAL from the District Court of the Twelfth Judicial District, County of San Francisco.

Brooks, for Appellant.

Shafters, Park & Heydenfeldt for Respondent.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — FIELD, J., and TERRY, C. J., concurring.

In this case the Referee reported against the claim of the plaintiff, and the District Court overruled the motion to set aside the report. The evidence is in the record, and fully warrants the action of the Referee and District Court.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. SMYTH.

Judgment reversed, for insufficiency of evidence.

APPEAL from the Court of Sessions of the County of Del Norte.

E. D. Baker for Appellant.

Attorney General for Respondent.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court—TERRY, C. J., concurring.

Indictment for larceny. The evidence in this case was clearly insufficient to justify the conviction of the prisoner. So far from proving legal guilt, it was not even sufficient to warrant an inference of moral culpability.

Judgment reversed.

Interest cannot be compounded on a judgment, though stipulated in note sued on, p. 19.

Cited, on the question of interest on judgments, in Gautier v. Eng-Bah, 29 Cal. 168, holding that as plaintiff did not pray for interest at the same rate expressed in the note, he is not entitled to it. Doubted, Ontron v. Lafayette Co., 125 Mo. 71, where it is said that in the principal case the court, in construing the statute, "by very ingenious, but, as it seems to us, rather specious reasoning, founded entirely upon the particular wording of that statute, held that interest upon a judgment could not be compounded. The wording of our statute is different, and will not support that reasoning."

Judgment by Default can give no relief beyond that demanded in the complaint, p. 19.

Cited in Scamman v. Bonslett, 118 Cal. 98, 62 Am. St. Rep. 230, holding foreclosure decree not justified under pleadings; Ellis v. Rademacher, 125 Cal. 557, applying rule when answer admitted allegations of complaint; Claffin Co. v. Simon, 18 Utah, 162, denying relief on distinct counts when no judgment demanded in any; Lamping v. Hyatt, 27 Cal. 102, holding that relief must be demanded in the complaint and specified in the summons; also Brooks v. Forington, 117 Cal. 220, holding that where counsel fees on foreclosure of mortgage are not prayed for, they cannot be allowed, either under general relief or as costs. Affirmed, Scamman v. Bonslett, 118 Cal. 99. Cited, Burling v. Goodman, 1 Nev. 317, holding that judgment could not be for gold coin, where it was not prayed for.

Priority of Mortgages.—Property included in the first mortgage should be exhausted before recourse is had to the second, p. 20.

Cited, Abbott v. Powell, 6 Sawy. 94, where Hoffman, J., says: "Any other rule would be injurious to the mortgagor himself, for after mortgaging his property for, it might be, an insignificant part of its value; he would be unable to sell or encumber any separate parcel of it, for the purchaser or encumbrancer would have no assurance that his parcel might not be first taken to satisfy the general mortgagee."

Surprise at the trial must be alleged there as a ground for continuance, otherwise it is no ground for a new trial, p. 22.

Cited, Schellhous v. Ball, 29 Cal. 609, holding that where surprise is claimed at the trial, the court should afford relief at once, if it would be granted on motion after the trial, but not otherwise; also, Heath v. Scott, 65 Cal. 552, holding that surprise at failure of the other side to introduce depositions must be alleged at the trial; and in *Black v. General Demurrer does not cover matters of form, p. 23.

Approved, Ward v. Clay, 82 Cal. 505, holding that a note was sufficiently pleaded.

Punitive Damages cannot be recovered in a suit against a sheriff acting under legal process in seizing property, unless he acts with malice, oppression, or fraud; the measure of damages is the value of the property taken, with interest, pp. 24-25.

Approved, Dorsey v. Manlove, 14 Cal. 557, 558, where it was claimed by counsel that a seizure by a tax collector under a void assessment was a case for exemplary damages; but the court said that "the law applies in all cases the same measure of relief. This rule is founded upon a wise and beneficial policy, and it is of the utmost importance that it be strictly and rigidly adhered to by the court." This case and the principal case are approved in Nightingale v. Scannell, 18 Cal.

325, where the court says that the rule is based on the absence of malice or oppression: "We think an officer is no less responsible for the consequences of a malicious act than a private person"; but there being no malice shown, the rule of the principal case is enforced. In Abbott v. 76 Land Co., 103 Cal. 611, the principal case is cited, and the court hold that in conversion of wheat under a bona fide claim of title the measure of damages is the actual injury done, and punitive damages cannot be awarded. The rule of the principal case is adopted, in suits against a sheriff for unlawful seizure, in Alley v. Daniel, 75 Ala. 409, and Winstead v. Hulme, 32 Kan. 574; also, in a suit against a railway for damage to a passenger by delay of train, in Hansley v. Jamesville R. Co., 115 N. C. 611, 44 Am. St. Rep. 481, holding that "smart money is not recoverable in every case where an action ex delicto lies"; and in Smith v. Holland, 4 Tex. Ct. App. Civ. Cas. 438, in suit against a justice of the peace for illegal issuance of a writ.

Elections are valid only by virtue of statute. A person cannot "make title to an office through the popular vote, unless such vote was cast in pursuance of legislative regulation and authority," p. 61.

Cited, Kenfield v. Irwin, 52 Cal. 169, holding that "the time of holding an election, whether general or special, must be authoritatively designated in advance, either by law or by some means which the law has prescribed; otherwise the election is held without authority and is ineffectual for any purpose." Also, People v. Hoge, 55 Cal. 620, by Thornton, J., in a dissenting opinion, quoting from 52 Cal. 169, as above; the majority of the court holding that an election for a board of freeholders for San Francisco, held under a notice from the board of election commissioners, was valid under the constitution. Also, People v. Budd, 114 Cal. 173, holding that as the law makes no provision for an election to fill the vacancy caused by death of a lieutenant-governor, no election can be held. Sawyer v. Haydon, 1 Nev. 80, holds that there can be no election unless specific statutory provision is made therefor, and the court say: "For an able and lucid argument on these points we would refer to the opinion of Mr. Justice Baldwin" in the principal case. In State v. Simon, 20 Oreg. 372, the principal case is cited to the same point; also, in dissenting opinion to Robertson v. State, 109 Ind. 95, where the majority of the court hold that quo warranto cannot be brought by the lieutenant-governor, as the constitution provided that the general assembly alone can try such controversies; and in State v. Thoman, 10 Kan. 196, holding that the duration of a judicial term may be fixed by statute if the constitution is silent, but a term prescribed by the constitution cannot be extended by statute; also, Douglas Co. v. Keller, 43 Neb. 646, holding that county lands cannot be sold except by virtue of a vote at a duly authorized election.

Statute requiring the governor to issue a proclamation of an election to fill vacancies in certain offices is mandatory, and an election held without such proclamation is invalid, pp. 65, 66.

Distinguished, State v. Thayer, 31 Neb. 97, 98, 99, where the court say of the principal case:

"The opinion is lengthy, discursive, and involved in paradox. . . . The principal effort of the writer of the opinion seems to have been to separate it and distinguish it from that of People v. Cowles, 13 N. Y. 350. . . . Under the California statute it is shown that there could be no legal notice without the proclamation, . . . while under our statute the notice . . . is independent of any action of the chief executive"; held, the statutory provision requiring thirty days notice of an election is directory only. Distinguished, also, in State v. Carroll, 17 R. I. 596, where the election was because of failure to elect at a previous election, and it was held that notwithstanding lack of proper notice, if the election appeared to be a full expression of the popular will, the court would sustain it. Cited, Voss v. Terrell, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 446, in dissenting opinion, the majority of the court holding that notice of a special election for local option, given according to the local option law, is valid, though it does not conform to the notice prescribed by the general election law. Dec. 25 (Beckett v. Selover).

Public Administrator has authority to act in an estate, after expiration of his term of office, until his authority is revoked, p. 129.

Approved, Estate of Aveline, 53 Cal. 260; Estate of Lermond, 142 Cal. 586, on point that in contest for letters, such administrator acts solely for his own interest; In re Pingree, 100 Cal. 80, holding that a public administrator, who filed a petition for administration just before his term expired, was not entitled to the appointment, but his successor was entitled.

11 Cal. 163-169. DYE v. DYE.

Pleading.—In suit by wife for division of common property after divorce, the facts on which the statutory right is based must be stated in the complaint, p. 167.

Doubted, Gimmy v. Doane, 22 Cal. 637, 638, holding that the rule does not apply to statutes regarding rights of property, but only to those giving a remedy; the statute as to common property is a mere regulation of the right of property, and the correctness of the decision in the principal case "may well be doubted." Cited, Howe v. Howe, 4 Nev. 472, as partly overruled by 22 Cal. 638; held, where pleadings in a divorce suit do not refer to property, a decree regarding the property is reversed, and the case remanded for amendment of the pleadings. Cited, on the point that in action on a contract the performance of conditions prescribed by a statute must be specially alleged, in Himmelman v. Danos, 35 Cal. 448, which was a suit to enforce a lien for street work; also, Rhoda v. Alameda Co., 52 Cal. 352, holding that in a suit for severing a vault from a building, the facts relied on as bringing the case within the statute must be specifically stated; and to the same effect, in suit against a county to recover amount of liquor license illegally collected, in San Luis Obispo v. Hendricks, 71 Cal. 246. Distinguished, White Pine Co. v. Herrick, 19 Nev. 37, holding that in a suit on contract, not under a statute, to recover amount of a county treasurer's bond, the allegations of the complaint were sufficient.

11 Cal. 170-175. PEOPLE v. SUPERVISORS OF EL DORADO CO.
S. C. 8 Cal. 58.

Supervisors can only allow claims against the county that are "legally chargeable," p. 174.

Cited, Linden v. Case, 46 Cal. 174, holding that an injunction will not lie to prevent supervisors from illegally contracting for erection of a hall of records; the supervisors will be presumed to do their duty, but if they allow illegal claims, the taxpayers cannot be injured, for the allowance of such claims could not be sustained. Cited, also, in Grant Co. v. Sels, 5 Oreg. 249, holding that warrants issued to a county judge for his salary, to which he was not entitled by law, may be recovered by the county; and in note to 55 Am. St. Rep. 209, as to allowance of claims against municipal corporations.

County Warrants, in the hands of an innocent purchaser, have no greater validity than when held by the original payee. "If illegal when issued, they are illegal for all time," p. 175.

Cited, Dana v. San Francisco, 19 Cal. 490, holding that a suit on county warrants, as negotiable instruments, evidencing of themselves an indebtedness of the county, cannot be maintained; and to same effect in People v. Gray, 23 Cal. 126; also, with regard to county bonds, in Sutro v. Pettit, 74 Cal. 337, 5 Am. St. Rep. 445, where the court say: "It is clear, in this state at least, that the issuance of bonds is not within the scope of the general and ordinary powers of a board of supervisors, and that such bonds can be legally issued only by virtue of express authority of the legislature"; and in Shakespear v. Smith, 77 Cal. 640, 641, 11 Am. St. Rep. 329, holding that an order of school trustees, illegally issued, was not negotiable, and gave no rights to an innocent indorsee. Cited, on the point that county warrants are not negotiable, in People v. Johnson, 100 Ill. 548, 39 Am. Rep. 68; Clark v. Polk Co., 19 Iowa, 255; and to like effect, as to city or town orders, in Clark v. Des Moines, 19 Iowa, 216, 217, 87 Am. Dec. 431; Commissioners v. Keller, 6 Kan. 518; Eaton v. Berlin, 49 N. H. 224; Rich v. Errol, 51 N. H. 359. In Dorian v. Shreveport, 28 Fed. Rep. 295, the principal case is cited on the point that the assignee of a bond stands in the shoes of the original payee; and the court holds that bonds issued for city improvements may be collected by an assignee, even though the city has no power to issue negotiable paper.

11 Cal. 175-186. FERRIS v. COOVER; S. C. 10 Cal. 589.

United States Supreme Court, under section 25 of the Act of Congress of 1789, has appellate jurisdiction over state courts in the cases named in the section and in no others, pp. 178-181.

Approved, Hart v. Burnett, 20 Cal. 171, where the court, per Field, C. J., said: "It is only final judgments or decrees of the highest court of a state which can be re-examined upon a writ of error by the supreme court of the United States. In this case the decision of the supreme court of the state finally determined certain questions of law which will control any further action of the court below, but it has never rendered any final judgment within the meaning of the twenty-fifth section of the Judiciary Act of 1789. Its judgment was that the judgment of the lower court be reversed and the cause remanded, from which a new trial followed as a matter of course." Cited, also, in Greeley v. Townsend, 25 Cal. 610, 612, 614, where Sanderson, C. J., declines to issue citation on a writ of error from the United States supreme court, on the ground that the case does not involve any federal questions within section 25 of the Federal Judiciary Act; and holds that so far as a statute of California attempts to regulate the practice of writs of error from the United States supreme court, it is unconstitutional, and the court will disregard it. Approved in note by Dixon, C. J., to Ableman v. Booth, 11 Wis. 525.

11 Cal. 187-190. MCDONALD v. MADDUX.

Supervisors are subject to the control of the legislature as to disposition of county funds, p. 189.

Approved, McCauley v. Brooks, 16 Cal. 34, 35, holding that while the legislature has entire control of state finances, it cannot, by repealing an appropriation, deprive of his rights a party who has entered into a contract the payment of which was to be made from the appropriation; and such payment may be enforced by mandamus against the controller, directing him to issue warrants for that purpose. Cited, McDonald v. Bird, 18 Cal. 198, holding that certain warrants against county funds are preferred claims, and that nothing in the principal case affects the question. Distinguished, English v. Supervisors, 19 Cal. 184, holding that supervisors must levy a yearly tax for sinking fund to redeem certain bonds, and that nothing in the principal case clashes with the doctrine that when bonds are issued, to be redeemed by certain taxation, the taxation must be enforced as part of the contract. "A legislature has no more right to violate a contract than an individual, nor can it authorize any person, natural or artificial, to do so." Cited, Esser v. Spaulding, 17 Nev. 303, holding that a statute authorizing transfers from the general fund to the salary fund is not unconstitutional; also, Hockaday Co. v. Commissioners, 1 Colo. App. 373, holding that the legislature may direct that certain county revenues be used for specific purposes; and in note to 68 Am. Dec. 299, on power of legislature over county funds.

11 Cal. 190-193. MONTGOMERY v. TUTT. S. C. 11 Cal. 307.

Writ of Assistance is the appropriate remedy to place the purchaser of mortgaged premises in possession, after foreclosure sale and sheriff's deed; it rests on the "obvious principle that the power of the court to afford a remedy must be coextensive with its jurisdiction over the subject matter, p. 192.

Cited in California etc. Bank v. Graves, 129 Cal. 651, sustaining issuance notwithstanding appeal where no stay bond given; Ball v. Ridge etc. Co., 118 Mich. 15, applying rule to enforcement of tax sale decree; concurring opinion of Field, J., in Tuolumne Co. v. Sedgwick, 15 Cal. 527, where the court hold that where one has both an equitable and a statutory right to redeem property sold under foreclosure, the assertion of the statutory right is no bar to the assertion of the equitable; also, Goodenow v. Ewer, 10 Cal. 468, 76 Am. Dec. 545, holding that where there is no power of sale in a mortgage, the owner of the mortgaged premises cannot be deprived of his rights except by sale pursuant to a decree; and in Horn v. Volcano Co., 18 Cal. 143, holding that a decree gives the summary right to be put in possession. In Montgomery v. Middlemiss, 21 Cal. 107, 81 Am. Dec. 148, Field, C. J., refers to the suggestion in the principal case that an order to deliver possession should first be made, unless embodied in the decree, and says: "Upon further consideration of the subject in later cases we have come to the conclusion that the preliminary order may be omitted, even where no direction for the delivery of possession is contained in the decree. . . . All that is requisite to obtain the writ, as against the parties and those claiming with notice under them after the commencement of the action, is to furnish to the court proper evidence of a presentation of the deed to them, and a demand of the possession, and their refusal to surrender it." In Sichler v. Look, 93 Cal. 610, the court say it is expedient to include in the judgment of foreclosure a provision that a writ of assistance may issue without further notice. The principal case is quoted in Kirsch v. Kirsch, 113 Cal. 64, as to the power to afford a remedy being coextensive with the jurisdiction; and the court holds that where the husband has obtained a decree for the community property, after divorce for the wife's adultery, he is entitled to a writ of assistance. In Hibernia S. & L. Soc. v. Lewis, 117 Cal. 580, the court say: "A writ of assistance is the proper remedy to place the mortgagee, who has purchased under a foreclosure sale, in possession under his deed. It runs against the mortgagor and all persons who have purchased the fee under him pendente lite with notice." In Terrell v. Allison, 21 Wall. 291, the court, per Field, J., cite the principal case, and hold that the owner of the mortgaged property is an indispensable party to the suit, and refuse a writ of assistance because the decree was made without notice to her. Root v. Woolworth, 150 U. S. 412, quotes the principal case as to the power of a court of equity to enforce its judgment; and orders that a writ of possession issue to enforce a decree adjudging the title to real estate. The principal case is also quoted in Shainwald v. Lewis, 69 Fed. Rep. 493, as to jurisdiction to enforce a decree, and it is held that a court of equity has jurisdiction of a bill to revive a former decree. Cited, also, in Rose v. Richmond Co., 17 Nev. 73; and notes to 51 Am. Dec. 154, 157, on writs of assistance, and 99 Id. 575, on vendor's lien.

Homestead cannot be carved out of the property so as to impair the rights of a previous mortgagee, p. 193.

Cited, Skinner v. Beatty, 16 Cal. 158, holding that a writ of assistance will not be set aside on account of a homestead claim by the mortgagor. Approved, Van Sandt v. Alvis, 109 Cal. 168, 50 Am. St. Rep. 27.

Cited, Giant Powder Co. v. California Powder Co., 6 Sawy. 525, 4 Fed. Rep. 728, where Field, J., holds that the court is at liberty to inquire into the circumstances under which the term "inexplosive" was used in a patent; also, Auzerais v. Naglee, 74 Cal. 67, holding that the word "settle" having a double meaning, the author of a letter in which it is used may explain the sense in which he used it; and in Gentile v. Crossan, 7 N. Mex. 597, holding that the meaning of "las lomas" in a deed might be explained.

11 Cal. 215-222. PEOPLE v. BUSTER.

Surety "has a right to stand on the precise terms of his contract. He can be held to no other or different contract," p. 220.

Cited, People v. Breyfogle, 17 Cal. 508, 509, holding that what is meant is that a rational interpretation must be given to the language of the agreement; and where there are several sureties, each for a different amount, it must be considered that each surety agrees to pay the sum opposite his name, and the principal binds himself to pay the aggregate of these sums. Cited, also, in Pierce v. Whiting, 63 Cal. 543, holding that sureties on an undertaking for release of attachment cannot be sued until demand for payment has been made on them and the principal; and a complaint that fails to allege such demand is fatally defective. In Carter v. Mulrein, 82 Cal. 169, 16 Am. St. Rep. 100, it is held that where an order provides that injunction may issue on filing a bond, the sureties on the bond are not liable for damage caused by an injunction issued several days before execution of the bond. In Ogden v. Davis, 116 Cal. 36, the bond was against waste on certain land; held, the sureties were not liable for waste on other land, and parol evidence was not admissible to show that the latter land was the one intended to be covered by the bond; held, also, that the bond being against waste and also for any deficiency on a judgment of foreclosure, the sureties were liable for such deficiency, even if no legal waste was proven. The principal case is cited in Davis v. State, 5 Tex. App. 50, holding that where a bail bond is altered after execution, the sureties are not liable.

Sureties on official bond of a state treasurer held to have "all contracted together and with reference to the common responsibility. . . . The discharge of any one of the obligors affected the contract as to all. It made it, indeed, a different contract from that made by the parties," p. 220.

Distinguished, People v. Evans, 29 Cal. 435, where one of several sureties on a county treasurer's bond applied to the county court to be released; the court did not act in the matter, but the treasurer filed a new bond, approved by the county judge; held, the county court had no jurisdiction under the statute, and all the sureties on the first bond were liable. Distinguished, also, in Sacramento Co. v. Bird, 31 Cal. 77, holding that insolvency of some sureties, and removal from the state of others, did not release any of the sureties. Affirmed, Spencer v. Houghton, 68 Cal. 90, 91, holding that release of one surety on a guardian's bond releases the others; and section 1543 of the Civil Code, as to release of a joint debtor, is inapplicable, because the bond was executed before the code was made. Distinguished, Wilson v. Tebbets, 29 Ark. 583, 21 Am. Rep. 168, saying that the principal case was decided on the ground that the obligation was joint, not joint and several; and holding that discharge of one surety was personal to him and did not affect the liability of other sureties.

Habeas Corpus.—"Writ should not issue to run out of the county, unless for good cause shown, as the absence, disability, or refusal to act of the local judge, or other reason showing that the object and reason of the law requires its issuance," p. 225.

Approved, Ex parte Deny, 10 Nev. 214; Ex parte Lynn, 19 Tex. App. 122. Cited, People v. Fairman, 59 Mich. 570, holding that a writ of error does not lie to an order discharging a prisoner on habeas corpus, either at common law or by statute; In re Hammill, 9 S. D. 391, holding that the writ is of constitutional right, but its privilege is to be exercised in a reasonable manner; also in note to 67 Am. Dec. 398, on refusal of writ of habeas corpus.

Statutes must be construed "according to their true intent and meaning; that intent, when collected from the whole and every part of the statute taken together, must prevail even over the literal sense of the terms, and control the strict letter of the law, when the letter would lead to possible injustice, contradiction, and absurdity," p. 224.

Approved, Chandler v. Lee, 1 Idaho, 351, as to a "current expense fund"; also, Dilger v. Palmer, 60 Iowa, 130, as to a homestead law; *St. Louis v. Specific Performance decreed as to vendor of land, the vendee having made improvements and paid part of the purchase price, and his delay in paying the balance being reasonable, pp. 236-238.

Cited, Grattan v. Wiggins, 23 Cal. 37, holding that where one, who purchased at sheriff's sale land subject to a mortgage, made large expenditures in perfecting the title, and the mortgagee stood by without giving notice of his claim or offering to share the expenditure, a court of equity will not allow foreclosure and sale of the premises more than five years later, at least until the mortgagee had indemnified the purchaser for the expenditures. Cited, also, in Steele v. Branch, 40 Cal. 13, holding that a vendor must perform his contract, and that any forfeiture claimed by vendor for delay by vendee in fulfilling conditions to be performed by him, was insufficient, or must be deemed waived, time not being of the essence of the contract; and to same effect in Day v. Cohn, 65 Cal. 510; also in note to 68 Am. Dec. 87, on forfeiture, and note to 70 Id. 740, on specific performance.

11 Cal. 238-249; 70 Am. Dec. 775. RITTER v. SCANNELL.

Attachment.—A return which simply states that the process was executed is sufficient, prima facie, to show due and proper execution; all presumptions are in favor of the regularity of acts of the officer, p. 248.

Approved, Porter v. Pico, 55 Cal. 172, holding that whether the evidence was sufficient to repel the presumption was a question for the trial court, which would not be reviewed on appeal. Denied, Brusie v. Gates, 80 Cal. 467, where the court say: "If this were an open question, we should be inclined to hold that a general return of service was sufficient, and that it must be presumed when the officer returned that he had served the writ by attaching the described property, that he had performed every act necessary to such service" (citing the principal case). "But this court has held to the contrary in the later cases, and we feel that we should adhere to these decisions, Sharp v. Baird, 43 Cal. 579; Watt v. Wright, 66 Cal. 207; Gates v. McLean, 70 Cal. 47." The three cases named do not refer to the principal case, but hold that the return must specify the details of service required by the statute. Cited, O'Connor v. Blake, 29 Cal. 315, holding that where the sheriff already has property under attachment, he may levy a second attachment on the same property by making a return to that effect on the back of the attachment. Cited, Head v. Daniels, 38 Kan. 10, 13, holding that the sheriff is not required, under the statute, to state what he did not do, or why he did what he stated; also, Sabin v. Mitchell, 27 Oreg. 73, holding that the return is sufficient if it can fairly be inferred that the requirements of the law were met; Stoddard v. McMahon, 35 Tex. 298, holding that the presumption is in favor of regularity of acts of the officer, and note to 76 Am. Dec. 148, to the same effect; also in note to 20 Am. St. Rep. 808, 809, on sufficiency of return.

Sheriff's Return on process does not affect the title of a purchaser at sheriff's sale, pp. 248, 249.

Approved, Wilson v. Madison, 55 Cal. 8; Hibberd v. Smith, 67 Cal. 504; Exchange v. Stamm, 9 N. Mex. 371, construing local statutes. The note to the principal case in 70 Am. Dec. 779, on this point is cited in notes to 73 Am. Dec. 528, 74 Id. 522, 76 Id. 147, 77 Id. 466.

Lien of attaching creditor takes effect immediately upon levy of the attachment and deposit of a copy with the recorder, and cannot be divested by failure of the sheriff to make a proper return, p. 249.

Cited, Horton v. Monroe, 98 Mich. 199, holding that failure of the sheriff to return the writ until a day after the return day did not release the lien; and City Bank v. Cupp, 59 Tex. 272, holding that failure to file the return for a year did not destroy the lien; also in note to 99 Am. Dec. 270, on this point.

Evidence.—If the return is not prima facie evidence of a proper levy, the fact may be proved by other competent evidence, p. 249.

Approved, Brusie v. Gates, 80 Cal. 468, where the court say: "The written return of an officer is not the only evidence of the fact that the writ was properly served; therefore, if the return simply omits to state any fact necessary to a valid service, such fact may be supplied by parol evidence, so long as the facts stated in the return are not varied or contradicted in such way as to affect vested rights." The note to the principal case, 70 Am. Dec. 779, is cited on this point in note to 29 Am. Dec. 121.

Mistake in Date of return may be corrected at any time, p. 249.

Cited in note to 5 Am. St. Rep. 657, on amending return.

11 Cal. 250-259. HUNT v. CITY OF SAN FRANCISCO.

Pleading.—Common counts in assumpsit, under the old system of pleading, are good in actions against private persons, and there is no necessity for a different rule in respect to corporations. The rules of pleading "were designed to embrace all persons, natural or artificial, capable of suing or being sued," p. 258.

Approved, Brown v. Board of Education, 103 Cal. 535. Cited, Cicotte v. St. Anne's, 60 Mich. 557, holding that corporations are on the same footing with natural persons as regards contracts.

Judgment cannot be entered on a verdict upon several counts, where one of the counts is bad, for it is not certain upon which of the counts the jury bases its finding. But the rule does not apply to judgment by default, for the several counts are distinct causes of action, and although one may be bad, this "does not affect the right of plaintiff to take judgment on those which are rightly stated," pp. 258; 259.

Approved, Barron v. Frink, 30 Cal. 488, holding that judgment on a general verdict upon several counts must be reversed if one of them is bad; and to same effect in Bernstein v. Downs, 112 Cal. 204, although the court there say: "This proposition seems to be violative of the principle that an appellant must affirmatively show error, and all intendments are in support of the judgment." Cited, Territory v. Virginia Co., 2 Mont. 101, holding that a bad complaint will not sustain a good judgment; and the question as to whether there is a cause of action can be raised for the first time in the supreme court.

Judgment in Replevin follows the verdict and undertaking, and is in the alternative, for possession of the property, or the value thereof if delivery cannot be had. The recovery of the thing itself, and not damages in lieu thereof, is the primary object of the suit. The value is recovered only as an alternative, when delivery of the specific property cannot be had, p. 277.

Cited, Etchepare v. Aguirre, 91 Cal. 292, 25 Am. St. Rep. 182, where the court say: "The verdict for the defendant was special as to the value of the property, as required by the code. As to all other issues it was general. This was sufficient to justify a judgment for the return of the property, or for the value thereof in case a delivery could not be had. . . . The code does not require the verdict to be special except as to the value of the property, and the sole object of this exception is to enable the court to render an alternative judgment as required by section 667 of the Code of Civil Procedure." Cited, also, in Swantz v. Pillow, 50 Ark. 306, 7 Am. St. Rep. 100, holding that defendant cannot keep possession of a mule replevied from him by paying its value; also, Wilson v. Fuller, 9 Kan. 193, holding that judgment must be in the alternative for the thing or its value.

Replevin.—Possession obtained by the writ is only temporary and does not divest the title or discharge the lien. The party ultimately entitled to the property has a double security, while the party who replevies it does not incur the extraordinary risk of having to pay the judgment and also to lose the property. The lien of the attachment continued, and when the same property came again into the hands of the sheriff, the condition of the replevin bond, to return the property, was fulfilled, p. 279.

Approved, Caldwell v. Gans, 1 Mont. 578-580, where the court say: "We adopt this view and say that according to every principle of law and practice, if the sureties in the undertaking in replevin are compelled to pay the value of the property, they are entitled to the property itself"; Union etc. Bank v. Milburn etc. Co., 7 N. Dak. 217, but held inapplicable where replevin plaintiff seeks merely enforcement of lien; Mohr v. Langan, 162 Mo. 484, 85 Am. St. Rep. 507, holding replevied property to be in custodia legis pending action; Coen v. Watkins, 62 Mo. App. 510, 511, holding that a mule delivered to plaintiff on a bond is not in custodia legis; Rinker v. Lee, 29 Neb. 790, holding that where goods were delivered to plaintiff under a replevin bond and later taken from him, he could not bring replevin for them; Coos Bay Co. v. Wieder, 26 Oreg. 457, holding that property replevied from an officer holding it under execution is in custodia legis, and the lien of the officer under his writ is not discharged.

11 Cal. 281-298; 70 Am. Dec. 779. BOURS v. ZACHARIAH.

Notary Public cannot alter or amend defective certificate of acknowledgment of married woman's deed after delivery, p. 292.

Cited in Bank v. Oberhaus, 125 Cal. 323, on point that notary acts ministerially; Durham v. Stephenson, 41 Fla. 120, denying right in absence of reacknowledgment or its equivalent; Wedel v. Herman, 59 Cal. 514, holding that under section 1202 of the Civil Code the superior court can correct a defective certificate; also, Griffith v. Ventress, 91 Ala. 373, 24 Am. St. Rep. 924, saying that the principal case "is directly in point, and the reasoning of the court appears to us to be conclusive," and holding that a certificate of acknowledgment by a probate judge cannot be amended by him four years later. Cited, Wambole v. Foote, 2 Dak. 23, holding that the acknowledgment must conform to the statute; also, Gilbraith v. Gallivan, 78 Mo. 458, holding that a probate clerk cannot correct a certificate of acknowledgment after his term of office has expired, although it seems he may do it before; notes to 52 Am. Dec. 521, 523 (Jordan v. Corey), on this point; and note to 74 Id. 369, on omission of notarial seal.

11 Cal. 303-306. SCRIBER v. MASTEN.

Conversion.—Where one takes goods of another after notice of the ownership sufficient to put him on inquiry, the owner need make no demand before bringing suit, p. 306.

Cited, Harpending v. Meyer, 55 Cal. 560, holding that where goods were pledged by one who had no right to them, no demand by the owner was necessary before bringing suit, and the statute of limitations began to run against the claim from the date of receipt of the goods by the pledgee; also, notes to 1 Am. Dec. 587, on right to maintain trover, and 24 Am. St. Rep. 801, on modes of conversion.

11 Cal. 307-327. MONTGOMERY v. TUTT. S. C. 11 Cal. 190.

Mortgage.—In suit for foreclosure, "all persons interested in the estate at the time suit is instituted, whether purchasers, heirs, devisees, remaindermen, reversioners, or encumbrancers, should be made parties," p. 314.

Cited, Horn v. Volcano Co., 13 Cal. 70, 73 Am. Dec. 571, holding that judgment creditors, having liens on the premises may be brought into the foreclosure suit on their petition or by amending the complaint; also, Tuolumne R. Co. v. Sedgwick, 15 Cal. 527, holding that in a suit to redeem property sold under execution, parties obtaining interests subsequent to plaintiff, before suit brought, may redeem under the statute or file a bill in equity; Burton v. Lies, 21 Cal. 91, holding that where the mortgagor has sold his estate in the premises, the widow of the deceased vendee must be made a party to a suit by the mortgagee to foreclose; Alexander v. Greenwood, 24 Cal. 512, holding that a judgment creditor, not made a party to the foreclosure suit, is not bound by the decree; Horn v. Jones, 28 Cal. 203, holding that where the vendee at foreclosure sale brought a suit to quiet his title, he could go behind the decree in a mechanic's lien foreclosure and show there was no lien; Carpentier v. Brenham, 40 Cal. 238, holding that a junior mortgagee, not made a party to a foreclosure by the first mortgagee, is not bound thereby. Cited, also, in note to 16 Am. Dec. 184, as to who may intervene.

Parties.—Subsequent encumbrancers are not in all cases indispensable parties to a foreclosure. "The property mortgaged may be insufficient to cover the debt secured; the encumbrancers may be so numerous and their claims so large that the parties possessing the latest liens could not possibly receive any portion of the proceeds of the sale. It would be not only a great inconvenience, but a great hardship, to compel the mortgagee in such case to bring in all such persons who have acquired, without any fault of his, liens upon the property," p. 315.

Approved, Carpentier v. Brenham, 40 Cal. 235. Cited, note to 70 Am. Dec. 754, on subsequent encumbrancers.

Entry of Default "only cuts off the right to answer, and this is as effectually done by the decree," p. 316.

Approved, Kittle v. Bellegarde, 86 Cal. 564, denying a motion to set aside a default twenty months after entry thereof.

Interest upon interest already due cannot be allowed except in pursuance of a written engagement of the parties, p. 316.

Approved, Doe v. Vallejo, 29 Cal. 392, and Yndart v. Den, 116 Cal. 545, 546, 58 Am. St. Rep. 209.

Redemption.—The clause in the decree, foreclosing the equity of redemption, is a useless formula. The equitable right of subsequent encumbrancers to redeem is merged into the statutory right; "after the decree they stand, as to their right of redemption, in the same position as ordinary judgment debtors," p. 317.

Approved, Eldridge v. Wright, 55 Cal. 536, holding that where land of tenants in common, sold under foreclosure, was redeemed by a judgment creditor of one of them, he took the interests of all. Referred to in note to 70 Am. Dec. 676 (McMillan v. Richards), on this point.

Negotiable Instrument.—In a suit against the maker of a promissory note or the acceptor of a bill of exchange payable at a particular place, presentation for payment at such place need not be alleged or proved, p. 317.

Approved, Greeley v. Whitehead, 35 Fla. 529, 48 Am. St. Rep. 259.

11 Cal. 328. FUNKENSTEIN v. ELGUTTER.

Appeal from justice's court to county court on questions of law and fact, dismissed, there being no issues of fact and no statement of grounds of law on which appellant intended to rely, p. 328.

Approved, Rickey v. Superior Court, 59 Cal. 662; Cited in Maxson v. Superior Court, 124 Cal. 471, discussing power of superior court on reversal of judgment entered on order overruling demurrer. Distinguished, Ketchum v. Superior Court, 65 Cal. 495, where "there were issues of fact that the court had jurisdiction to retry," and the superior court properly allowed defendant to amend an answer he had filed in the justice's court. Overruled, Fabretti v. Superior Court, 77 Cal. 307, the court saying that the principal case was "decided under section 366 of the Practice Act, which was omitted from the code; and it is now settled that if the appeal be taken on questions of law and fact, when there has been no trial of issues of fact in the justice's court, the superior court must entertain and decide the appeal as upon questions of law alone," citing 59 Cal. 471, 63 Cal. 435. Cited, Gage v. Maryatt, 9 Mont. 267, holding that if there is no issue in the justice's court there is nothing to be tried anew; Paul v. Armstrong, 1 Nev. 96, holding that the appellate court can try only the issues tried in the court below. Italian Swiss Agr. Colony v. Bartagnolli, 9 Wyo. 207.

11 Cal. 329-339. PEOPLE v. WELLS.

Election to fill a vacancy is void if there is no vacancy, p. 338.

Cited in note to 70 Am. Dec. 769, as affirmed on the authority of People v. Weller, 11 Cal. 49.

Statute.—A general provision must be controlled by one that is special, p. 339.

Cited on this point, as to a homestead law, in Smith v. Shrieves, 13 Nev. 325.

11 Cal. 339-340. AMERICAN R. CO. v. BEAR R. CO.

Appeal is only on the judgment roll, when there is no properly authenticated statement, p. 340.

Cited, Everett v. Buchanan, 2 Dak. 254, holding that anything on the judgment roll may be considered; Henderson v. Morris, 5 Oreg. 27, holding that anything to be reviewed by the appellate court must appear on the transcript.

11 Cal. 340. HANSON v. BARNHISEL.

New Trial.—Order granting it will not be reversed where no abuse of discretion appears, p. 340.

Approved, Anthony v. Eddy, 5 Kan. 133.

11 Cal. 341. GRAY v. GRAY and EATON v. PALMER.

Remittitur.—If a modification of costs is desired, application must be made within the ten days allowed for filing petition for rehearing, p. 341.

Cited, In re Levinson, 108 Cal. 459, to the point that if a modification of the judgment of the appellate court is desired, application must be made before the remittitur goes down; after it is issued the supreme court loses jurisdiction of the case "except in a case of mistake, or of fraud or imposition practiced upon the court."

Costs.—Section 510 of the Practice Act (sec. 1033, C. C. P.) does not apply to costs on appeal; these also include costs of making up the appeal in the lower court and the transcript. When the supreme court awards costs, only the costs on appeal are meant; and if the case is remanded for further proceedings, the costs of the former trial are to abide the event, p. 341.

Approved, Ex parte Burrill, 24 Cal. 352, 353. Cited, Stoddard v. Treadwell, 29 Cal. 282, holding that where a new trial was ordered, and the result of both trials was a judgment for plaintiff, he was entitled to costs of both trials.

11 Cal. 343-350; 70 Am. Dec. 787. HARDY v. HUNT.

Wager on Election may be retracted by the maker at any time before the stakeholder pays it over to the winner, p. 348.

Cited, Johnston v. Russell, 37 Cal. 675, holding that the maker of an election wager may recover his stake from the other party or the stakeholder before the bet has been decided; "but persons who allow their stakes to remain until after the bet has been decided and the result has become generally known, are entitled to no such consideration. Their tears, if any, are not repentant tears, but such as crocodiles shed over the victims they are about to devour." Wright v. Stewart, 130 Fed. 919, plaintiff demanding money deposited with stakeholders before running of fake footrace may maintain action for its recovery. Lewy v. Crawford, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 298. Cited in notes to 89 Am. Dec. 603, on recovery of bets from stakeholders, and 1 Am. St. Rep. 302, on loans for gambling purposes.

Estoppel.—The maker of a wager, who instructed another to place the bet in the other's name, is not estopped from asserting his ownership, as against attaching creditors of the one who placed the bet, pp. 348, 349.

Cited in note to 73 Am. Dec. 202, on estoppel.

Garnishee, knowing the facts as to ownership of the property held by him, must protect the rights of all parties by appropriate legal proceedings, p. 350.

Cited, Walling v. Miller, 15 Cal. 40, holding that a garnishee who delivered up, on an attachment, property held by him as bailee, after notice of the real ownership, was liable to the owner; Bellingham Co. v. Brisbois, 14 Wash. 179, holding that the debtor must be notified of assignment of a chose in action; also in notes, on garnishee's rights and duties, to 13 Am. Dec. 342, 26 Id. 694, 41 Id. 628, 70 Id. 791.

General citation: Campbell's Appeal, 178 Pa. 29.

11 Cal. 360-361. MOORE v. SEMPLE.

Appeal.—Agreement, not embodied in any statement or bill of exceptions, is no part of the record, p. 361.

Cited, Everett v. Buchanan, 2 Dak. 253, holding that clerk's minutes are no part of the record.

Clerical Error, in omitting the words "to be sold" from a decree, does not affect the decree, p. 361.

Cited, Norton v. Meader, 4 Sawy. 619, holding that omission of the word "copy" from a certificate of service was immaterial.

11 Cal. 361-362. FREMONT v. COUNTY OF MARIPOSA.

Tax.—An injunction will not lie against the collection of a tax, on the prayer of a taxpayer, alleging that taxes for previous years were illegally assessed and collected, p. 362.

Cited, Delphi v. Bowen, 61 Ind. 38, holding that in a suit to enjoin collection of a tax, the complaint must show that the assessment was illegal and void; Apperson v. City, 2 Flipp. 374, 1 Fed. Cas. 1072, discussing right of setoff against demands for taxes; note to 69 Am. Dec. 204, as to an injunction against collection of taxes.

11 Cal. 363-366. STEPHENS v. MANSFIELD.

Public Lands.—Abandonment must be made simply because the owner desires no longer to possess the thing; if made with an intention that some other person should become the possessor, it would be a gift, p. 365.

Partly overruled in Richardson v. McNulty, 24 Cal. 344, holding that what was said regarding a gift was obiter, and not law. Cited, McLeran v. Benton, 43 Cal. 476, holding that "there is no such thing as an abandonment to particular persons or for a consideration"; also, Middle Creek Co. v. Henry, 15 Mont. 576, 577, where it was held there was no abandonment.

11 Cal. 366-372. WARING v. CROW.

Partners in a mining claim are tenants in common, and possession of one partner or cotenant is the possession of all, p. 371.

Cited, Lytle Creek Co. v. Perdew, 65 Cal. 455, holding that any one of several cotenants, entitled to use of water from a creek, may bring suit for a nuisance against a person diverting the water; and in Tully v. Tully, 71 Cal. 346, holding that the presumption is that the tenancy in common continues until one tenant ousts another by notice that he claims adversely or by acts equivalent to notice; cited in City v. Hopper, 7 Utah, 238, on point that one tenant in common of water may sue alone for its diversion. Mallet v. Uncle Sam Co., 1 Nev. 206, 90 Am. Dec. 496, says of the principal case: "However much its authority may be weakened by the subsequent doubts of the learned judge, who delivered the opinion of the court, as to its accuracy, the decision is certainly based upon reason and the soundest principles of law" (what is meant by the "subsequent doubts," etc., does not appear); held, the possession of one partner or cotenant inures to the benefit of all, until it becomes adverse. Cited, Terrell v. Martin, 64 Tex. 128, holding that possession of one cotenant inures to the benefit of another.

The mere fact that one tenant in common or partner goes away and remains absent from the premises of the joint business or property, leaving his associates in possession, creates no presumption of abandonment, p. 371.

In Moon v. Rollins, 36 Cal. 338, 95 Am. Dec. 183, the court comments on the principal case, saying of the charge to the jury therein (p. 369) that one leaving with intent to return might do so within five years: "Nothing was said as to a period of time beyond five years. But if a party may return in five years, it is not apparent why he may not return in five years and one month or two months, unless an adverse possession has barred the right of entry. It is a question of intention, and has been so held over and over again, and not a question of time, except so far as the jury are entitled to consider lapse of time . . . for the purpose of ascertaining the intention." Trevasaki v. Peard, 111 Cal. 605, holding that "abandonment is a matter of intent, which may be shown by the conduct of a party even against his express declarations to the contrary; and if the intent has been formed and once acted upon, the abandonment is as absolute if it exists for a minute or a second as though it continued for years." Valcaldia v. Mines, 86 Fed. 95, 56 U. S. App. 676, on point that abandonment is question of intent; Mitchell v. Carder, 21 W. Va. 285, holding that a party abandons when he leaves land free to the occupancy of the next owner, without any intention to repossess it and regardless as to what may become of it; Beaver Brook Co. v. St. Vrain Co., 6 Colo. App. 136, on the point that a party claiming abandonment has the burden of proof, and must establish it by unequivocal evidence; and note to 40 Am. Dec. 464, 465, on abandonment.

Forfeiture is not created by refusal of one cotenant or partner to pay, or delay in paying, the expenses of the business, or the assessments, p. 372.

Cited, Coleman v. Clements, 23 Cal. 248, 249, holding that a mining rule, under which a forfeiture is claimed, is to be strictly construed against the forfeiture. Construed in Wiseman v. McNulty, 25 Cal. 239, where the court say that in the principal case the word "forfeiture" was used in the sense of "abandonment"; and hold that where a forfeiture is claimed for nonpayment of assessments under an agreement, the party claiming it must show compliance on his part with the terms of the agreement.

11 Cal. 372-379. McMILLAN v. REYNOLDS.

Summons.—Affidavit of service must show affirmatively compliance with the statute, p. 378.

Cited, Sharp v. Daugney, 33 Cal. 514, holding that in affidavit of mailing of summons, it need not be stated that affiant is a white male citizen, as the rule applies only to service other than by publication; Linott v. Rowland, 119 Cal. 453, holding that an affidavit that did not show service upon a defendant was insufficient to sustain a judgment by default; also, Coffee v. Gates, 28 Ark. 44, holding that where service may be made by any person authorized by the officer to whom the process is directed, the person serving it must verify his return; Black v. Clendenin, 3 Mont. 47, holding that service by the United States marshal was not good under the statute; Layton v. Trapp, 20 Mont. 456, holding that where a justice of the peace appointed a person to serve summons under the statute, the affidavit of service must be verified; Heatherly v. Hadley, 4 Oreg. 16, 21, holding that the principal case was not in conflict with Peck v. Strauss, 33 Cal. 678, and distinguishing the latter case, on the point that an insufficient return of service cannot be aided by a recital in a decree; Goodale v. Coffee, 24 Oreg. 354, holding that an affidavit of publication of summons must aver all the statutory requirements, but these need not be recited in the order of publication, for jurisdiction is based on the affidavit.

Service of certified copy of complaint must be shown by the return on the summons, p. 379.

Approved, Reynolds v. Page, 35 Cal. 300, holding that a summons and certified copy of the complaint must be issued within a year from filing of the complaint.

Notice.—The vendee at foreclosure sale having knowledge of defective service of the summons, the sale is set aside, p. 379.

Cited, Steinbach v. Lease, 27 Cal. 299, holding that where the mortgagee purchases the premises at foreclosure sale, he is presumed to have bought with notice of all defects in publication of summons.

Equity invalidates a decree of foreclosure, at suit of the mortgagor, a married woman (whose rights are favored in the law) and who has a good defense, p. 379.

Cited, Martin v. Parsons, 49 Cal. 100, on the point that a court of equity will interfere to prevent the use of a judgment as an instrument of injustice by one who procured the wrongful entry thereof when there had been no service of summons therein.

11 Cal. 380-390. FREMONT v. BOLING.

Tax.—Injunction issues against sale of property for taxes, where the sheriff, who was about to make the sale, was no longer in office and had no legal authority, p. 390.

Cited, Huntington v. C. P. R. R., 2 Sawy. 514, holding that where an assessment was void, for failure to assess land and improvements separately, the sale of the property for taxes must be enjoined; also, Hallenbeck v. Hahn, 2 Neb. 438, holding that sale of real estate for taxes will not be enjoined merely because the owner has available personal property; and note to 69 Am. Dec. 201, on injunctions to restrain collection of taxes.

11 Cal. 391. McGILL v. RAINALDI.

Appeal must be determined on the judgment roll where there is no statement embodied in the record, p. 391.

Cited, Everett v. Buchanan, 2 Dak. 254, holding that general and special verdicts are part of the judgment roll, and that a judgment for plaintiff was properly rendered upon them; also, Graham v. Linehan, 1 Idaho, 781, holding that in Idaho the bill of exceptions is part of the judgment roll, while in California it is not.

11 Cal. 393-405; 70 Am. Dec. 791. HORR v. BARKER. S. C. 6 Cal. 489; 8 Cal. 603, 609.

Pledge by Factor.—The rule that a factor cannot pledge the goods of his principal is limited, in California, to a technical factor, whose only business is to sell consigned goods, affirming Hutchinson v. Bours, 6 Cal. 383, p. 402.

Overruled, Wright v. Solomon, 19 Cal. 73, 77, 79 Am. Dec. 199, 203, where the court, per Field, C. J., say: "The limitation asserted in Hutchinson v. Bours and Horr v. Barker cannot be maintained. Those decisions are anomalous in their character and in conflict with the law upon the authority of factors, as it is recognized by the United States courts and the courts of every state of the Union, where the legislature has not interfered to make a change. We do not hesitate to overrule them, for it is of the highest importance to those engaged in commerce in this state that the decisions of this court on commercial questions should be in conformity with the adjudications on like questions of the courts of the principal commercial communities of the world." Cited in note to 95 Am. Dec. 406, on factor's right to pledge; and the note to the principal case, in 70 Am. Dec. 791, on this point, is cited in note to 79 Id. 203.

Delivery of barrels of flour, all of the same kind and stored in the same warehouse, to several purchasers, held to be complete upon the delivery to each purchaser of a warehouse order; the segregation of the different lots is for the separate purchasers to attend to, and the seller has nothing further to do in the matter of delivery; the fact that the flour was of different qualities makes no difference, pp. 402, 403.

Cited, Kingman v. Holmquist, 38 Kan. 739, 59 Am. Rep. 606, holding that where a seller of plants delivered two lots for two buyers at a railway station, and one of the buyers took away both lots, it was a sufficient delivery to allow the other buyer to maintain trover for his share; also, as to constructive delivery, in notes to 75 Am. Dec. 343, 77 Id. 311, 82 Id. 667, 48 Am. St. Rep. 351. The note to the principal case in 70 Am. Dec. 791, is cited in notes to 83 Id. 142, 90 Id. 202, 94 Id. 281, on segregation and constructive delivery.

11 Cal. 405. BROTHERTON v. HART.

Judgments by Consent, and orders made by stipulation, will not be reviewed by the supreme court, p. 405.

Approved, Mecham v. McKay, 37 Cal. 158; San Francisco v. Certain Real Estate, 42 Cal. 518; Erlanger v. S. P. R. R., 109 Cal. 395.

JANUARY TERM.

CASES ARGUED AND DETERMINED

IN

THE SUPREME COURT

JANUARY TERM, 1859.

---

AMES v. HOY.

An action will lie on a judgment or decree obtained in one of the District Courts of this State.

Where the record book containing such judgment has been destroyed by fire, secondary evidence is admissible to establish the fact of the existence of such judgment and its contents.

An action can be maintained at law upon a decree in equity for a specified sum of money.

APPEAL from the Fourteenth District, County of Nevada.

This was an action of debt on a decree for a sum of money obtained by the plaintiff against the defendant, in the District Court of Nevada county. The case was tried without a jury.

On the seventh day of October, 1854, the plaintiff in this suit obtained a decree in the District Court of Nevada county against the defendant Hoy, for a dissolution of copartnership then existing between plaintiff and defendant, and also for the sum of $1,785.97, to be paid by defendant to plaintiff. On the nineteenth day of July, 1856, the records of the District Court of Nevada county were destroyed by fire, including the decree which was then unsatisfied.

The existence and entry of the decree was denied by the answer. On the trial, the destruction of the record of the decree was admitted; whereupon the plaintiff offered to prove by parol testimony the existence and contents of the decree; to which evidence the defendant objected, on the ground that the entry and contents of the decree could not be established by parol testimony, and that no action at law can be maintained on a lost judgment. The Court overruled the objection and admitted the evidence, and defendant excepted. Plaintiff had judgment, and defendant appealed to this Court.

McConnell & Niles for Appellant.

I. The complaint shows that the judgment upon which suit was brought, was rendered in October, A. D. 1854. Inasmuch as such judgment can be enforced by execution, no action of debt can be sustained thereon.

II. The complaint is defective, because it shows upon its face that there is now no judgment in existence in the District Court of Nevada county in favor of plaintiff and against defendant.

III. The Court erred in admitting the evidence of Hill and Elliot to prove the rendition of a judgment by the District Court of Nevada county in favor of plaintiff and against defendant Hoy, and the contents of such judgment.

As to the first point, see section 209, Practice Act. The object of this section seems to have been to take away the right and the necessity of suits on judgments, by extending the time for enforcing them by execution. Indeed, it would almost seem that the Legislature intended to take away all rights of action upon a domestic judgment; and this idea is certainly countenanced by the language of the statute of limitations, which provides a period of limitation for actions upon judgments recovered in the Federal Courts, and other State Courts, but omits to mention domestic judgments.

It will be conceded that Courts discourage this sort of action. In England, the Legislature has discouraged it by passing a statute denying costs to plaintiffs in actions upon judgments. See Statute 43 Geo. III, 1 Chitty's Pl., sec. 3.

---

Ames v. Hoy.

---

The fact that an action upon a domestic judgment is not mentioned by our statutory law, is a powerful argument against its existence; for if such an action can be sustained in this State, it is scarcely possible that the Legislature would have left a proceeding so liable to abuse without any of the checks and restrictions which it has been solicitous to throw around all other forms of litigation.

II. This point seems to us sufficiently clear, but lest the Court may have doubts we submit the following:

The plaintiff can find no case reported where an attempt even was made to sustain an action upon what is called by him a lost judgment; and the absence of any evidence that the point was ever mooted by the Courts, is a very conclusive argument against the doctrine contended for.

In point of fact, the phrase "lost judgment" involves a solecism in language; for if the judgment roll is lost, there is no judgment in existence. Really, the obligation of a judgment seems to depend so immediately and intimately upon the judgment record, that no metaphysical acuteness can separate them. It is certain that it is the record that creates the obligation, and if it be lost or destroyed, the obligation is gone until the judgment is restored. In this respect, a judgment differs from a bond or other chose in action; for if a bond be lost, the obligation or debt still remains: therefore an action may be maintained on a lost bond or other instrument in pais, either at law, or, as is more common, in equity, because the obligation to pay still subsists. But where is the obligation to pay a lost judgment? How can satisfaction be entered on a lost record? In the case of a lost bond the Court may, and usually does, require indemnity from the plaintiff against the future enforcement of such bond, should it be found; but it is manifest that this course would be impracticable in the case of a judgment record.

By sec. 208 of the Practice Act, the defendant in execution is entitled to have satisfaction of the judgment entered on the judgment record, on payment of the judgment debt. This is a positive right of which the judgment debtor cannot be deprived.

Ames v. Hoy.

---

Lord Coke defines a record as follows: "Record is derived of the Latin word recordor, that is, to keep in mind; as the poet saith 'Sic rite audita, recordor;' and therefore a record or enrollment is a memorial or monument of so high a nature, as it importeth in itself such an absolute verity, as if it be pleaded that there is no such record, it shall not receive any trial by witnesses, jury or otherwise, but only by itself." Coke on Litt., p. 117 (b).

Again, the same author, after explaining in language like the above the general nature of a record of a Court of Record, proceeds to state that "Records import in themselves such incontrollable credit and verity, as they admit no plea, averment or proof to the contrary; and if such a record be alleged, and it be pleaded that there is no such record, it can only be tried by itself." Ibid., p. 260 (a).

Hargrave and Butler, in their notes to the first of these two quotations remark: "The words 'if it be pleaded' are material; for in evidence before a jury the copy of a record will be sufficient proof of its existence and contents;" and I refer to Comyn's Digest, title "Certiorari," to which we also call attention. See note 164, liber 2, p. 117 (b) Coke on Litt.

The form of the pleadings in debt on judgment seems to us conclusive on this point: "One of the best arguments or proofs of the law is drawn from the right entries or course of pleading; for the law itself speaketh by good pleading, and therefore Littleton sayeth 'it is proved by the pleading,' etc., as if pleading were 'ipsius legis viva vox.'"

The precedent given by Chitty of a declaration on a judgment has the following averment as the prout patet per recordum clause:

"As by the record and proceedings thereof remaining in the said Court of our said Lord the King himself, which said judgment still remains in full force and effect." 2 Chit. on Pl., p. 483. See the plea of Nul Tiel Record, 3 Chit. Pl., p. 994; Saunders' Reports, and Sergeant Williams' notes to the same; Note (3) to Pitt v. Knight, 1 Saunders, 92; 1 Chit on Pl., pp. 111, 370, 485; 3 Black. Com., p. 331; 3 Stephens' Com., pp. 583, 584.

The third point is so nearly allied to the preceding one, that they should perhaps be properly argued as one. There is, however, some difference between them, growing out of the inherent difference existing between pleading and evidence, and we therefore consider them separately.

Ames v. Hoy.

---

We have already remarked upon the well defined distinction between records and all other paper evidence of debts. In the one, the debt is created and subsists independent of the evidence. In the other, the paper monument is not only the evidence of the judgment obligation, but also the obligation itself. You cannot separate the judgment roll from the obligation to pay it.

In our books on evidence, many things besides judgment and decrees are called records; for instance, statutes; charters of corporations; recognizances; fines and recoveries, and very frequently, the written evidences of the acts and doings of public men and bodies. Indeed, we frequently call registered deeds and mortgages records; and, we would here suggest that those authorities which seem to hold that the loss of a record may be supplied by parol proof, apply to the last mentioned kinds of records, and not to judgments or public statutes.

Greenleaf, in his treatise on the Law of Evidence, says: "If the record is lost, and is ancient, its existence may sometimes be presumed; but whether ancient or recent, after proof of its loss its contents may be proved, like any other document, by secondary evidence." 1 Greenleaf's Ev., sec. 509.

The first part of the above quotation is simply the application of the doctrine of presumptions, or proscription to rights vested in pursuance of a supposed grant by matter of record; as for instance, if a corporate body have from time immemorial exercised certain corporate franchises, although there be no charter in existence, a charter will be presumed. The principal American case cited by Greenleaf in support of the doctrine is, Stockbridge v. West Stockbridge, 12 Mass. R. 400. In that case the charter had been lost thirty years, and was therefore ancient. But no case is cited showing that a suit may be brought on a lost record, and parol evidence given of its contents. Ib. 501.

Mr. Justice Story enumerates lost bonds, lost notes, and other lost instruments forming the subject of equitable interference, but never once mentions lost judgments or decrees. 1 Story's Eq. Juris., sec. 81.

A Court of Equity might restore a lost judgment, but could not enforce it until it was restored.

Ames v. Hoy.

---

The true rule in cases of lost judgments and decrees is, in the first place to restore or substitute the judgment by such proofs of a secondary nature as are within the reach of the party seeking the restoration, and then to enforce the same by execution, or bring an action of debt upon it, provided such action is maintainable.

The case of Jackson ex dem. Taylor v. Cullum, 2 Blackford's Rep 228, was an action of ejectment. The defendant relied on an outstanding title founded on a Sheriff's deed; such deed having been given after a sale under a judgment and execution. The judgment, execution and deed having been burned, he offered parol proof of their contents.

The Court held that such evidence was admissible.

Here it will be noticed that the operative instrument in the creation of defendant's estate was a Sheriff's deed. A deed is a matter in pais, and we have never denied that parol or any other secondary proof may be admitted to prove the contents of such instrument where it may be necessary.

But inasmuch as the Sheriff's deed must be founded on the judgment or decree of a competent Court, it follows that defendant was also admitted to prove the fact of the rendition of such judgment, and the issuing of execution. There is, as the Court will see, great difference between proving the existence of the judgment as a past fact, and proving its contents as the foundation of a present proceeding.

The authorities cited from Cowen & Hill's notes to Phillips on Evidence, are far from sustaining the opinion of the District Judge. Cow. & Hill's notes to Phil. on Ev., note 124, part 2, p. 286.

The original work of Mr. Phillips states that "if a deed enrolled be lost, a copy of the enrollment made out by the Clerk of the Peace, but not proved to be examined, is not admissible."

The note of Cowen & Hill has reference to this. They begin their note by saying that "this species of evidence can only be applicable to those cases where very ancient records are lost; for if a recent record be lost, and its contents can be ascertained, the Court will permit a fresh one to be filed."

In support of this they cite Jackson v. Hammond, 3 Caine's Rep. 496, where the original nisi prius record and issue were lost, and the

Ames v. Hoy.

Supreme Court, after a lapse of six years, allowed the plaintiff upon affidavits to file a new nisi prius record and postea, enter judgment and sue out execution.

They also cite and rely on Douglass v. Yallop, which is thus briefly reported by Sir Jas. Burrow: "A neglect of entering judgment, and the loss of the roll having been sufficiently proved to the Court, a rule was made 'that the Clerk of the Judgments shall sign a new roll, whereon is entered the judgment signed in this cause in Michaelmas term, 1729,' and that the same be numbered as roll 256, and filed among the rolls of that term; a special entry being first made expressing the day of docketing the same. And it is further ordered that this judgment shall not be made use of against the administrator of the defendant." Douglass v. Yallop, 2 Bur. R. 722.

It appears from the report that this order was made in 1759, just thirty years after the rendition of the original judgment; a very long period certainly under the circumstances.

In North Carolina, a memorandum from the Clerk's docket of the amount of a judgment was received in favor of a purchaser at a Sheriff's sale, upon the ground that the record had been made a very long time ago, and that it could not be found after much search. But the Court said if the record had been recent they would have hesitated about receiving it. Doe v. Greenleaf, 3 Hawks' N. C. R. 281. See also, Adams v. Betz, 1 Watts' Pa. R. 428, cited by Cowen & Hill.

Buckner & Hill for Respondent.

There are but two points herein:

First. That as execution could have been issued on the judgment, no action could be sustained thereon; or, in other words: that an action of debt will not lie on a judgment if an execution can be issued thereon.

Second. That no action at law can be sustained on a lost or destroyed judgment.

That an action can be maintained on a domestic judgment is a proposition well settled by the Courts of England and of almost every State in the Union. Howard v. Howard, 15 Mass. R. 197; 1 Chitty's Pleadings, 103, 104, 354, 355; 2 Ibid. 232-233, and notes; Post et al. v. Neafie, 3 Caine's R. 22; 6 Wheeler Am. Com. Law, 268 and seq.; 1 Cowen's Treatise, 47; 1 Hill R. 645; Storer v. Storer, 6 Mass. R. 390; 7 Cranch R. 481; 11 Condensed Rep. (S. C.) 578; 19 Johnson, 162; 15 Ib. 233; 1 Comyn's Digest, "Debt,"—a—2; Greathouse v. Smith, 3 Scammon, 541.
Vol. XII.—2

Conceiving the question as to right of action on a judgment to be well settled by the foregoing authorities, the next question is: When, or at what time shall the action be commenced?

We hold that an action of debt may be brought on a domestic judgment immediately on the recovery thereof. Dennison v. Williams, 4 Conn. 402; Dundo v. Doll, 2 John. 87; 6 John. 98; 16 John. 66; Hale v. Angell, 20 John. 342; 6 Cowen, 695; Clark v. Goodwin, 14 Mass. 237; Greathouse v. Smith, 3 Scammon, 541; Smith v. Mumford, 9 Cowen, 26; Church v. Cole, 1 Hill, 645.

In the case of Church v. Cole, it is expressly decided that an action will lie on a judgment, although time for issuance of execution has not yet elapsed. And in 3 Scammon, 541, the same question raised and distinctly decided that an action may be maintained on a judgment although the judgment creditors might issue an execution thereon.

By common law, an action could be maintained within a year and a day on a domestic judgment, that being the life of a judgment without issuance of execution. 1 Comyn's Digest, Debt—a—2.

By our statute the time is extended from that limitation to five years, and judgment has its life for five years without issuance of execution. Wood's Digest, 195, art. 948.

The next proposition is, that no action can be sustained on a LOST or DESTROYED judgment.

We cannot perceive the difference in maintaining an action upon a judgment on a record undestroyed, and an action on a judgment on a record destroyed. The question is more as to admissibility of parol testimony to prove the contents of the record.

Numerous authorities can be cited on this point, but the following will be found sufficient: Jackson ex dem. Taylor v. Cullum, 2 Blackford, 228; Stockbridge v. West Stockbridge, 12 Mass. 400; 1 Greenleaf on Evidence, sec. 509, note 5; Nims v. Johnson, 7 Cal. 110.

The testimony in this cause shows most clearly and conclusively the destruction of the entire record; nay, it is even admitted by the parties, and in this it differs from the case of Nims v. Johnson, a portion of the record therein being in existence. In that action they failed to show the loss, as a foundation for the introduction of secondary evidence as to contents; in this cause, the loss is satisfactorily proven and admitted.

Ames v. Hoy.

---

From the above authorities the conclusion is irresistible, that an action of debt may be maintained on a domestic judgment at any time within its life, and that if the record of the judgment sued upon be lost or destroyed, then that its contents may be proved by parol evidence.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J. concurring.

Plaintiff recovered a judgment in the District Court of Nevada county, in October, 1854, for a sum of money. The judgment was in an equitable suit brought to dissolve a copartnership and settle the firm accounts, and for a decree for the balance due. The records of Nevada were consumed by fire before the institution of this suit, and the papers and minutes of the Court evidencing this judgment destroyed. An action at law is now brought to recover the amount of this judgment or decree. Several questions are made:

1. That suit cannot be maintained in this State on a domestic judgment. At common law, actions could be so maintained. (1 Ch. Pl. 103-4.) There is nothing in our statute which divests the right; and the policy and inconvenience, suggested by the appellant, applied as well in England as here. The chief argument is, that there is no necessity for a right of action on a judgment, inasmuch as execution can be issued to enforce the judgment already obtained, and no better or higher right or advantage is given to the subsequent judgment. But this is not true in fact, as in many cases it may be of advantage to obtain another judgment in order to save or prolong the lien; and in this case the advantage of having record evidence of the judgment is sufficiently perceptible. The argument that a defendant may be vexed by repeated judgments on the same cause of action, is answered by the suggestion that an effectual remedy to the party against this annoyance is the payment of the debt.

Tewksbury v. Provizzo.

---

2. It is also argued that the destruction of the book containing the judgment is the destruction of the judgment itself; so that the primary evidence of the judgment being removed, no other proof of it is admissible. We think that this position is alike indefensible in reason and on authority.

3. The last objection is, that no action can be maintained at law upon a decree in equity for a specific sum of money. The action in the case before us may be considered to be in debt, or as an action in the nature of the action of debt, under the old system. This action was proper whenever a sum liquidated and made definite by contract or judgment was recoverable, and we are not able to perceive why a recovery in equity for a certain and ascertained amount is not as legitimate a basis for action as a judgment at law. Some of the most respectable Courts in the Union have so adjudged, and we think properly. See 15 Mass. 196, and other cases cited therein.

The judgment is affirmed.

TEWKSBURY v. PROVIZZO.

A deed of release, conveyance and partition, providing for the appointment of commissioners to make partition of the land therein described, according to certain terms set forth in the deed; and also, by its terms, providing that the release shall take effect upon the making the partition and report, by the commissioners, of a map of the partition, which together with the deed, is to be handed over to one F who is to file the same for record in the proper office, is sufficient to estop a party thereto from controverting the deed.

On the happening of the event the deed became effectual as a partition and release. When parties go into a partition of property upon certain terms and conditions, each to receive a several portion of a common estate, the instrument of partition, founded upon mutual releases, itself is such affirmation of interest and title on the part of each as to estop him to deny that he did have interest and ownership in the premises; and the release and conveyance of his interest to his parceners is evidence of title in his grantees which he cannot dispute.

Where such commissioners, in pursuance of a contract of a portion of the parties executing such deed, allotted to one G, who was not a party to the deed of partition and release, one hundred acres, and where the defendant claimed, through the parties executing such contract, and both contract and deed were upon record at the time of the defendant's purchase: Held, that the defendant, in contemplation of law, had notice of such contract of his predecessors and vendors, and that he is bound by it.

Where such commissioners in the partition and allotment failed to divide and allot some marsh land, a part of the tract, and where no proof was offered that this land was of any value, or that the division made was affected in any manner by the failure to divide or allot it, or that the allotments made would in any degree have been affected by the allotments of this, or that any injury resulted to any one interested in consequence of this omission; and where important rights have vested under the partition, this Court would not be warranted in holding the action of the commissioners void, because of the failure to divide and allot the marsh land.

APPEAL from the Seventh District, County of Contra Costa.

The facts of this case appear in the opinion of the Court.

E. W. F. Sloan for Appellant.

I. The Court erred in refusing to non-suit the plaintiff. Estoppels must be certain to every intent. The recital in the indenture of partition and release is too vague and indefinite to constitute an estoppel. Right v. Bucknell, 22 Eng. Com. Law R. 122, was an ejectment, which came before Tenterden, C. J., on motion for non-suit. The plaintiff relied upon the words "legally or equitably entitled, &c.," contained in a mortgage as an estoppel; but it was held to be no estoppel, and the rule for non-suit was made absolute.

II. There is nothing in the indenture which constitutes even prima facie evidence of a present subsisting legal estate or right of entry in any one or more of the parties to it. These parties may have had estates in reversion or remainder only, or they may have had only equitable interests in or liens upon the ranch, perfectly consistent with the recital.

III. The partition, if actually executed, could only have operated upon boundaries, without changing the character of any one's estate or interest, whether legal or equitable, present or future; direct or contingent. It was only intended to limit the estate or interest to a portion in severalty, but not to convert it into a different estate or interest. Jackson v. Hasbrouck, 3 J. R. 331; Grice v. Randall, 23 Vt. 239; Goundie v. N. Water Co., 7 Barr, 233.

IV. The indenture of partition was not executed by the commissioners. Its provisions were violated:

1st. In not partitioning the whole ranch. (7 Mass. 399; 8 Wheat. 394; 2 Caine's, 235.) The consent of some or all of the parties by parol could not justify the neglect. Howard v. Cooper, 1 Hill, 44, 49; M'Near v. Baily, 18 Maine, 254.

2d. In making allotments to certain purchasers at the expense of the parties generally, and in making the allotment to Gutierrez in the same manner, contrary to the provisions of the indenture. Kitchen v. Streets, 1 Smith Ind. 27; Curtis v. Snead, 12 Grattan, 260; Ham v. Ham, 39 Maine, 217; Johnson v. Wilson, Willes R. 253.

Saunders & Brent for Respondent.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — FIELD, J., concurring.

This was an ejectment for a tract of land, being a portion of the Rancho of San Pablo, lying in the County of Contra Costa. The case was tried by the Court without a jury. The Court made a general finding that the plaintiff was seized and possessed of the premises, and was ejected by defendant, and that the plaintiff, as a matter of law, was entitled to recover; and it gave judgment of restitution, and for five hundred dollars damages. The plaintiff, on the trial, offered and read in evidence a paper purporting to be a deed of partition of the rancho of San Pablo, the parties, who were very numerous, claiming to be owners, and interested in that rancho; and the deed recites that "it was made in order to settle all disputes touching said rancho, and make amicable partition thereof."

The plaintiff claims the premises through a deed from one of the original owners, whose share, as allotted by the commissioners, he represents. The defendant claims possession as owner of an undivided interest in the rancho, claiming that the allotment and partition does not bind him or convey to the plaintiff the title in severalty of the tract sued for. The partition was made, and it was recorded by the commissioners about twelve months after the deed. The commissioners partitioned off the land, omitting to make any partition of a portion of the tract — this being swamp land — upwards of 2,000 acres in extent.

The commissioners also allowed to one Gutierrez one hundred acres of the land, under circumstances mentioned hereafter. The defendant's predecessor in interest was a party to this deed of partition.

Tewksbury v. Provino.

---

Two questions are made upon which this controversy turns. The first is, what is the effect of this deed of partition, supposing it to have been regularly carried into execution — that is, is it an estoppel? The second is, has there been such a departure from its terms as to invalidate it, or the proceeding under it?

As the plaintiff, on the trial, rested upon this deed without other evidence of title, it is necessary he should maintain that, by force of the deed and the proceedings under it, he is entitled to recover the land. He does not rely upon previous possession, nor upon any deraignment of the title; but contends that this instrument contains of itself a confession of title which the parties to it cannot be permitted to contradict. The defendant offered evidence to show that the defendant was in possession previous to the execution of the deed, by way of proving a superior title in himself; and this evidence was rejected by the Court upon the ground that he was estopped by the deed. To ascertain the merits of this point, it is necessary to consider the provisions and language of the deed, which is a long and complex document. The first article provides for payment of certain expenses of litigation. The second article appoints Forbes, Cooper and Gray, "commissioners to make partition of the rancho in the manner hereinafter mentioned, and to that end, to make the necessary survey, map and report; the same to be filed for record among the land records of the County of Contra Costa, with this deed of the partition and release, the whole to take effect when so filed and recorded, and not before." The third article provides for the separation from the rancho of a tract of fifty acres, to be chosen by one Martina Castro de Alvarado, etc., "the parties of the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth and ninth parts; and Goodale and Benson hereby convey and release to said Martina and her heirs, the same to take effect as soon as the said report and map and this deed shall be filed for record."

The fourth article directs that the commissioners shall then separate from the remainder of the tract one-tenth part, to be divided into three parts among Musson, Saunders and Hepburn — the others to release and convey to them this interest — in consideration of which these persons convey and release their interest in the balance of the rancho; these releases and conveyances to take effect as in the last article.

Articles 5 and 6 make further directions as to the allotments with the same words of release and conveyance.

Article 10 provides, in consideration of the release of Alvarado and wife, the other parties release and convey to certain persons, etc.

Article 10 is as follows: "The commissioners are to execute and close this partition within three months from the time this agreement shall be placed in their hands for that purpose. They are then to deliver the report, map, and this deed to James Alexander Forbes, who is hereby authorized and requested to file the same for record in the proper county; provided at the time of said delivery, the interest in said rancho represented by the parties of the third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth and ninth parts hereto, shall be vested absolutely, and in fee and clear of the lien and right of redemption of all subsequent incumbrancers not parties hereto, in the said parties of the third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth and ninth parts hereto respectively; but in the event that the interest in said rancho represented by the said parties of the third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth and ninth parts hereto, respectively, shall not be so vested in fee and clear of the lien of subsequent incumbrancers and parties hereto, then the said Forbes is to retain the said documents until the said interests in said rancho shall be so vested in said parties hereto, respectively; when, and not before, he shall file the same for record in the proper county; and meanwhile, the parties of the several parts hereto respectively covenant with the other parties hereto, except the said Goodale and Benson, not to lease, mortgage, convey, or in any manner dispose of any part of the said rancho except in subordination, and subject to this partition; for which purpose the said Forbes is hereby authorized to exhibit the said map, report and this deed, when requested by any party in interest hereto."

It has thus been seen that this instrument is what on its face it purports to be, to wit, a deed of conveyance, release and partition. It is true that the release is not to take effect except by force of a future event, to wit, the making of the partition and the recording of it. But we are unable to perceive why a deed like this may not be effect.

Tewksbury v. Provine.

ual on a future event, so at least, as to estop a party on the happening of such event to controvert it. It may be conceded that this event was a condition precedent to the vesting of the estate provided for by the deed; as was the payment of the purchase money in the case of Brannan v. Mesick, 10 Cal. 95. But, within the principle of that case, it would seem that on the happening of the event, the deed became effectual as a partition and release. In this respect, it is not material whether the several parties were owners or had merely liens, as the deed, taking effect on the happening of the event, and purporting to release and convey all the title of the grantor, the grantor would be estopped to deny that he had title at the time. But apart from this, we apprehend that when parties go into a partition of property upon certain terms and conditions, each to receive a several portion of a common estate, the instrument of partition, founded upon mutual releases, itself is such affirmation of interest and title on the part of each, as to estop him to deny that he did have interest and ownership in the premises; and the release and conveyance of his interest to his parceners is evidence of title in his grantees which he cannot dispute. He takes, by virtue of the deed, all their interest, and cannot be allowed to say that he holds possession of what he conveyed and released, by a title paramount to that which he conveyed. In this case, there was no pretense that the possession of the defendant previous to the deed was by any different title than that which he conveyed and released; indeed, such possession was in entire consistency with such interest, and, it is fairly presumable, was held by him as a tenant in common under the title which he showed on the trial.

The next question is as to the effect of the allotment to Gutierrez. It is urged that the commissioners exceeded their powers in making this allotment, and that this vitiates their reports and proceedings. It is answered on the other side, that the defendant claims through Bradley and King, and that they executed the deed of partition, and also the deed allowing and authorizing this act of commissioners. The record supports this statement. The defendant, to support the issue on his part, showed a decree of foreclosure in a certain suit wherein Lyman King and Mancilla B. Bradley were plaintiffs, and Antonio M. Castro was defendant; the order of sale; the Sheriff's return and certificate of sale to King and Bradley, purchasers; the assignment by King to one Piper and one Mathewson; the Sheriff's deed to Bradley, Piper and Mathewson, and the deed from Piper to defendant of his interest in the premises in dispute. The deed from King to Piper and Mathewson is dated on the eighth of January, 1857, and the deed from Piper to defendant on the twenty-sixth of October, 1857. The mortgage from Castro to King and Tewksbury—the latter assigning afterward to Bradley—was recorded twenty-sixth of December, 1854. The deed of partition was made fourteenth of July, 1856, and was executed by both King and Bradley, they, at that time, holding the interest or claim to a portion of which defendant afterwards succeeded. The contract between a number of these parties authorizing the allotment of one hundred acres to Gutierrez was made twenty-first of July, 1856, and was recorded twenty-seventh of August, 1857. Both Bradley and King executed this agreement. The land was set off to Gutierrez in pursuance of this agreement, which conveyed an equitable title in the land. It was, at least, such an executory agreement in respect to this land, as under the statute might be recorded; and, being recorded, imparted notice to a subsequent purchaser dealing in or with respect to the land. When Provizzo subsequently purchased, therefore, he had, in construction of law, notice of this contract by his predecessors and vendors, through whom he derives his title, and must be held bound by their contracts and engagements. He took the land subject to this charge upon it, and to the agreement thus made. And these remarks also apply to the deed of partition.

Tewksbury v. Provizzo.

The last objection is, that the partition is not binding, because the entire tract was not divided, but some marsh land was omitted from the division and allotment. The report of the commissioners on this subject is as follows: "As to the surplus of marsh land comprised in this survey, and belonging to the said tract of the rancho de San Pablo, we have called the same to the attention of the parties interested, and they have decided that the said surplus of the said marshy lands should remain for the present undivided." No proof was offered that this land was of any value; or that the division made was affected in any manner by the failure to divide or allot it; or that the allotments made would in any degree have been affected by the allotments of this; or that any injury resulted to any one interested in consequence of this omission. Moreover, no objection seems to have been made to this allotment and partition on this account. Nor was any exception taken to the admission of this report and these proceedings of the commissioners as evidence, for the specific reason that the statement made by them was inadmissible proof of the facts of agreement and consent stated in the report. In no way, for so long a time after the report was filed and recorded, was there any protest or objection on this score until this defense, though, by the terms of the deed, the report and partition was to vest title. Important rights have vested under these proceedings, which a Court would not disturb without great reluctance. There is, besides all this, some proof that the defendant, after the report, at least impliedly, conceded that, so far as Saunders, one of these parties, was concerned, the title vested; for the witness, Morgan, says he, defendant, recommended a party to purchase from Saunders. Under all these circumstances, we think we shall not be warranted in holding that these proceedings are void because of this omission.

Kimball v. Gearhart.

---

We think the judgment of the Court below should be affirmed.

KIMBALL et al. v. GEARHART et al.

- In an action for damages for the diversion of water from the plaintiff's ditch, the deposition of one of the owners in the ditch was taken by the plaintiff, and subsequently, and before the trial, the witness conveyed, by deed, his interest in the ditch to plaintiff: Held, that such deed of conveyance did not pass the witness' right to the damages, and hence, he was an incompetent witness.
- To make the testimony of a witness admissible, he must be competent at the time of taking his deposition. It is the effect of the interest on the witness at the time his testimony is taken, that disqualifies him.
- The subsequent deed to plaintiff, though it carried the property and the future use of the water, did not retroact and carry the right to damages for the past illegal use of it, any more than a deed to land carries the remedies for past trespasses.
- The failure of one partner in a ditch, to pay his proportion of the expenses of the concern, does not forfeit his right in the common property.

Kimball v. Gearhart.

---

This Court has often held that it would not interfere with the verdict of a jury, on the ground that such verdict is against the weight of evidence, except in extraordinary cases. It is almost impossible for an Appellate Court to satisfy itself in a decision upon such matters — so much depends upon the manner, bearing, character of witnesses, and the peculiar circumstances which the transcript fails to preserve, which give value and weight to testimony.

Where parties projecting a ditch to convey water, give notice to the world of their intention to dig such ditch and appropriate such water, in the usual manner, and mark out and designate the line of such ditch by the usual marks and indications, and pursue the work on the ditch with a reasonable degree of diligence until the same is completed so as to receive the water, they are entitled to such water as against all persons subsequently claiming or locating it.

In appropriating unclaimed water on the public lands, only such acts are necessary, and such indications and evidences of appropriation required, as the nature of the case and the face of the country will admit of, and are under the circumstances and at the time practicable — surveys, notices, stakes and blazing of trees, followed by work and actual labor, without abandonment, will in every case, where the work is completed, give title to the water over subsequent claimants.

The title to the water conveyed through a ditch constructed in such manner, will, on completion of the work, date back from the beginning of the work as against subsequent appropriators.

In determining the question of diligence in the construction of such a work, the jury have a right to take into consideration the circumstances surrounding the parties at the date of the appropriation, such as the nature and climate of the country traversed by such ditch, together with the difficulties of procuring labor and materials.

Where parties go to issue in actions for the diversion of water, upon general averments and denials of title, anything that legally supports or attacks the title, is admissible in evidence.

Possession or actual appropriation is the test of priority in all claims to the use of water, where such claims are dependent upon the ownership of the land through which the water flows.

The mere act of commencing a ditch with the intention of appropriating the water, is not sufficient of itself to give a party an exclusive right to the water of such stream.

The notice of the intention to appropriate the water, must be sufficient to put a prudent man on inquiry.

The doctrine of relation in the appropriation of water, only applies when the first acts, from which the party appropriating seeks to date his right, indicate the intention of appropriating such water.

Where parties commence the construction of a ditch, who have not at the time the pecuniary means requisite to complete the same in a reasonable time, and they project the work and claim the water with a full knowledge of their pecuniary inability to complete the same within a reasonable time, they cannot urge such want of means as an excuse for not prosecuting the work.

APPEAL from the Fourteenth District, County of Sierra.

---

Kimball v. Gearhart.

---

This was an action for damages for the diversion of water from the ditch of plaintiff.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court, with the exception of certain instructions which were given by the Court to the jury. The instructions given by the Court, at the request of the plaintiff, are as follows:

"1. If the jury believe that the plaintiffs did, in July, 1854, project a ditch to receive the water now in dispute, and did give notice to the world of their intention to dig such ditch and appropriate such water, in the usual manner, and did mark out and designate the line of said ditch by the usual marks and indications, and did pursue their work on said ditch with a reasonable degree of diligence until the same was completed so as to receive this water in dispute, then they are entitled to such water before all persons subsequently claiming or locating it.

"2. If the jury believe from the evidence, and the admissions contained in the answer, that the plaintiffs took up and claimed the water in dispute before the defendants did, and that they constructed a ditch to receive such water, with due diligence, and that since the completion of said ditch they have been deprived of such water by the defendants, and since the thirty-first of July, 1856, the plaintiffs have had their ditch in a condition to, and could have used the water in the water season prior to the commencement of this suit, and have, during such time been deprived of the use thereof by the defendants, then they must find for the plaintiffs and assess the damages.

"3. In appropriating unclaimed water on public lands, only such acts are necessary, and only such indications and evidences of appropriation are required, as the nature of the case and the face of the country will admit of, and are under the circumstances and at the time practicable—and surveys, notices, stakes and blazing of trees, followed by work and actual labor, without any abandonment, will in every case, where the work is completed, give title to water over subsequent claimants.

"4. If the plaintiffs surveyed the ground, planted stakes along the line, gave public notice by posting notices, or otherwise, and actually commenced and diligently pursued the work of the Yuba River Ditch,

Kimball v. Gearhart.

---

which was to take and receive the water in dispute, and if any of these acts were prior to the claim or location of defendants, this entitled plaintiffs to the possession and ownership of the water, and therefore the jury must find for plaintiffs.

"5. If the jury believe that the plaintiffs, with the intention to appropriate this water, used reasonable diligence in following one step by another till the ditch was completed, their title to the water, though it was not perfected until the ditch was so far completed as to convey the water, will yet on completion date from the beginning of the work.

"6. That in determining the question of the plaintiffs' diligence in the construction of their ditch, the jury have a right to take into consideration the circumstances surrounding them at the date of their alleged appropriation, such as the nature and climate of the country traversed by said ditch, together with all the difficulties of procuring labor and materials necessary in such cases.

"7. The law does not require a vain or useless thing to be done; that therefore the plaintiffs were not required by the law of due diligence, to complete their ditch before they could successfully use it for the purpose for which they dug it.

"8. If the tunnel through the ridge was a necessary part of the plaintiffs' ditch, without which it could not be used, then it was only necessary for the said plaintiffs to complete their said ditch by the time they could, with reasonable diligence, succeed in preparing their tunnel for use."

To the giving of the foregoing instructions, the defendant excepted.

The following are the instructions given at the request of the defendant:

"1. If the jury believe from the evidence that the plaintiffs had no ditch or survey for a ditch to the stream of water in dispute, and also that they had no notice or marks upon said stream, indicating an intention to appropriate it, at the time of defendants' appropriation of the water of the said stream, they must find for the defendants.

"2. Possession or actual appropriation must be the test of priority in all claims to the use of water, whenever such claims are dependant upon the ownership of the land through which the water flows.

Kimball v. Gearhart.

---

"3. The mere act of commencing a ditch with the intention of appropriating the water of a stream, is not sufficient of itself to give a party any exclusive right to the water of such stream.

"4. Although plaintiffs or their grantors may have intended to appropriate the water in dispute, by means of their ditch commenced in 1854, yet, if they did not manifest their intention by such acts or in such a manner as would have notified a prudent man, about to appropriate said water, of such intention at the time defendants appropriated the same, the jury must find for the defendants.

"5. The doctrine of relation in the appropriation of water, can only apply when the first acts, from which the party appropriating seeks to date his right, indicate the intention of appropriating such water.

"6. If the jury believe from the evidence, that plaintiffs or their predecessors in interest, did not, after locating and surveying their ditch, prosecute the work on it in good faith, and as fast as the nature of the work and the state of the weather would reasonably permit, and that they had neglected the work upon it for an unreasonable length of time, immediately preceding the appropriation of the water in dispute by defendants, the verdict should be for the defendants.

"7. If the jury believe from the evidence, that the plaintiffs at the time they commenced the Yuba River Ditch, had not the pecuniary means requisite to complete the same in a reasonable time, and that they projected the said work, and claimed the water in dispute with a full knowledge of their said pecuniary inability to complete the same within a reasonable time, then plaintiffs cannot urge such want of pecuniary means as an excuse for not prosecuting said work with reasonable diligence, and completing it within a reasonable time.

"8. If the jury believe from the evidence, that the plaintiffs made an unreasonable delay after claiming the water in dispute, and that during such delay, and before the plaintiffs renewed work upon their ditch, defendants in good faith located and appropriated the water in dispute, they must find for the defendants.

"9. If the jury believe from the evidence, that the defendants were the first appropriators of the water in dispute, in good faith and without notice of any prior claim of plaintiffs, they must find for defendants.

Kimball v. Gearhart.

---

"10. Even if the plaintiffs had located and claimed the water in dispute, in the year 1854, and prior to the appropriation of the same by the defendants, yet, if after making such location and claim, plaintiffs failed and neglected to renew or keep in existence such notice or such other evidence of their location and claim, as would have put a reasonable and prudent man, wishing to appropriate the water, on inquiry, and that in the absence of such notices or other evidences of said location or claim, the defendants located and appropriated said water in good faith for mining purposes, they must find for the defendants.

"11. Kimball and others are plaintiffs in this action, and they must show a better title to the water in dispute than the defendants have, before they can recover, and the burthen of proof is on the plaintiffs to show that they are entitled to the water in dispute."

To the giving of which instructions so requested by the defendants, the plaintiffs excepted. The substance of the instructions refused by the Court, appear in the opinion of the Court. Defendants had verdict and judgment.

Plaintiffs moved for a new trial, which was denied, and they appealed to this Court.

McConnell & Niles and H. I. Thornton, jr., for Appellants.

We ask the reversal of the judgment in this case upon the following grounds, viz.:

I. The Court below erred in ruling out the deposition of Charles R. Howe, as evidence at the trial of said cause.

II. The Court erred in refusing to set aside the verdict of the jury in said cause, and grant a new trial upon the following grounds:

1. Insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict rendered by the jury.

2. Error in law, occurring at the trial, and duly excepted to by the plaintiffs.

3. The verdict is contrary to law and evidence.

III. The Court erred in refusing the instructions asked by plaintiffs, numbered 7, 8 and 9; and in giving those asked by defendants, numbered from 1 to 11 inclusive.

Kimball v. Gearhart.

I. The first point assigned for error consists in the ruling out of the deposition of Charles R. Howe.

The ground of the exclusion of the deposition was the existence of Howe's alleged interest in the damages for the eighteenth of July, 1856. It was said that the record in the present action might be evidence for or against him in any suit he might hereafter institute for such damages.

The water right or easement alleged to have been disturbed and injured, pertains to a certain ditch situate on the public land, called the "Yuba Ditch."

This ditch was projected in May, 1854.

As shown by Howe's preliminary examination, Harlow Kimball and himself were the original projectors of such ditch.

The statement made by Howe, and relied on by defendants, is substantially as follows:

In May, 1854, Kimball and himself conceived the project of constructing the ditch mentioned in the complaint, to bring in the water of the North fork of the North Yuba river, and its tributaries, to Eureka and vicinity.

Howe had no pecuniary means nor credit, and Kimball assumed the burthen of advancing all the funds immediately necessary — with the understanding, however, that Howe should hereafter advance his share of the cost and expenses — and that he should then have an interest commensurate with his advances. In the meanwhile Howe was to devote his time and labor to the construction of the ditch, etc.

Two years passed — the ditch was near its completion — and still Howe had not contributed a single cent towards its cost.

In the meanwhile, Kimball became deeply involved in debt to Johnson & Hickok for money and material advanced by them upon his credit towards the construction of the work.

It became absolutely necessary that Howe should comply with the condition of his arrangement with Kimball, and advance a part of the money, or that he should suffer his estate to be determined, and back out of the enterprise in toto. He chose the latter, and conveyed to Kimball, on the nineteenth of July, 1856, and on the same day Kimball conveyed to Johnson & Hickok, two-fifths of the whole enterprise.

---

Kimball v. Gearhart.

---

The two transactions were in fact but parts of the same transaction, as Howe's evidence shows.

Howe, in his deed to Kimball, quit-claimed to him one-half of the whole work, because his interest might have amounted to a half had he complied with his original agreement, and advanced the necessary money.

Now mark the terms of this whole arrangement so far as Howe is concerned :

Although, as a matter of form, a sum is named in the deed as a consideration, yet in point of fact he received not a cent by way of consideration, properly so called. But from his own statement it appears that the only advantage he derived from the transaction was, first, a release from all liability to Johnson & Hickok by reason of the indebtedness to them ; and secondly, he was to receive from Kimball, and Johnson & Hickok, compensation for all the labor and care he had bestowed upon the work, from its very commencement, at the rate of seven dollars per day.

Now the question recurs upon the nature of Howe's estate or interest before the nineteenth July, 1856, and what effect the transactions of that date had upon it.

In the first place, we admit that Howe had such an interest before the nineteenth of July, 1856, as would disqualify him as a witness in any action instituted before that date. But that is a very different question from the one presented by the record.

It is evident that Howe occupied towards Kimball and the enterprise one of the two following positions, viz : first, at the commencement of the ditch, he had an interest in presenti, subject to be defeated by a future contingency, viz., the nonpayment of his proportion of the cost, or, secondly, he may be regarded as having at the beginning of the enterprise only an inchoate right, capable of ripening into a vested interest in futuro, upon the happening of a certain contingency, viz., the payment of his part of the cost.

Assuming the first hypothesis to be correct, we lay down this proposition :— upon the happening of the contingency upon which his estate depended, he became divested of such estate retroactively, and his title thereto, as well as all of its incidents, became as if they had never existed.

Kimball v. Gearhart.

---

In this respect it resembles more nearly than anything else an estate upon condition, created by deed. It is true there was no deed in this case, but the parties originally stood in the same position towards the property, and there was a contract or agreement between them, the final execution of which depended upon a condition. One other point of difference is to be found in the fact that a deed conveying an estate in lands, etc., operates upon property having a present existence, whereas in our case the original agreement or understanding between Howe and Kimball was to operate upon property to be created by their future joint efforts. But this difference evidently tends to establish the propriety of our attempt to apply the law of "estates upon condition" to cases like the present.

The rule in relation to estates upon condition is, that when the estate is divested by the failure of the grantee to perform the condition, it operates retroactively; and while the grantee, or feoffee on condition, is supposed in law never to have had an estate, the grantor shall enter as of his old title, and shall be regarded as having been all along the owner of the property. Coke on Litt., 202 (a); Bac. Abr. title Condition, vol. 2, p. 316; 1 Hilliard on Real Property, p. 369; 4 Kent's Com., sec. 123-127.

Again: ditch property itself is subdivided into two distinct kinds or species of property, one of which is dependent upon the other. They are — first, the ditch, canal or flume; and secondly, the water right, privilege or easement.

Either of these may be injured, and the owner may have a remedy for such injury, specially appropriate to the nature of the property, and the nature of the injury. If his ditch be cut or filled up, he may bring trespass founded on his possession. If his water right be disturbed, he may bring case founded on his title or property.

There is no averment or pretense of any injury having been committed to their ditch or other corporeal property. The gist of our action is the diversion of water which we had a right to divert from its natural fountain or stream, thereby preventing a diversion of the same water by us.

The action is founded upon the plaintiffs' title, or upon their ownership of the incorporeal hereditament or easement.

Kimball v. Gearhart.

---

To enable Howe, therefore, to maintain an action for such an injury after the nineteenth of July, 1856, it is necessary that he should have been one of the owners, not only of the ditch, but of the water right or easement, before that period; and also, that his estate or interest should not have been retroactively divested. This is evident.

If Howe sold his share before the completion of the ditch and appropriation, then, even if his share had been fixed and definite from the first, it would not be regarded as extending to the easement, but merely to the part of the ditch completed at the date of the sale.

These principles are so obvious and so fully sustained by reason, that we deem it unnecessary to quote authority in support of them. We content ourselves with a general reference to the following cases: Kelly v. The Natoma Water Co., 6 Cal. Rep. 105; Couger et als. v. Weaver et als., Ibid. 548; Simpson v. Eddy, 3 Cal. Rep., p. 249; Irwin v. Phillips, 5 Cal. Rep. 140.

But, it will be asked, how does all this affect the case at bar, since the complaint itself shows that plaintiffs' appropriation was prior in date to the nineteenth July, 1856, when Howe sold to Kimball?

In answer to the question we say, that taking into consideration the nature of the property, in connection with the facts disclosed by Howe's evidence, we fully establish the correctness of our position, that Howe never had a legal estate in the property, but a mere right, which might at some future time ripen into an estate.

For, granting that we are right in the assumption that neither Kimball or Howe had a vested estate in the easement until actual diversion, and granting further the truth of Howe's statement that the extent of his share was to depend on his future contributions, the following conclusions seem to follow inevitably, viz.: Upon the completion of the ditch and the diversion of the water, the water right became vested in the projectors jointly, or rather, perhaps, as tenants in common, in proportion to the amount advanced by each.

Inasmuch, however, as Howe had advanced nothing, no share vested in him; so that on the nineteenth July, 1856, he had no interest in the ditch or easement, and of course could not demand of defendants to make amends for the damages.

It will be perceived that our reasoning altogether pretermits the fact that Howe worked on the ditch from its first commencement till its completion. The reason for this is twofold—1st. Because we infer from Howe's statement, that the contribution of each of the adventurers was to be in money or its equivalent in materials. The very object of this contribution of each of the adventurers was to employ laborers. 2d. Because he was compensated for his labor in a way entirely inconsistent with the idea of his receiving a share of the ditch for it, viz., by receiving seven dollars per day for it, for the whole time he was engaged. By accepting this sum as compensation for all his rights, Howe estopped himself from saying either to his co-adventurers, or to a mere stranger, that he ever had an interest, or that he was entitled to recover damages from them for any act done either before or after such acceptance.

---

Kimball v. Gearhart.

---

Upon this reasoning, we think it clear that the deposition ought to have been admitted in evidence, and that his Honor erred in excluding it.

II. The Court erred in refusing to set aside the verdict and order a new trial.

This motion was predicated on several grounds; the principal of which were "that the verdict was contrary to evidence," and "error in law occurring at the trial, and excepted to by the plaintiffs."

We contend that the verdict was contrary to the evidence.

We are aware of the great unwillingness of the Court in ordinary cases to interfere with the verdict of a jury, or with the action of a Visi Prius Court in sustaining such verdict. Nothing in our opinion can be more laudable than this spirit in an Appellate Court.

But cases must often arise, and we know have arisen in our State, where the ends of justice imperatively demand the exercise of this Court's undoubted prerogative to supervise the verdicts of juries, and set them aside, if in conflict with testimony. O'Keefe v. Cunningham, 9 Cal. Rep., p. 589; Bagley v. Eaton, 8 Ibid. 159; 9 Ibid. 430; Same case, July Term, 1858. The case at bar, we think, is one of these cases.

(Counsel here reviewed the evidence at great length.)

III. The Court erred in refusing instructions numbered 7, 8 and 9,

---

Kimball v. Gearhart.

---

offered by plaintiff, and in giving the instructions numbered from 1 to 11 inclusive, offered by the defendants.

It would be somewhat difficult to ascertain his Honor's objections to these instructions, had he not himself informed us.

As regards the first, (No. 7) he objects that it is not predicated upon the evidence, as it was not shown that the plaintiffs acquired any right to the disputed water in 1854.

His objection to our position that abandonment is a special defense, and must be specially pleaded, is that we should have objected to the introduction of any proof of abandonment if it was not warranted by the pleadings, etc. He then proceeds to remark that he fully explained the doctrine of relation to the jury, etc.

Now it seems to us that it is upon this very doctrine of relation that we differ from the learned Judge. He says there is no proof that we acquired any rights, etc., in 1854. But we say, that according to the very doctrine of relation mentioned by him — if we commenced our operations to divert the Sebastopol water in 1854, and completed them in 1856 — our acquisition of the easement relates back and dates from the year 1854; that is to say, by construction of law we are supposed, as against all subsequent intruders, to have acquired our right in that year. Kelly v. The Natoma Water Co., 6 Cal. Rep., p. 105; Barnes v. Stark, 4 Cal. Rep., p. 414. See also, Viner's Abr., title Relation; Jackson v. McCall, 3 Cowen Rep., p. 80; Jackson v. Bull, 1 Johns. Cas., p. 81; Jackson v. Raymond, Ibid., p. 85, note; Case v. De Goes, 3 Caine's Cas., p. 262; Jackson v. Bard, 4 Johns. Rep., p. 234.

In Heath v. Boss, a patent for land dated the fourth of December, but which did not pass the great seal until the twenty-eighth, was held to relate back so as to vest the title in the patentee from the date. 12 Johns. Rep., p. 140.

The authorities are quite numerous, but the above will suffice.

The true import of the doctrine of relation being established, no one will deny the legal propriety of the instruction. It merely reiterates the well known rule, that the existence of a right being shown, its continuance will be presumed, and that the burthen of disproving its present existence is with those who deny it.

---

Kimball v. Gearhart.

---

The other point of difference between the Court and ourselves is upon a mere question of fact. He says we ought to have objected to the defendants' evidence of the plaintiffs' abandonment; thereby implying that evidence was offered by the defendants expressly to prove abandonment.

Now, as a matter of fact, no such evidence was offered.

All the evidence offered by the defendants was admissible in some point of view. No evidence was offered avowedly for the purpose of showing an abandonment. What we objected to was the attempt of the defendants to infer from the general circumstances and history of the case abandonment by the plaintiffs, and to impress such inference upon the jury. In our 9th instruction we distinctly affirm that the defendants must plead an abandonment by the plaintiffs, and prove it; which we would scarcely have said, had the defendants actually introduced such proof. Our point was, that the defendants were trying to avail themselves of an abandonment on our part without having pleaded or proved it.

Instructions are frequently asked for no other purpose than to refute the erroneous position of counsel, when it is apprehended that their error may be imposed upon the minds of the jury. And our instruction could be sustained upon this ground, if on no other.

An abandonment, properly so called, can only be voluntary. But there are cases where a non user for a given period will be regarded as tantamount to the expression of a determination to abandon. It is this latter sort of abandonment which bears so striking a resemblance to a forfeiture; for in ninety-nine out of every one hundred instances of abandonment by non-user, the will does not in fact consent. 3 Kent's Com., secs. 448, 449, 450.

All authorities concur in holding that a right can only be lost by non-user where the non-user extends over a period sufficient to vest a title by prescription. Domat's Civil Law, sec. 1030; 3 Kent's Com., sec. 448; Lawrence v. Obee, 3 Campbell, 514; Corning v. Gould, 16 Wend. 513; Yeakle v. Nace, 2 Wharton's Rep. 123.

The same principle has been applied by this Court to water privileges on the public lands, and to mining claims. Crandall v. Woods, 8 Cal. Rep. 136; Partridge v. Townsend et als., July Term, 1858.

Kimball v. Gearhart

---

The latter case is exactly in point.

The Civil Law in this respect agrees literally with ours. Indeed it seems to be taken for granted, that our law of easements and servitudes was derived from the Roman Law. Domat's Civil Law, sec. 1030, et seq.

The principle has often been applied to offices and other franchises.

From the various reported cases the following rule of procedure may be adduced:

When a man holds a right of franchise of public nature, and it is alleged that he has abandoned it by non-user, the fact can only be definitely ascertained and adjudged by a judicial proceeding in which the question is directly involved. Hardin v. Page, 8 B. Monroe, 648.

Vandief & Stewart for Respondents.

The witness Howe sold out of the ditch on the nineteenth of July, 1856.

The damages are claimed for about one year of the time while Howe owned one-half of the ditch. His right to these damages he did not sell with his interest in the ditch, and could not if he would. Oliver v. Walsh, 6 Cal. 456.

Under these circumstances, he was clearly incompetent by the rule in Packer et al. v. Heaton et al., 9 Cal. 568.

A very metaphysical argument is based to prove that Howe was not interested in the damages at the time his deposition was taken — June 30th. 1858.

By a careful perusal of Howe's examination on his voir dire, it will be seen that the circumstances of his connection with the ditch enterprise were about as follows:

In May, 1854, Kimball and Howe conceived the project of constructing the ditch described as the Yuba Ditch. No understanding was then had between them as to what proportion of the ditch, when completed, should belong to each.

Howe gave his personal attention and labor, and Kimball furnished all the money that was furnished.

But nearly everything except what was done by Howe, was done on a credit extended to them mostly by Johnson & Hickok. They went on in this way, without any agreement or understanding between themselves, till July, 1856, one year after the completion of the ditch to the water in dispute, when they got into difficulty with the defendants about this water.

Howe and Kimball were by this time indebted to Johnson & Hickok for means advanced to carry on the work, in the sum of about ten thousand dollars.

On the nineteenth of July, 1856, Howe sold to Kimball his entire interest in the concern, describing it as one-half. The consideration of this sale is stated by Howe to have been that he should receive a sum equal to seven dollars for each day he had worked on the ditch; that he should be furnished work on the ditch for the future at the same rate, and that he should be discharged from all liabilities formerly incurred, and particularly from all liability to Johnson & Hickok, which was their principal, if not their only liability.

For the purpose of discharging this liability, it was arranged at the same time that Kimball should convey to Johnson & Hickok two-fifths of the ditch; for it seems that Kimball was at this time as destitute of means as Howe, and that neither could pay in any other way than by selling a portion of their ditch.

There is no evidence that the interest of either Howe or Kimball was to terminate on the failure of either to pay his portion of the expenses, nor that the quantity of either of their interests should be regulated by the sum paid into the concern by either of them.

Howe never did hold his interest under Kimball in any way. He was the first to discover the water and the route; the first and the last to work upon it. There were no conditions attached to his tenure which might not with equal propriety be said to have attached to that of Kimball.

They both acquired and held (till Howe sold out) the same character of title.

It is true that neither of them acquired such a right to the use of the water in dispute, as would enable them to maintain an action for the diversion of it, until their ditch was capable of receiving it.

The ditch was so completed, according to their testimony, in August, 1855, nearly one year before Howe sold out; during all which time plaintiffs claim damages, and have a right to recover for that time, if at all.

Kimball v. Gearhart.

---

A condition upon which a forfeiture can be based, must be the subject of an express contract. Here, then, is no contract with a condition either express or implied.

An entry by the grantor or feoffer for condition broken, implies a grant or feoffment on condition. In this case, there is no grant or feoffment on condition, or otherwise.

Howe did not derive or hold his title from or under Kimball in any manner known to the law. Kimball never had any "old estate" in Howe's share of the property; how, then, could he "be in as of his old estate?"

For the purpose of making their theory fit the facts of this case, the learned counsel deny that there was any valid conveyance from Howe to Kimball for want of any consideration.

We think there was a good consideration. Howe's discharge from their joint liability to Johnson & Hickok for ten thousand dollars, was something very much resembling a consideration. Seven dollars per day for all the time he had worked, when wages were only four dollars, might be taken for some part of a consideration, especially when according to the theory of counsel, Kimball was under no legal obligation to pay anything for his past labor.

The other position assigned to the witness Howe is, that he never had any vested interest in any portion of the property, for the reasons that by the original agreement his interest was to be only in proportion to the amount contributed by him to the joint concern, and that he never contributed anything, and therefore had no interest.

In answer to this it is only necessary to say, first, there never was any such agreement, and the record will not show it.

Howe could not assign his interest in the damages. Oliver v. Walsh, 6 Cal. 456.

And, being interested in a part of the damages claimed, he was incompetent. Packer v. Heaton, 9 Cal. 571; Gage v. Stewart, 4 John. 293.

The second point made by appellant is, that the evidence does not justify the verdict of the jury.

---

Kimball v. Gearhart.

---

(On this point counsel for respondents also went into a lengthy discussion of the facts.)

We are referred to the case of Conger v. Weaver, for authority to set aside the verdict of the jury in this case. All that was decided in that case was, that this Court would not disturb the verdict when there was any evidence to sustain it. That is all we ask in this case.

This Court will not disturb a verdict where the evidence is conflicting. Had the verdict in this case been for plaintiffs, their evidence might sustain it, though we do not doubt that the preponderance of evidence is with the defendants.

The third error relied on is the refusal of the District Court to give the instructions numbered 7, 8 and 9, asked by appellants.

Number 7 was properly refused, because there was no evidence tending to show that plaintiffs acquired any right to the water by anything they did in that year; for by their own showing, they could not have appropriated the water before August, 1856; and if their right was to be dated back to 1854, it must have been by virtue of the law of relation which had been fully explained to the jury in the instructions given. It was also bad, for the reason that the issue of "abandonment" had not been made before the jury either in the pleadings (as contended by counsel) or the argument to the jury.

It is admitted that the issue of abandonment was not made by the pleadings, and that all the evidence was proper under the pleadings.

Why, then, was an instruction on that question required, unless it had been claimed by defendants, that there was such an issue? which was not the fact. The questions made to the jury, as before stated, were as to plaintiffs' intention to take up the water before defendants appropriated it; and if so, had plaintiffs followed up that intention with due diligence, or such acts as would, with them, date back their right by relation?

Number 8 was properly refused, for the reason that it was calculated to mislead the jury. It was competent for defendants to plead prior location, and prove it by showing the time of their location, and rebutting plaintiffs' location in 1854, by showing that they had not used such diligence as would entitle them to date their right back by relation to that date. All this could be done, and was done, without raising the issue of abandonment.

Kimball v. Gearhart.

---

But we will here remark, that we know of no rule which would require abandonment in a case like this to be pleaded specially. The plaintiffs have not specially set out in their complaint the circumstances on which they intended to rely to establish their right, and it may well happen that defendants would have no notice of them till they were introduced in evidence.

Number 9 is subject to the same objections as 7 and 8.

Appellants also assign as error the giving of defendants' instructions from 1 to 11; but as they have not attempted to point out the error, we are not required to notice them.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., concurring.

This is an action for the diversion of water, and the main question was the priority of appropriation. On the trial the plaintiffs offered one Howe as a witness. He was sworn on his voir dire, and upon the facts stated by him on his examination, was objected to as incompetent because interested, and excluded by the Court. The correctness of this ruling is impeached by the appellants, and is the first error assigned. The facts which determine this question of the interest of the witness are these: Witness was, in 1854, an owner in the Yuba Ditch Company, in respect to the water of which this suit is — in 1854 till 1856 — was also an owner in a ditch called the Kimball Ditch, from July, 1853, till August, 1854; sold his interest in the Yuba River Ditch Company to Harlow Kimball; the witness' interest in the Kimball Ditch was sold by the Sheriff; sold interest in the Yuba Ditch Company in July, 1856 — latter part of it; don't know exactly the date. Being asked as to the extent of his interest in the Yuba Ditch, the witness stated: "We were partners, and took up the water; I owned one-half of it then; that was what I supposed when we took it up; I sold my whole right then; I could not tell how much I did own, for I never had paid a cent on it." "There was a dispute about the water of the Yuba Ditch, or part of it, when witness sold; made a deed to Kimball, when he sold it; was paid for it; was paid by note about first of April, 1858, between first and fifteenth; took no mortgage or other security. Being asked how he came to settle and take the note just before the trial in this suit, in April, 1858, answered: "I was not able to go on with it, and I told them if they would pay me seven dollars per day I would take it and release them, and have no claim on the ditch; bargain made with Harlow Kimball; the note given, witness supposes, was to enable him to testify; Kimball, Johnson and Hickok gave their notes; Kimball sold to Johnson and Hickok two-fifth interests the day witness sold to them; never had a settlement from the commencement of the ditch; they were owing witness $1,000; claimed to hold the ditch for his debt — for work on it; never been paid a dollar; Kimball and Hickok told me to bring in account, and they would settle it." On cross-examination, witness said: "In April, 1858, was not interested then or after the deed was made. No other interest than the claim for this money; no mortgage or other security for this money; the deed of the Yuba Ditch Company to Kimball was made for the purpose of Kimball's transferring a portion of witness' interest to Johnson and Hickok for heavy indebtedness due from witness and Kimball as owners of the Yuba River Ditch. Kimball at the time witness transferred to him, transferred two-fifths of this ditch to Johnson and Hickok, and they canceled all the indebtedness due from witness and Kimball; sold out all his (witness') right, because witness was in debt on it, and could not go on with it" — "was it understood that both were to be responsible for debts? thinks things got were charged to Kimball. Witness never paid anything; Kimball paid all that was paid; witness had ran behind all the time. When we first took the ditch my share was one-half, and when it ran behind I never could exactly know what it was; deeded to Kimball one-half; did it to cover the greatest interest witness ever had; the deed to Kimball and from Johnson and Hickok all parts of the same transaction; so understood to be beforehand; was to give witness seven dollars a day for all the work witness had done from the commencement, and to assume the debts."

The deposition of the witness was taken, and tended to prove facts material to the issue in support of the plaintiffs' action. This deposition being offered by the plaintiffs, was objected to by the defendants

Kimball v. Gearhart.

---

upon the showing made on the voir dire, and also for another reason, which it is not necessary to consider, as it is embraced in the answer of the witness. The plaintiffs offered in rebuttal an entry made in this case at the April Term, 1858, to this effect: "On motion of plaintiffs' attorneys it is ordered, that plaintiffs have leave to strike from their complaint their claim for damages previous to July 19th, 1856 — the date of Howe's deed to Kimball." But no amendment to the complaint in this respect seems to have been made. The plaintiffs also offered a paper in these words: "The plaintiffs in the above entitled cause release and remit to the defendants in said cause all claim and demand for damages contained in their complaint for the whole of the month of July up to the first day of August, A. D. 1856.

(Signed)

KIMBALL &amp; Co.

By their Attorneys, H. I. THORNTON, Jr., and J. R. McCONNELL."

And filed it among the papers in the cause.

The declaration is for damages for the diversion of water for 1855 and succeeding years.

It is unnecessary to consider these matters subsequent to the taking of the deposition which was introduced to give it effect. The mere order permitting an amendment of the complaint was of no effect unless and until complied with. The release or remittitur was of no force, even if the attorneys at law signing it had any legal authority to execute it, which, to say the least, is extremely questionable: for the plain reason that to make the testimony of the witness admissible, he must have been competent at the time of the taking of his deposition. It is of no importance that he is competent afterwards, as it is the effect of the interest on the witness which disqualifies him. Whether he was interested or not depends on the issue; that issue, in this case, upon the pleadings, was the title to damages arising from a diversion of water before 1856; and this question, of course, depended upon the ownership of the water, such ownership following from the fact of prior appropriation. The question of interest then rests on this: Would the witness have gained or lost by the verdict?

Kimball v. Gearhart.

It seems that he and Kimball were joint owners before the date of the deed to Kimball, in July, 1856. For any injury to or an appropriation of the common property, while they were such joint owners, these owners were entitled to damages. If a recovery had been had by one, the benefit would have resulted to both. The partner or tenant in common would have held these damages in trust for both, just as if the defendants had voluntarily paid the amount of these damages to one of these owners. The sum so paid would have been the property of both. The subsequent deed to Kimball, though it carried the property and the future use of the water, did not retroact and carry the right to damages for the past illegal use of it, any more than a deed to land carries the remedies for past trespasses. An ingenious argument is made by the appellants' counsel to show that by the failure of Howe to pay his proportion of expenses, the estate he had was forfeited as a condition subsequently broken, and that all remedies and rights touching the estate, by relation, attach to the other party. We are unable to see the force of the argument. It is equally unfounded in law and in fact, for here there was no original, independent estate in Kimball; he made no deed or contract on condition subsequent. If not estopped by the deed from Howe to deny Howe's title, the facts sufficiently show, notwithstanding his not very satisfactory explanations, that Kimball and Howe were partners in this adventure, with equal rights in the subject of it, and it is evident that the mere failure of one partner to pay his proportion of expenses, or of the debts of the concern, does not forfeit his rights in the common property. We think, in the aspect in which this witness presented himself, it is the case of one partner suing for an injury done to the firm property, and calling the other as a witness to prove his case.

The argument founded upon the peculiar nature of this property is more subtle than sound. It is true that the mere right to water is a sort of incorporeal thing; but the water itself is substantial and tangible, and as the right gives the control and possession of this commodity, and entitles the party to damages for its diversion by another, we do not see why this right may not be acquired by two or more acting together, or why, when they do acquire it, they do not hold it as other property, and may not sue as such for any unlawful interference with it.

Kimball v. Gearhart.

---

The Court, therefore, did not err in excluding this deposition. Nor do we see in the statement of this witness, when properly construed, any evidence of abandonment. Howe and Kimball acquired this property as partners; for a sufficient consideration one relinquishes to the other his interest in the joint property. The nature of the property has no effect on the transaction. It is the common case of a bargain and sale by one partner to another, none the less partaking of the nature of a bargain and sale, because the selling partner was indebted to his associate on account of the firm business, and, for this purpose, makes the sale.

The next question is, whether the verdict is so clearly against the weight of evidence, that we are called upon to reverse the judgment of the District Court before whom it was given, and grant a new trial? This Court has so frequently held that it would only interfere in extraordinary cases with the decisions of the lower Courts in this respect, that it is useless to repeat the rule laid down. It is almost impossible for an Appellate Court to satisfy itself in a decision upon such matters — so much depends upon the manner, bearing, character of witnesses, and the peculiar circumstances which the transcript fails to preserve, which give value and weight to testimony.

The main question was as to the priority of location of this ditch, and this depended very much upon the general fact whether the plaintiffs had done such acts in 1854 as would, in August, 1855, when they completed their ditch to the water in dispute, entitle them to invoke the doctrine of relation, and get in, in advance of the actual appropriation of the water by the defendants; and upon this question there was no little conflict in the proofs. The conflict is in respect to the dates and character of the particular acts from which the appropriation is inferred. If there were no other circumstances of conflict than those contained in the testimony of James as to the time of marking the trees, this would, perhaps, be sufficient to be left to the jury for them to determine the weight and effect of the proofs. But there are various other matters of more or less weight, such as the admissions of Howe and the like.

The points made by the appellants question the propriety of certain instructions given, and of the refusal of other instructions asked.

Kimball v. Gearhart.

A large number of instructions were given by the Court, and several refused. Those given are expressed with great clearness and precision. They embody the law as ruled by this Court, and propositions necessarily resulting from those settled heretofore. Several instructions were refused by the Court. They are marked seven, eight and nine of the list of those asked for by the plaintiff. The seventh instruction was to this effect: That if the plaintiffs did, in the Summer of 1854, acquire a right to the water in dispute, then the law presumes they retained the right so by them acquired, and the burthen of proving an abandonment on their part is with the defendant. This was refused, because there was no testimony showing that in 1854 the plaintiffs had acquired any such right. The instruction, as it stood, was at least ambiguous, and calculated to mislead. The right of the water did not, in strictness, accrue until the completion of the ditch — though the initiatory steps in 1854 might, by force of the subsequent event, have given title as against a subsequent appropriation from 1854, if done in that year. But this general language, though proper in some sense, was calculated to convey a wrong impression, as the jury might have inferred that these acts, of themselves, gave a right to the water. When the Court gave its reason for withholding the instruction, the appellant, if he desired the charge as to the abandonment to be given to the jury — for the Court had fully instructed the jury as to the other portions asked — should have removed this objection to it. Indeed, it is not clear that the whole substance of the legal portion of this charge had not already been given.

The eighth and ninth instructions are, in substance, that the jury should not regard any proof offered of abandonment, inasmuch as no such defense as abandonment is specifically set up in the answer. The complaint is general, not setting forth the character of title, or the facts constituting the title of plaintiff. It avers, in general terms, that "on or about the month of July, 1854, the said plaintiffs and their predecessors claimed, located, appropriated and became the owners of, and became entitled to the possession, use and enjoyment of, for mining purposes, the water and waters flowing," etc. The answer denies this general averment. Thus is put in issue the very question of title, and this involves necessarily the due prosecution of the work after the appropriation, or, in other words, after the indication by some palpable and unequivocal outward sign of the intent to appropriate. The title to the water does not arise, as we have intimated before, from the manifestation of a purpose to take, but from the effectual prosecution of that purpose. This prosecution, therefore, is a necessary element of a title, and the negation of this, the abandoning of the purpose, is not so much matter in avoidance of a title, as it is matter showing that no title was ever obtained. Besides, if parties go to issue, in actions of this kind, upon general averments and denials of title, we think that anything that legally supports or attacks the title is admissible in evidence, and may be applied by the jury to sustain or defeat it.

The other instructions are not liable to serious objection. Indeed, we may remark that all the instructions given by the Court seem not only prepared with remarkable care, but that they present, with extraordinary clearness and accuracy, the various questions of law, bearing on the case, to the jury.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. BIRCHAM.

- A judgment entered on the forfeiture of a recognizance, is the property of the State, and the Legislature may release the same in such form and on such conditions as it thinks proper to prescribe.
- It was the intention of the Legislature, by the twenty-fifth section of the Act creating a Board of Supervisors throughout this State, to transfer from the Courts of Sessions to the Boards of Supervisors, the general and special powers and duties of a civil character, which had before the passage of that Act, been vested in such Court.
- It was not the design, in this manner, to repeal any law, general or special, before existing; but as, under the decision of Burgoyne v. The Supervisors, (1n 8 Cal.) a question of the constitutionality of those laws which conferred duties and powers, not of criminal cognizance, was made, the Legislature meant to remove the difficulty by transferring all these functions to the Boards of Supervisors.
- The Legislature, in the passage of a law, may refer to an Act unconstitutional in itself, to indicate its will in respect to a constitutional purpose. Where power has been misplaced by the Legislature, and thus its act become unconstitutional and void, it may, by the passage of a constitutional law, transfer such powers to another tribunal, by reference to such act.

The fact that a District Attorney has or is entitled to a percentage on a judgment in favor of the State, will not prevent the Legislature from the passage of a law releasing the judgment.

The record of the proceedings of a Board of Supervisors under their seal, is prima facie evidence of such proceedings.

APPEAL from the Eleventh District, County of El Dorado.

The facts of this case, as detailed by the opinion of the Court, are as follows:

Bircham entered into a recognizance, with sureties, to appear and answer the charge of manslaughter. Afterwards an indictment was found against him for this offense. On the twenty-ninth of January, 1853, the defendant was called in the District Court, and not appearing, his undertaking was declared forfeited. Subsequently suit was brought against the defendant and his sureties on this undertaking, and on the sixteenth of May, 1853, judgment rendered by default. Bircham appeared after this, and was tried and acquitted. On the twenty-sixth of May, the Legislature passed "An Act for the Relief of Bircham and his sureties." This Act is found in the pamphlet Acts of that year, (p. 178) and is as follows: "The Court of Sessions of El Dorado County are hereby authorized to release John G. Bircham and his sureties, from liability upon any recognizance or obligation entered by him or them, for the appearance of said Bircham before said Court, on a charge of manslaughter, and upon any judgment obtained, or to be obtained, on said recognizance or obligation." The Court of Sessions took no action under this statute. The Board of Supervisors, however, in November, 1856, passed an order releasing the judgment, and ordering return of the execution. The District Court, in December, 1856, on motion, set aside the judgment, and ordered a return of the execution which had been issued on the judgment; from which order the People appealed to this Court.

Attorney General for Appellant.

"1. That the Board of Supervisors had no jurisdiction in the premises, and acted without authority of law."

We are told that the power conferred upon the Court of Sessions to release Bircham, et al., was transferred to the Board of Supervisors, by the section 33-34.

---

People v. Bircham.

---

To which we answer: First, that the section quoted was only designed to confer upon Boards of Supervisors such general powers as had been exercised by Courts of Sessions by virtue of general laws, and not to cover such special powers as had been conferred by special acts upon particular and isolated Boards. This act belonged to the latter class.

Secondly, the Act, when it attempted to confer unconstitutional powers upon the Court of Sessions, became and was a dead letter. It was absolutely void, and being void, could not be subsequently revived. See Phelan v. Supervisors, &c.

The spirit and intention of the twenty-fifth section of the fourth article of the State Constitution, would forbid the passage of an Act like this, which attempts by one general sweep to confer upon one tribunal the powers and duties named and set forth in many Acts, running through a series of years, which have been attempted to be exercised by another. Each new Act should embrace within itself all powers, duties, and rights it is intended to confer, and its "title" should clearly indicate the contents of the body.

2. The order with or without authority of law is void, because it divests vested rights of the then District Attorney, who prosecuted to final judgment, caused an execution to be issued, &c., &c.

It is maintained that an Attorney has no lien upon a judgment, and the case of ex parte Kyle (1 Cal. Rep., 331) is cited, but we apprehend the case does not apply.

John Hume, for Respondent.

The first question is as to whether the Board of Supervisors had any authority to make the order.

The debt due upon this undertaking was the property of the State of California, and belonged to the general fund, if paid in. See Codified Laws, page 86, section 4; also same section in Wood's Digest, art. 333, sec. 4.

The Legislature of this State have the sole and exclusive control of all moneys belonging to the general fund, and may dispose of such fund as in their discretion may be deemed proper; so that heretofore they have repeatedly paid out money out of such fund for charity and other purposes, which were not legal claims against the State. The Legislature had then the right to release this recognizance and judgment, just as much as if such right lodged in a private creditor.

---

People v. Bircham.

---

If this view is correct, then it seems that the Act of March 6th, 1854, (see statutes of 1854, page 178) was and is of itself a complete relinquishment of all claim of the State against the parties named in that Act. The suit was in the name of the People; the People were the only creditors, and the Legislature, who alone had the control of the matter, authorized a certain Court or tribunal to satisfy the judgment and make a release. The Legislature might have authorized any individual or officer to perform the same ministerial act, and it would seem as though it would make no difference whether such release was ever actually made of record or not, as the only creditor had directed or authorized it to be done.

On the twentieth of March, A. D. 1855, an Act was passed creating a Board of Supervisors in the counties of this State. (Wood's Dig., page 692.) Section 25 of that act (Wood's Dig. page 697) reads as follows: "The Board of Supervisors shall have and exercise in its county, all jurisdiction and powers, other than criminal, conferred by any law on the Court of Sessions, or heretofore exercised by said Court, under any statute, or by any statute provided to be exercised by said Court, when the same does not conflict with the provisions of this Act."

It is impossible to conceive of any provisions of law which could, in terms and evident intention, more completely turn over to the Board of Supervisors all authority, other than criminal, which had been attempted to be given to the Court of Sessions, and I cannot see how appellant expects to except the law of March 6th from the operation of that section. By it certain powers were, or were attempted to be, conferred on the Court of Sessions; or at least it is included in that clause which confers upon said Board "all jurisdiction and power, by any statute provided to be exercised by said Court." The law of March 6th, 1854, was upon the statute book at the time of the passage of the Act last cited, and as it concerned the public funds, must be deemed to have been in contemplation of the Legislature at the time of the passage of said last Act. Any other construction must say that the Legislature intended to cancel or withdraw the Act of the year before, and impliedly repeal said Act of March 6th, 1854. Or, if the Legislature intended in good faith to stand by the release they had granted, it would compel them to pass a special Act authorizing another party to place the release formally upon the record.

---

People v. Bircham.

---

If, then, the power given to the Court of Sessions by the Act of March 6th, 1854, was given to the Board of Supervisors by the Act of March 20th, 1855, then the Board of Supervisors might make such release, whether the money belonged to the State or county.

BALDWIN, J., after stating the facts, delivered the opinion of the Court—TERRY, C. J., concurring.

The judgment in this case being the property of the State, could be released by the Legislature in such form and on such conditions as it chose to prescribe. Whether the Court of Sessions could constitutionally exercise the power of making this release, it is not necessary to inquire, though, if it chose to act in the matter, it is not easy to see why its discharge of a mere ministerial function of this sort would not be valid. But by the statute of 1855 Boards of Supervisors throughout the different counties were constituted, and, by the 25th section of the Act, it is provided that such Board "shall have and exercise in its county all jurisdiction and powers other than criminal, conferred by any law on the Court of Sessions, as heretofore exercised by said Court, under any statute or by any statute provided to be exercised by said Court, where the same does not conflict with the provisions of this Act."

It was evidently intended by this statute to transfer from the Courts of Sessions to the Boards of Supervisors the general and special powers and duties of a civil character which had before the Act been vested in the former Courts. It was not the design, in this manner, to repeal any law, general or special, before existing; but as, under the decision of Burgoyne v. The Supervisors, 5 Cal. 9, a question of the constitutionality of those laws which conferred duties and powers, not of criminal cognizance, was made, the Legislature meant to remove the difficulty by transferring all these functions to the Boards of Supervisors. The language of the Act is so express as to leave no doubt that this particular power was meant to be included.

---

People v. Bircham.

---

It is said that the Act for the relief of Bircham did not sufficiently define this particular recognizance. But this was a question of identity, and we think the Court below was well warranted in its finding.

It is also urged that the Act of 1854 was void, because the Court of Sessions could not constitutionally exercise the function committed to it, and, therefore, the general Act of 1855, already quoted from, transferring the powers before given by law to the Courts of Sessions to the Boards of Supervisors, is not to be construed to embrace such powers. But this would do away with the whole effect in this respect of the Act of 1855; for all the Acts giving these civil powers to the Court of Sessions are exposed to the same objection. We do not see, however, why the Legislature may not use or refer to an Act unconstitutional in itself to indicate its will in respect to a constitutional purpose. The question is, at last, a question of legislative intent, and this intent may be accomplished by a reference to an unconstitutional Act, as a means of giving or transferring a power. This was very clearly done by the Act of 1855, which referred to these Acts, not for the purpose of giving them validity as they stood, but for the purpose of divesting these Acts of their supposed unconstitutional features, and lodging the same powers in different hands. This is not to validate void Acts, but to make Acts, void because the powers were misplaced, valid for the future, by placing those powers in constitutional hands. It seems to us that this suggestion is an answer to the argument, even upon the very liberal concession that the Act of 1854 was unconstitutional — a concession made only for the convenience of the argument.

The objection that the District Attorney had a claim of ten per cent. on the amounts collected in such cases, and therefore the Legislature could not release the debt, cannot be sustained. - There is no difference in this respect between a private litigant and the Government in such cases, and the question has been settled in cases of individual litigation. If, however, the District Attorney has any claim, when no money is collected on a judgment of this kind, this does not prevent a settlement of this controversy or a release of the claim by the Government, leaving the Attorney his claim on the conscience of the Government for remuneration, in cases where he has rendered all the services, and is only prevented by the action of the Government from collecting the debt.

State of California v. Moore.

---

Nor do we consider that there is anything in the point, that the action of the Board of Supervisors was not complete. The record of the proceedings of the Board, under the seal of the Board, was sufficient evidence, until directly impeached, of what they import, or, at the least, we do not see any fatal error in the Court below, under the circumstances, giving credence to this proof.

The judgment is affirmed.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA v. MOORE.

The interest of the occupant of a mining claim is property, and, under the Constitution, it is in the power of the Legislature to tax such property.

The whole course of legislation and judicial decisions in this State, since its organization, has recognised a qualified ownership of the mines in private individuals.

The term "property in lands" is not confined to title in fee, but is sufficiently comprehensive to include any usufructuary interest, whether it be a leasehold or a mere right of possession. Several persons may have, in the same land, a property which is subject to taxation; and it is not perceived that the fact that the property of the Government is exempt from taxation affects the right to tax the interest which private individuals have acquired in the same property. Exemption from taxation is a privilege of the Government, not an incident to the property.

There is no force in the objection that the value of a mining claim, which depends upon the amount of the precious metals it contains, must necessarily be left to conjecture.

The universal standard of value is the amount of money which can be realised by a sale of the property, and this will apply as well to mining claims as other lands.

The Legislature having expressly exempted mining claims from the operation of the Revenue Act, it cannot be presumed that it intended indirectly to subject them to taxation by levying a tax on the price paid for them.

Money invested in the purchase and opening of mining claims, is not within the provisions of that portion of the Revenue Act which provides for the levy of a tax on "all capital loaned, invested or employed in any trade, commerce or business whatsoever."

APPEAL from the Fourteenth District, County of Nevada.

---

State of California v. Moore.

---

This is an appeal by defendant from a pro forma judgment rendered for the plaintiffs in an action instituted to try the legality of the tax levied on the money expended in the purchase of mining claims.

The pleadings and agreed statement show the following facts, viz:— that the defendant's claims are situated upon, and form a part of the public domain of the United States: that the sum of twenty thousand dollars were paid by him some three years since for such claims; and that the further sum of five hundred dollars has been expended in constructing a tunnel for the working of the same.

On the nineteenth day of July, 1858, the County Assessor proceeded to assess the sums above mentioned, as the property of defendant; and on the twenty-first day of July, 1858, this suit was instituted to recover the amount of the tax alleged to be due thereon.

McConnell & Niles for Appellant.

I. The assessment in this case was contrary to the Statute Law of this State, and the defendant is under no legal obligation to pay the amount for which he was assessed.

This is the proposition upon which we shall chiefly rely, and to which we shall direct the bulk of our reasoning.

The Revenue Law of this State expressly exempts mining claims from taxation. Revenue Act, sec. 2; Wood's Dig. p. 416, article 3,004.

This portion of the Act is certainly direct and unambiguous enough to satisfy any one.

But a part of another section of the law has given rise to the construction now sought to be fastened upon it by respondents.

Section 5, of the same Act, in defining the several sorts of property mentioned in the Act, uses the following language: "The term personal property, whenever used in this Act, shall be deemed and taken to mean, and it is hereby declared to mean and include all household and kitchen furniture; all law, medical, and miscellaneous libraries; all goods, wares, and merchandise; all chattels, of every kind and description; all money on hand, or on deposit in banks or with individuals; all money at interest, secured by mortgage or otherwise; gold dust, solvent debts, stocks of goods on hand, horses, mules, oxen, cows, calves, beef cattle, hogs, sheep, goats, &c., &c.; all works and improvements; all store ships and hulks; all steamers, &c.; all capital loaned, invested or employed in any trade, commerce, or business whatsoever," &c., &c. Wood's Digest, p. 616.

---

State of California v. Moore.

---

It is said, we believe, that mining is one of the many sorts of business contemplated by the statute; and, therefore, money invested in mining is personal property within the meaning of the Act; and that being personal property, within the meaning of the Act, it is therefore subject to taxation.

In the case at bar, the capital assessed was expended in the purchase of mining ground. That is to say, at the time it was assessed and the amount of the tax ascertained, it had actually ceased to belong to the person in whose name it was assessed, (the defendant) but had passed to and become the property of those from whom he purchased. The result would be, that the defendant would pay taxes upon the property of another man — while at the same time the recipient of the money — the vendor of the claims would be paying the taxes on it simply as money.

The reductio ad absurdum was never more applicable than here. It establishes beyond a doubt, that the money paid by the defendant for his claims, cannot be taxed as capital.

It may be urged, however, that the object of the Legislature was to compel all kinds of business and persons to contribute something towards the support of the State.

That therefore, while exempting mining claims, eo nomine, from taxation, because of the great uncertainty of their yield, and the hazardous nature of the business, they still intended, in those cases where an individual had, by paying a given sum for a mining claim, ascertained and fixed its value, to compel him to pay taxes upon the value so ascertained and fixed by his own act. We say it is possible this position may be assumed. But it is scarcely probable; for it assumes the existence of a difference which does not exist, between a mining claim and the pecuniary value of a mining claim.

It is true, that the logician or the metaphysician may discover a distinction between a thing and its value; but in the common affairs of life, the terms are more frequently used as synonymous. Capital, in its broadest sense, as used by philosophers and political economists, means everything of value, which is created by labor. But in the restricted and ordinary sense — the sense in which the statute uses it — it means money. Money is used as a universal representative of capital — a fixed and definite, though purely conventional standard of value. At the same time, it is not an absolute, but a relative standard; a standard that may and does vary, as circumstances vary.

---

State of California v. Moore.

---

The word "value" is defined to mean "that property, or those properties of a thing which render it useful or estimable; or the degree of that property, or of such properties. The real value of a thing, is its utility; its power, or capacity of procuring or producing good." Webster's Dictionary, verb. "value."

It is said by one, that if "a man seized of lands in fee, by his deed granteth to another the profit of those lands, to have and to hold to him and his heirs, and maketh livery secundam formam chartæ, then the whole land itself doth pass; for what is the land but the profits thereof; for thereby vesture, herbage, trees, mines, and all whatsoever, parcel of the land doth pass." Coke on Lit. 4, (b.)

The word "profit" is defined to mean a gain or advantage arising either from labor, or the use of a thing. It is not a quality or property of the thing, but exists apart from it; while the word "value" includes all of those inherent qualities or properties which concur to make the thing useful or desirable to men.

If, therefore, the word profit, when used in a conveyance, will pass the land, the word value will have at least the same operation.

We would here remark, that the authorities bearing on this question are very few.

The case of Raguet v. Wade, is that most nearly in point. The question in that case was, whether the Act of the Ohio Legislature, taxing capital employed in trading in foreign goods, &c., was constitutional. This is a very different question from that presented by the present case. But it will be seen by a careful perusal of that case, that the Ohio Court regarded the statute as laying a tax on the foreign goods themselves. That is, they treated the terms, "capital employed in trading in foreign goods," as meaning no more or less than "foreign goods;" and the decision went off on the general ground of the right of the State to tax all goods, whether domestic or foreign. Raguet v. Wade, 4 Hammond Ohio Rep. p. 108-115.

---

State of California v. Moore.

---

It seems to us conclusive, from the foregoing, that a tax upon the value of defendant's claims, as ascertained by the price he paid for them three years since, is a tax upon the mining claim itself. The only difference between such a tax, and a direct tax upon the claim, consists in the one being upon the actual value of the claim, and the other being upon an arbitrary value, ascertained and fixed in an arbitrary manner.

By the first mode, the price paid is not considered — the only inquiry being as to the present value; by the other mode, the present value is of no consequence, the only question being — what did the owner pay for it?

Hence, according to the latter method, it is quite possible for a man to pay an enormous tax upon a thing which possesses no present pecuniary value. If money expended in the purchase of mining claims can be taxed at all, it follows that the time of the purchase cannot affect the right to tax. Hence, a man may have expended twenty thousand dollars in buying claims three years ago, (as in the case at bar); he may have extracted so great a proportion of the gold therefrom as to leave them comparatively valueless; still, if respondents' reasoning is correct, he is liable to pay taxes on the money which ceased to be his three years ago, notwithstanding the decrease in the actual value of the claims.

We think such a doctrine is at war with the entire theory of taxation. A tax, properly so called, is a contribution imposed by the Government, and paid by the citizen for the support of the State. Story on the Const., sec. 472; Webster's Dic. verb. Tax.

It is imposed, either on the person of the citizen, or upon his property. In either case, it is regarded as the equivalent which the citizen pays for that protection which the State alone can give him. In the one case, it is the price he pays to secure his personal safety; in the other, to secure the safety of his property.

But if the purchaser of a mining claim pays taxes on the purchase money, he is really paying the State for its protection of another man's money, and not of his own. This conclusion is evident, provided we regard the tax as being imposed upon the money paid, rather than upon the value of the claim; in which last case, it is, as we have shown, a tax upon the claim itself, and therefore inhibited by law.

---

State of California v. Moore.

---

The entire difficulty of the case seems to us to consist in the erroneous sense which the respondents put upon the language of the statute.

The operative words of the fifth section are: "all capital loaned, invested, or employed in any trade, commerce, or business whatsoever" — and the question is, in what sense did our lawgivers use the words "loaned, invested, and employed?"

The word "loan" has but one meaning, and that is its ordinary one.

The word "invest" is more comprehensive, and includes loan. When applied to the use of money, or capital, it is thus defined — "literally, to clothe money in something; as, to invest money in funded or bank stock; to invest it in lands or goods." Webster's Dic. verb. Invest.

Burrill defines it — "to lay out money or capital in some permanent form, so as to produce an income; to clothe in it something. Properly applied to capital not actively employed." 2 Burrill's Law Dict. verb. Invest.

Undoubtedly, the word "invest" is often applied to money expended in the purchase of property. But it would seem that it is only used in reference to that class of purchases, where the thing purchased itself partakes of a pecuniary nature.

We have found but a single judicial exposition of the meaning of this word, and that favors the view which we have taken of it.

We allude to the case of The People v. The Utica Insurance Co., 15 Johns. Rep., p. 391.

When a law, or a part of a law, is susceptible of two constructions — the one consistent, sensible, and constitutional — the other inconsistent, absurd, or unreasonable — the former will be preferred.

"Every interpretation that leads to an absurdity, ought to be rejected." Smith's Const. and Stat. Constr., p. 631, sec. 486.

"In mixed interpretation, the rule prevails that we must give to all doubtful words or expressions that sense which will make them produce some effect; and this effect must in general be a reasonable one, and it must likewise be the same that the lawgivers intended to produce. * * * * * If the words or expressions are ambiguous, and are susceptible of two senses, either of which will produce some effect, the rule then goes further, and says that the effect must be a reasonable one." Ib., p. 672, sec. 527.

---

State of California v. Moore.

---

By construing the word "invest" to mean no more than to use or employ, we avoid all difficulties and absurd consequences.

There is one other aspect in which this case may be presented by the respondent — and to which we shall refer, viz: The defendant is engaged in the business of mining, and the purchase of mining claims is simply an incident, or a necessary branch of that business. When therefore he bought the claims mentioned in the complaint, he thereby invested money in the business of mining.

It seems to us this is only another phase of the several positions against which we have been contending. It affects to draw a distinction between the business or employment of mining, and the mining claims upon which the business or employment is exercised. Such a distinction is rather a metaphysical subtlety, than a legal, practical entity. As a test of value, it has no existence at all. We say of a man owning and working mining claims, that he is engaged in the business of mining. But his business, apart from his claims, and the tools and engines with which he operates, has no tangible value. A man's business cannot, with strict propriety, be termed property. It is a mere abstraction — an intangible, an incorporeal offspring of the brain. It cannot, as such, become the subject of litigation in the Courts; nor can it ever be directly subjected to the payment of taxes.

The capital employed in a particular business, or the revenue arising therefrom, may be, and frequently is made liable for taxes; but never, we believe, the business itself.

We presume it will not be contended that mining claims, as such, are not exempt from taxation. The language of the Act is as direct and specific as it well can be; and whatever may have been the intention of the Legislature in the fifth section, they certainly intended by the second section to exempt mining claims. The whole Act must be construed together; and according to the principle already laid down, if one construction of the fifth section is consistent, and another inconsistent with the plain meaning of the second section—the latter construction must be rejected.

But does the miner have an estate properly so called in his claim? Has he such an interest as can be termed property in any just sense of the word? We do not think he has—and predicate our opinion upon the following grounds.

It seems to be conceded on every hand, that the gold miner's right to seek for gold on the public domain, must be referred to some implied permission from the State and Federal Governments. This Court has, in fact, on more than one occasion asserted the existence of such a permission; but it has never gone so far as to define the nature and degree thereof.

In common parlance, we speak of it as "an implied grant;" forgetting that it has none of the elements of a grant. For if we presume a grant, we thereby presume all title out of the Government. No Court in this State has yet gone so far as to ignore the primary and paramount title of Government.

Besides, the phrase "implied grant" has been used to characterize the supposed title of the miner, in those cases only where the controversy was between private parties. In a contest between the Government itself and one of its citizens, all implications and inferences cease; and the rights of the latter must be made to depend upon the actual, and not the supposed relation he occupies towards the State. As between the State and a citizen, it is absurd to say that the Court will presume a grant to the latter of the privilege of mining upon a particular portion of the public land. The Court will presume nothing. It will take the facts as it finds them; and it will find them amply sufficient to protect the rights of the citizen. The tacit acquiescence of the State and Federal Governments—to say nothing of their positive legislation—is sufficient to prove an actual license to him, and nothing more.

Our own opinion at least, is, that the miner operates by virtue of an actual (not implied merely) parol license; and that he has only the rights which such a license can confer on him.

A parol license passes no title, estate, or interest in the thing which is the subject of the license. It gives neither a jus ad rem, nor a jus

---

State of California v. Moore.

---

in re. It is not one of the received common assurances of the country. It does not figure in the books as a mode of passing title. In some few cases, Courts of Equity have interfered to prevent the perpetration of a wrong by the revocation of the license; but even those cases have not gone off upon the idea of any estate having passed to the recipient of the license.

The right acquired by a parol license, cannot in any sense of the word be called property. It is a mere privilege—a transient, evanescent, and revokable right. It cannot descend to his heirs, or pass to his administrators. A wife shall not be endowed of it—nor can a creditor subject it to his execution. Possessing no single element of property, it cannot, of course, be subject to taxation. Who will pretend that A's license to take fruit from B's orchard, is liable to taxation? Yet that would be as rational a pretense, as to say that the license of the State to this defendant to take gold from its mines is liable to pay taxes.

Upon this subject of parol license we refer the Court to the following authorities: Prince v. Case, 10 Conn. R., p. 375—383; 2 Hare & Wallace, Am. Leading Cas., p. 676 and note; Rerick v. Kem, 14 Serg. & Rawle, p. 267; Wood v. Lebetter, 13 Mees. & Wels., p. 838; Angell on Watercourses, secs. 285, 288, 293, 295; 3 Kent's Com., p. 452; 7 Taunton, 384—2 Eng. Com. L. Rep.

II. The tunnel of defendant is not by law subject to taxation; and therefore the assessment upon the same is contrary to law, and void.

It is quite evident that the County Assessor viewed the defendant's tunnel in the light of an "improvement," and therefore assessed it as such.

The miner's tunnel is usually a long, horizontal, subterranean excavation, passing into claims situated on hills or mountains, and starting from some point lower than the bed rock of the claims themselves. It is used for the two fold purpose of draining the water from the ground, and of taking out the pay dirt. Formerly, perpendicular shafts or wells were sunk from the surface of the claims, until the gravel or pay dirt was reached. But this mode was subject to serious drawbacks, arising chiefly from the accumulation of water in the shaft, and the danger of caving.

---

State of California v. Moore.

---

A tunnel is really nothing more than a horizontal shaft, (if the expression may be allowed) and answers the same purpose, though in a far more perfect manner. After a tunnel reaches the claims, the miners dig small auxiliary tunnels, or drifts to the right and left, by means of which they reach the lead, and take out the gravel that contains the gold. When shafts were in use, these drifts were also used in connection with them.

We cannot perceive any solid reason for calling a tunnel an improvement, or for separating it from the claim of which it forms part.

It is as much a part of the claim itself as a shaft, or any slight excavation in the claim. The fact that it usually costs far more money than other kinds of excavations, does not strengthen the argument against us. It is not the cost of a thing, but the use to which it is put, that must determine whether it is an improvement or not. Apart from the claims, it has not a particle of value. It is really an appurtenance to the claims; and in a conveyance of the claims, and their appurtenances, the tunnel would pass ex vi termini.

In practice, the claim and the tunnel or shaft are regarded as being identical. A man is said to work on his claims when he is at work on his tunnel, though at a considerable distance from his claims. This view of their identity has been adopted by this Court, and applied in a case in which the tunnel was commenced at a considerable distance from the claims. Packer et als. v. Warren Heaton et als., 9 Cal. 568.

Are we not warranted in the conclusion, that the express statutory exemption, by force of necessary inference, also exempts the tunnel as an appurtenance or incident of the claims? Assuredly; for notwithstanding the general rule that laws exempting property from taxation are to be construed strictly, there is no doubt that the exemption of the principal will enure ex vi termini to exempt the incident. Grants by the sovereign must receive a strict construction. Yet we well know that a grant by the Government of the principal thing will, by its own force pass the incident. The exemption of a farm will operate to exempt a right of way, or easement in running water pertaining to the farm, as well as all buildings erected thereon. So the exemption of a school-house or church will amount to an exemption of the portion of land which is attached to it as a necessary appurtenance, as a church-yard or burial-ground.

State of California v. Moore.

---

It matters little to this view of the question, whether a tunnel is an "improvement," or not; for the tunnel is exempted as a necessary part or appurtenance of the claim.

But we maintain that a miner's tunnel is not an improvement within the meaning of the law. The claim to tax works of this sort is predicated, we suppose, on the fourth and fifth sections of the Revenue Act. Wood's Dig., p. 616, art. 3006, 3007.

The fourth section declares that the Assessor shall prepare a list, etc., of the various kinds of property of each inhabitant in his county, in which he is to set down "the cash value of all improvements on public lands;" and the fifth section defines "personal property" within the meaning of the Act, to consist of a great variety of things, among which are "all works and improvements."

The word "improvement" is defined by Webster to mean "valuable additions or meliorations, as buildings, clearings, drains, fences, etc."

Burrill thus defines it: "Improvements, a term used in leases, which, according to Mr. Chitty, is sometimes of doubtful meaning. It would seem to apply principally to buildings, though generally it extends to the amelioration of every description of property, whether real or personal; but when contained in any document, its meaning is generally explained by other words"—and he refers to 1 Chitty, Gen. Practice, p. 174. Burrill's Law Dict., verb. Improvements.

Mr. Hilliard, speaking of "permanent improvements," instances buildings, clearings and road making, as examples. 1 Hilliard on Real Prop., p. 337.

The word improvement would seem to import something in the nature of a structure—something erected or built upon the surface of the land.

The meaning of the Legislature seems to have been to include those structures so very common in the mining region of the State, erected for habitations, for manufacturing purposes, or for purposes of trade. In many cases the owner of the improvements can scarcely be said to claim any interest in the soil upon which they are erected. Many of them contain machinery, used for a variety of purposes, but chiefly for sawing lumber and crushing quartz rock. Such machinery was manifestly intended by the term "works" coupled with "improvements." See cases cited supra, on the Law of Parol Licenses.

Attorney General for Respondent.

It is well settled that the "power of taxation among independent nations is unrestricted as to things, and, with the exception of Foreign: Embassadors and agents, and their retinues, is unlimited as to persons." It may extend to all professions, trades, occupations, and business property. People v. Coleman, 4 Cal., and People v. Naglee, 1 Cal., page 232.

From the foregoing it follows, necessarily, that the Legislature has the power to tax "money invested in mining claims," or "capital invested in the business of mining."

"Capital, as applied to individuals," is those objects whether consisting of money or property which a merchant trader or other person adventures in an undertaking, or which he contributes to the common stock of a partnership."

It also, when used in a limited sense, "signifies money put out at interest."

The rule is, that "words of a statute, when not used in a technical sense, must be construed according to their ordinary signification."

Apply the rule to the Revenue Act, and the unavoidable conclusion is, that the Legislature meant by capital "that which a person adventures in an undertaking." This position is fortified by other language formed in the same section of the Act; for in the enumeration of objects and things which shall be held to be included within the term "personal property," we find preceding the word capital, "all money at interest secured by mortgage or otherwise."

If I am in error, the Legislature was guilty of repetition and an unnecessary use of terms; but if correct, then all is consistent and coherent.

"Invest" comes from the Latin word "investio," which signifies to "clothe" or adorn; and when applied to money means literally to clothe it (money) in something.

Ordinarily we mean, "to lay it (money) out in such manner as to bring in a revenue," though it is evident that the use of the term may be extended beyond the definition given.

---

State of California v. Moore.

---

Webster defines "Business" thus: "Employment; that which occupies the time, attention and labor of men for the purpose of profit or improvement; a word of extension, use, and indefinite signification. Business is a particular occupation, as agriculture, trade, mechanic art or profession; the subject of employment; that which engages the care and attention."

Mining occupies the time, attention and labor of men, and they follow it for profit. It is the one employment of the largest class of our population; in a word, it is their business. We speak of it daily as such; and if you ask a man who engages in that employment what his business is? he readily answers you, "Mining."

Mining was the business in which appellant was engaged when he gave the list of his property.

When the Legislature used this term, they meant it to be taken in its ordinary signification.

It therefore follows, from what has been said, that when a man's money is invested in a mining claim, or his "capital" is so "clothed" or "employed," he is the owner of "personal property" within the meaning of the Act which "declares" that the term "personal property," whenever used in that Act, shall be taken to include "all capital" loaned, invested or "employed in any trade, commerce, or business whatsoever."

But they say that this is an indirect mode of assessing the mining claim, and that the Act expressly exempts the claim. I admit the latter, but deny the former position.

The tax upon the business of mining, or the capital invested, is no more a direct tax upon the claim, than the tax upon the business of consigned goods is a tax upon the goods, or a license given to a foreigner to work in the mines, is an interference with the power of the General Government, to make rules and regulations respecting the territory of the United States; both of which points have been passed upon by this Court, in the case of the People v. Naglee, and the People v. Coleman, which I have cited. In fact, upon a review of those cases I find the distinction so clearly drawn below the exercise of the power to tax a particular business, and that of an object with which such business is connected, as to render it unnecessary to dwell longer upon this point.

I submit, that if the language used in the Revenue Act will bear two constructions, then it is incumbent upon this Court to adopt that which will bring about an "equal and uniform operation" of the law, and compel each class of the community to contribute its quota toward the support of that Government from which it receives protection.

The argument in reference to first branch of the case, applies equally to the question of the tunnel valued at five hundred dollars.

The tunnel was an "improvement upon lands of the United States" owned by appellant, and was therefore "personal property" within the meaning of the Act. It should have been assessed at such sum as he valued it, or, if he refused to value it, then the law requires the Assessor to do so. 1 McCord's Rep., S. C., page 217.

TERRY, C. J., delivered the opinion of the Court — BALDWIN, J., and FIELD, J., concurring.

Defendant is the owner of a certain mining claim, for which he paid the sum of twenty thousand dollars, and upon which, since the purchase, he has expended the sum of five hundred dollars in opening a tunnel.

These sums were assessed against him, as money invested in the business of mining. The object of this action is to test the legality of this assessment, and the questions presented are: 1st. Whether, under the Constitution, it is in the power of the Legislature to tax mining claims; and 2d. Whether money invested in the purchase and opening of such claims, is within the provisions of that portion of the Revenue Act which provides for the levy of a tax on "all capital loaned, invested or employed in any trade, commerce or business whatsoever."

Upon the first of these propositions we entertain no doubt. The only objection to the power of the Legislature to impose such a tax arises from the fact that the mines are the property of the Government, and are exempt from taxation under the Act admitting California into the Union. This fact, however, if admitted, does not, in our view, militate against the right to levy a tax upon the interest of the possessor of such claim. The whole course of legislation and judicial decisions in this State, since its organization, has recognized a qualified ownership of the mines in private individuals. Contracts affecting mining claims have been constantly enforced; remedies have been afforded to those whose possession has been disturbed, or whose claims have been trespassed upon by others, and the right of the locator to sell, hypothecate, or in any manner dispose of his property in a mining claim, has been upheld, as well by legislative enactment as by judicial decisions.

---

State of California v. Moore.

---

In Tarter v. Spring Creek Company, 5 Cal. 395, the Court held that "the policy of this State, as derived from her Legislature, is to permit sellers, in all capacities, to occupy the public lands, and by such occupation, to acquire the right of undisturbed enjoyment against all the world but the true owner."

In evidence of this, Acts have been passed to protect the possession of agricultural lands acquired by mere occupancy; to license miners; to provide for the recovery of mining claims, etc., "and that an appropriation of a portion of the public domain, or any of its incidents," establishes a quasi private proprietorship which entitles the holder to be protected in its quiet enjoyment.

In the Merced Mining Company v. Fremont, 7 Cal. 312, we held that the possessor of a mining claim "by his appropriation acquires a vested interest in the exclusive occupation and enjoyment of the land as against all the world, subject only to the right of the Government by whose license and permission his possession was acquired; and his right to protect the property for the time being, is as full and perfect as if he were the tenant of the superior proprietor for year or for life;" and in McKeon v. Bisbee, 9 Cal. 137, we held that the interest of the possessor of a mining claim was property under the law, and subject to be seized and sold under execution.

The Legislature recognized a proprietary interest in the possessor of mining claims by authorizing their hypothecation. See Wood's Dig., page 108, art. 416.

The term "property in lands" is not confined to title in fee, but is sufficiently comprehensive to include any usufructuary interest, whether it be a leasehold or a mere right of possession. Several persons may have, in the same land, a property which is subject to taxation, and it is not perceived that the fact, that the property of the Government is exempt from taxation, affects the right to tax the interest which private individuals have acquired in the same property. Exemption from taxation is a privilege of the Government not an incident to the property.

---

State of California v. Moore.

---

In the hands of the Government, the lands are exempt, but the moment the title vests in a private individual, it becomes liable to the burthens which are imposed on other property of like character. If the acquisition of the fee by a private person subjects the property to taxation, it follows that the acquisition of a lesser estate would equally subject such estate.

There is no force in the objection that the value of a mining claim, which depends upon the amount of precious metals it contains, must necessarily be left to conjecture.

The universal standard of value is the amount of money which can be realized by a sale of the property, and this will apply as well to mining claims as other lands. Sales and hypothecations of mining claims are of every-day occurrence, and we apprehend their value can be ascertained with sufficient accuracy.

Upon the second proposition it is contended that though mining claims are by the statute expressly exempted from taxation, yet the money expended in their purchase and working is liable, as so much capital invested in the business of mining.

This rule would be manifestly unequal, and would in a large class of cases be productive of palpable injustice, hardship and oppression; it would exempt the first locator of a claim from taxation, while his vendee would be compelled to pay a percentage upon the purchase price, although the value of the claim at the date of the assessment might not be a tithe of the sum. The claim may yield no return whatever; may prove entirely valueless for any purpose; yet the price paid would, under the rule contended for, be a permanent "investment of capital," and the party compelled to pay yearly a percentage on the amount.

Or take the case of a party who, after locating a claim, sells a moiety to another for a large sum, the interest of each is equally valuable and equally protected by the Government, yet one is required to contribute to the support of the Government in return for the benefits afforded, while the other, who is in the enjoyment of the same benefits, contributes nothing. We think a consequence so manifestly absurd, unjust and oppressive, was never intended by the Legislature.

---

State of California v. Moore.

---

We do not understand a sum paid for the purchase of specific property to be so much capital invested. The mere purchase of property can in no just sense be said to be an investment of capital in the business for which the property is adapted or might be used. The purchaser parts with all interest in the money paid; he has no longer any claim upon it; and if the transaction constitute an investment of capital, the value of the property, and not the sum paid for it, is the amount of the "capital invested." As well might the purchaser of a farm be required to pay taxes on the price paid as so much "capital invested in the business" of farming as the purchaser of a mining claim upon the cost of such claim.

For the purposes of taxation there is no distinction between a thing and its value; it is the value which is assessed, and upon which the tax is imposed, and an exemption of certain property from taxation exempts its value also.

Our conclusions are: 1st. That the interest of the occupant of a mining claim is property liable to be subjected, at the will of the Legislature, to such burthens as are imposed on other property. 2d. That the Legislature having expressly exempted mining claims from the operation of the Revenue Act, we cannot presume that it intended indirectly to subject them, by levying a tax on the price paid for them, which would, as we have shown, be a partial and unequal mode of ascertaining the value, and, in a majority of cases, be productive of great injustice.

It follows that the judgment of the Court below is erroneous, and it is reversed with costs.

KILLEY v. SCANNELL.

Lawful possession of personal property is prima facie evidence of ownership; and property thus possessed, is prima facie liable to be seized under a writ of attachment against the party in possession of such property.

In an action against a Sheriff to recover property thus seized, or its value, by the owner, it is necessary that the plaintiff should show affirmatively notice and demand before bringing suit, otherwise he cannot recover in such action.

In such a case, it is not necessary that the defendant should specially plead want of notice and demand, in order to make such a defense.

APPEAL from the Fourth District, County of San Francisco.

This was an action to recover the possession or the value of certain personal property, comprising the furniture, fixtures and stock of the "Empire State Saloon."

The property was, on the nineteenth day of February, 1857, seized by the defendant as Sheriff of San Francisco county, under an attachment against one Wilson. Prior to the seizure of the property by the defendant, the plaintiff, by an instrument in writing, bargained and sold the property to Wilson, and, by the terms of the agreement, the property was to be delivered and paid for on the fourteenth day of February, 1857. On that day, Wilson paid a part of the purchase money, and the time for the payment of the balance was extended to the twenty-fourth of the same month. On the fourteenth of February, Wilson and one Kirk were in possession of the property, and appear to have been the proprietors of the saloon. This possession continued up to the time of the seizure of the property by the defendant as Sheriff.

The plaintiff's complaint contains no allegation, nor was there any proof on his part, of notice of his claim or demand of the property, prior to the bringing of this action.

Plaintiff had judgment on the report of a referee, to whom the case had been referred. The judgment was afterwards vacated and a new trial granted,— the District Judge rendering the opinion which follows the opinion of the Court in this case. Plaintiff appealed to this Court from the order granting a new trial.

Killey v. Scannell.

---

J. Clark for Appellant.

1st. Conceding that the defendant's view of the law touching the liability of the Sheriff is correct, a new trial was not the proper mode of securing his right.

The facts had all been specially found by the referee, and no objection made to such finding. It was only his conclusions of law, and the judgment entered in conformity thereto, that was really in question.

This could have been raised upon motion, or upon appeal. No one of the seven causes for a new trial specified in the Act was or could have been assigned as ground for the motion for a new trial, the latter being merely a re-examination of an issue of fact. Practice Act, secs. 192 and 187; Gruyson v. Gould, 4 Cal. 122.

2d. The plea of justification alleging that the property was taken under process against a third person (alleged to be the owner of it) is held as amounting to the general issue.

To have obtained the protection which it is claimed the Sheriff is entitled to — that is, that he should not be liable to an action until demand, where the property taken was in the apparent possession of the person against whom the process was directed, he should have pleaded these matters specially, traversing the claim of damages, without claiming a return of the property. Chitty's Pleadings, vol. 1, p. 556 to 564.

3d. A Sheriff taking property under a replevin order, is protected against all the world, except upon affidavit and notice by statute. See Practice Act, sec. 109.

With this exception, as against the true owners, the Sheriff under process against a third person can claim no other protection or right than that of such third person himself.

Delos Lake for Respondent.

1. The property being in the lawful possession of Kirk and Wilson, it was the duty of the defendant as Sheriff, with process against them, to levy on and seize it, and he was not a trespasser for so doing. Camp v. Chamberlin, 5 Denio, 199; 8 Bar. and Cress. 132; Williams v. Lownds, 1 Hall Superior Court R. 595; Bond v. Ward, 7 Mass. 123.

---

Killey v. Scannell.

---

2. No action, therefore, can be maintained against the defendant without a demand by the true owner. 6 Cal. R. 43; Id. 512.

3. On the finding of facts by the referee, the defendant is entitled to judgment final for the return of the property or its value, as found by the referee. No new trial is necessary.

4. The order setting aside the referee's report should be affirmed, and the Court below directed to enter judgment for a return of the property; and in case return cannot be had, that defendant recover six hundred and fifty dollars, with costs.

TERRY, C. J., delivered the opinion of the Court — BALDWIN, J., concurring.

The judgment is affirmed for the reasons given in the written opinion of the Judge of the Fourth District filed in the record.

The following is the opinion of the District Judge referred to in the foregoing opinion of this Court:

"There is no allegation or proof on the part of the plaintiff that he either gave notice of his claim to, or demanded the property in question of, the defendant before the commencement of his action. Wilson being in the possession at the time of the levy, and having apparently the control of the property, was prima facie the owner. It was the official duty of the defendant as Sheriff to levy on all property found in the possession of Wilson as ostensible owner, and this property under the proof was prima facie liable to be attached. If it was in fact the property of the plaintiff or any other person, the real owner might have made his claim to it, and tried the question of title in a summary way, as authorized by our statute or by an action of this kind.

"Defendant having seized the property by virtue of his office and process, while in the possession of the party defendant mentioned in the writ, was entitled to notice and demand from plaintiff before he can be held liable to an action for the possession or value. Neither is it necessary, as was contended in the argument, that in order to make this defense defendant should specially plead want of notice and demand. After the defendant proved the possession was in Wilson at the time of the seizure, and justified under the process against him, the onus was on plaintiff to show affirmatively a proper demand and notice to enable him to recover.

BURNETT v. THE MAYOR AND COMMON COUNCIL OF THE CITY OF SACRAMENTO.

Where the Charter of the City of Sacramento authorized the Common Council to levy a special assessment for grading and improving the streets of the city, and provided, that when the Council thought it expedient to open, alter or improve any street, they should give notice, etc., and if one-third of all the owners in value of the adjacent property protest against the proposed improvement within ten days after the last publication, it shall not be made; and a protest was presented more than ten days after the last publication of such notice: Held, that such protest was not presented in time, and was therefore ineffectual; further Held, that it must appear that one-third of the owners in value of the adjacent property united in it.

An Ordinance for the improvement of the streets passed by the Council before the expiration of the time for the presentation of the protest, is not thereby invalid. The statute only inhibits the Council from proceeding with the improvement in case of such protest, and it was competent for them to pass the ordinance in advance of the time, provided they did not attempt to enforce it until afterwards. That provision of the Charter authorizing the improvement, and the mode and manner of the assessment, is not in conflict with the 13th Section of Article XI of the Constitution of this State.

That section provides for equality and uniformity of taxation upon property, but applies only to that charge or imposition upon property which it is necessary to levy to raise funds to defray the expenses of the Government of the State, or of some county or town. It has no reference to special assessments for local improvements, by which individual parties are chiefly benefited in the increased value of their property, and in which the public is only to a limited extent interested.

For the expenses of such improvements, it is competent for the Legislature to provide, either by general taxation upon the property of all the inhabitants of the county or town in which they are made, or upon property adjacent thereto, and specially benefited thereby.

The power of apportionment, with the power of taxation, is exclusively in the Legislature. The Constitution contains no inhibition to the tax, and prescribes no rule of apportionment.

APPEAL from the Sixth District, County of Sacramento.

---

Burnett v. Mayor and Common Council of the City of Sacramento.

---

This was an action brought to recover of the City of Sacramento money paid by plaintiff, as an assessment upon his lots, for the grading and improving the streets adjacent thereto. The following facts appear in the opinion of the Court:

By the second section of the Act of March, 1853, amending the Charter of Sacramento, the Common Council of the city are authorized to levy, by ordinance, special assessments for grading or otherwise improving any portion of the streets or alleys of the city on the adjacent property situated on the line of the improvement.

By the third section of the Act of April, 1853, "to extend and better define the powers of the City Council," it is provided, that whenever the Common Council shall think it expedient to open, alter or improve any street or alley, they shall give notice thereof by publication, for ten days, in some daily paper published in the city; and, should one-third of all the owners in value, as shown by the last general assessment of the adjacent property, protest against the proposed improvement within ten days after the last day of publication, then it shall not be made; but otherwise, the Common Council shall proceed with the improvement, the expenses of which shall be borne by the adjacent property.

Under the authority of these sections, the Common Council, on the thirtieth of July, 1855, passed an ordinance requiring notice to be given that they thought it expedient to improve K street, between Eighth and Twelfth streets, by grading it, and directed publication of the notice for ten days in the Tribune, at that time a daily newspaper of the city. The ordinance was approved by the Mayor on the following day. The notice was published for the required period, the last publication being on the fifteenth of August; and on the twentieth of August, no protest or remonstrance having in the meantime been made, the ordinance for the improvement was passed, and on the twenty-first was duly approved. Defendant had judgment, and plaintiff appealed to this Court.

John Heard for Appellant.

I. The assessment is not a legitimate exercise of the taxing power, but an order of the Council to appropriate certain private property to public use without just compensation, and is a direct violation of section 8, article 1st of the State Constitution.

---

Burnett v. Mayor and Common Council of the City of Sacramento.

---

It is not a tax, because it is not a common burden imposed upon any State, county, town, village, district or other local public, known to the law. There is therefore no uniformity or equality in the assessment. See 5th Dana, 28; 9 Dana, 114 and 512; 6 Barbour's Sup. Ct. Rep. 209, and sec. 13, article XI, State Constitution.

Sec. 13, art. XI of the Constitution provides: "Taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the State. All property in this State shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as directed by law; but Assessors and Collectors of town, county and State taxes shall be elected by the qualified electors of the district, county or town in which the property assessed for State, county or town purposes is situated." It is evident that the members of the Convention did not contemplate any subdivision of the districts or local publics named in this section; and I insist that the Legislature, much less the Common Council, cannot subdivide a city or county into districts, for the purpose of taxing the districts, without violating the letter and spirit of this section of the Constitution in many of its most valuable provisions; and I will suggest three of the leading principles of this section of the Constitution which would be violated by such a subdivision.

1st. The tax would not be equal and uniform.

2d. The Assessors and Collectors of the tax would not be elected by the qualified electors of the district taxed. Consequently the Assessors and Collectors would not owe that responsibility to the persons to be taxed which the Constitution contemplates.

3d. The taxing power (the City Council) is not elected by or responsible to the persons taxed, which is a clear violation of the spirit and intention of this provision of the Constitution.

To recognize such a power in the Council would be to disregard a fundamental principle in our Government — that is, that taxation and representation should go together; and to substitute for equality and uniformity in taxation, gross inequality and private plunder.

II. The provision of the 3d section of the Act amendatory of the Charter of the City, (Compiled Laws, p. 969) are restrictions upon the power of the Common Council to improve and to tax; and unless these restrictions are complied with, the action of the Council is unauthorized and void. Notice of their intention to improve is therefore essential to the validity of their ordinance to improve. In this case no legal or sufficient notice was given of the intention of the Common Council to improve; for by the most favorable computation of time, the Council passed the ordinance two days before they had lawful right to do so, and the ordinance was approved by the Mayor at least one day before it could lawfully be passed; nor does their proceedings upon some remonstrances after the passage of the ordinance give it vitality. No notice of an intention to receive remonstrances was given after they passed the ordinance, consequently those interested could not then be expected to remonstrate.

Burnett v. Mayor and Common Council of the City of Sacramento.

---

These are the principal points arising from the record in this case; and while I cheerfully admit that there are respectable authorities opposing the first point which I have made, I do insist that the view that I have taken of the want of Constitutional authority to levy such an assessment is most consonant with the spirit of our Constitution, with sound philosophy and the weight of authority.

I will say, in conclusion, that the position assumed by the learned counsel of the respondents at the trial, that "there is a third mode of taking private property for public use, to wit, by assessment," is so new, and so destitute of either reason or authority, that I have not thought proper to answer it.

All the cases that I have met with assume, that taxation and the right of eminent domain are the only means of divesting a citizen of his property for public use.

Winans & Moore for Respondent.

1. The statute under which respondents acted was Constitutional.

A statute which authorizes a municipal corporation to grade and improve streets, and to assess the expense among the owners and occupants of lands benefited by the improvement, in proportion to the amount of such benefit, is a Constitutional and valid law. The People v. The Mayor, etc., 4 Comstock, 419, 429, et seq. (overruling People v. Mayor, etc., 6 Barbour, 209, cited by appellant); People v. Coleman, 4 Cal. 46; Extension of Hancock street, 18 Penn. State, (6

Burnett v. Mayor and Common Council of the City of Sacramento.

---

Harris) 26; City of Lexington v. McQuillon, 9th Dana, 523; People v. Naglee, 1 Cal. 252, 253; which last case we think is decisive of the point.

II. The proceedings of respondents, as shown by the record, were in entire conformity with the requirements of the statute.

These proceedings were instituted and perfected under an Act defining the powers of the Council of the City of Sacramento, passed April 26, 1853. Compiled Laws of Cal. 968, 969.

The proceedings of respondents were had and taken under sec. 3 of that Act, which provides, that "when the Common Council shall think it expedient to improve a street or alley, they shall give notice thereof by publication for ten days in some daily paper published in said city."

Should one-third of all owners in value, as shown by the last general assessment of the adjacent property, protest against the proposed improvement within ten days after the last day of said publication, it shall not then be made. If no such protest be made, the Common Council shall proceed with such improvement, the expenses of which shall be borne by the property adjacent.

Thus it will be perceived, that the Council are required to give ten days' notice of their intention to improve a street or alley, in a daily paper published in said city; and after the expiration of such ten days, a further period of ten days is allowed for protest or remonstrance on the part of owners.

The record shows that the ordinance giving notice of intention to improve the street in question, was passed by the City Council July 30th, 1855, and published in the Tribune, a daily newspaper of said city, from August 1st to August 15th of said year inclusive.

Thus, the ten days' notice required by the statute extended from August 1st to August 10th inclusive, and the further ten days' time allowed to owners to protest or remonstrate extended from August 10th to August 20th inclusive. The transcript further shows that the ordinance to improve said street (no protest or remonstrance having been made or filed) was passed by the City Council on the night of August 20th, at half-past ten o'clock, P. M., and approved by the Mayor August 21st.

It is not pretended by appellant that any protest whatever against such improvement was made by owners during the ten days allowed by the statute, and the transcript shows that no such protest was filed until August 27th, six days after the expiration of the statutory time. The protest, therefore, was a nullity, and entirely ineffectual. Moreover, an inspection of the record will show that one-third of the owners in value did not unite in protesting against the improvement. This, however, was unimportant, as the protest was not made in time, and therefore null. But appellant contends, that inasmuch as the owners of adjacent property were allowed by the statute until the expiration of the twentieth of August to protest, the City Council had no right to act until the twenty-first, and, therefore, the ordinance that they passed on the night of the twentieth, directing the improvement in question, was a nullity, and that, therefore, respondents cannot enforce payment from the owners of the improvement subsequently made.

Burnett v. Mayor and Common Council of the City of Sacramento.

---

To this we answer: First. That the said ordinance was not approved by the Mayor, and therefore did not take effect until the twenty-first, when it first became a law; and, Secondly. The statute does not prohibit the Council from "making an ordinance" within the ten days allowed for the protest, directing the improvement, but from "making the improvement" itself within that time. It was perfectly competent, therefore, for the Council at any time after the expiration of the ten days' notice given by them, to pass an ordinance directing the improvement, provided they did not attempt to enforce such ordinance, nor proceed with the improvement, until the ten days allowed for protest had expired, and of course not then, if any statutory protest had been presented within that time. In other words, the statute does not render the ordinance ordering the improvement, but "the making" of the proposed improvement, the substantial thing. The record shows that the contract for doing the work was not made till September 7th, nor approved by the Council till September 10th, and the work was not commenced till a long period after that. From which facts we gather the following conclusions:

First. One-third of the owners did not protest against the proposed improvement.

Second. No protest was made within the statutory time of ten days.

Third. Respondents duly advertised the proposed improvement for ten days.

Burnett v. Mayor and Common Council of the City of Sacramento.

---

Fourth. After the expiration of such ten days, they waited more than ten days longer before they proceeded with the proposed improvement.

Fifth. The ordinance which they passed on the twentieth of August, and which was approved upon the twenty-first, was neither "a making of" nor a "proceeding with" the proposed improvement.

We submit, therefore, that the proceedings of respondents were in all respects regular, and that the judgment should be affirmed.

FIELD, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., and BALDWIN, J., concurring.

The protest presented on the twenty-seventh of August was ineffectual, for the reason that it was not made until after the expiration of the statutory time, and the further reason that it does not appear that one-third of the owners in value of the adjacent property united in it. The passage of the ordinance on the twentieth, and its approval on the twenty-first, are of no consequence. Its validity is not affected, even if it were passed and approved before the expiration of the time limited for protest. The statute only inhibits the Council from proceeding with the improvement in case of such protest, and it was competent for them to pass the ordinance in advance of the time, provided they did not attempt to enforce it until afterwards. The contract for the work was not made until September 7th, or approved until September 10th, and the work was not commenced until some time afterwards.

The case before the Court is thus stripped of all objections to the regularity of the proceedings of the Common Council, and the appeal must be determined upon the constitutionality of the provisions of the law under which the defendants acted. The contemplated improvement was made, the street was graded, and the expenses were assessed upon the adjacent property. The amount levied upon the property of the plaintiff, was two hundred and ten dollars. This he paid under protest to prevent a sale, and now brings his action to recover back the money.

The appellant contends that the law in authorizing special assessments for the expenses of improvement upon the adjacent property, conflicts with the eighth section of Article I of the Constitution, which provides that private property shall not be taken for public use, without just compensation, and the thirteenth section of Article XI, which provides that taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the State.

---

Burnett v. Mayor and Common Council of the City of Sacramento.

---

Whether the taking of private property in the opening of a street, and the apportioning of the expenses among the owners of adjacent property would be within the prohibition of the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution, it is unnecessary to determine. Our impressions are, that it would not be if such expenses were assessed upon the property in proportion to the amount of benefit produced; but this question does not properly arise in the case at bar. Here there has been no exercise of the right of eminent domain. No private property of the plaintiff has been taken for public use. His land remains untouched. The street was previously opened, and it is that which has been improved by grading. The assessment is the tax levied to meet the expenses of the improvement. Money is not that species of property which the sovereign authority can authorize to be taken in the exercise of its right of eminent domain. That right can be exercised only with reference to other property than money, for the property taken is to be the subject of compensation in money itself, and the general doctrine of the authorities of the present day is, that the compensation must be either made, or a fund provided for it in advance.

The assessment, therefore, must rest for its validity upon its being a legitimate exercise of the taxing power. The thirteenth section of Article XI of the Constitution does not cover the case. That section provides for equality and uniformity of taxation upon property, but applies, in our judgment, only to that charge or imposition upon property which it is necessary to levy to raise funds to defray the expenses of the Government of the State, or of some county or town. We do not think it has any reference to special assessments for local improvements, by which individual parties are chiefly benefited in the increased value of their property, and in which the public is only to a limited extent interested. For the expenses of such improvements, it is competent for the Legislature to provide, either by general taxation upon the property of all the inhabitants of the county or town in which they are made, or upon property adjacent thereto and specially benefited thereby. The law in question places the burthen upon the adjacent property, which is a far more equitable apportionment than if imposed upon the entire property of the city. There would, indeed, be manifest injustice in levying a general tax for a local improvement which produces a great benefit to the owners of property in its vicinity, but lessens, perhaps, at the same time, the value of property at a distant part of the city. In such taxation there would be no equality. "It is wrong," says Ruggles, J., in delivering the opinion of the Court of Appeals of New York, in The People v. the Mayor of Brooklyn, (4 Coms. 419) "that a few should be taxed for the benefit of the whole, and it is equally wrong that the whole should be taxed for the benefit of a few. No one town ought to be taxed exclusively for the payment of county expenses; and no county should be taxed for the expenses incurred for the benefit of a single town. The same principle of justice requires, that where taxation for any local object benefits only a portion of a city or town, that portion only should bear the burthen. There being no Constitutional prohibition, the Legislature may create a district for that special purpose, or they may tax a class of lands or persons benefited, to be designated by the public agents appointed for that purpose, without reference to town, county or district lines. General taxation for such local objects is manifestly unjust. It burthens those who are not benefited, and benefits those who are not burthened. This injustice has led to the substitution of street assessments, in place of general taxation; and it seems impossible to deny that in the theory of their apportionment, they are far more equitable than general taxation, for the purpose they are designed for.

Burnett v. Mayor and Common Council of the City of Sacramento.

---

The law in question avoids the injustice of general taxation for local purposes, and lays the burthen upon the recipients of the benefit. It apportions the tax according to the assessed cash value of the adjacent property, which is as near an approximation to an equitable rule as can well be established. No rule could be adopted which would work absolute equality. An approximation to it is all that can be attained. The power of apportionment, with the power of taxation, is exclusively in the Legislature. The Constitution contains no inhibition to the tax, and prescribes no rule of apportionment. Security against the abuse of the power rests in the wisdom and justice of the members of the Legislature, and their responsibility to their constituents. See the People v. the Mayor of Brooklyn, 4 Comstock, 419, and the cases cited in the opinion of the Court and the briefs of counsel, which latter are in the appendix to the volume, 607.

---

CROSBY v. WATKINS *et al.

Rais v. Norton, 4 Cal. 355, affirmed.

Where a party contracts for a quantity of wheat, to be delivered on demand and paid for on delivery, in an action for non-delivery it is unnecessary for plaintiff to aver and prove a tender of the purchase money at the time of demand or before suit.

In such a case the measure of damages is, the difference between the contract price and the value of the article sold.

APPEAL from the Ninth District, County of Tehama.

This was an action for damages for the non-delivery of a quantity of wheat purchased by plaintiff of defendants.

The facts as stated by the Court are as follows: H. M. Stone, the agent of the plaintiff, contracted with the defendants for the purchase of a quantity of wheat, at the price of two cents and a half per pound, to be delivered upon demand and paid for on delivery. The contract was made by Stone, in his own name, without disclosing his principal. Within the time limited by the contract, plaintiff, through Stone, notified the defendants that he was ready to receive and pay for the wheat under the contract, and demanded a delivery, which the defendants refused. The contract price of the wheat was two and a half cents per pound, and the Court finds that at the time of demand and refusal to deliver, it was worth four cents per pound. Plaintiffs had judgment for the difference between the contract price and the actual value of the wheat, and from this judgment the defendant appeals.

Crosby v. Watkins.

---

Crocker & Robinson for Appellants.

I. The action should have been in the name of Stone as plaintiff, or, at least, he should have been made a party. In no other way could the liability of defendants to Stone upon the written contract be based. Newcomb v. Clark, 1 Denio, 226; Argenti v. Brannan, 5 Cal. 351; Price v. Dunlap, Id. 483; Phillips v. Husband, Id. 509; 12 Pick. 554; 15 Mass. 286; 13 Id. 396-404; 13 John. Rep. 88.

When a promise is made to a third person, for the benefit of the plaintiff, the complaint must state it to have been made according to the fact; and it is a fatal variance to aver that the promise was made to the plaintiff. Hall v. Huntoon, 17 Vermont, 244; 11 Vermont, 79.

In this case, the contract was made by defendants with Stone in his own name, and he is the only party against whom they could have enforced it; there is, therefore, no mutuality or privity between plaintiff and defendants.

A contract must be mutual to be binding. Chitty on Contracts, 15; 5 Cal. Rep. 351, 509.

The judgment in this case is no bar to an action upon the contract in the name of Stone. He is not a party to the record, and is not therefore estopped by the judgment.

A judgment cannot be pleaded in bar, unless between the same parties. Cleaton v. Chambliss, 6 Randall, 86; 1 Dw. & Batt. 486; 1 Cooke, 305; 6 Conn. 508; 1 A. K. Marsh, 179; 1 McCord, 338.

In equity, the person having the legal title in the subject must be a party, though he has no beneficial interest, that the legal right may be bound by the decree of the Court. Mitford Ch. Pleadings, 206; (179).

Treating this as an action of law, then the legal title to the contract is in Stone, (it having been made to him, and he having never assigned it) and the action should have been in his name. Treating it as a suit in equity, then still Stone should have been made a party under the foregoing well established rule.

At law, the party who has the legal interest in the contract must be the plaintiff. 4 Dana, 474; 7 Munroe, 416.

The legal interest in a contract is in the person to whom the promise

Crosby v. Watkins.

---

is made, and he is the person who must bring the action. 17 Vermont, 244; 11 Vt. 79.

II. There is no averment in the complaint, or sufficient proof on the trial, of a tender of the price of the wheat and a refusal to receive it.

Under this contract the acts of the parties are concurrent; that is, defendants could not sue on it without a demand of the price and an offer to deliver, and the plaintiff cannot recover without a tender of the price and a demand of the wheat.

When the acts to be done by each party are to occur at the same period, neither party can sue on the contract without showing an offer or tender of performance on his part. 1 Cal. Rep. 42, 51, 337; 2 Ib. 163; 4 Ib. 282; Littell Sel. Cases, 253; Chitty on Contracts, 746; (638).

Robinson, Beatty & Heacock for Respondent.

The only question of importance to be considered by the Court in determining this cause is, whether the plaintiff, since Stone did not reveal his agency, or the name of his principal, at the time of making the contract, is entitled to sue and recover.

There are many conflicting authorities on this point; but the general current of modern decisions would seem to fully sustain the proposition that the principal may sue or be sued upon a contract entered into by his agent, whether such agent reveals such agency or discovers the name of his principal or not. Story on Agency, p. 156; Ruiz v. Norton et al., 4 Cal. 358; Sims v. Bond, 5 Byam & Ad.; Taintor v. Prendergrast, 3d Hill N. Y. Rep., page 72; Hicks v. Whitmore, 12 Wend. Rep., page 548; 2d Kent Com., sec. 41, marginal page 632; Story on Agency, sec. 160, and the authorities there cited; Smith's Merc'y Law, b. 1, ch. 5, sec. 5, page 139-140, and the authorities there cited.

TERRY, C. J., after stating the facts, delivered the opinion of the Court — BALDWIN, J., concurring.

Two questions are presented by the record: First, whether the plaintiff can sue in his own name on the contract; and second, whether Easterling v. Power.

---

he can recover in this action without showing a tender of the price agreed on.

The first point is answered by the decision of this Court in Ruiz v. Norton, 4 Cal., 355.

Upon the second point, Mr. Parsona, in his work on Contracts, vol. 1, p. 449, states the rule to be as follows: "In every sale, unless otherwise expressed, there is an implied condition that the price shall be paid before the buyer has a right to possession; and that is a condition precedent. But it seems, that in an action for non-delivery, the buyer need only aver that he was ready and willing to receive and pay for them, and a refusal to deliver, without averring an actual tender."

In such cases, the measure of damages is the difference between the contract price and the actual value of the articles sold. 3 Parsona, 481, note A.

EASTERLING v. POWER et al.

The judgment in this case reversed, on the ground that the evidence did not justify the verdict.

APPEAL from the Tenth District, County of Yuba.

This action was brought in the Court below by the respondent to recover of the appellants the sum of five hundred dollars, an alleged balance of account for flour sold and delivered, and for packing done for appellants.

The answer denies any indebtedness for flour, and admits the claim of respondent for five hundred dollars for packing goods, but pleads a promissory note in defense.

The note is set out in the answer, and is in these words:

"$1,050.00.

"On demand, for value received, I promise to pay C. Arnold, or bearer, one thousand and fifty dollars, in packing, from time to time, at the going rates, within ninety days from date.

---

"MARYSVILLE, April 7, 1856.

J. W. EASTERLING."

The answer further says, that by special agreement entered into by said Easterling, the amount of said packing was to be applied on said note; and the truth of this plea is fully sustained by the testimony of three or four witnesses.

The cause was tried by a jury, who returned a verdict for the plaintiff. Defendant appealed to this Court.

E. D. Wheeler for Appellants.

Bryan & Filkins for Respondent.

TERRY, C. J., delivered the opinion of the Court—BALDWIN, J., concurring.

The evidence in this case does not sustain the verdict, and the Court erred in refusing a new trial. It is immaterial whether, at the time the packing was done by plaintiff for defendants, the note was owned by defendants or Goodwin. The evidence shows, that at the time the goods were delivered to plaintiff for transportation, it was agreed that the freight should be credited on the note; and, admitting the note to have been the property of Goodwin, we can see no objection to his becoming paymaster, if he chose to do so, and looking to the defendant to be reimbursed.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded.

FRATT et al. v. CLARK.

Where personal property is tortiously taken, the party aggrieved may waive the tort and sue in assumpsit for the value of the property.

APPEAL from the Sixth District, County of Sacramento.

---

Fratt v. Clark.

---

This was an action of assumpsit to recover the value of certain cattle, the property of plaintiffs, unlawfully taken by the defendant.

The complaint is in two counts, trover and assumpsit. The defendant demurred to the complaint on the ground that two causes of action were improperly united; to wit, trover and assumpsit. The record does not show how this demurrer was disposed of, but it is supposed to have been overruled, as the cause was tried by a jury who returned a verdict for the plaintiffs. Defendant moved for a new trial, which was denied, and he appealed to this Court.

J. C. Zabriskie for Appellant.

Clark & Gass for Respondent.

The complaint was not demurrable. Hillman v. Hillman, 14 Howard Prac. Rep. 456; Dorman v. Killam, Ib. 184-202; Badger v. Benedict, 4 Abb. 176.

TERRY, C. J., delivered the opinion of the Court — BALDWIN, J., concurring.

This is an action in assumpsit for the value of certain cattle. The evidence shows that the defendant, who was a butcher, unlawfully and without authority took plaintiff's cattle, which he slaughtered and sold to various persons.

The appellant objects that the evidence does not sustain the allegations in the complaint. The objection is not tenable. It is well settled, that where a person takes and sells the property of another, without authority, the party aggrieved may waive the tort and sue in assumpsit for the price received at such sale, or for the value of the property so taken. The rule is thus expressed in Burley v. Taylor, 5 Hill, 582, by Mr. Justice Cowan: "If trover would have lain, it follows that an action for money had and received will lie for the price or for the value as goods sold and delivered at the election of the plaintiff;" and a great many authorities, American and English, are cited in support of the doctrine.

May v. Borel.

MAY v. BOREL et al.

Where the vendee's agent, in the purchase of a tract of land, has actual notice of a mortgage on the premises at the time of purchase, the vendee will be presumed to have taken the property subject to the mortgage.

APPEAL from the Sixth District, County of Sacramento.

A statement of facts appear in the opinion of the Court.

Thos. Sunderland for Appellant.

Clark & Gass for Respondents.

TERRY, C. J., delivered the opinion of the Court — BALDWIN, J., concurring.

This was a bill filed in equity to enjoin the sale of certain real estate, and to set aside and cancel the mortgage made by the defendant, Jonghaus, to John H. Gass, and by him transferred with the note before due to defendant, Borel. On the third of January, 1856, the legal title to the property in question was in John H. Gass, who on that day conveyed it to Jonghaus. On the same day Jonghaus mortgaged the property to Gass as security for the payment of the note of two thousand dollars. The note and mortgage was delivered by Gass to a third party to be negotiated, and was, before maturity, assigned for a valuable consideration to defendant, Borel. On the ninth of January, at the instance of one R. H. Stanley, who was acting as the agent of the plaintiff, the deed from Gass to Jonghaus was destroyed, and another taken, conveying the same property with other property. Jonghaus then conveyed to Walker, who was a grantor of the plaintiff. At the time of the destruction of the first deed from Gass to Jonghaus, and the execution of the second, Stanley had notice of the existence of defendant's mortgage and of the first deed from Gass to Jonghaus.

Under these circumstances, we see no reason to doubt the correctness of the order dissolving the injunction. Plaintiff's agent having actual knowledge of the defendant's mortgage, plaintiff must be deemed to have taken the property subject to it.

Judgment affirmed.

Wheatley v. Strobe and Wilcoxson.

---

WHEATLEY v. STROBE, AND WILCOXSON et al., INTERVENORS.

The following written order possesses all the requisites of an inland bill of exchange: "MR. STROBE:— Please pay the bearer of these lines two hundred and thirty six dollars, and charge the same to my account."

The insertion of the word "please" does not alter the character of the instrument.

Such an order being a bill of exchange, the written acceptance of the party to whom it is addressed, is necessary to charge him as acceptor under our statute. His verbal acceptance is not sufficient.

Where the order is given for a valuable consideration, and for the whole amount of the demand against the drawee, though worthless as a bill, it operates as an assignment of the debt or fund against which it is drawn.

The want of a written acceptance does not affect the right of the payee to the money due, but only the mode of enforcing it. With the acceptance he could have sustained an action upon the order; without it he must recover upon the original demand by force of the assignment.

After the delivery and presentation of the order, the debt due by the drawee could not be reached on attachment issued by the creditors of the drawer. As against any attempt by them to enforce its payment upon any such proceeding, the order would be an effectual protection, as it would also against the suit of the assignor to collect the amount, unless such suit is prosecuted for the benefit of the assignee.

APPEAL from the Sixth District, County of Sacramento.

This was an action of assumpsit to recover a sum of money. The facts as they appear in the opinion of the Court, are as follows:

As appears from the record in this case, Strobe was indebted to Wheatley, and Wheatley to Howel, and Howel to Wilcoxson & Co. To pay his debt, Wheatley gave Howell an order on Strobe for $236, payable to bearer. This order is not set forth in the record, but is admitted by counsel to be in the following form:

"SAC. CITY, July 18, 1857.

MR. STROBE:— Please pay the bearer of these lines two hundred and thirty-six dollars, and charge the same to my account.

E. D. WHEATLEY."

On the twenty-fifth of July the order was presented to Strobe, and by him was verbally accepted. No acceptance in writing was made.

---

---

Soon afterwards Wilcoxson & Co., whose demand against Howel was in judgment, and upon which they had previously issued execution, garnished the debt, if any, due by Strobe to Howel, by virtue of this order. Subsequently Wheatley commenced the present suit against Strobe to recover the original debt. Strobe admitted the original indebtedness, but set up the order, his verbal acceptance, and the garnishment of Wilcoxson & Co., and prayed that Howel and Wilcoxson & Co. might be made parties, and he be allowed to pay the amount into Court. Wilcoxson & Co. filed a petition of intervention, setting up substantially the same facts, with the additional fact that the order was given for a debt due by Wheatley to Howel, and asserting a right to the amount of the debt by virtue of their garnishment, and praying judgment in their favor for the same. The plaintiff demurred to the answer of Strobe; the demurrer was sustained, and, with the judgment entered thereon, the petition of intervention was denied. Defendant appealed to this Court.

P. L. Edwards for Appellant.

I. At common law a parol acceptance of a bill of exchange was sufficient. Story on Bills of Exchange, 291, sec. 242; Byles on Bills of Exchange, page 237.

If, however, the paper under examination is a bill of exchange, then it comes within the provisions of our statute, and a parol acceptance is insufficient to bind the acceptor, and of consequence, for the want of mutuality, it cannot bind the other parties. Wood's Digest, p. 72, sec. 6.

That this paper is not a bill of exchange, is apparent from the considerations:

1st. It is essential to a bill or note, that it be payable in money only, at all events not out of a particular fund. It must direct the payment of the money without condition and at all events. Byles on Bills of Exchange, 59 and 154, note; Story on Bills of Exchange, p. 60, sec. 46.

A case in all respects similar, if not identical with this, is that of Little v. Shackford, 21 Eng. Com. L. R. 498, to which attention is particularly invited.

Wheatley v. Strobe and Wilcoxson.

---

2d. The terms of the paper express the request to pay as a favor, and are not those of mere civility. If so, there is no absolute direction for the payment of the money, and it is therefore not a bill of exchange. Story on Bills of Exchange, 47, sec. 33. Byles on Bills of Exchange, 59-60 and notes.

II. If the instrument is not a bill of exchange, what is it? or is it anything? If anything, it is an order or request for the payment of money, and although defective and worthless as a bill of exchange, still it may be evidence of a valid agreement. Byles on Bills of Exchange, 155.

A owes B a sum of money, and B owes C the like sum, and the three agree that B shall be discharged, and that A shall pay the sum directly to C; the contract is without the statute of fraud, and in every way valid. Chitty on Contracts, 451, 453.

The release of the legal right which the respondents had against Strobe, was a sufficient consideration for the promises of the latter to pay to Howel, and binds all. 1st Parsons on Contracts, 369.

It was not necessary that all the parties should be present together, and assenting to the agreement. It was sufficient that all assented before any withdrawal of the proposition. In this view the order was a proposition on the part of the respondent to pay his debt to Howel by the promise of Strobe. The respondent assented by giving the order; Howel assented by receiving it, and Strobe assented by accepting and agreeing to pay Howel instead of respondents. Thus there was a sufficient consideration without the statute of fraud, and the debt became one owing directly from Strobe to Howel, which was the subject of garnishment by the Messrs. Wilcoxson & Co.

III. In any view it will be difficult to resist the conclusion that the drawing and delivery of the order operated as an assignment of the demand from the respondents in favor of Howel against Strobe. The rule is, that when the drawee of an order is the debtor of the drawer, then the order is to be regarded as an assignment of the debt. Quin v. Hanford, 1 Hill N. Y., 82; Byles on Bills of Exchange, 59-60, and notes.

Besides, the case shows that it was the intention to draw for the whole of the particular fund, to wit, the whole of the indebtedness from Strobe to the respondents, for wood sold and delivered; and "where an order is drawn for the whole of a particular fund, it amounts to an equitable assignment of the fund." Mandeville v. Welch, 5 Wheat. R., 286.

Wheatley v. Strobe and Wilcoxson.

---

See the whole question satisfactorily settled in 3 Leading Equity Cases, 206, 233.

IV. We submit that the whole controversy, in all its aspects, could and ought to have been determined in this action. In support of the view presented on this point, we think it unnecessary to cite any authorities other than that of Van Buskirk, Admr. v. Roy, (8 How. Prac. R. 425); Voorhies' New Code, (Ed. of 1855, p. 119; note d) and keeping in view the difference between our statute and that of New York, 1 Whitaker's Practice, 82, 83, 84.

H. H. Hartley for Respondents.

The paper drawn on Strobe by Wheatley was an inland bill of exchange; it had all the requisites to make it such; it was in writing, contained an order to pay absolutely a certain sum of money, and was directed to a certain party. Story on Bills, 33.

The insertion of the word please in the order does not vary its effect; the using of terms of politeness in a commercial paper is not to be construed into asking a favor and not demanding a right.

A drawing of a bill will be deemed a demand of a right, not asking a favor, where the language is susceptible of two interpretations; when it is deemed as a favor only, the language used must repel in an unequivocal manner, the presumption it was claimed as a right. Story on Bills, sec. 33.

The case of Settle v. Shealford, 22 Eng. Com. L. R. 498, is commented on in the foot note to Story on Bills, sec. 33, and very properly doubted as sound law; numerous authorities are there referred to, which held a different doctrine. Ruffo Webb, 1 Espin. R., 129; Chitty on Bills, 150, 151, 175.

In France the word please is always used; "Il vous plait payer," etc. Diet du Natorial art. Letter de Change, Tom. 4, p. 592, 593.

The paper was therefore a good bill of exchange. It was held in England in Sproat v. Mathers, 1 Term Rep. 482, that a parol

---

Wheatley v. Strobe and Wilcoxson.

---

acceptance of a bill was good, but the law in England has been changed by 1 and 2 Geo. IV., chap. 78. After that Act no acceptance was valid, save in writing; but this is regulated by statute in our own State. Wood's Dig., p. 72, art. 182, sec. C, enacted that no person shall be charged as an acceptor of a bill of exchange unless his acceptance is in writing, and signed by himself or agent.

Strobe not having accepted the bill, therefore was not in any manner bound upon it to any person whatsoever.

The bill or order being payable to bearer, and if accepted at all, only accepted in favor of the bearer or holder who should present it for payment, was not the subject of garnishment by the intervenors. The payor of a negotiable instrument cannot be garnisheed. Cal. Rep. p.

By the acceptance, if it can be claimed such, the appellant Strobe bound himself to pay the bearer of the note, and not Howel the debtor of the intervenors — the lawful holder of the bill who could only take advantage of the acceptance. Story on Bills, sec. 113.

It is sufficient answer to the second point made by appellant, that the paper, if it was not a bill, certainly, till the payment, did not operate as a discharge of Strobe's debt to Wheatley, he, at most, by his promise only agreed to pay the holder of the order on presentation. There was no promise absolutely to pay Howel, nor even were that so, would it operate so as to prevent Howel from returning the order to the drawer Wheatley, and demanding from him its amount.

The drawing of the order or bill could not operate as an assignment of the debt, so as to vest it in Howel, because there was no assent of Howel so to receive it; and even did it so operate, there was nothing in the transaction to limit and confine it between Howel and Strobe. Howel could have disposed of it to an innocent purchaser, who could have fallen back and claimed the amount from the original drawer, as was done in this case.

The intervenors had no right to come into Court and litigate between parties plaintiff and defendant.

A garnishment is no defense except between actual parties.

Wilcoxson has fixed the liability of Strobe, if he is at all liable, and he must decide that for himself.

---

Wheatley v. Strobe and Wilcoxson.

---

The demurrers were properly sustained, and the judgments of the Court below were correct.

FIELD, J., after stating the facts, delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., and BALDWIN, J., concurring.

Upon the facts in this case the appellants make two points: First. That the verbal acceptance of Strobe was sufficient to render him liable to Howel upon the order of Wheatley; and, Second. If this be untenable, that the order operated as an equitable assignment of the demand against Strobe, which thus became subject to attachment as the property of Howel.

The first of these points cannot be sustained. The order possesses all the requisities of an inland bill of exchange. It contains a direction for the payment of money by one person to another, absolutely and at all events. As no time is specified, it is to be taken as payable at sight. No further particulars than these are essential to constitute a bill of exchange. The insertion of the word "please" does not alter the character of the instrument. This is the usual term of civility, and does not necessarily imply that a favor is asked. Story on Bills, sec. 33 and notes; 3 Kent, 74.

The order being a bill of exchange, the written acceptance of Strobe was necessary to charge him as acceptor under the statute. His verbal acceptance was insufficient. Act concerning Bills of Exchange, sec. 6. Upon the order, therefore, he is not liable.

But the second point is well taken. The order, though not available as a bill of exchange against Strobe for want of acceptance, operated as an equitable assignment of the demand of Wheatley to Howel. It was given for an antecedent debt, and for the full amount of the demand against Strobe; the consideration was valuable, and there was no splitting of the amount due into distinct and different causes of action; and in such cases it is well settled that an order, whether accepted or not, operates as an assignment of the debt, or fund against which it is drawn.

The want of a written acceptance does not affect the right of Howel to the money due, but only the mode of enforcing it. With the acceptance he could have sustained an action upon the order; without it he

Wheatley v. Strobe and Wilcoxson.

---

After the delivery and presentation of the order, the debt due by Strobe could not be reached on attachment issued by the creditors of Wheatley. As against any attempt by them to enforce its payment upon any such proceeding, the order would be an effectual protection; and we do not perceive why it should not equally avail as against the suit of the assignor himself, unless it is made to appear that such suit is prosecuted for the benefit of the assignee. Drake on Attach., chap. 37; Black v. Paul, 10 Mo. 103; Lovely v. Caldwell, 4 Ala. 684; Corser v. Craig, 1 Wash. C. C. 424.

In this State, all actions are required, with some few specified exceptions, to be brought in the name of the real party in interest, (Prac. Act, sec. 4). In the present case, upon the facts alleged in the answer, and which are admitted by the demurrer to be true, it is clear that the plaintiff is not the real party in interest, and there is no allegation in the complaint that the suit is prosecuted for the benefit of Howel. A judgment recovered by Wheatley after the presentation of the order, without notice to the assignee, would be no protection to the defendant against a suit by the assignee for the same demand.

The position of the defendant is not unlike that of a party summoned as garnishee, after receiving notice of an assignment by his creditor of the demand; if he fails in answering to set up the assignment, and judgment in consequence passes against him as a debtor of the assignor, it will not afford protection against a suit by the assignee. Nugent v. Opdyke, 9 Robinson, 453; Crayton v. Clark, 11 Ala. 787; Foster v. White, 9 Porter, 221.

Kirk v. Reynolds — Reynolds v. Harris.

Upon the facts set up in the answer, we are of opinion that the prayer of the defendant should have been granted; that he should have had leave to deposit the amount in suit in Court, and that process should have issued to bring in Howel, and that Wilcoxson & Co. should have been allowed to intervene.

The rights between the plaintiff and Howel to the demand due by Strobe, should be first determined, and afterwards the claim asserted by the intervenors disposed of. This claim, of course, can only be a matter for consideration in case the money is adjudged to have been at the time of the alleged attachment the property of Howel. Van Buskirk, Adm. v. Roy, 8 How. Prac. 425.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings.

JUDITH JORDAN AND ANN H. JORDAN v. GIBLIN,

A judgment rendered against a party who is absent from the State, upon publication of the summons thirty days only, is void for the want of jurisdiction of the person of the defendant.

An affidavit which avers a cause of action against the defendant — that defendant cannot after due diligence be found in the State — that summons has been issued but Sheriff cannot find him — that defendant's residence is in the county where the summons issued, and that defendant still has a family residing in said county — is insufficient to authorize the Court to appoint an attorney to represent such absent defendant.

Where service is attempted in a mode different from the course of the common law, the statute must be strictly pursued to give jurisdiction.

APPEAL from the Fourth District, County of San Francisco.

This was an action to enjoin the sale of certain real estate in San Francisco. This sale was attempted to be made under two executions issuing from judgments rendered in the late Superior Court of the City of San Francisco, at the suit of the defendants, Giblin and Kelly.

The plaintiffs, one the wife, and the other the infant daughter of Michael Jordan, claimed the title to the property by virtue of two deeds of conveyance from Benj. F. Watkins, and others, to them and Michael Jordan, and also by deed from Michael to them.

The question which this Court has considered in its opinion is, as to the jurisdiction of the Superior Court over the person of the defendant, Michael Jordan, in the actions upon which the judgments were obtained, and under which the defendants sought to sell the property in question. The facts upon which those judgments were obtained, are as follows:

At the time of the institution of the suits, and for several days thereafter, the defendant was a resident of the City of San Francisco. Some days after the bringing of said actions, he left this State and has continued absent ever since, his family continuing to reside in San Francisco. No service of summons was had on him prior to his departure, nor was there any publication of the summons, except only in the case of Giblin, and that only for the period of thirty days. No order was made directing a copy of the complaint and summons to be deposited in the post office, directed to said defendant at his place of residence, nor was any so sent; nor was an attorney appointed to defend the action; nor was there any appearance in said action on the part of the defendant. In the case of Abrams v. Jordan et al., the following affidavit was made for the purpose of having an attorney to represent Jordan.

"Thomas Giblin, being duly sworn, says he is one of the plaintiffs above named. That said plaintiffs have a cause of action against the said defendants, for the sum of six hundred and thirty-nine dollars, being balance due from said defendants to said plaintiffs, for work and labor performed, and materials furnished, by said plaintiffs for said defendants, in the building of some houses in the City of San Francisco. * * * That said defendant, Jordan, cannot, after due diligence, be found within the State of California. That a summons has been issued against the said Jordan in said action, but the Sheriff of the County of San Francisco cannot find him. That the residence of said Jordan is in the City of San Francisco, and he has still a family, consisting of a wife and children, there residing.

"Sworn to, etc.

THOS. GIBLIN."

Upon this affidavit an attorney was appointed for Jordan.

Plaintiffs had judgment in the Court below, and defendants appealed to this Court.

H. S. Love for Respondents.

TERRY, C. J., delivered the opinion of the Court—BALDWIN, J., concurring.

This was an action to enjoin the sale of certain real estate in San Francisco. This sale was attempted to be made under two executions issuing from judgments rendered in the late Superior Court of San Francisco at the suit of the appellants against Michael Jordan. The property is claimed by respondents.

Two principal questions are made by the record. First. That the title of appellants is superior in law and equity to that of Jordan, the defendant in these executions. Second. That the appellants had no right to subject the property to sale, for the reason that the judgments are void for want of jurisdiction in the Court rendering them.

---

Judith Jordan and Ann H. Jordan v. Giblin.

---

It is conceded, that if these judgments are out of the way, the title of the respondents is good, and that they have a right to intervene in this form to protect it. We are inclined to think that the Court below was right in holding in favor of respondents on the first proposition; but it is unnecessary, in our view, to pass definitely upon this point, inasmuch as we think the decree below should be affirmed on the second ground above stated.

The ground of the want of jurisdiction of the Superior Court is, that there was no personal or other sufficient service of notice of the actions in the cases of Gibben v. Jordan, 6 Cal. 416, and Abrams v. Jordan, in which cases these executions issued:

The facts connected with this point are these: At the time of the institution of this suit, and for several days afterwards, the defendant Jordan was a resident of San Francisco; at the time of the affidavit for an order of service by publication, in the case of Giblin v. Jordan, he was beyond the limits of the State, and has not since returned. The statute requires that in cases where the party to be served is out of the State, publication must be made at least three months. Prac. Act, sec. 31.

In the case of Abrams, the affidavit does not show a state of facts authorizing the appointment of attorney. The record does not show that any summons had been issued and placed in the hands of the proper officer, or that any effort had been made to find the defendant in order that he might be personally served. We have already held, in proceedings of this character, where service is attempted in modes different from the course in common law, that the statute must be strictly pursued to give jurisdiction. A contrary course would encourage fraud and lead to oppression.

In a bill to enjoin the issuance of bonds of the City and County of San Francisco by the Fund Commissioners created by the Act of April 20, 1858, for the claims approved by the Board of Examiners, it is necessary that some of the persons to whom the bonds are to be issued, should be made parties to the action.

APPEAL from the Fourth District, County of San Francisco.

This was an action by bill to enjoin the defendants, as a Board of Fund Commissioners, from issuing bonds of the City and County of San Francisco, to the holders of claims against the city which had been approved by the Board of Examiners created by the Act of April 20, 1858. None of the persons to whom the bonds were to be issued were made parties to the action. The only parties named in the bill were the persons constituting the Board of Fund Commissioners.

The defendants demurred to the bill on general grounds, and amongst others, on the ground that "there is a defect of parties defendants," and also on the ground that "the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action." The Court below sustained the demurrer on the latter ground; from which ruling of the Court, the plaintiff appealed to this Court.

FIELD, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., concurring.

The plaintiff seeks to enjoin the issuance of bonds of the City and County of San Francisco by the Fund Commissioners, created by the Act of April 20, 1858, for the claims approved by the Board of Examiners under that Act. The persons to whom, according to the report of the Examiners, the bonds are to be issued, are not made parties to the suit, and without their presence there can be no binding determination of the questions upon which the decision of this Court is desired, unless, perhaps, from the special circumstances of the case, the great number of persons to whom the bonds are to be issued, and the character of the questions involved, it may answer to bring in only a sufficient number to fully represent and protect the interests of all; but upon this we express no opinion. ## FALLON v. DOUGHERTY.

In an action of ejectment, where the plaintiff seeks to establish the loss of a deed under which he derails title, in order to lay the foundation for secondary evidence, the proof of search by the agent or attorney in fact of the plaintiff, and inquiry by him of the grantor, is insufficient, as the plaintiff himself might have the possession or control of the original, and, in the absence of other evidence, his affidavit should have been offered.

APPEAL from the Sixth District, County of Sacramento.

This was an action of ejectment to recover possession of a lot of land in the City of Sacramento.

The plaintiff derails title through one John A. Sutter and G. W. Hammersly. On the trial she, to lay the foundation for the introduction of secondary evidence, introduced one Stevens, who testified as follows:

"The plaintiff in this action was a resident of San Francisco county. Witness was acting as her agent and attorney in fact, and was conducting this suit for her; he had made search for the original deed from Sutter to Hammersly and Murray, to ascertain where the deed was, and had made other diligent inquiry about the same, but was unable to obtain the original, or ascertain where it was, or whether it was in existence."

There was no other evidence offered to establish the loss of the deed. The Court below ruled that this evidence was sufficient to account for the loss of the deed; and thereupon a certified copy was given in evidence: to which ruling of the Court the defendant excepted. Plaintiff had judgment. Defendant moved for a new trial, which was denied, and he appealed to this Court.

C. A. Johnson for Appellant.

Robinson, Beatty & Heacock, for Respondent.

FIELD, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., and BALDWIN, J., concurring.

This case must be reversed for want of sufficient preliminary proof of the inability of the plaintiff to produce the original deed from Sutter to Hammersly, through whom she derails title to the premises in controversy, to authorize the admission of the record copy. The evidence introduced only shows a search by the agent of the plaintiff and inquiry of Hammersly. It does not appear that the plaintiff herself has not the possession or control of the original. Her affidavit, in the absence of other evidence, should have been offered on the point. Laws of 1857, chap. 254, sec. 2; Macy v. Goodwin, 6 Cal. 581; Hensley v. Tarpey, 7 Cal. 288; *Bagley v. PATTERSON v. THE BOARD OF SUPERVISORS OF YUBA COUNTY.

In an action to restrain the issuance of bonds by an incorporated company, the persons to whom the bonds are to be issued are necessary parties to such action.

An injunction cannot be granted affecting the rights and interest of parties who have no opportunity of being heard, and who are not secured by such bond as would compensate them for the injury and loss they might sustain in case the writ was improperly issued.

The case of Hutchinson v. Burr et al., ante 103, affirmed.

This was an action by bill to restrain the Board of Supervisors from issuing bonds, in pursuance of an Act of the Legislature, to the San Francisco and Marysville Railroad Company.

---

Wheatley v. Strobe and Wilcoxson.

---

acceptance of a bill was good, but the law in England has been changed by 1 and 2 Geo. IV., chap. 78. After that Act no acceptance was valid, save in writing; but this is regulated by statute in our own State. Wood's Dig., p. 72, art. 182, sec. C, enacted that no person shall be charged as an acceptor of a bill of exchange unless his acceptance is in writing, and signed by himself or agent.

Strobe not having accepted the bill, therefore was not in any manner bound upon it to any person whatsoever.

The bill or order being payable to bearer, and if accepted at all, only accepted in favor of the bearer or holder who should present it for payment, was not the subject of garnishment by the intervenors. The payor of a negotiable instrument cannot be garnisheed. Cal. Rep. p.

By the acceptance, if it can be claimed such, the appellant Strobe bound himself to pay the bearer of the note, and not Howel the debtor of the intervenors — the lawful holder of the bill who could only take advantage of the acceptance. Story on Bills, sec. 113.

It is sufficient answer to the second point made by appellant, that the paper, if it was not a bill, certainly, till the payment, did not operate as a discharge of Strobe's debt to Wheatley, he, at most, by his promise only agreed to pay the holder of the order on presentation. There was no promise absolutely to pay Howel, nor even were that so, would it operate so as to prevent Howel from returning the order to the drawer Wheatley, and demanding from him its amount.

The drawing of the order or bill could not operate as an assignment of the debt, so as to vest it in Howel, because there was no assent of Howel so to receive it; and even did it so operate, there was nothing in the transaction to limit and confine it between Howel and Strobe. Howel could have disposed of it to an innocent purchaser, who could have fallen back and claimed the amount from the original drawer, as was done in this case.

The intervenors had no right to come into Court and litigate between parties plaintiff and defendant.

A garnishment is no defense except between actual parties.

Wilcoxson has fixed the liability of Strobe, if he is at all liable, and he must decide that for himself.

---

Wheatley v. Strobe and Wilcoxson.

---

The demurrers were properly sustained, and the judgments of the Court below were correct.

FIELD, J., after stating the facts, delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., and BALDWIN, J., concurring.

Upon the facts in this case the appellants make two points: First. That the verbal acceptance of Strobe was sufficient to render him liable to Howel upon the order of Wheatley; and, Second. If this be untenable, that the order operated as an equitable assignment of the demand against Strobe, which thus became subject to attachment as the property of Howel.

The first of these points cannot be sustained. The order possesses all the requisities of an inland bill of exchange. It contains a direction for the payment of money by one person to another, absolutely and at all events. As no time is specified, it is to be taken as payable at sight. No further particulars than these are essential to constitute a bill of exchange. The insertion of the word "please" does not alter the character of the instrument. This is the usual term of civility, and does not necessarily imply that a favor is asked. Story on Bills, sec. 33 and notes; 3 Kent, 74.

The order being a bill of exchange, the written acceptance of Strobe was necessary to charge him as acceptor under the statute. His verbal acceptance was insufficient. Act concerning Bills of Exchange, sec. 6. Upon the order, therefore, he is not liable.

But the second point is well taken. The order, though not available as a bill of exchange against Strobe for want of acceptance, operated as an equitable assignment of the demand of Wheatley to Howel. It was given for an antecedent debt, and for the full amount of the demand against Strobe; the consideration was valuable, and there was no splitting of the amount due into distinct and different causes of action; and in such cases it is well settled that an order, whether accepted or not, operates as an assignment of the debt, or fund against which it is drawn.

The want of a written acceptance does not affect the right of Howel to the money due, but only the mode of enforcing it. With the acceptance he could have sustained an action upon the order; without it he

Wheatley v. Strobe and Wilcoxson.

---

After the delivery and presentation of the order, the debt due by Strobe could not be reached on attachment issued by the creditors of Wheatley. As against any attempt by them to enforce its payment upon any such proceeding, the order would be an effectual protection; and we do not perceive why it should not equally avail as against the suit of the assignor himself, unless it is made to appear that such suit is prosecuted for the benefit of the assignee. Drake on Attach., chap. 37; Black v. Paul, 10 Mo. 103; Lovely v. Caldwell, 4 Ala. 684; Corser v. Craig, 1 Wash. C. C. 424.

In this State, all actions are required, with some few specified exceptions, to be brought in the name of the real party in interest, (Prac. Act, sec. 4). In the present case, upon the facts alleged in the answer, and which are admitted by the demurrer to be true, it is clear that the plaintiff is not the real party in interest, and there is no allegation in the complaint that the suit is prosecuted for the benefit of Howel. A judgment recovered by Wheatley after the presentation of the order, without notice to the assignee, would be no protection to the defendant against a suit by the assignee for the same demand.

The position of the defendant is not unlike that of a party summoned as garnishee, after receiving notice of an assignment by his creditor of the demand; if he fails in answering to set up the assignment, and judgment in consequence passes against him as a debtor of the assignor, it will not afford protection against a suit by the assignee. Nugent v. Opdyke, 9 Robinson, 453; Crayton v. Clark, 11 Ala. 787; Foster v. White, 9 Porter, 221.

Kirk v. Reynolds — Reynolds v. Harris.

Upon the facts set up in the answer, we are of opinion that the prayer of the defendant should have been granted; that he should have had leave to deposit the amount in suit in Court, and that process should have issued to bring in Howel, and that Wilcoxson & Co. should have been allowed to intervene.

The rights between the plaintiff and Howel to the demand due by Strobe, should be first determined, and afterwards the claim asserted by the intervenors disposed of. This claim, of course, can only be a matter for consideration in case the money is adjudged to have been at the time of the alleged attachment the property of Howel. *Van Buskirk, Adm. v. title of appellants is superior in law and equity to that of Jordan, the defendant in these executions. Second. That the appellants had no right to subject the property to sale, for the reason that the judgments are void for want of jurisdiction in the Court rendering them.

It is conceded, that if these judgments are out of the way, the title of the respondents is good, and that they have a right to intervene in this form to protect it. We are inclined to think that the Court below was right in holding in favor of respondents on the first proposition; but it is unnecessary, in our view, to pass definitely upon this point, inasmuch as we think the decree below should be affirmed on the second ground above stated.

The ground of the want of jurisdiction of the Superior Court is, that there was no personal or other sufficient service of notice of the actions in the cases of Gibben v. Jordan, 6 Cal. 416, and Abrams v. Jordan, in which cases these executions issued:

The facts connected with this point are these: At the time of the institution of this suit, and for several days afterwards, the defendant Jordan was a resident of San Francisco; at the time of the affidavit for an order of service by publication, in the case of Giblin v. Jordan, he was beyond the limits of the State, and has not since returned. The statute requires that in cases where the party to be served is out of the State, publication must be made at least three months. Prac. Act, sec. 31.

In the case of Abrams, the affidavit does not show a state of facts authorizing the appointment of attorney. The record does not show that any summons had been issued and placed in the hands of the proper officer, or that any effort had been made to find the defendant in order that he might be personally served. We have already held, in proceedings of this character, where service is attempted in modes different from the course in common law, that the statute must be strictly pursued to give jurisdiction. A contrary course would encourage fraud and lead to oppression.

Judgment affirmed.

HUTCHINSON v. BURR, et al., FUND COMMISSIONERS, ETC.

In a bill to enjoin the issuance of bonds of the City and County of San Francisco by the Fund Commissioners created by the Act of April 20, 1858, for the claims approved by the Board of Examiners, it is necessary that some of the persons to whom the bonds are to be issued, should be made parties to the action.

APPEAL from the Fourth District, County of San Francisco.

This was an action by bill to enjoin the defendants, as a Board of Fund Commissioners, from issuing bonds of the City and County of San Francisco, to the holders of claims against the city which had been approved by the Board of Examiners created by the Act of April 20, 1858. None of the persons to whom the bonds were to be issued were made parties to the action. The only parties named in the bill were the persons constituting the Board of Fund Commissioners.

The defendants demurred to the bill on general grounds, and amongst others, on the ground that "there is a defect of parties defendants," and also on the ground that "the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action." The Court below sustained the demurrer on the latter ground; from which ruling of the Court, the plaintiff appealed to this Court.

Gregory Yale and F. A. Fabens for Appellant.

FIELD, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., concurring.

The plaintiff seeks to enjoin the issuance of bonds of the City and County of San Francisco by the Fund Commissioners, created by the Act of April 20, 1858, for the claims approved by the Board of Examiners under that Act. The persons to whom, according to the report of the Examiners, the bonds are to be issued, are not made parties to the suit, and without their presence there can be no binding determination of the questions upon which the decision of this Court is desired, unless, perhaps, from the special circumstances of the case, the great number of persons to whom the bonds are to be issued, and the character of the questions involved, it may answer to bring in only a sufficient number to fully represent and protect the interests of all; but upon this we express no opinion. It is enough to sustain the judgment, on the demurrer, that none of the persons entitled to the bonds under the Act, are made parties. Judgment affirmed.

FALLON v. DOUGHERTY.

In an action of ejectment, where the plaintiff seeks to establish the loss of a deed under which he derails title, in order to lay the foundation for secondary evidence, the proof of search by the agent or attorney in fact of the plaintiff, and inquiry by him of the grantor, is insufficient, as the plaintiff himself might have the possession or control of the original, and, in the absence of other evidence, his affidavit should have been offered.

APPEAL from the Sixth District, County of Sacramento.

This was an action of ejectment to recover possession of a lot of land in the City of Sacramento.

The plaintiff derails title through one John A. Sutter and G. W. Hammersly. On the trial she, to lay the foundation for the introduction of secondary evidence, introduced one Stevens, who testified as follows:

"The plaintiff in this action was a resident of San Francisco county. Witness was acting as her agent and attorney in fact, and was conducting this suit for her; he had made search for the original deed from Sutter to Hammersly and Murray, to ascertain where the deed was, and had made other diligent inquiry about the same, but was unable to obtain the original, or ascertain where it was, or whether it was in existence."

There was no other evidence offered to establish the loss of the deed. The Court below ruled that this evidence was sufficient to account for the loss of the deed; and thereupon a certified copy was given in evidence: to which ruling of the Court the defendant excepted. Plaintiff had judgment. Defendant moved for a new trial, which was denied, and he appealed to this Court.

C. A. Johnson for Appellant.

Robinson, Beatty & Heacock, for Respondent.

FIELD, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., and BALDWIN, J., concurring.

This case must be reversed for want of sufficient preliminary proof of the inability of the plaintiff to produce the original deed from Sutter to Hammersly, through whom she deraigns title to the premises in controversy, to authorize the admission of the record copy. The evidence introduced only shows a search by the agent of the plaintiff and inquiry of Hammersly. It does not appear that the plaintiff herself has not the possession or control of the original. Her affidavit, in the absence of other evidence, should have been offered on the point. Laws of 1857, chap. 254, sec. 2; Macy v. Goodwin, 6 Cal. 581; Hensley v. Tarpey, 7 Cal. 288; *Bagley v. PATTERSON v. THE BOARD OF SUPERVISORS OF YUBA COUNTY.

In an action to restrain the issuance of bonds by an incorporated company, the persons to whom the bonds are to be issued are necessary parties to such action.

An injunction cannot be granted affecting the rights and interest of parties who have no opportunity of being heard, and who are not secured by such bond as would compensate them for the injury and loss they might sustain in case the writ was improperly issued.

The case of Hutchinson v. Burr et al., ante 108, affirmed.

APPEAL from the Tenth District, County of Yuba.

This was an action by bill to restrain the Board of Supervisors from issuing bonds, in pursuance of an Act of the Legislature, to the San Francisco and Marysville Railroad Company.

---

Wheatley v. Strobe and Wilcoxson.

---

acceptance of a bill was good, but the law in England has been changed by 1 and 2 Geo. IV., chap. 78. After that Act no acceptance was valid, save in writing; but this is regulated by statute in our own State. Wood's Dig., p. 72, art. 182, sec. C, enacted that no person shall be charged as an acceptor of a bill of exchange unless his acceptance is in writing, and signed by himself or agent.

Strobe not having accepted the bill, therefore was not in any manner bound upon it to any person whatsoever.

The bill or order being payable to bearer, and if accepted at all, only accepted in favor of the bearer or holder who should present it for payment, was not the subject of garnishment by the intervenors. The payor of a negotiable instrument cannot be garnisheed. Cal. Rep. p.

By the acceptance, if it can be claimed such, the appellant Strobe bound himself to pay the bearer of the note, and not Howel the debtor of the intervenors — the lawful holder of the bill who could only take advantage of the acceptance. Story on Bills, sec. 113.

It is sufficient answer to the second point made by appellant, that the paper, if it was not a bill, certainly, till the payment, did not operate as a discharge of Strobe's debt to Wheatley, he, at most, by his promise only agreed to pay the holder of the order on presentation. There was no promise absolutely to pay Howel, nor even were that so, would it operate so as to prevent Howel from returning the order to the drawer Wheatley, and demanding from him its amount.

The drawing of the order or bill could not operate as an assignment of the debt, so as to vest it in Howel, because there was no assent of Howel so to receive it; and even did it so operate, there was nothing in the transaction to limit and confine it between Howel and Strobe. Howel could have disposed of it to an innocent purchaser, who could have fallen back and claimed the amount from the original drawer, as was done in this case.

The intervenors had no right to come into Court and litigate between parties plaintiff and defendant.

A garnishment is no defense except between actual parties.

Wilcoxson has fixed the liability of Strobe, if he is at all liable, and he must decide that for himself.

---

Wheatley v. Strobe and Wilcoxson.

---

The demurrers were properly sustained, and the judgments of the Court below were correct.

FIELD, J., after stating the facts, delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., and BALDWIN, J., concurring.

Upon the facts in this case the appellants make two points: First. That the verbal acceptance of Strobe was sufficient to render him liable to Howel upon the order of Wheatley; and, Second. If this be untenable, that the order operated as an equitable assignment of the demand against Strobe, which thus became subject to attachment as the property of Howel.

The first of these points cannot be sustained. The order possesses all the requisities of an inland bill of exchange. It contains a direction for the payment of money by one person to another, absolutely and at all events. As no time is specified, it is to be taken as payable at sight. No further particulars than these are essential to constitute a bill of exchange. The insertion of the word "please" does not alter the character of the instrument. This is the usual term of civility, and does not necessarily imply that a favor is asked. Story on Bills, sec. 33 and notes; 3 Kent, 74.

The order being a bill of exchange, the written acceptance of Strobe was necessary to charge him as acceptor under the statute. His verbal acceptance was insufficient. Act concerning Bills of Exchange, sec. 6. Upon the order, therefore, he is not liable.

But the second point is well taken. The order, though not available as a bill of exchange against Strobe for want of acceptance, operated as an equitable assignment of the demand of Wheatley to Howel. It was given for an antecedent debt, and for the full amount of the demand against Strobe; the consideration was valuable, and there was no splitting of the amount due into distinct and different causes of action; and in such cases it is well settled that an order, whether accepted or not, operates as an assignment of the debt, or fund against which it is drawn.

The want of a written acceptance does not affect the right of Howel to the money due, but only the mode of enforcing it. With the acceptance he could have sustained an action upon the order; without it he

Wheatley v. Strobe and Wilcoxson.

---

After the delivery and presentation of the order, the debt due by Strobe could not be reached on attachment issued by the creditors of Wheatley. As against any attempt by them to enforce its payment upon any such proceeding, the order would be an effectual protection; and we do not perceive why it should not equally avail as against the suit of the assignor himself, unless it is made to appear that such suit is prosecuted for the benefit of the assignee. Drake on Attach., chap. 37; Black v. Paul, 10 Mo. 103; Lovely v. Caldwell, 4 Ala. 684; Corser v. Craig, 1 Wash. C. C. 424.

In this State, all actions are required, with some few specified exceptions, to be brought in the name of the real party in interest, (Prac. Act, sec. 4). In the present case, upon the facts alleged in the answer, and which are admitted by the demurrer to be true, it is clear that the plaintiff is not the real party in interest, and there is no allegation in the complaint that the suit is prosecuted for the benefit of Howel. A judgment recovered by Wheatley after the presentation of the order, without notice to the assignee, would be no protection to the defendant against a suit by the assignee for the same demand.

The position of the defendant is not unlike that of a party summoned as garnishee, after receiving notice of an assignment by his creditor of the demand; if he fails in answering to set up the assignment, and judgment in consequence passes against him as a debtor of the assignor, it will not afford protection against a suit by the assignee. Nugent v. Opdyke, 9 Robinson, 453; Crayton v. Clark, 11 Ala. 787; Foster v. White, 9 Porter, 221.

Kirk v. Reynolds — Reynolds v. Harris.

Upon the facts set up in the answer, we are of opinion that the prayer of the defendant should have been granted; that he should have had leave to deposit the amount in suit in Court, and that process should have issued to bring in Howel, and that Wilcoxson & Co. should have been allowed to intervene.

The rights between the plaintiff and Howel to the demand due by Strobe, should be first determined, and afterwards the claim asserted by the intervenors disposed of. This claim, of course, can only be a matter for consideration in case the money is adjudged to have been at the time of the alleged attachment the property of Howel. Van Buskirk, Adm. v. Roy, 8 How. Prac. 425.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings.

KIRK v. REYNOLDS et al., AND REYNOLDS v. HARRIS.

A party cannot be permitted to prosecute two separate and distinct remedies, in the Supreme Court, for a review of the same question at the same time.

APPEAL from the Eleventh District, County of El Dorado.

John Hume for Appellants.

Sanderson & Newell for Respondents.

TERRY, C. J., delivered the opinion of the Court — BALDWIN, J., and FIELD, J., concurring.

This is a proceeding in the nature of a bill of review, the object of which is to procure an examination and reversal of the decree of the Court below in case of Raun v. Reynolds and Kirk, 11 Cal. 14, on the ground of error apparent in the record.

The plaintiff appealed from the decree in the original case, and the same questions raised by this record were presented in this Court on the appeal. As a party cannot be permitted to prosecute two separate and distinct remedies in this Court for a review of the same question at the same time, the appeal is dismissed.

JUDITH JORDAN AND ANN H. JORDAN v. GIBLIN,

A judgment rendered against a party who is absent from the State, upon publication of the summons thirty days only, is void for the want of jurisdiction of the person of the defendant.

An affidavit which avers a cause of action against the defendant — that defendant cannot after due diligence be found in the State — that summons has been issued but Sheriff cannot find him — that defendant's residence is in the county where the summons issued, and that defendant still has a family residing in said county — is insufficient to authorize the Court to appoint an attorney to represent such absent defendant.

Where service is attempted in a mode different from the course of the common law, the statute must be strictly pursued to give jurisdiction.

APPEAL from the Fourth District, County of San Francisco.

This was an action to enjoin the sale of certain real estate in San Francisco. This sale was attempted to be made under two executions issuing from judgments rendered in the late Superior Court of the City of San Francisco, at the suit of the defendants, Giblin and Kelly.

The plaintiffs, one the wife, and the other the infant daughter of Michael Jordan, claimed the title to the property by virtue of two deeds of conveyance from Benj. F. Watkins, and others, to them and Michael Jordan, and also by deed from Michael to them.

The question which this Court has considered in its opinion is, as to the jurisdiction of the Superior Court over the person of the defendant, Michael Jordan, in the actions upon which the judgments were obtained, and under which the defendants sought to sell the property in question. The facts upon which those judgments were obtained, are as follows:

At the time of the institution of the suits, and for several days thereafter, the defendant was a resident of the City of San Francisco. Some days after the bringing of said actions, he left this State and has continued absent ever since, his family continuing to reside in San Francisco. No service of summons was had on him prior to his departure, nor was there any publication of the summons, except only in the case of Giblin, and that only for the period of thirty days. No order was made directing a copy of the complaint and summons to be deposited in the post office, directed to said defendant at his place of residence, nor was any so sent; nor was an attorney appointed to defend the action; nor was there any appearance in said action on the part of the defendant. In the case of Abrams v. Jordan et al., the following affidavit was made for the purpose of having an attorney to represent Jordan.

"Thomas Giblin, being duly sworn, says he is one of the plaintiffs above named. That said plaintiffs have a cause of action against the said defendants, for the sum of six hundred and thirty-nine dollars, being balance due from said defendants to said plaintiffs, for work and labor performed, and materials furnished, by said plaintiffs for said defendants, in the building of some houses in the City of San Francisco. * * * That said defendant, Jordan, cannot, after due diligence, be found within the State of California. That a summons has been issued against the said Jordan in said action, but the Sheriff of the County of San Francisco cannot find him. That the residence of said Jordan is in the City of San Francisco, and he has still a family, consisting of a wife and children, there residing.

"Sworn to, etc.

THOS. GIBLIN."

Upon this affidavit an attorney was appointed for Jordan.

Plaintiffs had judgment in the Court below, and defendants appealed to this Court.

F. M. & H. H. Haight for Appellants.

H. S. Love for Respondents.

TERRY, C. J., delivered the opinion of the Court — BALDWIN, J., concurring.

This was an action to enjoin the sale of certain real estate in San Francisco. This sale was attempted to be made under two executions issuing from judgments rendered in the late Superior Court of San Francisco at the suit of the appellants against Michael Jordan. The property is claimed by respondents.

Two principal questions are made by the record. First. That the title of appellants is superior in law and equity to that of Jordan, the defendant in these executions. Second. That the appellants had no right to subject the property to sale, for the reason that the judgments are void for want of jurisdiction in the Court rendering them.

---

Judith Jordan and Ann H. Jordan v. Giblin.

---

It is conceded, that if these judgments are out of the way, the title of the respondents is good, and that they have a right to intervene in this form to protect it. We are inclined to think that the Court below was right in holding in favor of respondents on the first proposition; but it is unnecessary, in our view, to pass definitely upon this point, inasmuch as we think the decree below should be affirmed on the second ground above stated.

The ground of the want of jurisdiction of the Superior Court is, that there was no personal or other sufficient service of notice of the actions in the cases of Gibben v. Jordan, 6 Cal. 416, and Abrams v. Jordan, in which cases these executions issued:

The facts connected with this point are these: At the time of the institution of this suit, and for several days afterwards, the defendant Jordan was a resident of San Francisco; at the time of the affidavit for an order of service by publication, in the case of Giblin v. Jordan, he was beyond the limits of the State, and has not since returned. The statute requires that in cases where the party to be served is out of the State, publication must be made at least three months. Prac. Act, sec. 31.

In the case of Abrams, the affidavit does not show a state of facts authorizing the appointment of attorney. The record does not show that any summons had been issued and placed in the hands of the proper officer, or that any effort had been made to find the defendant in order that he might be personally served. We have already held, in proceedings of this character, where service is attempted in modes different from the course in common law, that the statute must be strictly pursued to give jurisdiction. A contrary course would encourage fraud and lead to oppression.

Judgment affirmed.

FALLON v. DOUGHERTY.

In an action of ejectment, where the plaintiff seeks to establish the loss of a deed under which he derails title, in order to lay the foundation for secondary evidence, the proof of search by the agent or attorney in fact of the plaintiff, and inquiry by him of the grantor, is insufficient, as the plaintiff himself might have the possession or control of the original, and, in the absence of other evidence, his affidavit should have been offered.

APPEAL from the Sixth District, County of Sacramento.

This was an action of ejectment to recover possession of a lot of land in the City of Sacramento.

The plaintiff derails title through one John A. Sutter and G. W. Hammersly. On the trial she, to lay the foundation for the introduction of secondary evidence, introduced one Stevens, who testified as follows:

"The plaintiff in this action was a resident of San Francisco county. Witness was acting as her agent and attorney in fact, and was conducting this suit for her; he had made search for the original deed from Sutter to Hammersly and Murray, to ascertain where the deed was, and had made other diligent inquiry about the same, but was unable to obtain the original, or ascertain where it was, or whether it was in existence."

There was no other evidence offered to establish the loss of the deed. The Court below ruled that this evidence was sufficient to account for the loss of the deed; and thereupon a certified copy was given in evidence: to which ruling of the Court the defendant excepted. Plaintiff

This case must be reversed for want of sufficient preliminary proof of the inability of the plaintiff to produce the original deed from Sutter to Hammersly, through whom she deraigns title to the premises in controversy, to authorize the admission of the record copy. The evidence introduced only shows a search by the agent of the plaintiff and inquiry of Hammersly. It does not appear that the plaintiff herself has not the possession or control of the original. PATTERSON v. THE BOARD OF SUPERVISORS OF YUBA COUNTY.

In an action to restrain the issuance of bonds by an incorporated company, the persons to whom the bonds are to be issued are necessary parties to such action.

An injunction cannot be granted affecting the rights and interest of parties who have no opportunity of being heard, and who are not secured by such bond as would compensate them for the injury and loss they might sustain in case the writ was improperly issued.

The case of Hutchinson v. Burr et al., ante 103, affirmed.

This was an action by bill to restrain the Board of Supervisors from issuing bonds, in pursuance of an Act of the Legislature, to the San Francisco and Marysville Railroad Company.

---

Patterson v. Supervisors of Yuba County.

---

This action was against the Board of Supervisors of Yuba county — the Railroad Company not having been made parties. Upon a final hearing of the case, the Court ordered the injunction to issue; from which order the defendants appealed to this Court.

B. S. Brooks and T. Dame for Appellants.

The Court below erred in granting the injunction.

T. B. Reardon for Respondent.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., concurring.

This is an appeal from an order granting an injunction to restrain the defendants from issuing their bonds, in pursuance of an Act of the Legislature, to the San Francisco and Marysville Railroad Company.

Even if we were to concede that the plaintiff had a right to interpose in this manner to stay an Act of this nature, done in pursuance of legislative authority, and that the facts stated in the bill justify the action of the Court below, it is clear that, under the decision of this Court in Hutchinson v. Burr, ante, 103, the proceeding was improper in the absence of the parties beneficially interested. The Supervisors are not the real parties interested, certainly not in favor of the Railroad Company, in resisting this application; and an injunction should not have been granted affecting their rights and interests until they had an opportunity to be heard, and until they were secured by such bonds on the award of the injunction as would compensate them for the injury and loss they might sustain in the premises.

The public importance of the question involved makes it desirable that a decision should be had on the merits of this application. But it would be improper to pass upon the rights of parties in their absence; and our judgment would be of no validity in such cases as to the absent parties. If the Railroad Company were not an indispensable party, we should not notice this defect; but we might as well undertake to settle the rights of C, in the contest between A and B, as to decide this question in a contest between the plaintiff and the Supervisors.

For this reason we reverse the order granting the injunction, and remand the case.

Heyman v. Landers.

---

HEYMAN & CO. v. LANDERS et al.

When a restraining order or an injunction is sought upon the complaint itself, it is the usual practice to present the complaint, in advance of the filing, to the Judge, and obtain the order of the allowance of the writ; and such practice is regular, and not in conflict with our statute.

In such case, the order does not take effect until the filing the complaint and the undertaking required.

Where suit is brought to set aside a judgment on the ground of fraud, and a restraining order is issued in such suit at the instance of the plaintiff, and subsequently, at a final hearing, the Court decides that such judgment was not fraudulent, but valid: Held, that the effect of such judgment is, that plaintiff was not entitled to the restraining order.

The only damages which the law allows for the detention of money under its process is the legal interest.

APPEAL from the Sixth District, County of Sacramento.

This was an action to recover damages for the wrongful issuance of an injunction or restraining order. The facts, as detailed by the opinion of the Court, are as follows:

On the third of November, 1856, the plaintiffs brought suit against one Arronson, of Sacramento, to recover the sum of ten thousand and one hundred dollars, and issued an attachment and levied upon his property. On the same day, but subsequent to the levy of the attachment of the plaintiffs, several other creditors of Arronson commenced suits against him, and caused attachments to be issued and levied upon the same property. Judgments in the several suits passed by default, and the plaintiffs immediately issued execution upon the one recovered by them, under which the Sheriff proceeded and sold the property attached. Whilst the property was in the Sheriff's custody, the other creditors instituted suit to set aside the judgment of the plaintiffs as fraudulent and collusive, and obtained an order from the District Judge, directing the payment of the proceeds of the sale into Court to abide the determination of the suit, upon filing a bond, to be approved by the Clerk, in the sum of one thousand dollars. The order was indorsed upon the complaint in that suit, and filed with it. The undertaking, which is the subject of the present action, was then executed, and the restraining order issued. The condition of the undertaking is to pay such damages, not exceeding the sum of one thousand dollars, as the defendants in that suit might sustain, by reason of the order, if the Court should finally decide that the plaintiffs therein, the creditors, were not entitled thereto. In obedience to the order, the proceeds of the sale, amounting to seven thousand and eleven dollars, were paid into Court, and remained there from December 15, 1856, to April 29, 1857, when the suit was decided against the creditors, and it was adjudged that the judgment recovered by the plaintiffs herein was valid, and not fraudulent or collusive, and that they were entitled to the money. The present action is to recover the damages sustained by reason of the restraining order. It appeared in evidence on the trial, that during the period the money was detained in Court it was worth two per cent. interest a month, and that the plaintiffs employed counsel to obtain the discharge of the restraining order, and paid for their services three hundred dollars, which was a reasonable fee. The Court allowed as damages the counsel fee paid, and interest upon the money at the rate of two per cent. a month, and gave judgment for the full amount of the undertaking. From this judgment the defendants appeal, and make the following points: First. That the restraining order was void, because made before the complaint in the suit of the creditors was filed; Second. That the Court has never decided that the plaintiffs in that suit were not entitled to the restraining order; and, Third. If the defendants are liable upon the undertaking, the rule of damages must be the legal interest of ten per cent. a year upon the money in Court.

Heyman v. Landers.

---

Thomas Sunderland for Appellants.

1. The first error complained of is, that the Court permitted the introduction in evidence of the restraining order of the Court.

It appeared that the order was made by the Judge at chambers, before any suit was instituted; the complaint and order were filed at one and the same time, and as one paper. Now the statute (Practice Act, sec. 22) provides that a suit shall be commenced by filing the complaint and issuing a summons.

The restraining order, therefore, must have been made before any suit was pending, and when the judge who made the order had no jurisdiction. By the 113th section of our Practice Act, an injunction may be granted at the time of issuing the summons; but there is no authority for issuance of an injunction by the Court or Judge before the suit is commenced or the complaint filed. If there is no authority for such order, then, it follows that the order was void, and it ought not to have been introduced in evidence.

---

Heyman v. Landers.

Appellants objected to the introduction of the undertaking sued on, for the same reasons urged against the order of the Judge, and also because both the order and undertaking showed that the latter was given to indemnify respondents against loss until the return day of the order to show cause. Heyman & Co. were ordered to appear on the twenty-eighth of November, 1856, and show cause why the prayer of the complaint should not be granted. In the meantime, the Sheriff was restrained from paying the proceeds of the goods to them.

The extent of the liability of appellants was the damage sustained by Heyman & Co. from the eighteenth of November until the twenty-eighth.

2. The condition of the undertaking is, that the plaintiffs in said suit in which the same was given, would pay the defendants therein such damages as they might sustain by reason of said order, "if the Court shall finally decide that the said plaintiffs were not entitled thereto." The Court has never decided that plaintiffs in that suit were not entitled to the restraining order, and until there is such decision there is no breach by appellants of their undertaking.

3. Respondents called C. H. Bradford, to prove that money was worth in the market two per cent. per month during the time the money hereinbefore mentioned was in the hands of the Clerk. The Court found that money was worth that rate of interest, and therefore gave judgment against appellants for damages for the loss of the use of said money at that rate. Our statute (R. L., p. 109) has fixed the legal rate of interest in the absence of any agreement in writing, and thereby the value of money and its use is fixed by law.

Moore & Welty for Respondents.

Appellants complain that the Court below found damages equal to

---

Heyman v. Landers.

---

two per cent. per month for the time that the money was detained in obedience to the restraining order.

It is shown by the evidence, that during all the time the money was so detained, the use of money was worth two per cent. a month on call. If that was the value of the use of the money, were not plaintiffs damaged to that amount? and if damaged to that amount, then, it follows that respondents ought and must pay that amount in order to comply with their undertaking, which is, to pay them (plaintiffs) all damages which they must sustain by reason of the order, if the Court shall finally decide, etc.

In the case of Smith v. Griffith, 3 Hill, 333, Nelson, Justice, on the subject of damages, says: "The damages should afford the plaintiff an adequate indemnity for the loss sustained at the time the injury happened;" and this is certainly in accordance with right and reason. If the value of the use of money (as is proved) was two per cent. per month, respondents could have got that much for the use of their money; and unless they can recover that amount in damages, they will have been placed against their will in that position—an anomaly in the common law—to suffer an injury without a remedy.

FIELD, J., after stating the facts, delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., and BALDWIN, J., concurring.

The appellants make the following points: First. That the restraining order was void, because made before the complaint in the suit of the creditors was filed; Second. That the Court has never decided that the plaintiffs in that suit were not entitled to the restraining order; and, Third. If the defendants are liable upon the undertaking, the rule of damages must be the legal interest of ten per cent. a year upon the money in Court.

The first point is untenable. The order could only take effect upon the filing of the complaint, and the bond or undertaking required, and it was unnecessary to delay the application to the Judge until after the complaint had been filed. When a restraining order or an injunction is sought upon the complaint itself, it is the usual practice to present the complaint, in advance of the filing, to the Judge, and obtain the order of the allowance of the writ; and with this practice the statute does not conflict. The order or writ can then be issued with the summons. Prac. Act, sec. 113.

Heyman v. Landers.

---

The second point is also untenable. The Court, in adjudging that the judgment of the plaintiffs against Arronson was valid, and not fraudulent or collusive, and that they were entitled to the money in Court in substance, if not in terms, decided that the other creditors were not entitled to the restraining order.

But the third point is well taken. The only damages which the law allows for the detention of money under its process is the legal interest. The rule of damages, in such cases, like the one which obtains in actions upon promissory notes, is a fixed and arbitrary one. The actual loss occasioned may be much greater than the interest, but the consequences beyond that the law does not inquire into (Sedgwick on Damages, chap. 8). It would indeed often be impossible to determine the actual damages resulting from the detention of money; the party entitled to it may in consequence have been compelled to borrow on ruinous rates of interest; he may have become embarrassed in his business operations, ruined in credit, and perhaps driven into insolvency; but of these possible consequences the Courts cannot take notice. The legal interest in such cases is the only measure which can be followed with certainty, and, as a general rule, with safety. The judgment, therefore, must be modified. The allowance of the three hundred dollars was proper (Summers v. Farish, 10 Cal. 353). This sum added to the interest on the money deposited in Court at the rate of ten per cent. a year from December 15, 1856, to April 29, 1857, must constitute the amount to which the judgment is to be reduced.

The cause is remanded to the Court below, with directions to modify the judgment in accordance with this opinion; the costs of the appeal to be allowed to the respondents.

FOWLER v. FISK et al.

Where a sale of a vessel is made, part cash, and the balance of the purchase money to be paid upon delivery by the vendor to the vendee of a good title and register of the vessel, to recover the balance the vendor must show an offer on his part to comply with the agreement.

APPEAL from the Twelfth District, County of San Francisco.

This was an action to recover an unpaid balance of the purchase money of a vessel. The facts appear in the opinion of the Court. Plaintiff had judgment, and defendants appealed.

G. F. & W. H. Sharp for Appellants.

I. The appellants ask for a reversal of the judgment, for that the delivery of a good title and register was made a condition precedent to the payment of the balance of $2,200; consequently the respondent's action was prematurely brought. Cunningham v. Morrell, 10 J. R. 203; Green v. Reynolds, 2 J. R. 207; McIntyre v. Clark, 7 Wend. Rep. 330; Northrup v. Northrup, 6 Cow. Rep. 276; Gaze v. Price, 16 John. Rep. 267; Rob v. Montgomery, 20 J. R. 203.

It is no answer to say, as was contended in the Court below, that title to a ship may pass by parol; consequently the appellants had a good title without the bill of sale and register from the last owner. The answer to all this is, that respondent had agreed to give something more, and he was bound to do it.

II. Again: a good title and register to the vessel was to be given "within ninety days, and before the payment of the $2,200."

The time fixed upon was also of the essence of the contract. The respondent was not ready or willing at the time fixed to complete the sale, consequently the appellants could not be compelled to complete the agreement. Berry v. Young, 2 Exp. Ca. 640, note; Benedict v. Lynch, 1 John. Ch. Rep. 370.

Robert Rankin for Respondent.

I. Where a sale is absolute and unconditional, as in this case, goods sold cannot be returned, but suit must be brought on the warranty.

Fowler v. Flak.

"On sale with warranty, and warranty broken, plaintiffs might recover price, and defendants must sue on warranty, or recoup damages." Ruiz v. Norton, 4 Cal. R. 355.

"A promise to pay and a warranty are independent covenants, and the enforcement of one is not dependent on the performance of the other." Norton v. Jackson, 5 Cal. R. 60.

II. Defendants cannot resist payment of the price or claim damages till evicted.

"Want of title in the vendor of personal property is no defense to an action for the recovery of the purchase money, where there has been no recovery by the owner against the purchaser." Case v. Hall, 24 Wend. 102; Kennebec L. D. Co. v. Burrill, 6 Shep. 314.

III. "The purchaser of personal property cannot, while retaining possession of such property, resist the recovery of the purchase money by the vendor, on the ground of ownership in a third person at the time of sale." 3 U. S. Dig. 357, sec. 17.

"A purchaser in possession cannot reclaim the purchase money unless evicted or disturbed." Salmon v. Hoffman, 2 Cal. R. 138.

TERRY, C. J., delivered the opinion of the Court — BALDWIN, J., concurring.

Plaintiff sold defendants a vessel for $4,400, the possession of which vessel he delivered. At the time of sale the vessel was registered as the property of another, so that a proper transfer could not be made at the time. In consequence of this it was agreed that $1,000 of the purchase money should be paid in cash, $1,200 within twelve days, and the remaining $2,200 upon the delivery by plaintiff to defendants of a good title and register of the vessel. $1,200 was paid by the defendant as by agreement. No title or register has ever been delivered or tendered to the defendants; nor is it shown that the plaintiff has ever been in a condition to make such title. The agreement between the parties was, that the money should be paid upon the delivery of the title; and in order to entitle the plaintiff to recover, he must show an offer on his part to comply with the agreement. 1 Chitty Pleadings, 297.

IN THE MATTER OF THE ESTATE OF TOMPKINS, DECEASED.

Upon the death of a married man, the whole of the common property is assets of the deceased, to be administered upon by his personal representatives.

The Legislature intended that the whole common property should be subject to the payment of the debts of the deceased.

The homestead does not constitute any portion of such assets.

The homestead estate is a sort of joint tenancy, with the right of survivorship as between husband and wife, and cannot be destroyed except by the concurrence of both in the manner prescribed by law.

APPEAL from the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco.

The following are the facts upon which this appeal is based, as they appear in the opinion of the Court:

The administratrix, who is the widow of the deceased, presented her final account for settlement to the Probate Court. In this account she charged herself only with one moiety of the common property, omitting to account for the other part of the common property or the homestead, or its rents and profits.

The Probate Court approved the account as rendered, except as to the omission to charge the administratrix with the whole of the common property, as well as the homestead, and ordered that a new account be filed charging the administratrix with the whole of the property of intestate, including the homestead. From this order an appeal is taken.

The questions presented are: First. Whether the whole of the common property is assets of the deceased husband to be administered by his personal representative; Second. Whether the homestead constitutes a portion of such assets.

R. B. Provines for Administratrix and Appellant.

The following points are raised:

1. Whether the estate of the widow in the common property is assets of the estate of the deceased husband, to be administered by his personal representatives? and,

---

In the matter of the Estate of Tompkins.

---

II. Whether the homestead is assets to be so administered?

FIRST, THEN: Is the estate of the widow in the common property, assets of the estate of her deceased husband to be taken and administered by his personal representatives?

The Constitution of this State, Article XI, sec. 14, declares what shall constitute the separate property of the wife, and provides that laws shall be passed more clearly defining the rights of the wife in relation as well to her separate property as to that held in common with her husband. And the Legislature, in pursuance of this provision, by the Act of April 17th, 1850, "defining the rights and duties of husband and wife," section 2, has declared what property of husband and wife shall be common property; and by section 11 of the same Act, provision is made for the disposition of the common property in case of the dissolution of the community by the death of either party, and it is declared that "Upon the dissolution of the community, by the death of either husband or wife, one-half of the common property shall go to the survivor, and the other half to the descendants of the deceased husband or wife, subject to the payment of the debts of the deceased." Now, had there been a colon or semicolon after the word "survivor" in this sentence, there never could have been any doubt as to the intention and meaning of the Legislature, nor, consequently, as to the proper construction to be placed upon it. It would then have been perfectly clear, that the Legislature intended to charge that portion of the common property going "to the descendants of the deceased husband and wife," and that only, with "the debts of the deceased party;" and, we think, that the punctuation of this sentence, as it is found in the Statute Book — adopted, as it may have been, by the printer — is not sufficient of itself to render that construction improper, or to cast a doubt upon the meaning of the Legislature. Indeed, it is not only clearly susceptible of the construction above mentioned, but such would seem to be the only construction which can reasonably and fairly be placed upon it.

Now let us suppose, for a moment, that it is the wife who dies — indebted on contracts made by her before marriage — leaving no separate estate, and that her debts so contracted exceed the value of the whole common property, — is the whole common property in that case to be applied to the payment of the debts of the wife, thus contracted, without regard to the rights of the husband, who has mainly contributed to its acquisition, or to the rights of his creditors? Is such the meaning and intention of this statute? It cannot be. The Legislature cannot be supposed to have intended such injustice. It is absurd. And why, then, should the rule be different when the case is reversed, and the husband dies? Should not the law be more careful to protect the widow, and to provide support and maintenance for her, than for the surviving husband? And is it not much more consistent with reason, and with the rules of property in analogous cases, that that portion of the property which descends to the heirs of the deceased, should alone be chargeable with the debts of the deceased?

In the matter of the Estate of Tompkins.

The descendant inherits from the deceased, and therefore takes subject to equitable liens and incumbrances created by the deceased. But here the survivor, the widow, does not take from the deceased in any sense. She only has that which before was hers, only that now she has it separate, and divested of all contingencies arising from the power of the husband over it while living. Her interest in the common property vests in her before the husband's death, and does not in any sense descend to her upon his death. The question is not, therefore, whether the property of the deceased party should be charged with that party's debts, but the question here is, whether the property of another person should be charged therewith, merely because that prior to the death of the former the latter held that property "in common" with him. As to the common property, the husband and wife are mere tenants in common, without any other qualification than this, that during the husband's life the wife's power over the property is suspended, but her estate or interest in it is perfect and complete all the time. The Constitution speaks of "property held in common with her husband," not in partnership, but in common, and the statute declares it "common property."

The statute declares what shall constitute that "property of the wife held in common with her husband," of which the Constitution speaks, and gives to the husband the entire management and control of it whilst the relation of husband and wife subsists. It then provides, (Wood's Digest, p. 488, secs. 11 and 12) that where that relation is dissolved, "the common property shall be equally divided between the parties," if both be living; and if one be dead, the survivor is to take his or her half, "and the other half is to go to the descendants of the deceased, subject to the payment of the debts of the deceased." That such is the meaning and intention of the Legislature is perfectly evident when the 11th and 12th sections are considered together. The 12th section, as it stood before the amendment of 1857, provided that "upon the dissolution of the marriage by decree of any Court of competent jurisdiction, the common property should be equally divided between the parties." Nothing was said about the wife's part being chargeable with the husband's debts, or with any part or proportion of them; but the property was to be equally divided or sold, and the proceeds equally divided, leaving creditors, should there be any, to their remedy against the party indebted to them; and the proviso inserted by way of amendment, by the Act of 1857, was not intended as any protection to creditors, or to make any provision for them, but simply as a sort of penalty to be imposed upon the guilty party, as a protection of each, against the commission of the acts there mentioned by the other. There can be no doubt but that the Legislature intended to make the husband and wife simply tenants in common of the common property, as respects the estate, but as respects the power of disposition, during the continuance of the marriage, to prefer the husband. By the 10th section of the Act, the common law estate of the husband, as tenant by courtesy, upon the death of the wife, and the dower of the widow, upon the death of the husband, are forever taken away; and no provision whatever is made for the widow, if by the 11th section she is not to have one-half the common property.

Fortunately, we are not wholly without a guide, in the form of judicial decision, in the investigation of this subject. We have, at least, one great leading case which throws a flood of light upon the whole subject. The case of Beard v. Knox, 5 Cal. 252, is directly in point. By this decision we have clear judicial construction given to these 10th and 11th sections of this Act.

It is declared that the husband and wife are jointly seized of the common property, and that one-half interest therein remains over to the surviving wife upon the death of the husband.

---

In the matter of the Estate of Tompkins.

---

It is not said that the interest of the surviving wife is subject to the payment of the deceased husband's debts, but the very reverse is held; for the estate was still unsettled, and there was no separate property belonging to the deceased, out of which the debt could be paid: all the property was common property, and still the widow was held entitled to recover the one-half in gross. And it is also held in that case, that the interest of the wife in the common property "is a present, vested and certain interest, which becomes absolute at the death of the husband," and that it is subject to one contingency only, viz., "the husband's disposal during their joint lives."

It is furthermore declared that this provision of the law is "a liberal provision" — that it is a "humane and beneficial law," intended for the benefit of the wife, etc.

Now, it is very clear that it is no provision at all for the wife, if it is to be consumed in the payment of the deceased husband's debts contracted both before and after marriage; for the law nowhere makes any distinction between these two classes of debts. It is perfectly clear, that the intention of this humane and beneficent law would be defeated by adopting such a rule of construction. But the Court in that case further held, that the statute has substituted this half interest in the common property in lieu of dower which it has expressly taken away. And that this was the intention of the Legislature, and is the fair and legitimate conclusion to be drawn from these two sections, (10 and 11) cannot admit of any question. How does the case then stand? The question is reduced to this: Can the widow's dower be subjected to the payment of the deceased husband's debts? Who will undertake to maintain the affirmative of this proposition! Of all rights, and of all estates known to the common law, the most sacred and inviolable was that of the widow to her dower. It could not be defeated by any act of the husband, whether in the nature of an alienation, or a charge without the assent of the wife freely and duly given. And hers was the only estate upon which, when derived from the King's debtor, the King could not distrain for his debt. It was also exempt from tolls and taxes. And it is said there are three things favored in law — life, liberty and dower; that dower is a legal, an equitable, and a moral right, favored by the law, and next to life and liberty held sacred. 4 Kent's Com. 50; Black. Com., book 2d, p. 138; Co. Lit., book 1, ch. 5, sec. 36; 1 Hil. on Real Prop. 127.

In Beard v. Knox, it is held in that case that the husband cannot dispose of more than one-half (his own) of the common property by devise, because "such a conveyance can only operate after his death; upon the very happening of which the law determines the estate, and the wife becomes seized of one-half of the property." This reason would apply just as well to a charge upon the common property, created by will, as to a conveyance of it; and just as clearly will apply to the creation of any lien upon it which can only attach after the husband's death; for the creditor at large has no lien upon the property during the life of the husband, and the lien of the administrator, for the payment of debts, cannot attach until after the death, as was said in Beckett v. Selover, 7 Cal. 215, and, of course, can only attach upon the property of the deceased, and not that of the widow, for upon the very happening of the death her estate becomes absolute, as we have before seen.

The statute has nowhere provided that the deceased husband's separate property shall first be applied to the payment of his debts before resort is had to the common property for that purpose.

The creditor has only the right which the law gives him, and that is, to have his demand satisfied out of the estate of the deceased, if there is sufficient for that purpose; and even then he must take the rank assigned him by the statute, and wait his turn to be paid: and if the whole fund is exhausted before it reaches him, he is without remedy, either against the administrators or the creditors previously paid; for the statute prefers certain classes of creditors of deceased persons, but not with respect to the community, or the community property. Wood's Digest, p. 415, art. 2334.

But it will be urged again, that the "community debts" are to be paid out of the community property." But the obvious reply is, the law does not say so. The law says, that the debts of the deceased are to be paid out of his property, and goes no further. And then again, there is no such thing as a "community debt" in this State. There is no such term known to our law. There is no such word in the Statute Book. There is none such in the Constitution, or in any decision of this Court. There is no such idea to be found in any part of our law; none such can be fastened upon it. It is clearly excluded by the terms of the statute, "subject to the payment of the debts of the deceased." See Laws of Texas on the same subject.

In the matter of the Estate of Tompkins.

---

Creditors at large have no rights as against the property. They must acquire some lien upon it, either statutory, or by contract, or by legal relation, before the happening of the contingency which divests the debtor of the estate, otherwise their recourse against the estate so divested is thereby lost to them forever.

Now this act is an innovation upon the common law—the prevailing law of the land at the time of its passage. It is therefore to be construed strictly, and no loose notions of right and property are to be lugged in with it under the name of incidents or consequences, which are not clearly provided for by the Act itself.

Respondent's counsel has cited the cases of Beckett v. Selover, 7 Cal. 238; Harwood v. Marye, 8 Cal. 580, and Gray v. Gray, April T. 1858, for the purpose, as is supposed, of showing that the lien and possession of the administrator for the payment of debts attaches upon the whole common property. But those cases affirm no such doctrine: no such point is raised in either of them. They go no further than to hold that the administrator is entitled to the possession of, and has a lien upon, the whole of the estate of the deceased for the payment of debts.

II. Is the "homestead" assets of the intestate to be administered by his personal representatives?

By the Act of April 21st, 1851, "to exempt the homestead, etc., from forced sale," etc., (Wood's Dig., p. 483) and the judicial construction which that Act has received, a peculiar estate has been created in the husband and wife in the premises, answering to the description of homestead. And it matters not whether the property was originally common property of husband and wife, or the separate property of the former; so soon as it acquired the character of "homestead" by the residents of the family upon it, the nature of the estate became changed, and it was turned into a sort of joint tenancy; (Taylor v.

---

In the matter of the Estate of Tompkins.

Hargous, 4 Cal. R. 273) so that it was no longer common property, but a joint estate. In the language of the case last cited, "it is turned into a sort of joint tenancy, as between husband and wife." Now, what sort of a joint tenancy was this? It was a sort of joint tenancy known to the common law; differing from it, it is true, in the manner of its creation, but in that only, and not in its nature, incidents or consequences. This peculiar sort of joint tenancy was created at common law, by the grant of an estate to husband and wife; and the consequence of it was, that neither the husband or the wife could dispose of any part of the estate without the assent of the other, so that neither could by his or her own act destroy the joint tenancy. And in this particular — its indestructibility by the act of either party — it differed from the most usual sort of joint tenancy, which would be destroyed by the act of either party, that is, by the alienation of that party's interest, so that the parties themselves could not possibly prevent or avoid the grand incident or consequence — the right of survivorship — except by a joint conveyance. Black. Com., book 12, ch. 2; Jackson v. Stevens, 16 J. R. 115; Doe ex dem. Depuyster v. Howland, 8 Cow. 283; Jackson v. McConnell, 19 Wend. 175; Faul v. Campbell, 7 Yerg. 319.

In some of these authorities it is said, that the husband and wife in such a case are not tenants in common, nor yet joint tenants, strictly speaking, since each is seized of the entirety, and holds per tout et not per my. Whatever name may be deemed most suitable for this peculiar estate, one thing is certain — the grand incident of joint tenancy — the right of survivorship attaches to it, so that upon the death of the husband, the wife succeeds to the whole estate by the right of survivorship. Taylor v. Hargous, 4 Cal. 268; Estate of Buchanan, deceased, 8 Cal., p. 509; Revalk v. Kraemer, 8 Cal. 72.

In all of these cases, the doctrine of the right of survivorship between husband and wife, as to the homestead, is affirmed. It follows, therefore, that upon the instant of intestate's decease the appellant, being the survivor, took the whole estate; and such being the conclusion, the homestead never was, in any sense, assets of the intestate's estates, however it may be held with respect to the common property. See Lies v. De Diblar, Post 327.

W. W. Theobalds for Respondents.

Does Mary M. Tompkins take one-half of deceased's estate in her own right, immediately upon his death, as his wife, or only after final settlement and accounting for the whole thereof, as administratrix? and does she take the homestead, also, as her own property, immediately after his death? or only jointly with and in trust for the minor heirs, and therefore accountable to them (though not to creditors) for the disposal, use and profits thereof?

Respondents hold her bound to account in both cases; in the first case, for the whole estate directly for the benefit of creditors, and remotely to the heirs; and in the second case, directly and only to the heirs, and for the following reasons:

1. Upon the death of the husband, one-half the common property rests immediately in the wife, and one-half in their children; but in each case "subject to the payment of the debts of the deceased," and to the possession of the administrator for that purpose; until which payment by the administrator, and a final settlement in the Probate Court, neither the wife nor the children can know the amount and subject matter of their respective shares.

The general rule of partnership settlements holds good here — the creditors must be paid before either partner can know how much or what is theirs, or claim their individual shares. Section 11 of Act concerning Husband and Wife, and secs. 194 and 216 of Act concerning Estates of Deceased Persons, declare it the duty of the administratrix to account for the whole of the property and profits of the estate. Beard v. Knox, 5 Cal., page 252, cited by appellant, does not impugn this view. Dower at common law was only a life estate of the wife in one-third of her husband's lands.

In California, by our liberal laws the joint seizin and ownership of husband and wife during coverture of all the common property, becomes the absolute seizin and ownership of the wife in her sole right, upon his death, of one-half thereof, but subject to the lien and prior possession of the administratrix, to pay the joint debts and settle the estate. Beckett v. Selover, 7 Cal. R., p. 238-9; Gray v. Gray et al., April Term, 1858; Harwood v. Mary et al., 2 Cal. 580.

In the matter of the Estate of Tompkins.

---

2. So far as creditors are concerned, there is no necessity for the administratrix to charge herself with the homestead and other property exempt from execution. It is exempted by law, and set apart by the Probate Court for the wife and children, expressly to free it from the claim of creditors. But here the question is between the administratrix and the minor heirs. As against them, her account rendered for final settlement of the estate should show the existing facts. She should not be allowed therein to claim as hers what belongs to them, but show what is hers in her own right, and what she holds only in trust for them, i. e., what is theirs, and thus prepare the way for a just and legal partition and distribution of all the estate.

Section 10 of the Homestead Act says: "The homestead and other property" of the deceased husband, "exempt from forced sale, shall be set apart for the benefit of the surviving wife and his own legitimate children." Sec. 124 of the Act concerning Estates of Deceased Persons, designates what is the exempt property to be "set apart for the use of the widow or minor children," or for both; and not "subject to administration," so far as creditors are concerned. The homestead (not to exceed five thousand dollars in value) is included in the enumeration; and sec. 125 of the same Act shows to whom this exempt property belongs.

In the case of Taylor v. Hargous, 4 Cal., p. 268, the Court says: "The homestead is a sort of joint tenancy, with the right of survivorship, at least, as between husband and wife." True, it is so as between them; but the very end and object of this joint tenancy in them, and of this survivorship in one of them, is the protection of the property embraced by it against all others for the benefit of the family and children, not against them or either of them.

In Revalk v. Kraemer, 8 Cal. R., p. 72 — 74, the Court says: "The leading idea of the Constitution and statute is, the protection of the family." The protection is given to the capacity, "as head of a family." The homestead is directed to be set apart for her and the children. Could she alone sell or incumber it? If it is hers, in her own right, of course she can both sell and incumber it. But if she owns only an undivided interest, and holds the whole jointly with and for others, until division of interest—meanwhile, however, controlling, managing and taking the benefits of the whole — then clearly she is responsible and accountable for the whole, proceeds and rents included; and this should all be made to appear in her final account, in order that after all the debts and expenses of the estate and of administration are paid, and the rights and claims turned into assets in possession, the heirs may all obtain their respective shares in all the remaining property, real and personal, of whatever class or kind, homestead and exempt property as well as common property.

TERRY, C. J., delivered the opinion of the Court — BALDWIN, J., concurring.

The questions presented are, 1st. Whether the whole of the common property is assets of the deceased husband to be administered by his personal representative?

2d. Whether the homestead constitutes a portion of such assets?

By our statute, the entire common property is subject to the absolute disposition and control of the husband during coverture, and is liable to execution for his debts. It is also provided, that "upon the dissolution of the community by the death of either husband or wife, one-half of the common property shall go to the survivor and the other half to the descendants of the deceased husband or wife, subject to the payment of the debts of the deceased."

Appellant contends that by a proper construction of this section only that portion of the common property which descends to the heirs of deceased is subject to the payment of the debts of the intestate.

This position is not tenable. During the lifetime of the parties the whole of the common property is subject to the debts of the husband, and the Legislature will not be presumed to have intended that the death of the party should deprive his creditors of recourse against one-half of the common property, unless such a construction is required by the obvious meaning of the language employed.

We are satisfied, however, that no such intention can be legitimately gathered from the language of the section; on the contrary, it sufficiently appears that the Legislature intended that the whole common property should be subjected to the payment of the debts of deceased. Whatever ambiguity there may be in the language of that part of the section quoted in appellant's brief, is explained, and the meaning of the section made clear by the remaining portion, which he seems to have overlooked: "If there be no descendants of the deceased husband or wife, the whole shall go to the survivor subject to such payment."

Davis v. Caldwell.

---

On the second point, we are satisfied that the homestead is not assets in the hands of the administrator.

Under the decisions of this Court, the homestead estate is a sort of joint tenancy, with the right of survivorship as between husband and wife, and cannot be destroyed except by the concurrence of both in the manner prescribed by law. Taylor v. Hargous, 4 Cal. 268.

Upon the death of the head of the family it is made the duty of the Probate Court to set apart the homestead, for the benefit of the wife and legitimate children of the deceased. After this is done the Court has no further control over it.

Whether the appellant succeeded to the homestead in her own right, or in trust for the children of deceased, is a question which does not arise in this proceeding, inasmuch as the jurisdiction of the Probate Court does not extend to such questions.

The judgment, so far as it requires appellant to charge herself with the homestead, and its rents and profits, is reversed, and in other respects it is affirmed.

APPEAL from the County Court of San Mateo County.

This was an action of assumpsit to recover the amount due on two several promissory notes, and a balance due on an account for goods, wares and merchandise sold by plaintiffs to defendants.

The defendant, Caldwell, denied the indebtedness, and plead an account against the plaintiffs as a set-off. The cause was tried in the Court below without a jury. The Court found, as a matter of fact, that defendants did owe the full amount of plaintiffs' account, and that defendants were entitled to offset the same by the account set up in their answer, which, at the time of commencing suit, was due from plaintiffs to defendants. The facts upon which the conclusions of the Court are based are not found. Defendants had judgment, and the plaintiffs appealed to this Court.

Conner v. Hutchinson.

This was an action upon a promissory note of the defendant. The answer set up, as an offset, a claim for services rendered and moneys expended on behalf of the plaintiff. It appears, from the evidence, that the parties and several other persons were tenants in common of a large tract of land situated in Yolo county, claiming title under an alleged Mexican grant, and that in March, 1856, the claimants entered into an agreement for the partition of the premises, and the prosecution of proceedings for a confirmation of the grant in the United States Courts, and, to carry into effect its provisions, appointed the defendant and Jerome Davis agents, stipulating that the expenses attendant upon the execution of the agreement should be borne by the claimants, in proportion to the interest which each possessed in the property. Under this agreement, valuable services were rendered, and large expenditures incurred by the defendant; and the offset set up by him arises out of his claim against the plaintiff, as one of the claimants to the land and parties to the agreement. Proof of this claim was excluded by the District Court. The ground of the exclusion is not stated in the record; but, from the argument of counsel, it appears to have been based upon the impression that the claim presented was necessarily joint in its character, to be asserted by both the agents, and not available for either individually. Assuming this to have been the case, and no other ground is alleged, we think the Court below erred, so far, at least, as the claim arises from the expenditure of moneys. Whether a charge for the services rendered can be maintained under the agreement, it is unnecessary to determine. The expenditures were individual in their character, and required no joint action. The agents were not partners, and they possessed no common fund to meet their outlays. Their relation to the claimants was not unlike that of two lawyers, of different firms, employed to attend to the common interest of the claimants, and acting in concert with each other, but entitled, separately, to charge for their services and expenditures. The question is not whether either agent could, without the other, make any valid contracts for the claimants, but whether, for individual expenses incurred in the execution of the objects of the agency, an individual charge can be made. Upon this we have no doubt; and our conclusion in this respect leads to a reversal of the judgment. (See Bunn v.

CLOUD v. EL DORADO COUNTY.

Where a judgment was rendered by confession in open Court upon an allegation of indebtedness and appearance of the parties, whatever errors intervened, they cannot, at the instance of one, not a party to the judgment, be invoked to set aside or show the judgment a nullity.

Where a Court has jurisdiction both of the parties and the subject matter, the manner of exercising that jurisdiction cannot make void the action of the Court.

The title of a purchaser of real estate, at Sheriff's sale, does not depend upon the return of the officer to the writ. The purchaser has no control over the conduct of the officer in this respect.

The purchaser rests for title upon the judgment, execution, levy, sale and deed; and he need show no more to entitle him to whatever rights the defendant in execution had in the property sold.

Where a Sheriff's deed is executed by a Deputy, in the name of the Sheriff, whose term of office had expired at the time of the execution of the deed, the authority of the Deputy must be shown to authorize such deed to be read in evidence in an action of ejectment.

APPEAL from the Eleventh District, County of El Dorado.

The facts, as disclosed by the opinion of the Court, are as follows:

This was an ejectment for a lot in the town of Coloma. The facts are, that L. W. Hastings and Peter Wimmer, on the sixth of July, 1850, confessed judgment in the District Court for Sacramento county for more than $9,000. The judgment was rendered in open Court. On the twenty-ninth of August, 1850, an execution of fi. fa. issued, directed to the Sheriff of El Dorado county, returnable in forty-two days from date; which writ came to the hands of the Sheriff on the thirty-first of August, 1850, on which he indorsed the following return.

Cloud v. El Dorado County.

viz.: "31st August, 1850, levied on Wimmer's house, advertised to be sold, October 7th, 1850; also the log house occupied by Mrs. Brown, on the Hangtown road. W. Rogers, Sheriff, by L. H. McKenney, Dept.; came to hand on the 19th day of September, 1850; on the 20th day of September I levied the within described property, the new house situated in the town of Coloma, on Main street, opposite the dwelling that Peter L. Wimmer lives in, to be sold on the 14th day of October, 1850. The within sale postponed until the 24th day of October, 1850. Wm. Rogers, Sheriff, by A. J. Moore, Dept." It does not appear by the evidence where Wimmer resided at the time of the levy, or had his dwelling house. A Sheriff's deed, dated on the twenty-fourth day of October, 1850, purporting to be executed by Wm. Rogers, by Samuel Todd, Dept., was offered, but the signature not being proven, and the acknowledgment being defective, the same was ruled out. The plaintiff offered and read in evidence a deed in confirmation, dated the sixteenth day of May, A. D. 1857, executed by Wm. Rogers, late Sheriff of El Dorado county, by Samuel Todd, his Deputy, which, after referring to the judgment, execution, etc., in the case of Henley et al. v. Wimmer et al. contains the following recital, viz.: "I, the said Sheriff, did, by virtue of and in obedience to said execution, levy upon, take and seize all the estate, right, title and interest of the said Wimmer of, in and to the lands, tenements, real estate and premises hereinafter particularly described and set forth, together with the appurtenances." The deed then sets out and particularly describes the premises in dispute, and conveys the same to the plaintiff hereto as the purchaser at the sale.

In 1849 Wimmer was in possession of the lot in the deed mentioned, and so continued until the early part of the year 1850, and during this period erected thereon a frame building. One S. S. Brooks was next in part possession of said house until about the month of July, 1851, at which time the County of El Dorado took possession of said building, to be used as a Court House and for County Offices, and has since occupied the same for said purposes until April, 1857; the rents of the building during the occupancy of the county are found.

The cause was tried without a jury, and judgment rendered for the defendant, from which plaintiff appealed to this Court.

Cloud v. El Dorado County.

Sanderson & Hewes for Appellant.

As the property was Wimmer's at the time of our purchase, we will consider the judicial proceedings against him to ascertain whether we have acquired Wimmer's title.

1st. The judgment against him was one by confession rendered in strict compliance with the Practice Act of 1850; the Act which was in force at the time, and which continued in force long after our purchase of the property. Stat. of 1850, page 454, sec. 293. No irregularities in those proceedings are pointed out by defendant, nor are there any apparent from the record. But if there were irregularities, they could not prejudice this plaintiff. Smith v. Randall, 6 Cal. 47; Lowe v. Adams, 6 Cal. 277; 4 Wend. 462, 474 and 585; Allen v. Portland Stage Co., 8 Maine, 166; Jackson ex dem. Saunders v. Cauldwell, 1 Cowen, 622; Cox v. Nelson, 1 Monroe, 94; Webber et al v. Cox, 6 Monroe, 111; Parker v. Anderson, 5 Monroe, 453; Richards v. McMillen, 6 Cal. 419; Welch v. Sullivan, 8 Cal. 165.

2d. The execution. It is not insisted that this writ is in any respect defective.

3d. The return. We contend that no return of levy whatever was necessary to give validity to our purchase.

The Act of 1850, sec. 8, is as follows: "The Sheriff shall return every execution at the time therein directed, endorsing on it a certificate of his acts done under authority of the writ."

The present Act has no such or similar provision; if it had, there might be a question as to whether it would be necessary in cases of this kind for the plaintiff to show in evidence a return. The law in force at the time of the trial must govern the introduction of evidence; and if there be no law requiring the Sheriff to certify his acts upon the execution, it is unnecessary to show one.

But even under the law of 1850 this was not necessary. The statute is directory, and a failure of a ministerial officer to make a return cannot defeat the title of the purchaser, especially where he is not a party to the judgment. This has been decided in several States where the law required the Sheriff to make a return. Jackson ex dem. Ten Eyck v. Walker et al., 4 Wend. 462.

Cloud v. El Dorado County.

---

"The purchasers depend upon the judgment, the levy, and the deeds; all other questions are between the parties to the judgment and the Marshal. Whether the Marshal sell before or after the return, whether he makes a correct return, or any return at all, to the writ, is immaterial to the purchaser, provided the writ was duly issued and the levy made before the return." Wheaton v. Sexton, 4 Wheat. Rep. 503, 506; Lessee of State v. Macalister, 9 Ohio, 19; Gwynne on Sheriffs, p. 336. In Tennessee, it is held that the purchaser's title cannot be made to depend upon the officer's return. Mitchell v. Lipse, 8 George, 179. The return, however, may be used as a link in claim of title. Nichol v. Ridley, 5 Yerg. 65; Smith v. Randall, 6 Cal. 47.

In Massachusetts, Connecticut and Maine, decisions can be found that the officer's return must be shown, and cannot be aided or changed by parol.

But it will also be found, that in all those cases the purchasers derived title under a Statute extent, or elegit, or title of record.

When the rule prevails that everything essential to the title must appear on record. Metcalf v. Gillett, 5 Conn. 400; Sullivan v. McKean, 1 New Hamp. 372; Ladd v. Blunt, 4 Mass. 402; Emerson v. Powle, 5 Maine, 197.

At common law, the officer need make no return on final process. Cheasley v. Barnes, 10 East, 291; Beals v. Guernsey, 8 John. 52. Our present statute does not change this rule, for it does not require any return upon final process. The Act of 1850 is merely directory, and the omission of the officer to endorse his acts upon the execution cannot, as we have before endeavored to show, prejudice the purchaser.

The only objection to the deed of May 16th, 1857, seems to be, that it was executed long after the officer went out of office.

The doctrine is too well settled to be now controverted, that an officer may, after the expiration of his term of office, do any act necessary to complete his duty in regard to his unfinished official business. Adams v. Robinson, 1 Pick. 461; Welsh v. Joy, 13 Pick. 477; Wells v. Battelle, 11 Mass. 476; Thatcher v. Miller, 11 Mass. 413; Jackson v. Collins, 3 Cowen, 89; People v. Baker, 20 Wend. 602; Tuttle v. Jackson, 6 Wend. 224.

Cloud v. El Dorado County.

A Deputy may execute a deed for property sold under execution. 3 Cal. 266; 10 John. 223; 18 John. 7.

Section 209, p. 447 of the Act of 1850, does not conflict with this rule. That section has reference merely to the executions in the Sheriff's office unreturned, and not to the execution of deeds in cases where the whole business of the execution has been accomplished.

William H. Brumfield for Respondent.

1st. The transcript in Hastings et al. v. Wimmer et al. This shows that a judgment by confession was rendered in that case on the sixth day of July, 1850, and upon this judgment the execution upon which the sale was had was issued.

At this time we had no statute on the subject of confession of judgments; no suit was pending before the Court who rendered the judgment, nor was any proceeding pending or instituted according to any mode known to our statute. Statute of 1850, 428, secs. 1 and 22; Hoover v. Hanna, 3 Blackford, 48; Dewhurst v. Coulthard, 3 Dall. 409.

2d. The second or confirmatory deed. This deed is dated in May, 1857. If its contents were admissible in evidence, it could have no effect as a deed, for the Deputy executing it had no power to do so at the time he did — after the expiration of the term of office of his principal. The power of completing the execution of the writ is given to the successor of the Sheriff. Statutes of 1850, 447, sec. 209. And if the principal had no power to act in such case after the expiration of his term, the deputy had none, of course. But it may be said that this statute does not change the common law, and notwithstanding the successor may complete the service of the fi fa., still this statute does not prevent the old Sheriff or his Deputies from doing whatever is yet undone under it at the time of the change of officers, provided the proceeding had been commenced before the change. Neither the deeds or the return show that the statute had been complied with. Welch v. Joy, 13 Pick. 477.

Jackson, &c., 3 Wendell, 213—224; Elkin et al. v. The People, 3 Scam. 208, 551; Jackson v. Collins, 3 Cowen, 89.

This whole proceeding has been against one principle established by the authorities — that the officer who begins the execution of the writ must do all that is to be done under it.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — FIELD, J., concurring.

Upon the statement in this case several questions arise:

1. It is argued that the judgment confessed by Wimmer et al. in the suit of Henley & Co. against him and others is void. We think not. The judgment having been rendered in open Court upon an allegation of indebtedness, and an appearance by the parties, whatever errors intervened, they cannot, at the instance of any one not a party to the judgment, be invoked to set aside or show the judgment a nullity. The Court had jurisdiction both of the parties and the subject matter, and no manner of exercising that jurisdiction makes void the action of the Court. We are not satisfied that under the statute of 1850 (p. 454, sec. 293) there was any substantial error in the proceedings connected with and including the judgment confessed; but it is wholly immaterial whether there were or not, or how many, or how gross, the jurisdiction having attached, the judgment could not be collaterally attacked by a stranger. Smith v. Randall, 6 Cal. 47; Lowe v. Adams, 6 Cal. 277, in this Court; Saunders v. Caldwell, 1 Cowen, 622.

2. The next objection by the defendant below is, that there was no return by the Sheriff on this execution of his proceedings under it after the levy. But it has been often held that this is not indispensable. While it is undoubtedly the duty of the Sheriff to make this return, and while it is important as evidence of a permanent and authentic character that he should do so, the title of the purchaser does not depend upon his performance of this duty. The purchaser has no control over the conduct of the officer in this respect; nor is it just or reasonable that he should be responsible for the remissness or negligence of the Sheriff in the discharge of such an office. The purchaser rests for title upon the judgment, execution, levy, sale and deed; and he need show no more to entitle him to whatever rights the defendant in execution had in the property sold. The authorities are uniform, we believe, on this subject. See Ten Eyck v. Walker, 4 Wend. 462, and cases.

 Sacramento v. Stage Company.

---

3. One point taken, however, is fatal to the plaintiff's recovery. The deed purporting to be executed in 1857, long after the expiration of the Sheriff's term of office, is signed and acknowledged by one Todd, as Deputy of the Sheriff Rogers. But it nowhere appears that he had any authority to execute the deed in the name of the Sheriff, or that he was ever the Deputy of the Sheriff, or ever had anything to do with the levy or sale. No authority is adduced to show that a man, merely by his own act, professing to be the Deputy Sheriff of another — that other out of office — can, by signing and acknowledging a deed in the name of the old Sheriff, give effect to such deed as a conveyance of land sold, or pretended to be sold, under execution, during his principal's term. There is no evidence, except this deed, that this land ever was sold under execution; and the proceedings, so far as they go, seem to have been conducted by a different Deputy from Todd. If the old Sheriff could, under these circumstances, have given a deed which would have been prima facie evidence of the facts it recited — a point we do not decide — certainly a person professing merely to be or to have once been his Deputy, has no such power under the facts disclosed in the record. If Todd had any authority, either by virtue of his office, or otherwise, to execute a deed in the name of Rogers, the authority ought to have been produced.

Judgment is affirmed.

 CITY OF SACRAMENTO v. THE CALIFORNIA STAGE COMPANY.

A Stage Company engaged in carrying passengers to and from Sacramento City, is liable to pay to the city a license tax under the provisions of Section 22 of "An Ordinance authorizing and regulating the issue of Licenses and the collection of a License Tax."

The mere fact that the business of carrying the passengers is not within the municipal limits, does not make the receiving and discharging of them and for contracting them less a business in the city.

Sacramento v. Stage Company.

---

APPEAL from the County Court of Sacramento County.

This was an action for the recovery of a license tax claimed by the plaintiffs under the provisions of an ordinance of the city, which is as follows:

"SEC. 22. Every person, company, corporation or co-partnership firm engaged in the business of carrying passengers to and from the City of Sacramento, for hire, by means of stage or stages, coach or coaches, or other modes of land conveyance, shall pay for a license to do the same as follows."

Plaintiffs had judgment, and the defendants appealed. The other facts appear in the opinion of the Court.

Winans for Appellants.

I. Have plaintiffs the right to frame any ordinance whatever imposing a license tax on defendants for the transportation of passengers to and from Sacramento?

II. If they have such right could it be claimed or enforced under section 22 of the present License Ordinance, upon which section this suit is based?

1. Have plaintiffs the right to frame any ordinance whatever imposing this tax on defendants?

Decidedly not. Their charter only gives them the right "to fix and collect a license tax on all theatres or other places of amusement, trades, professions and business not prohibited by law, having regard to the amount of business done by such person or firm thus licensed."—Charter of Sacramento, sec. 7.

And this is the only provision in the charter in reference to the city's right to impose a license tax of any kind on any pursuit whatever. Does this provision in the charter give plaintiffs the authority in question? It will be admitted that all rights conferred by a charter are to be construed strictly, and not to be extended by implication. Now this provision authorizes the imposition of a tax upon "business," (which is the only term used therein under which the pursuit in question, viz., carrying passengers for hire, could be embraced), "having regard to the amount of business done by such person or firm thus licensed." This plainly refers to business carried on within the city limits, the amount of which could therefore be ascertained. But how could any amount of business be ascertained in defendants' case? They carry passengers to and from the city, and the whole journey to and from the termini is a unit. The journey from Sacramento to Nevada is a unit. The journey from Marysville to Sacramento is a unit. A public corporation has no jurisdiction whatever beyond its municipal limits. Waterhouse v. Dorr, 4 Greenleaf, 333; Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Hartford, 3 Conn. 15; Richards v. Daggett, 4 Mass. 557.

Sacramento v. Stage Company.

As the right to tax is restricted to the city limits, there is a palpable want of jurisdiction in the present case. The calling of defendants is not exercised within the city limits. They do not even receive any hire for bringing passengers within the city or taking them out of it. As far as defendants are concerned the city is a point.

As to the second point.—It will be observed that the License Tax is for carrying passengers to or from Sacramento, not for selling tickets in that city.

Now these words "to" or "from" either signify "to or from," or else "into or out of." Plaintiffs' counsel contends that the proper interpretation of the word "to" is "into," and of the word "from" is "out of." But plaintiffs themselves did not so construe the meaning of those words, for by reference to their printed ordinances it will appear that shortly after the commencement of this suit, and after the defense therein had been divulged, they amended the section under review by substituting for the words "to" and "from," the words "into" and "out of."

But either construction of the words "to and from," as used in the section of the ordinance now under examination, whether you take that of the defendants or that contended for by plaintiffs' counsel, (which, to say the least of it, is very far fetched and forced) would be equally fatal to plaintiffs' right to recover in this case.

George R. Moore for Respondents.

There is legitimately but one question for discussion in this case. The controversy, by the pleadings, is narrowed down to one single point. The complaint charges that defendants are members of and compose a certain corporation known as the California Stage Company. That said Company have an office in the City of Sacramento, where they carry on and transact their business, and that they are constantly engaged in the business of carrying passengers, for hire, to and from said city, and that under and by virtue of the ordinance referred to they are liable for the license tax charged by plaintiffs. All these facts defendants admit to be true.

---

Sacramento v. Stage Company.

---

Here it will be seen, defendants admit that a part of their business (to wit, carrying passengers by means of stages to and from said city) is transacted and carried on within the limits and territorial jurisdiction of the city. No one will for a moment contend that the city has a right to tax the defendants for that portion of the business transacted outside of her jurisdiction; nor do we believe that any one can entertain a serious doubt that the city has the right and power to tax the Stage Company upon that portion of their business transacted here. We do not believe there is a wholesale house in Sacramento that does not transact a large portion of their business outside of the city. Many of them have branch stores in the mountains, which they supply from their stores here. Yet they pay a license tax upon all their business without a question as to the right of the Council to levy the same. Defendants' business is co-extensive with the limits of the State; they are not confined to any particular place, and therefore pay no taxes anywhere.

But, says appellants' counsel, the ordinance says "to and from the city." That certainly cannot mean to within and from within; it cannot reach beyond the outside limits, and therefore the City Council has no jurisdiction. But this attempt to torture language and pervert obvious meaning cannot for a moment be countenanced by this Court.

"Statutes should not in any case be so strictly construed as to defeat the obvious intention of the Legislature." Randolph v. The State, 9 Texas, 521.

"When the literal interpretation of a statute would lead to a gross absurdity of restriction, the Court will extend its operation to cases within the same equity, though at the expense of forcing the construction of the words." Henry v. Tilson, 17 Vermont, 478.

Sacramento v. Stage Company.

---

Here the meaning and intention of the Common Council cannot be misunderstood. The license tax is levied upon business transacted within the city limits. She has that right as a power, a sovereignty.

Defendants have their office in Sacramento; they sell their tickets and transact their business here. They are protected by our laws, and receive all the privileges and benefits of other citizens, and are morally and legally bound to contribute their just proportion for the support of government.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court—TERRY, C. J., concurring.

Under a provision of the City Charter, the authorities have power "to levy and collect a license tax on theatres, and on trades, professions and business," etc. Under this section of the Charter, they imposed the tax on the defendants, who are a Company whose office and place of business is in the city, but whose business is the carriage of passengers from and to the city. The question is made whether, inasmuch as the larger portion of this work of transportation is done without the territorial limits of the city, the authorities have a right to levy this tax upon them; and, on this question, we have no doubt. The Company receive and discharge their passengers, and make contracts here for their conveyance, and they have their offices and property here, within the protection of the municipal laws. The mere fact that the business of carrying the passengers is not within the municipal limits, does not make the receiving and discharging of them and for contracting for them less a business here.

If this business is not a business in Sacramento, it is difficult to say where it is. The Company have as much need of the protection of the laws of the corporation, and are as much interested in the police expenditures, especially for streets, roads, etc., as any other persons, and we think are within the words and spirit of the taxing power.

Judgment is affirmed.

Mudgett v. Day.

MUDGETT v. DAY.

An agent for the collection of a note is confined to the taking of money in payment, and has no power, unless special authority is given, to take goods in payment.

The maker of the note having knowledge of the agency, is bound to inquire into the extent of the powers of such agent.

APPEAL from the Sixth District, County of Sacramento.

This was an action upon a promissory note made by the defendant and payable to the plaintiff or bearer. The note was dated on the twenty-first of September, 1857, and by its terms was to become due on the first day of January, 1858. The suit was commenced on the first of February following.

The defense set up was, that one Charles D. Humphries was the owner and holder of the note, and that he had agreed with defendant, prior to the maturity of the note, for a valuable consideration, to extend the time for the payment of the same, which extended time had not expired when the suit was commenced, and also that defendant had an offset to the note as against Humphries.

The other facts sufficiently appear in the opinion of the Court.

Smith & Hardy for Appellant.

Latham & Sunderland for Respondent.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — FIELD, J., concurring.

Day made his note to Mudgett or bearer, for $278. It seems that the plaintiff put this note in the possession of one Humphries, and before it was due, as his agent, Humphries made an agreement, in his own name, with Day, for 1,272 pounds of barley, "to be credited on Mudgett's note in Humphries' hands." It appears that Day afterwards had express notice of the character in which Humphries acted; that he requested Humphries to extend the time of payment, which Humphries told him he had no authority to do. The inference from

Pico v. Webster.

---

this is, that he considered the contract with Humphries not obligatory on Mudgett.

Judgment was given for the plaintiff; and rightly. Day having been apprised that Humphries only held the note for collection, and as the agent of Mudgett, as is clearly indicated by the agreement, was bound to inquire into the extent of his agency. He was bound to ascertain whether he had any right to make such an agreement as that set up in defense. There was no proof that he had. An agent for the collection of a note is confined to the taking of money in payment, and has no power to make executory contracts of this sort unless special authority be given, of which there is no proof.

Judgment affirmed.

PICO v. WEBSTER.

An action brought by an agent, in his own name, for a trespass, in taking and converting coin from the possession of the agent, in which action the jury found that the coin belonged to the principal, and gave only nominal damages, is no bar to an action by the principal for such coin.

APPEAL from the Fifth District, County of San Joaquin.

A statement of facts appears in the opinion of the Court.

Hall & Huggins for Appellant.

Bridges & Hall for Respondent.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court—FIELD, J., concurring.

This action was for the forcible taking and conversion of an amount of gold coin, the property of plaintiff, and taken from his possession by the defendant. The defendant answered, denying generally the allegations of the complaint, and setting up for further answer, that one Brodie had before sued and recovered judgment for one dollar on the same identical cause of action; that Brodie was the agent of Pico; that suit was brought at the instance of Pico and for his benefit; that the jury in this case of Brodie, found, among other things, that the money sued for was taken by Webster from the possession of Brodie; that the money was the money of Pico, and that Pico was a delinquent tax-payer of San Joaquin county, and that, by this taking, the plaintiff, Brodie, sustained damages to the amount of one dollar, for which judgment was rendered. The answer avers that the gold coin was, in truth, and in fact, the property of the plaintiff (Pico) at the time it was seized by defendant, and was in the custody of Brodie, his agent, and the judgment inured to his (Pico's) benefit and use.

Pico v. Webster.

The testimony was brief: Brodie was examined as a witness, and he swore that he believed that the money taken from Webster was his own; that he was the agent and attorney, in fact, of Pico, and this money was a part of the proceeds of sale of Pico's land, and he claimed the money by virtue of some arrangement with Pico; that since the trial of the suit brought by himself, he did not believe that he was the owner of the money; that the first suit was brought by him for the money as his own property, and for his own benefit, and not on Pico's account or for his use.

The plaintiff introduced the record of recovery in the case of Brodie against Webster, showing the facts before recited. The record showed that the jury found that the money was the property of Pico. There is no pretense that Webster had any authority to seize the money, but the seizure seems to have been a naked trespass.

The fact that Brodie was the agent of Pico, and that the money came from the sale of Pico's land, even against the assertion of Brodie that he believed when he brought his suit that he was the owner of the money, was evidence to go to the jury as to the right, even if the record introduced by the defendant himself to support his own averment in his answer, that Pico was the owner, was no evidence of Pico's ownership. The defendant contends it was no evidence, because the general denial in the answer put in issue all the allegations of the complaint—this of the ownership among others—and that the special defense, already set out, averring Pico's ownership, is no admission of any of the facts therein stated. It is not necessary to controvert this position; for, if it be true, it can scarcely be maintained that the evidence introduced by the defendant himself of the facts in this special defense does not tend to prove the facts which that evidence asserts — at least as against the party offering the evidence. We think there was evidence which the jury might consider of the fact of the ownership of Pico.

McConnell v. McCormick.

There was no evidence — certainly no conclusive proof — that the suit of Brodie was brought at the instance or for the use of Pico. The failure of Brodie's suit, therefore, especially on the ground that the money belonged to Pico, was no bar to the action of Pico. It would present a strange anomaly if a suit were brought by one and defeated on the ground that the property belonged to another, and then the other sued, if the last suit were defeated on the ground that the first concluded the last plaintiff.

There was no error to the prejudice of the appellant in the instructions, and the Court did not err in refusing a new trial.

Judgment affirmed.

McCONNELL v. McCORMICK.

Where the principal of a line of stages, by letter to one acting as his agent in such business, wrote, "You will do better by getting new drivers, and agents, and horses," and such agent employed a sub-agent, and subsequently the principal was informed of such employment and made no objection; in an action for the wages of the sub-agent, Held: That the facts were sufficient to authorize the jury to find the fact of authority in the agent to employ the plaintiff.

APPEAL from the Sixth District, County of Sacramento.

The facts appear in the opinion of the Court.

L. Sanders, Jr., for Appellant.

Henry H. Hartley for Respondent.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — FIELD, J., concurring.

---

Cordier v. Schloss & Heilbronner.

---

This was an action for the recovery of a sum of money alleged to be due for wages. The plaintiff below claims that one Grim was authorized by the defendant to employ him in the stage business, and even if he was not, that the defendant ratified the contract. The question is one of fact on which the jury passed. The defendant appeals from the overruling of her motion for a new trial, and her counsel contends that there was no evidence to support the verdict.

We think there was enough in the testimony of Kauffman and Grim, and in the letters of the defendant herself, to Grim, to be left to the jury for them to find the fact of authority in Grim to employ the plaintiff. In one of the letters she says: "You will do better by getting new drivers, and agents, and horses." It seems, after her return from the Atlantic States, she was informed of the acts of Grim, and made no objection at the time. The nature of the business, too, would seem to require some general powers in the agent having the control and direction of it.

We see no objection to the instructions given, which announce general rules as to agency, which were not erroneous in the relation in which they stand to the proofs.

The judgment is affirmed.

APPEAL from the Fourth District, County of San Francisco.

This action in the Court below was Ernest Cordier v. M. Schloss, Joseph Heilbronner, Joseph S. Kohn, Morris Kohn and David Scannell.

At the date of the transactions in the case, the defendants, M. Schloss and Joseph Heilbronner (who are the only appellants), were merchants in New York, residing there and doing business under the name of Schloss & Heilbronner. The other defendants, Joseph S. Kohn and Morris Kohn, were dealers in San Francisco or Sacramento, under the name of Joseph S. Kohn & Brother, and insolvent. The remaining defendant, David Scannell, was Sheriff of the County of San Francisco.

Cordier v. Schloss & Heilbronner.

On February 18th, 1857, a judgment by confession for $2,616, with $13.75 costs, in favor of the defendants, Schloss & Heilbronner, against the defendants, Joseph S. and Morris Kohn, was entered up in the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District.

The statement on which the judgment was entered is as follows:

STATEMENT.

“SCHLOSS &amp; HEILBRONNER,  Consisting of  M. SCHLOSS &amp; JOSEPH HEILBRONNER,      JOSEPH S. KOHN,  MORRIS KOHN,  Partners under the firm name of  KOHN &amp; BROTHER.	}
--	---

“The defendants state and admit that they are justly indebted to the plaintiffs in the sum of two thousand and four hundred dollars, and interest thereon at the rate of one per cent. per month, from the fifteenth day of May, 1856, for which amount they consent that judgment may be entered against them by the Clerk of said District Court, in his office; and the facts out of which said indebtedness accrued, are as follows, to wit: That the plaintiffs are the owners of the following promissory note, made by said defendants, to wit:

““SACRAMENTO, May 15th, 1859.

““$2,400.

““Eight months after date we promise to pay to the order of ourselves, in the City of New York, two thousand and four hundred dollars, at the rate of one per cent. (1 pr. ct.) per month until paid, value received.

“(Signed) JOSEPH S. KOHN & BRO.’

“That the said note was given by the said defendants to the said plaintiffs for goods sold and delivered to the defendants by the firm of Schloss & Heilbronner, the plaintiffs aforesaid, and money had and received by defendants; that the consideration for said promissory note was said money and goods, sold by plaintiffs to, and received by them, the defendants aforesaid.

“That the sum above by us confessed, is justly due to the said plaintiffs, on the foregoing note, after allowing all just credits and offsets, without any fraud whatever, for which amount they do hereby authorize the Clerk of said Court to enter up judgment against them, the said defendants.”

Dated, SAN FRANCISCO,

the day of February, 1857.

City and County of San Francisco, ss:

“Joseph S. Kohn and Morris Kohn, the defendants aforesaid, each for himself, being sworn, says that the above statement of confession is true.

(Signed) JOSEPH S. KOHN, MORRIS KOHN.

Sworn to before me, this eighteenth day of February, A. D. 1857.

P. K. WOODSIDE,
Dep. Co. Clerk.”

Upon this judgment, execution was, on the same day, issued to the defendant. Scannell, under which he levied on all the property of the defendants Kohn, being the entire stock of dry goods in their store in San Francisco.

The next day, February 19th, 1857, the plaintiff in this action commenced suit in the same Court, against the defendants Kohn, for goods sold and delivered, and money lent and advanced, and issued an attachment for the amount to Scannell, Sheriff. In this latter action judgment was, in due course, recovered by the plaintiff for $1,795, with $74 costs.

Cordier v. Schloss & Heilbroner.

---

The goods in the hands of the Sheriff having been sold, produced about $2,400. This being insufficient to satisfy the execution of Schloss & Heilbroner, and the attachment of the plaintiff, the latter, on March 28th, 1857, commenced the present action (in equity) against all the defendants above named, to set aside the judgment by confession in favor of Schloss & Heilbroner, as fraudulent and void in law and in fact; to have the levy of their execution postponed to the levy of the plaintiff's attachment, and to have the proceeds of the sale in the Sheriff's hands subjected first to the plaintiff's attachment, and for general relief; also for a temporary injunction.

To the complaint, which was verified, separate demurrers were interposed by the defendants, Schloss & Heilbroner. The demurrers were overruled, and they answered separately, as did also the defendants Kohn. The case was tried before the Court without a jury, and the Court decreed that the judgment by confession, so far as it affects the lien and judgment of the plaintiff in this action, be set aside.

Schloss & Heilbroner appealed to this Court.

Many points were raised by the record and argued by counsel, which this Court declined to pass upon, deeming it sufficient to reverse the judgment of the Court below upon the authority of the case of Richards v. McMillan et al., 6 Cal. 419.

Shattuck, Spencer & Reichert for Appellants.

Eugene Casserly and Harmon & Labatt for Respondent.

TERRY, C. J., delivered the opinion of the Court—BALDWIN, J., concurring in a separate opinion.

This is a proceeding to set aside a confession of judgment made by Kohn & Co. in favor of Schloss & Heilbroner.

The allegations of fraud in the complaint are sufficiently controverted by the answer; and the evidence shows that the amount for which judgment was confessed was actually due Schloss & Heilbroner by Kohn & Co.

The case is entirely analogous to that of Richards v. McMillan et al.

---

Cordler v. Schloss & Helibroner.

---

(6 Cal. 418) and as we see no reason to question the correctness of that decision, the judgment of the Court below is reversed.

BALDWIN, J.—I agree with the Chief Justice in the conclusion at which he has arrived. After an attentive examination of the case, I think we are precluded by the case of Richards v. McMillan, from holding that the failure to state more specifically the cause of action in the affidavit avoids the judgment. The want of this more complete statement is, at most, only prima facie evidence of fraud. Indeed, if disposed at all to interfere with that case, I should feel disposed, notwithstanding the New York cases, to question whether a judgment so confessed was even prima facie fraudulent, mainly for the reason that the rule invoked, if such it can be called, requiring a fuller statement of the facts, wants the essential element of certainty. It is better to have a rule less correct than one better in the abstract, but more difficult of ascertainment and application. The question is not easy of answer, if the brief, general statement in this case is not sufficiently certain, what would be essential. How minute ought to be the statement of the transaction out of which the indebtedness confessed grows? Is it to be governed by the circumstances of each particular case? Then we should probably have litigation in each case to determine the sufficiency of the statement in that case. I cannot think the Legislature intended any more definiteness of particularity in case of confession of judgments than in complaints upon the same cause of action in the ordinary course of procedure. But as this is a question of practice, and many judgments have probably been taken under it, we consider it better to let the decision in the case of Richards v. McMillan stand.

The other points made in the learned and elaborate brief of the appellants' counsel, I think are not well taken. It is impossible in the pressure of business to consider at length the various questions raised. I think that the old rules of Chancery pleading are superseded by the Practice Act; that the material charges of fraud are all substantially denied in the answer. Those insufficiently stated, if admitted, are not sufficient to establish the fraud charged: that the deposition of the book-keeper of defendants having been taken on examination and

Stanley v. Green.

---

cross-examination, was properly admissible; at any rate we could not review the error, if any, in the Court in refusing to exclude it; and that the proof made by defendant, tended strongly to sustain the judgment and remove the presumption of fraud raised by the form and circumstances of the judgment.

As, however, the Court below decided the question, apart from any question of these proofs, on the first point, and thereby the plaintiff may have omitted to introduce testimony on the other points, on the next trial the parties may be allowed to try the case fully on the facts unaffected by this judgment.

The evidence of the circumstances under which a deed was executed is admissible beyond question. These circumstances place the Court in the position of the parties, and enable it to interpret intelligently the language used by them. It is not to contradict or vary the terms of the instrument that the evidence is received, but to apply them to the subject matter. For this purpose, extrinsic evidence must be admissible in the interpretation of every instrument; and the law will not declare the instrument void for uncertainty until it has been examined with all the light which cotemporaneous facts may furnish. If these render the intention clear, and the words of the instrument are, by fair rendering, susceptible of a construction to uphold such intention, then they will be so construed, and the instrument enforced.

The declarations of the grantor are admissible, not only as against himself but against parties claiming under him. The subsequent claimants are considered as standing in his place, and as having taken the title own owners, subject to the same changes and restrictions which attached to it in his hands. It matters not whether the declarations relate to the limits of the party's own premises, or the extent of his neighbor's, or to the boundary line between them, or to the nature of the title he asserts. If their purport is to restrict his own premises, or lessen his own title, they are admissible.

Where the declarations of the grantor controlled the conduct of the grantee in the purchase of land, the grantor, and those subsequently claiming under him, are estopped from the assertion of any interest in the land in opposition to the title of such grantee.

The assertion of quantity in a deed must yield to a description by metes and bounds, or by name or number.

In the description of the land conveyed by deed, designation of the tract by a particular name or number is sufficient; and if it can be rendered certain by

---

Stanley v. Green.

---

extrinsic evidence, this is as good a description as one by metes and bounds. It is undoubtedly essential to the validity of a conveyance, that the thing conveyed must be described so as to be capable of identification; but it is not essential that the conveyance should itself contain such a description as to enable the identification to be made without the aid of extrinsic evidence. No seal was requisite under the civil law. Any instrument which contained the names of the parties, a designation or description of the property sold, the date of the transfer, and the price paid, was sufficient to pass the title. Where a person purchasing land has actual notice of a former conveyance of the same land, he is not entitled to protection as a purchaser for value without notice; nor are his partners in the purchase, although they at the time knew nothing of such purchase. A party in taking a conveyance in the name of his associates, must be considered as having acted as their agent, and notice to him is equally notice to them.

APPEAL from the Seventh District, County of Napa.

This was an action of ejectment. The cause was tried by a jury, and verdict and judgment for the plaintiff. Defendants moved the Court for a new trial, which was denied, and they appealed to this Court.

A statement of facts sufficient to elucidate the points decided, appear in the opinion of the Court.

Crocker, McKune, Robinson and Curry for Appellants.

I. The description in the deed from Higuera to Fallon, under which plaintiff claims, is as follows:

"A certain quantity of land lying, being and situate in the district and territory above mentioned, (District of Sonoma, and Territory of Alta California) in the valley of Napa, containing more or less one mile square of land in the place known as the 'Rincon de los Cameros,' commencing in the wagon road and ending at the point of the hill at the east. To have, etc."

Under this description we contend —

1st. That in any event it does not convey more than "one mile square."

2d. That it is so uncertain and indefinite, that even that amount cannot be located with any certainty, and it was therefore void.

The most definite terms in the description are — "a certain quantity

---

Stanley v. Green.

---

of land " containing more or less "one mile square of land;" and, although as a general rule, quantity is not usually material in a description, yet where the boundaries are doubtful it becomes material, as it affords evidence of the intention. 4 Phil. Ev., C. & H. notes, 550; 3 Murphy, 539; 4 Devereux, 374; 2 Caine's, 146; 11 Illinois, 279; 2 Richardson (S. C.) Rep. 543; Cooke, 460.

Words indicating quantity yield when they conflict with words of more accurate description; otherwise they are part of the description, and are not qualified by the words more or less. Pierce v. Torrence, 37 Maine, 63. And words of quantity may be the most essential part of the description, as—seventy acres lying and being in the southwest corner of a certain section. The seventy acres will be laid off in a square. 2 Hammond, 327; Wright, 366. So a deed of "my acre lot," the grantor having an acre and a half acre lot. 4 Devereux, 370. So, in the present description, it was evidently the intention of the parties to sell and convey "one mile square of land in the Rincon de los Cameros;" and if it had been their intention to convey the whole Rincon, they would have expressed it in very different terms.

But respondent urges that these words respecting quantity should be rejected as false. If this is done, you reject the only portions which are in any way definite or certain.

But he insists that the words "more or less" show that it was not the intention to limit it to one mile.

We admit that the authorities sustain the following position: that where the description clearly conveys a certain tract of land by clear, well-defined boundaries, the whole tract will pass with or without the words "more or less;" subject, however, to be corrected by a Court of Equity in cases of fraud or mistake. But the decisions limit it to cases where the boundaries are certain and definite. Where the description is uncertain as to the boundaries, then quantity becomes material in ascertaining the intention, and the words "more or less" will not qualify it.

In the case of the United States v. Fossatt, 20 Howard, the words "more or less" were rejected as surplusage, for this reason: as one of the boundaries could only be located by taking the quantity specified as a guide

---

Stanley v. Green.

---

These words cannot be construed to enlarge the boundaries mentioned in the deed. 3 J. J. Marshall, 421.

For these reasons we insist that the claim of plaintiff must be limited to one mile square. But the description is so uncertain and indefinite that it is impossible to locate even one mile square with any reasonable certainty; and the paper, therefore, is entirely void for uncertainty.

It says, "commencing at the wagon road," but it fails to state at what point on the wagon road it is to commence. Plaintiff claims that this point is the "crossing of Cameros Creek;" but if such was the intention, it would have been easy to have so expressed it; and the fact that it was not stated is conclusive that such was not the intention.

This Court, in Mesick v. Sunderland, 6 Cal. Rep. 297, has laid down the rule upon this subject with clearness and precision. It says: "The thing granted cannot vest in parol, but must be shown with that distinctness of description that will enable it to be identified.

"The general rule upon this subject is, that every conveyance must, either on its face, or by words of reference, give to the subject intended to be conveyed such a description as to identify it; if land, it must be shown so as to afford the means of locating it. Neil v. Hughes, 10 Gill & Johns. 7." Again, it is said that "if the description in a deed be so imperfect that it cannot be understood what land is intended to be conveyed, the deed is void."

To the same effect are the following: 2 Parsons on Contracts, 72; 4 Bacon Abr. Grant (H), 521; 4 Comyn's Dig. Grant E, 14; 4 Kent, 452; Adams' Ej. 25 and notes.

In entries of public lands it is held, that they must be located so precisely that others may be able with certainty to locate other tracts upon the adjacent residuum, or they will be fatally defective. 1 Wheaton, 130; Ken. Dec. 66, 231; Hardin, 89, 261; 6 J. J. Marsh, 253; 1 A. K. Marsh. 605; 2 A. K. Marsh. 409; 3 A. K. Marsh. 195; 3 Littell, 438.

We give the following instances of defective descriptions:

1 Cowan, 285: The deed merely described various lines, but they did not close, and no land was actually included in the supposed boundaries.

An entry gave a base line sufficiently certain, and "then at right angles from the extremity of each line," was held invalid, because it

---

Stanley v. Green.

---

these are the essential requisites of a conveyance under our American law.

III. The admissions and declarations of Higuera are inadmissible.

In no case is a declaration by the grantor as to his intentions in using the words in the deed allowed to be received as evidence. 2 Phil. Ev. 282, 285, 300, 326, 332, 334; 4 Phil. Ev., C. and H. notes, 534.

Parol evidence, that at the time of making the deed the parties were on the land, and the grantor pointed out a place as the boundary, is inadmissible. Peasely v. Gee, 19 N. H. 273.

But it is urged that Higuera, and all claiming under him, are estopped by these alleged admissions. We admit that there are cases where a party and his privies are estopped by his admissions; but this is only where the subject matter of the admission is a subject of parol proof. But where the law requires the subject matter to be in writing, as in this case, then parol proof even of a solemn admission is not admissible.

Admissions to operate as an estoppel must be such as relate to matters which may be proved by parol, and do not apply to such as can only be proved by written evidence. Mason v. Clark, 3 Scammon, 532; 2 Scammon, 48 and 49; 3 Phil. Ev., C. and H. notes, 266.

There are cases, also, where parties have been in possession of adjoining tracts, and their acts and admissions respecting the location of the boundary lines between them, have been held to operate as an estoppel; but these cases do not apply here, because there never was any actual possession of any tract by Fallon under this paper, or any of those claiming under him.

This parol evidence of Fallon is clearly inadmissible, for all previous representations pending the negotiation for the purchase are merged in the conveyance. The instrument contains the final agreement of the parties; and by it, in the absence of fraud, their rights and liabilities are to be determined. Peabody v. Phelps, 9 Cal. 213.

IV. The paper to Fallon not being under seal conveyed only an equity, and the plaintiff counts upon a legal title. Clark v. Elvey, 11 Cal. 154; Dupont v. Wertheman, 10 Cal. 354.

V. Defendants had no notice of the paper to Fallon.

There are two kinds of notice: 1st. Actual; 2d. Constructive.

---

Stanley v. Green.

---

This Court has already held, in numerous cases, that the only kind of constructive notice permissible under our registry laws, is that arising from the recording of the conveyance under the statute. Call v. Hastings, 3 Cal. Rep. 179; 6 Cal. 297; Bird v. Dennison, 7 Cal. 297; Stafford v. Lick, 7 Cal. 479.

And that deeds made prior to the Registry Law must be recorded to give constructive notice. Call v. Hastings, 3 Cal. Rep. 179; Stafford v. Lick, 7 Cal. 479.

There is not the least evidence, or the least pretense, that Crocker & Robinson ever had the least intimation that Fallon ever had any deed.

Purchasers without notice will be protected as well at law as in equity. 1 Story Eq., secs. 165, 381, 434.

Purchase by one who had notice of one who had no notice, will be protected. 1 Story Eq., secs. 409, 410.

Implied or constructive notice of a prior deed must be, not merely a probable but a necessary inference from the facts proved. 3 Pick. 149.

Actual notice must be actual knowledge of the conveyance. 6 Cal. Rep. 670.

Fallon, or those claiming under him, never had possession; so the doctrine of constructive notice by possession does not apply.

In Massachusetts and Maine, it is held that actual notice of an unregistered deed is necessary, and that it is not sufficient to prove facts that would put the party upon inquiry. He is not bound to inquire; but it must be shown that he had actual notice or knowledge of such deed. Pomroy v. Steevens, 11 Metcalf, 244; Spafford v. Weston, 29 Maine, 140.

Notice of an unregistered conveyance is not binding unless given by a person interested in the property, and in the course of the treaty for the purchase. He will not be bound by notice in a previous transaction which he may have forgotten. Gray v. Woods, 4 Blackford, 432.

Even constructive notice of an unrecorded deed must be so clearly proved as to make it fraudulent in the purchaser to take and register a conveyance in prejudice to the known title of the other party. 1 Story Eq., sec. 393.

judgment was, in due course, recovered by the plaintiff for $1,795, with $74 costs.

The goods in the hands of the Sheriff having been sold, produced about $2,400. This being insufficient to satisfy the execution of Schloss & Heilbroner, and the attachment of the plaintiff, the latter, on March 28th, 1857, commenced the present action (in equity) against all the defendants above named, to set aside the judgment by confession in favor of Schloss & Heilbroner, as fraudulent and void in law and in fact; to have the levy of their execution postponed to the levy of the plaintiff's attachment, and to have the proceeds of the sale in the Sheriff's hands subjected first to the plaintiff's attachment, and for general relief; also for a temporary injunction.

To the complaint, which was verified, separate demurrers were interposed by the defendants, Schloss & Heilbroner. The demurrers were overruled, and they answered separately, as did also the defendants Kohn. The case was tried before the Court without a jury, and the Court decreed that the judgment by confession, so far as it affects the lien and judgment of the plaintiff in this action, be set aside.

Schloss & Heilbroner appealed to this Court.

Many points were raised by the record and argued by counsel, which this Court declined to pass upon, deeming it sufficient to reverse the judgment of the Court below upon the authority of the case of Richards v. McMillan et al., 6 Cal. 419.

Shattuck, Spencer & Reichert for Appellants.

Eugene Casserly and Harmon & Labatt for Respondent.

TERRY, C. J., delivered the opinion of the Court—BALDWIN, J., concurring in a separate opinion.

This is a proceeding to set aside a confession of judgment made by Kohn & Co. in favor of Schloss & Heilbroner.

The allegations of fraud in the complaint are sufficiently controverted by the answer; and the evidence shows that the amount for which judgment was confessed was actually due Schloss & Heilbroner by Kohn & Co.

The case is entirely analogous to that of Richards v. McMillan et al.

(6 Cal. 418) and as we see no reason to question the correctness of that decision, the judgment of the Court below is reversed.

BALDWIN, J.—I agree with the Chief Justice in the conclusion at which he has arrived. After an attentive examination of the case, I think we are precluded by the case of Richards v. McMillan, from holding that the failure to state more specifically the cause of action in the affidavit avoids the judgment. The want of this more complete statement is, at most, only prima facie evidence of fraud. Indeed, if disposed at all to interfere with that case, I should feel disposed, notwithstanding the New York cases, to question whether a judgment so confessed was even prima facie fraudulent, mainly for the reason that the rule invoked, if such it can be called, requiring a fuller statement of the facts, wants the essential element of certainty. It is better to have a rule less correct than one better in the abstract, but more difficult of ascertainment and application. The question is not easy of answer, if the brief, general statement in this case is not sufficiently certain, what would be essential. How minute ought to be the statement of the transaction out of which the indebtedness confessed grows? Is it to be governed by the circumstances of each particular case? Then we should probably have litigation in each case to determine the sufficiency of the statement in that case. I cannot think the Legislature intended any more definiteness of particularity in case of confession of judgments than in complaints upon the same cause of action in the ordinary course of procedure. But as this is a question of practice, and many judgments have probably been taken under it, we consider it better to let the decision in the case of Richards v. McMillan stand.

The other points made in the learned and elaborate brief of the appellants' counsel, I think are not well taken. It is impossible in the pressure of business to consider at length the various questions raised. I think that the old rules of Chancery pleading are superseded by the Practice Act; that the material charges of fraud are all substantially denied in the answer. Those insufficiently stated, if admitted, are not sufficient to establish the fraud charged: that the deposition of the book-keeper of defendants having been taken on examination and

Stanley v. Green.

---

cross-examination, was properly admissible; at any rate we could not review the error, if any, in the Court in refusing to exclude it; and that the proof made by defendant, tended strongly to sustain the judgment and remove the presumption of fraud raised by the form and circumstances of the judgment.

As, however, the Court below decided the question, apart from any question of these proofs, on the first point, and thereby the plaintiff may have omitted to introduce testimony on the other points, on the next trial the parties may be allowed to try the case fully on the facts unaffected by this judgment.

STANLEY v. GREEN et al.

The evidence of the circumstances under which a deed was executed is admissible beyond question. These circumstances place the Court in the position of the parties, and enable it to interpret intelligently the language used by them. It is not to contradict or vary the terms of the instrument that the evidence is received, but to apply them to the subject matter. For this purpose, extrinsic evidence must be admissible in the interpretation of every instrument; and the law will not declare the instrument void for uncertainty until it has been examined with all the light which contemporaneous facts may furnish. If these render the intention clear, and the words of the instrument are, by fair rendering, susceptible of a construction to uphold such intention, then they will be so construed, and the instrument enforced.

The declarations of the grantor are admissible, not only as against himself but against parties claiming under him. The subsequent claimants are considered as standing in his place, and as having taken the title own owners, subject to the same changes and restrictions which attached to it in his hands. It matters not whether the declarations relate to the limits of the party's own premises, or the extent of his neighbor's, or to the boundary line between them, or to the nature of the title he asserts. If their purport is to restrict his own premises, or lessen his own title, they are admissible.

Where the declarations of the grantor controlled the conduct of the grantee in the purchase of land, the grantor, and those subsequently claiming under him, are estopped from the assertion of any interest in the land in opposition to the title of such grantee.

The assertion of quantity in a deed must yield to a description by metes and bounds, or by name or number.

In the description of the land conveyed by deed, designation of the tract by a particular name or number is sufficient; and if it can be rendered certain by

---

Stanley v. Green.

---

extrinsic evidence, this is as good a description as one by metes and bounds. It is undoubtedly essential to the validity of a conveyance, that the thing conveyed must be described so as to be capable of identification; but it is not essential that the conveyance should itself contain such a description as to enable the identification to be made without the aid of extrinsic evidence. No seal was requisite under the civil law. Any instrument which contained the names of the parties, a designation or description of the property sold, the date of the transfer, and the price paid, was sufficient to pass the title. Where a person purchasing land has actual notice of a former conveyance of the same land, he is not entitled to protection as a purchaser for value without notice; nor are his partners in the purchase, although they at the time knew nothing of such purchase. A party in taking a conveyance in the name of his associates, must be considered as having acted as their agent, and notice to him is equally notice to them.

APPEAL from the Seventh District, County of Napa.

This was an action of ejectment. The cause was tried by a jury, and verdict and judgment for the plaintiff. Defendants moved the Court for a new trial, which was denied, and they appealed to this Court.

A statement of facts sufficient to elucidate the points decided, appear in the opinion of the Court.

Crocker, McKune, Robinson and Curry for Appellants.

I. The description in the deed from Higuera to Fallon, under which plaintiff claims, is as follows:

"A certain quantity of land lying, being and situate in the district and territory above mentioned, (District of Sonoma, and Territory of Alta California) in the valley of Napa, containing more or less one mile square of land in the place known as the 'Rincon de los Cameros,' commencing in the wagon road and ending at the point of the hill at the east. To have, etc."

Under this description we contend —

1st. That in any event it does not convey more than "one mile square."

2d. That it is so uncertain and indefinite, that even that amount cannot be located with any certainty, and it was therefore void.

The most definite terms in the description are — "a certain quantity

1st, 1850, and a deed from the Sheriff of Napa county, executed March 21st, 1857, upon a sale made under an execution issued upon a judgment recovered against Martin.* The judgment became a lien upon the premises, December 9th, 1854, and by the deed the estate and interest which Martin possessed on that day, passed to the plaintiff. The subsequent conveyances of Martin and Fallon to the plaintiff, dated respectively May 25th, 1856, and June 15th, 1857, may be dismissed from notice, as they do not add to his title.

The defendants claim through a deed from Higuera and wife to Ramon de la Riva, executed February 7th, 1852, and a deed from Riva to Encarnacion Cacho, and Marta Frias, daughters of Higuera, executed March 28th, 1852. The daughters partitioned the property between themselves, October 13th, 1852; after which, on the eighth of November, 1852, Encarnacion conveyed her interest to the defendant Green, and on the twenty-eighth of June, 1854, Green conveyed a part of the land claimed by him under deed from Encarnacion, to the defendants, McKune, Crocker and Robinson. The other defendants are tenants of either Frias, or Green, or McKune. Crocker and Robinson. The will of Higuera may be passed over in the consideration of the case, as it cannot affect the claim of the defendants. It was made after the sale to Fallon; and, if this were otherwise, it could only take effect upon the death of the testator, and operate upon property which he then possessed.

The principal question presented for consideration relates to the description of the premises contained in the deed of November 13th, 1847, to Fallon, which the counsel of appellants insists is void for uncertainty. It reads as follows: "A certain quantity of land, lying being and situate in the District of Sonoma, and territory of Upper California, in the valley of Napa, containing, more or less, one square mile of land, in the place known as the Rincon de los Cameros, commencing at the wagon road and ending at the point of the hill on the east."

It appears that the term Rincon de los Cameros was used to designate generally the land lying between Napa river on the one side, and the Arroyo on the other. The two streams meet at an angle, forming the two sides of a triangle; and some distance above their junction, the old road leading from Napa to Sonoma crosses the Arroyo. It further appears, that previous to the execution of the conveyance to Fallon, and pending a proposition of Higuera to sell the Rincon, the parties went over the ground in company, Fallon being at the time ignorant of its location; and there, after its extent and upper line had been pointed out, the purchase was concluded, with the clear understanding that it was to embrace the entire "pocket," as it is sometimes termed in the evidence, from the line down. It also appears that on the day following, the parties, including the wife of Higuera, applied to the Alcalde of Sonoma to draw the conveyance; that Higuera desired it to be written in Spanish, and, as the Alcalde was ignorant of the language, he employed a person who understood it, for that purpose. The Alcalde then dictated the deed, from such information as was given to him by Higuera. When they came to the mention of quantity, neither party could state the exact amount. They called it a mile square, more or less, but with the understanding that it was to include the entire tract of the Rincon.

---

Stanley v. Green.

---

In addition to this, the record discloses repeated declarations of Higuera to different parties, as to his sale of the premises, and the position of the upper line; in 1849, to John Walker, who was desirous of purchasing, and had a copy of the deed to Fallon, and for whom Higuera made a sketch or plot of the land; in 1850, to Martin, who held at the time a power of attorney from Fallon, to sell, and who himself shortly afterwards became the purchaser, and with whom Higuera rode over the land, pointing out its boundaries; and to Joseph Walker, who was employed to have a survey made of the premises for Martin, after his purchase, and to whom Higuera pointed out the land sold to Fallon, and the commencement of its upper line.

If we now look at the description of the premises in the deed to Fallon in the light of these circumstances, the uncertainty, which is the subject of objection, disappears. Rincon de los Cameros designates the land embraced between the streams forming, as we have seen, two sides of a triangle, and the line commencing on the road and drawn to the point of the hills on the east, sufficiently indicates the third side. The description is evidently intended to embrace land in the Rincon below the specified line, and is to be construed as if it read, "A certain quantity of land situated within the Rincon, commencing at a line running from the wagon road to the point of the hills on the east, be the same one square mile, more or less."

Stanley v. Green.

---

That the evidence of the circumstances under which the deed was executed is admissible, does not admit of a question. These circumstances place the Court in the position of the parties, and enable it to interpret intelligently the language used by them. It is not to contradict or vary the terms of the instrument, that the evidence is received, but to apply them to the subject matter. For this purpose, extrinsic evidence must be admissible in the interpretation of every instrument; and the law will not declare the instrument void for uncertainty, until it has been examined with all the light which contemporaneous facts may furnish. If these render the intention clear, and the words of the instrument are, by fair rendering, susceptible of a construction to uphold such intention, then they will be so construed, and the instrument enforced. "If the meaning of the instrument, by itself," says Parsons, "is affected with uncertainty, the intention of the parties may be ascertained by extrinsic testimony;" (of the circumstances under which the instrument was made) "and this intention will be taken as the meaning of the parties expressed in the instrument, if it be a meaning which may be distinctly derived from a fair and rational interpretation of the words actually used. But if it be incompatible with such interpretation, the instrument will then be void for uncertainty or incurable inaccuracy." (On Contracts, 2 vol., 78) "For the purpose of applying the instrument," says Baron Parke in Shore v. Wilson, (9 Cl. & Fin. 556) "to the facts, and determining what passes by it, and who takes an interest under it, a second description of evidence is admissible, viz., every material fact that will enable the Court to identify the person or thing mentioned in the instrument, and to place the Court, whose province it is to declare the meaning of the words of the instrument, as near as may be in the situation of the parties to it. See also Hasbrook v. Paddock, 6 Barb. 635; Hildebrand v. Fogle, 20 Ohio, 157; 1 Greenleaf Ev., sec. 286; Cowen & Hill's Notes to Phillips, Part II, notes 263 and 269, and authorities there cited.

The declarations of Higuera to Fallon, made at the time of the sale, were admissible to show the location of the Rincon de los Came-ros, and to identify the tract sold; and his subsequent declarations to the Walkers and Martin, were admissible against himself as the owner of adjoining property on the question of boundary. It is to be observed that at the time these subsequent declarations were made, Higuera was the owner of the entire tract of Entre Napa, excepting that previously conveyed to Fallon, and these declarations show the position of the dividing line between the land retained by himself and that which had passed to Fallon. So far as the tract south of the line commencing at the road is concerned, they were against his title.

---

Stanley v. Green.

---

That such declarations of the grantor are admissible not only as against himself, but against parties claiming under him, is a familiar principle. The subsequent claimants are considered as standing in his place, and as having taken the title cum onere, subject to the same charges and restrictions which attached to it in his hands. It matters not whether the declarations relate to the limits of the party's own premises, or the extent of his neighbor's, or to the boundary line between them, or to the nature of the title he asserts. If their purport is to restrict his own premises or lessen his own title, they are admissible. Cowen & Hill's Notes to Phillips, Part II, note 194, and cases there cited; 1 Greenl. Ev., sec. 189.

Aside from this, the declarations to Martin evidently controlled his conduct in making the purchase from Fallon, which followed at an interval of only a few days, and are effectual by way of estoppel against the assertion of any interest by Higuera and his vendees in the premises in controversy, in opposition to the title of Martin and those claiming under him. If we add the conduct of Higuera when the survey was made by Martin after his purchase, in pointing out the starting point, and indicating the line to be followed in the survey, all question as to the extent of the premises would seem to be conclusively set at rest. It would, we think, be difficult to find a case parallel to this in the clear and distinct and repeated recognitions, in a variety of forms, by the grantor, of the extent, location and boundaries of land conveyed by him, where the description was not more specific than the one contained in his deed.

The words "containing more or less, one square mile of land," are merely descriptive of the premises, and not words of limitation upon the quantity conveyed. This is the construction placed upon the adjudged cases upon the statement of quantity accompanying a description of premises by metes and bounds, or by a designation of number or place. Thus in Jackson v. Defendorf, (1 Caines, 493) the deed purported to convey lot number two, in a certain patent on the south side of the Mohawk river, referring to a map for boundaries, containing two hundred acres. Upon a survey, the lot was found to contain more than the designated quantity, and the question presented was whether the whole passed. The Court said, "the intent was to convey the whole lot. It referred to the map. Where the quantity of acres is mentioned, it is only a description of the lot, according to the common acceptation." In Jackson v. Moore, (6 Cowen, 706) the conveyance purported to convey two tracts of land in the County of Ontario, "being township No. 3, in the 5th range; also, No. 4 in the 6th range; to be six miles square, and containing twenty-three thousand and forty acres each, and no more;" but as these tracts were in fact six by eight miles in size, the Court held that the whole passed. Sunderland, J., in delivering the opinion said: "It is perfectly settled, that when a piece of land is conveyed by metes and bounds, or any other certain description, all included within those bounds, or that description, will pass, whether it be more or less than the quantity stated in the deed. And when the quantity is mentioned in addition to a description of the boundaries or other certain designation of the land, without an express covenant that it contains that quantity, the whole is considered as mere description. The quantity being the least certain part of the description, must yield to the boundaries or number, if they do not agree. (Jackson v. Barringer, 15 John. 471; Powell v. Clark, 5 Mass. Rep. 355.) If a man lease another the meadows in D and S, containing ten acres, and they, in truth, contain twenty, all shall pass. 13 Vin. Abr. 79, plac. 24."

Stanley v. Green.

---

In Jackson v. McConnell (19 Wend. 175) the deed described the premises by courses and distances, beginning at a specified point, and concluding with the words "Containing two hundred acres, strict measure, and no more." It appeared that the description contained about nine acres more than the quantity thus specified, and the Court held that the grantee was entitled to the whole.

Stanley v. Green.

---

In Hathaway v. Power, (6 Hill, 453) the defendant gave in evidence a deed containing the following description, viz.: "All that certain tract or parcel of land situate in township No. 11, in the third range of townships, County of Ontario, and State of New York, it being one hundred and sixty acres of land in lot No. 14, with all the hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging." It was proved on the trial that the lot contained one hundred and eighty-five acres, and the Court held the whole passed. In delivering the opinion, Beardsley, J., said: "The embarrassment in the case has arisen from laying too great stress on the words 'Containing one hundred and sixty acres of land.' It is assumed that this clause must be strictly true; and then as lot No. 14 contains one hundred and eighty-five acres, it is argued that a part of it only was intended to pass. But these words are descriptive of quantity, and nothing more, and no deed was ever held void for a mistake in this respect.

"Undoubtedly, effect should be given, if practicable, to every part of the description. Still, if some part is inapplicable or untrue, and enough remains to show what was intended, the deed must be upheld. The false or mistaken part should be rejected, and when that happens to be a mere statement of the quantity, it will be done without the least hesitation. I understand this deed to be in effect the same as if the description had been all the land in lot number fourteen, being one hundred and sixty acres. Such a description, although mistaken as to the quantity, would, beyond all doubt, have carried the entire lot." See, also, Jackson v. Berringer, 15 Johns. 471; Howe et al. v. Bass, 2 Mass. 380; Powell v. Clark, 5 Mass. 355; Smith v. Hodge, 2 N. H. 303; Large v. Penn., 6 Seargt. & Raw. 488; Belden v. Seymour, 8 Conn. 19; Benedict v. Gayland, 11 Conn. 382; Brown v. Parish, 2 Dana, 6.

The counsel of the appellants do not question the correctness of the general doctrine as to the immateriality of the affirmation of quantity in conveyances, when there is other description by metes and bounds, but insist that, in the present case, the doctrine does not apply, as there are no specific boundaries given. In this his position is untenable. A designation of the tract by a particular name or number is sufficient; and if it can be rendered certain by extrinsic evidence, this is as good a description as one by metes and bounds. It is undoubtedly essential to the validity of a conveyance, that the thing conveyed must be described so as to be capable of identification, but it is not essential that the conveyance should itself contain such a description as to enable the identification to be made without the aid of extrinsic evidence. Castro v. Gill, 5 Cal. 42; Blake v. Doherty, 5 Wheat. 359.

Stanley v. Green.

---

The argument of counsel is based upon an erroneous construction of the language of the deed to Fallon. It does not purport to convey one square mile of land lying in the place known as "Rincon de los Cameros," as part thereof, but to convey the entire tract lying therein, be the same one square mile more or less. This is the construction which the plainest rules require, which does no violence to the language of the instrument, and which effectuates the intention of the parties. There is no doubt that Higuera intended to give to Fallon an effective conveyance. He received a valuable consideration for the deed. He always admitted that he intended to transfer the land within the forks of Napa river and the Arroyo — in the "Pocket," as some of the witnesses term it — and not a mere right to select "one square mile more or less" from the tract.

It would be a waste of time to comment upon the various cases cited by counsel of the appellants, in which conveyances have been held void for uncertainty of their description of the premises. They are all easily distinguishable from the case at bar, and apply to an entirely different state of facts.

The objection to the want of a seal to the conveyance to Fallon is not tenable. No seal was requisite under the civil law. Any instrument which contained the names of the parties, a designation or description of the property sold, the date of the transfer, and the price paid, was sufficient to pass the title. Pastin v. Rassette, 5 Cal. 467; Hayes v. Bond et al., 7 Cal. 153.

The defendants claim title from Higuera, through his deed to Riva. This deed was executed February 7, 1852, and, in terms, excepts from its operation all land previously sold and conveyed. The claim of defendants is thus defective in its very origin. The land in controversy had been sold and conveyed nearly five years previously. The deed to Riva only purports to transfer his remaining interest, and its legal effect is precisely the same as if, in the description of the premises, it had given boundaries necessarily excluding the land previously sold. Adams v. Cuddy, 13 Pick. 460. This single fact concludes the defense.

Stanley v. Green.

---

The deeds from Riva to the daughters of Higuera contain a similar exception. The defendants had notice of that exception, for these deeds were on record; and even if the defendants had never seen or heard of the conveyance to Fallon, they could only have taken the remaining interest of Higuera. Whenever that conveyance appeared, it would enable the defendants to ascertain and fix the limits of the remaining interest, which, alone, they ever took.

But even had the deed to Riva, and by him to the daughters, contained no exception in terms, neither they, or the other parties claiming through them, could have held the premises against the plaintiff. Riva was not a purchaser. He paid nothing for the conveyance. This he states himself. He says that he took the conveyance under a parol trust, for the benefit of the daughters. The conveyances to them were executed in the performance of this trust, and upon no other consideration. The partition deeds between the daughters placed their title in no better position. The legal operation of the several conveyances was to effect a gift to the daughters from Higuera of the separate parcels held by them. This disposes of the case so far as Martha Frias is concerned.

The defendant Green is in no better position, for he purchased of Encarnacion, with actual notice of Martin's claim. Of this there was sufficient evidence to go to the jury, and the fact is involved in their finding.

The defendants, McKune, Robinson and Crocker, are not entitled to protection as purchasers for value without notice. The deed to them recites only a nominal consideration of ten dollars, and no proof of any other consideration was given or offered. McKune was Law Agent of the United States at the time the claim of Martin for the land in controversy was pending before the Land Commission, and, as such officer, he was present at the taking of the deposition of Walker in relation to the same, and cross-examined the witness on the subject. It would, indeed, be unjust to charge McKune with notice of all proceedings, which his duties as an officer required him to take general charge of; but it is otherwise in relation to matters to which his attention was particularly called, and in which he directly and personally participated. The deed was drawn by him; and though his law partners, Crocker and Robinson, do not appear to have known of its execution until long afterwards, they must hold their interest subject to the same rights of third parties. In taking the conveyance in the name of his associates, he must be considered as having acted as their agent, and notice to him was equally notice to them. Story's Equity, Secs. 408, 409. It would, indeed, be singular, if the legal effect of notice could be obviated by so easy a subterfuge as the insertion of the names of other parties in the conveyance.

Conner v. Clark.

We do not perceive any error either in the refusal of the instructions requested, or in those given which operated to the prejudice of the defendants. Taken together they were as favorable to the defense as the facts justified.

Judgment affirmed.

---

CONNER v. CLARK.

Where a party signs a promissory note with the addition to his name of the word "trustee," he is personally liable; nor can evidence be admitted to show that at the time of the execution of the note there was a parol agreement that he should not be personally liable, but the note was to be paid out of a trust fund. The rule is, that the written contract is considered the definitive agreement of the parties, and parol conversations and understandings are all merged in it. Nor will it do to say that such evidence is admissible, as showing a want of consideration, for it does not tend to prove that there was no such consideration as is acknowledged by the terms of the note, but that there was no such contract as that alleged.

APPEAL from the Sixth District, County of Sacramento.

This was an action brought upon a promissory note in the words following:

---

Conner v. Clark.

---

" $700.

SACRAMENTO, Dec. 26th, 1856.

" On or before the first day of November, 1857, next ensuing, I promise to pay to the order of Henry Conner, seven hundred dollars, for value received.

" ROBERT C. CLARK, TRUSTER."

On the trial, defendant offered to show that the agreement at the time he made it was, that he was not to be personally liable, but that the payment was to be made out of a trust fund, of which he was trustee. This evidence was rejected by the Court as inadmissible, and judgment rendered for the plaintiff; from which defendant appealed to this Court.

Winans & Hyer for Appellant.

1st. The Court erred in refusing to permit defendant to prove by parol testimony at the trial, that at the time of the execution of the lease in evidence, and the note sued on, it was expressly agreed between plaintiff and defendant that he (plaintiff) would look alone to the proceeds of the trust property for payment of said note, and not to defendant individually, and that defendant did not and would not become individually bound for the payment of said note.

2d. The Court erred in refusing to permit defendant to prove by parol all the facts set forth in his answer.

John Heard for Respondent.

The respondent insists that the note is the note of Clark alone; no one being named as the maker except himself. See Story on Prom. Notes, secs. 63, 64, 65 and 68; Story on Agency, secs. 147, 156, 275 and 278.

The note being the note of Clark alone, parol evidence to contradict it would be directly opposed to the Statute of Frauds, and to the adjudication of the whole world.

The case of Sayre v. Nicholls is not an authority for the appellant. In that case the name of the principal appeared on the face of the bill, and the amount of the bill, when paid, was to be charged to the office of the principal named in the bill; and Nicholls signed as agent. See that case, 7 Cal. Reports, page 535.

---

Conner v. Clark.

---

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., concurring.

The defendant made his promissory note, signing it "R. C. Clark, Trustee." On the trial he offered to show that the agreement at the time he made it was, that he was not to be personally liable, but that the payment was to be made out of a trust fund, of which he was trustee. This evidence was rejected by the Court as inadmissible, and the defendant appeals.

It will be perceived, that the tendency of the proffered testimony was in effect, to deny to the note the obligation it imported. The evidence proposed alters so far the contract as it appears, as to show that instead of Clark's being bound to pay at all events, or individually, he was only to pay out of a particular fund, and, of course, not to pay it at all if the fund failed. If the word trustee had not been affixed to the signature of Clark, it is clear that no such proof could be made, for it would clearly contradict the writing. It is argued, however, that the addition of this term is sufficient to vary the rule.

Story on Promissory Notes, sec. 63, says: "As to trustees, guardians, executors and administrators, and other persons, acting en autre droit, they are by law generally held personally liable on promissory notes, because they have no authority to bind, ex directo, the persons for whom, or for whose benefit, or for whose estate they act; and hence, to give any validity to the note, they must be deemed personally bound as makers. It is true that they may exempt themselves from personal responsibility, by using clear and explicit words to show that intention; but, in the absence of such words, the law will hold them bound. Thus, if an executor or administrator should make or indorse a note in his own name, adding thereto the words 'as executor,' or 'as administrator,' he would be personally responsible thereon. If he means to limit his responsibility, he should confine his stipulation to pay out of the estate." Story on Agency, p. 176, asserts the same doctrine.

The question here is not, as the counsel for the appellant has ingen-

Dabovich & Co. v. Emeric.

---

iously suggested, whether a principal can be bound on an unsealed contract, where the writing intimates and notifies, by general words, the fact of agency, and parol evidence explanatory of the fact intimated is given. But here there is no doubt that the person signing as trustee was bound; but he wishes to prove that he was to be bound only in a certain way, that is, to pay out of a particular fund. It is not pretended that any one else was bound by this contract. No authority is shown in Clark to bind the beneficiaries in this trust by this note. In form and legal effect the note binds him to pay this amount; but he wishes to add to this note another term, namely, that he was only to pay it out of a certain fund; and this, he wishes to prove, was a contemporaneous parol agreement. But the rule is, that the written contract is considered definitive agreement of the parties, and parol conversations and understandings are all merged in it. It is the only authentic evidence of the understanding of the parties.

Nor will it do to say that the evidence is admissible, as showing a want of consideration for the note. It does not tend to prove that there was no such consideration as is acknowledged by the terms of the note, but that there was no such contract as that alleged.

It is, at last, the common case of an attempt to contradict the terms of a written contract by parol.

Judgment affirmed.

DABOVICH & CO. v. EMERIC.

In a contract for the sale of a certain number of shares of fruit growing on the trees of an orchard, owned in shares, where the vendor guaranteed to the vendee that the shares of fruit should be at his disposal on the trees, free from trouble and annoyance from other parties; on breach of such contract, where no special damage is alleged, the measure of damage is the highest market price of the fruit on the trees at the orchard, if there is any market value for it there; if not, then if the vendee is prepared to gather it and carry it to the market, the market value there, less the cost of gathering and carriage. If other persons were in possession of the orchard when vendee went there to gather the fruit, and if those persons forbade him or his agents and servants from going in and gathering the fruit purchased, and if the vendee could not have done so without risk of personal collision or violence, then the guaranty was broken, and though the vendee might have been permitted to gather a portion of the fruit bought, but not all, he had a right to come away and hold the defendant responsible on the guaranty, as he was not bound to take a portion of his contract.

A jury cannot give compensation for loss of time, remuneration for wages paid, etc., unless there is an allegation in the complaint as to these matters.

APPEAL from the Fourth District, County of San Francisco.

This was an action in the Court below for a breach of contract. The plaintiffs, who are fruit dealers in San Francisco, purchased of the defendant, for the sum of four hundred dollars, sixteen-fortieths of the pears growing in a certain orchard. After such sale, the defendant, for the consideration of fifty dollars, executed the following guaranty:

“Having this day sold to Messrs. Nicholas Dabovich & Co. three shares and one-fifth of one share of the pears standing on the trees of the orchard of San Pablo, which orchard is divided into eight shares, I hereby guarantee to Nicholas Dabovich & Co. that the said three shares and one-fifth of one share will be at their disposal on the trees, free of trouble or annoyance from other parties to them.

“JOSEPH EMERIEH.

“San Francisco, June 14, 1856.”

The plaintiffs alleged a demand and refusal on the part of the defendant. To this complaint there was a demurrer, which was overruled, and a judgment for the plaintiffs.

From this judgment the defendant appealed to this Court, and at the January Term, 1857, (see 7 Cal. Rep. 209,) this Court reversed the judgment of the Court below, and remanded the cause with leave to the plaintiff to amend his complaint.

On the remanding of the case, the plaintiffs amended their complaint. The pleading set out the contract in its words, and averred for a breach of it, that the plaintiffs went to the orchard to gather the pears from the trees on which they were, and that the plaintiffs were then and there troubled and annoyed, and were by force, and arms.

Dabovich & Co. v. Emeric.

---

and threats of violence, ejected from the orchard, and hindered and prevented from gathering the pears; that the defendant was duly notified of this hindrance; that the defendant utterly refused and neglected to deliver the pears to the plaintiffs, or place the same at the disposal of the plaintiffs, according to the terms of the contract, free from annoyance or trouble; and avers damages to the amount of $3,000. Issues were joined on this complaint, and the case was tried by a jury, under the directions of the Court.

The Court gave to the jury, at the request of the plaintiff, the following instructions:

1st. "That if the jury should find for plaintiff, then the measure of damages is the highest value or market price of the pears on the trees, since the first demand for the delivery of the same."

2d. "That in the estimate of damages, they shall also allow the loss of time, value of services, and wages caused by the failure of defendant to perform his contract."

3d. "That the contract and guaranty was entire, and the plaintiffs had the right to refuse to receive a portion of the fruit without the whole."

The defendant requested the Court to give to the jury six written instructions, all of which were refused. The first three are in effect, that the guaranty or indemnity of the defendant extended only to the acts of himself or others interested in the property, and not against the acts of strangers.

The fourth and fifth instructions are in substance that the true rule of damages in the case was, that if the plaintiffs were molested or annoyed in gathering some of the pears, but not all of them, then they could only recover for the value of the pears on the trees, as to such portions to which the molestation and annoyance extended.

The sixth instruction is as follows: "That to enable plaintiffs to recover at all, the evidence must satisfy the jury that the plaintiffs were so far annoyed or molested in gathering the pears thus bought, that further persistence on their part to gather them would have been repelled by force, or have led to a breach of peace."

Plaintiffs had verdict and judgment. Defendant moved the Court for a new trial, which was denied, and he appealed to this Court.

Sloan & Hartman for Appellant.

The Court erred in giving plaintiffs' instructions to the jury.

I. The first part of the first instruction, as to the measure of damages, is probably correct, disconnected with the latter part of the instruction as to the demand and refusal. The instruction, as it stands, proceeds upon the hypothesis that a demand and refusal is necessary to fix a liability. The Supreme Court has already decided in the case that a demand and refusal was no breach of contract; yet in the very outset we find this same thing clinging, like the shirt of Nessus, to the plaintiffs' case.

The second instruction is clearly erroneous. It is instructing the jury to give special damages. No claim for special damages is claimed in the amended complaint; and certainly plaintiffs cannot recover more than they claim. The only damages claimed were for the value of the pears; yet here we have the Court instructing the jury that, in addition to that they shall also allow for loss of time, value of services, and wages!

The third instruction is clearly erroneous, and that it tended to the injury of the defendant on the trial there can be no question. From the testimony of nearly every witness examined, it appears that the plaintiffs might have received a portion, if not all their fruit, had they seen proper so to do. A portion, at least, was at their disposal, even had they been troubled and molested in procuring the balance. The instrument in question, given by the defendant to the plaintiffs, and which is the basis of the action, is precisely what it purports to be, and nothing more or less, to wit, a guaranteeing or indemnifying instrument, and intended to make plaintiffs whole as to such part of the fruit as they should not be able to procure without trouble or molestation. If they could not procure a portion of the fruit, for that portion the defendant was bound to indemnify them, and no more. If they could not procure any, then the defendant was bound to them for the whole.

II. The Court erred in refusing to give to the jury the instructions prayed for by the defendant.

The first three of these instructions we shall examine together.

Dabovich & Co. v. Emeric.

---

They are, in effect, that the guaranty or indemnity of the defendant extended only to the acts of himself or others interested in the property, and not against the acts of strangers. In other words, that the instrument did not guarantee against wrongful acts or trespasses of all the world, but against the trouble and annoyance only of such parties as had an interest or title, paramount, or otherwise, in the property. This is apparent from the instrument itself, as well as from analogous principles.

The covenant in the instrument at bar is similar to the covenant in a deed for quiet enjoyment. In fact, a covenant against trouble and annoyance is nothing more or less than a covenant for quiet enjoyment. Rawle on Covenants for Title, p. 147; Greenby v. Wilcox, 2 J. R., p. 1; Folliard v. Wallace, 2 J. R., p. 402; Kent v. Welch, 7 J. R., p. 258; Walter v. Hele, 2 Saund. 180, n. 10.

The correctness or incorrectness of the refusal to give the sixth instruction depends upon a simple proposition — did the sale in the case pass the defendant's title in the property to plaintiffs? If so, then the plaintiffs had the right to reduce their property to possession; and if they found their property in the possession of a wrongdoer, who was disposed to hold it by force, then they had a right to use force against force. The instruction prayed for did not even go to this extent, and we submit that it was error in the Court to refuse it.

I. There was no error in the first instruction prayed for by the respondents. That this instruction announces the true rule of damages in the case, is shown by Sedgwick on the Measure of Damages, 258, et seq.

If this instruction assumed that a demand for the pears, and a refusal to deliver, was necessary to give a cause of action to the respondents, as intimated by the appellant, then there may be error in the record, but not such as he can assign; for it was against the respondents.

The contract of sale was, exactly speaking, precedent to that of the guaranty, but in legal effect they were cotemporaneous acts. Perhaps in the view of the counsel, it would have been more accurate to have instructed the jury to give the highest market price after the sale; but surely this is not an error of which the appellant can complain; for if the two acts were not cotemporaneous, that of the sale was first in time, and thus the instruction might have prejudiced the respondents, while it was impossible that it could prejudice the appellant. See particularly, Baldwin v. Burnett, 4 Cal. 392.

Dabovich & Co. v. Emeric.

---

II. The second instruction is said to be "clearly erroneous"; and we as earnestly think it clearly correct. The guaranty was that the pears should be at the disposal of the respondents on the trees, "free of trouble or annoyance from other parties." Any damages which might ordinarily, and did result from the breach, ought to be allowed; and such damages ought to be given under the general averment of damages. As we understand the learned counsel, the objection does not go so much to the damages themselves as to their being given under the state of pleadings in this case. In all this we think the counsel are wrong. The record does show such averments, perhaps not so technical or artistic as such averments should be made, but still sufficient for all purposes after verdict. Such damages are clearly allowable. Kenyon v. Goodall, 3 Cal. 257.

III. The third instruction given is said to be clearly erroneous. Now, the fair presumption is, that the purchasers had in view their general business as fruit dealers, as well as certain particular contracts which they had assumed to perform, all of which would have been accommodated by their getting the whole of the fruit, while a small part of it would have been valueless and even prejudicial to them! And yet it is gravely argued that the respondents ought to have taken just so much as the caprice or interest of the appellant would allow. In other words, they were obliged to receive just so much as was to the advantage of the appellant, although at their sacrifice, while he was permitted to retain as much as would have been to their advantage. Such a view of the instrument is too absurd to be tolerated! The respondents had the right to treat the contract as entire, and they did so.

IV. The first three instructions prayed by the appellant are considered together. They are to the effect that the guaranty of the appellant "extended only to the acts of himself or others interested in the property, and not as against the acts of strangers. In other words, that the instrument did not guarantee against the wrongful acts or trespasses of all the world," etc. The guaranty thus restricted in its import would be worse than idle, and valueless. The seller of a chattel is always bound upon his implied warranty of title. By the mere force of law, there was already an undertaking of the effect now ascribed to the guaranty. The respondents had already paid the four hundred dollars, and the property, as held by the Court, had already vested in them; but they were doubtful of the appellant's ability to perform, and anxious for further assurance against the interference of other persons, and therefore gave the additional fifty dollars for the guaranty which expressly provided that the fruit should be on the trees and at the disposal of the respondents "free of trouble or annoyance from other parties." If not intended to indemnify against the acts of strangers, for what purpose was it intended? From all the circumstances characterizing the transaction, as well as the natural and obvious import of the terms, it is difficult even to imagine that anything other than the interference of strangers was intended to be provided against. There was in fact nothing else necessary to the safety of the respondents.

We submit that the error of the counsel for the appellant consists mainly in their considering the guaranty "as similar to a covenant for quiet enjoyment." It is said that it would be unreasonable that a "man should covenant against the tortious acts of strangers which he could not foresee or prevent," etc. Now, the simple answer to all this is, that there is no sort of analogy between a covenant for quiet enjoyment of real estate and that now under review. The purchasers were never permitted to take the possession, so that there is wanting the very first fact to warrant the assertion of the supposed analogy. There was a constructive possession in respondents by virtue of the sale; but that does not relieve the appellant here; for the respondents were to have the pears on the trees at their disposal, "free of trouble or annoyance from other parties;" but the fruit was not at their disposal, nor free of trouble or annoyance of other parties. There was, therefore, a breach of the guaranty.

Sedgwick on the Measure of Damages, already cited, will throughout show the dissimilarity between personal and real contracts as to the right and remedy.

Dabovich & Co. v. Emerie.

V. The fifth instruction prayed by the appellant but raises again in a form little varied the question as to the entirety of the contract, and has been sufficiently considered.

VI. The sixth instruction. It is an anomalous doctrine that after a man has paid his money for property, and taken an express guaranty that it shall be at his disposal "free of trouble or annoyance of other parties," he must fight, or at least hazard a fight for it before he can have any remedy over! The appellant had contracted to guard against the interference of others, and cannot now transfer the burden which he was paid for assuming, to those who paid him.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J. concurring.

This controversy, which has been going on a long time, and been heretofore before this Court, grew out of a contract in these words:

"Having this day sold to Messrs. Dabovich & Co. three shares and one-fifth of one share of the pears standing on the trees of the orchard of San Pablo, which orchard is divided into eight shares, I hereby guarantee to said Nicholas Dabovich & Co., that the said three shares and one-fifth of one share of said pears will be at their disposal on the trees, free from trouble and annoyance from other parties to them.

"(Signed,)

JOS. EMERIE.

"June 14th, 1856."

When the case was before this Court (January T., 1858) this contract was construed. They say, "from the very nature of the first contract of sale, the delivery took place as soon as the sale was made. So far as the sale was concerned, they became the owners of the fruit upon the trees, and could only maintain an action against the defendant in case he converted the property or interfered with them in picking it. As to the guarantee, its effect was simply that the pears should be on the trees at the disposal of the plaintiffs, and that they should not be disturbed in their right to gather them by third persons. To recover on this contract, it was necessary to allege and

---

Dabovich & Co. v. Emeric.

---

prove either that the fruit was not on the trees, or that the plaintiffs had been interfered with by third parties gathering it. There was no necessity for any demand upon the defendant unless for the purpose of enabling him to comply with the terms of his guarantee."

This opinion was given on appeal from the Superior Court of San Francisco after the first trial, which resulted in verdict and judgment for the plaintiffs.

On the remanding of the case, the plaintiffs amended their complaint. This pleading set out the contract in its words, and averred for a breach of it, that the plaintiffs went to the orchard to gather the pears from the trees on which they were, and that the plaintiffs were then and there troubled and annoyed, and were by force, and arms, and threats of violence, ejected from the orchard, and hindered and prevented from gathering the pears; that the defendant was duly notified of this hindrance; that the defendant utterly refused and neglected to deliver the pears to the plaintiffs, or place the same at the disposal of the plaintiffs, according to the terms of the contract, free from annoyance or trouble; and avers damages to the amount of $3,000. Issues were joined on this complaint, and the case was tried by jury under the directions of the Court. Sundry instructions were given and refused. These form the main subject of review here.

It has been seen that the complaint does not aver any causes of special damages. Only such damages, then, as were the natural and necessary consequence of the breach of the agreement can be recovered. The whole guarantee, as we understand it, amounts to this: that the defendant owned a certain portion of the pears growing or hanging on the trees of the orchard; this proportion was sold to plaintiffs, with a right to go and gather them, and the defendant warranted that the plaintiffs should not be disturbed or hindered in getting them. The plaintiffs wanted no trouble, difficulty or law suits about the matter, and the defendant insured them against this. An opposition by force, or the appearance of it, authorized the plaintiffs to desist from going on the premises, or prosecuting their errand in gathering or attempting to gather the fruit; and this opposition gave the plaintiffs a right of action. The measure of damages was the injury done, which was the loss of the pears. The value of these was the standard of

Conner v. Clark.

---

of the principal named in the bill; and Nicholls signed as agent. See that case, 7 Cal. Reports, page 535.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court—TERRY, C. J., concurring.

The defendant made his promissory note, signing it "R. C. Clark, Trustee." On the trial he offered to show that the agreement at the time he made it was, that he was not to be personally liable, but that the payment was to be made out of a trust fund, of which he was trustee. This evidence was rejected by the Court as inadmissible, and the defendant appeals.

It will be perceived, that the tendency of the proffered testimony was in effect, to deny to the note the obligation it imported. The evidence proposed alters so far the contract as it appears, as to show that instead of Clark's being bound to pay at all events, or individually, he was only to pay out of a particular fund, and, of course, not to pay it at all if the fund failed. If the word trustee had not been affixed to the signature of Clark, it is clear that no such proof could be made, for it would clearly contradict the writing. It is argued, however, that the addition of this term is sufficient to vary the rule.

Story on Promissory Notes, sec. 63, says: "As to trustees, guardians, executors and administrators, and other persons, acting en autre droit, they are by law generally held personally liable on promissory notes, because they have no authority to bind, ex directo, the persons for whom, or for whose benefit, or for whose estate they act; and hence, to give any validity to the note, they must be deemed personally bound as makers. It is true that they may exempt themselves from personal responsibility, by using clear and explicit words to show that intention; but, in the absence of such words, the law will hold them bound. Thus, if an executor or administrator should make or indorse a note in his own name, adding thereto the words 'as executor,' or 'as administrator,' he would be personally responsible thereon. If he means to limit his responsibility, he should confine his stipulation to pay out of the estate." Story on Agency, p. 176, asserts the same doctrine.

The question here is not, as the counsel for the appellant has ingen-

Dabovich & Co. v. Emerie.

iously suggested, whether a principal can be bound on an unsealed contract, where the writing intimates and notifies, by general words, the fact of agency, and parol evidence explanatory of the fact intimated is given. But here there is no doubt that the person signing as trustee was bound; but he wishes to prove that he was to be bound only in a certain way, that is, to pay out of a particular fund. It is not pretended that any one else was bound by this contract. No authority is shown in Clark to bind the beneficiaries in this trust by this note. In form and legal effect the note binds him to pay this amount; but he wishes to add to this note another term, namely, that he was only to pay it out of a certain fund; and this, he wishes to prove, was a contemporaneous parol agreement. But the rule is, that the written contract is considered definitive agreement of the parties, and parol conversations and understandings are all merged in it. It is the only authentic evidence of the understanding of the parties.

Nor will it do to say that the evidence is admissible, as showing a want of consideration for the note. It does not tend to prove that there was no such consideration as is acknowledged by the terms of the note, but that there was no such contract as that alleged.

It is, at last, the common case of an attempt to contradict the terms of a written contract by parol.

Judgment affirmed.

APPEAL from the Fourth District, County of San Francisco.

This was an action in the Court below for a breach of contract. The plaintiffs, who are fruit dealers in San Francisco, purchased of the defendant, for the sum of four hundred dollars, sixteen-fortieths of the pears growing in a certain orchard. After such sale, the defendant, for the consideration of fifty dollars, executed the following guaranty:

“Having this day sold to Messrs. Nicholas Dabovich & Co. three shares and one-fifth of one share of the pears standing on the trees of the orchard of San Pablo, which orchard is divided into eight shares, I hereby guarantee to Nicholas Dabovich & Co. that the said three shares and one-fifth of one share will be at their disposal on the trees, free of trouble or annoyance from other parties to them.

“JOSEPH EMERIEH.

“San Francisco, June 14, 1856.”

The plaintiffs alleged a demand and refusal on the part of the defendant. To this complaint there was a demurrer, which was overruled, and a judgment for the plaintiffs.

From this judgment the defendant appealed to this Court, and at the January Term, 1857, (see 7 Cal. Rep. 209,) this Court reversed the judgment of the Court below, and remanded the cause with leave to the plaintiff to amend his complaint.

On the remanding of the case, the plaintiffs amended their complaint. The pleading set out the contract in its words, and averred for a breach of it, that the plaintiffs went to the orchard to gather the pears from the trees on which they were, and that the plaintiffs were then and there troubled and annoyed, and were by force, and arms.

and threats of violence, ejected from the orchard, and hindered and prevented from gathering the pears; that the defendant was duly notified of this hindrance; that the defendant utterly refused and neglected to deliver the pears to the plaintiffs, or place the same at the disposal of the plaintiffs, according to the terms of the contract, free from annoyance or trouble; and avers damages to the amount of $3,000. Issues were joined on this complaint, and the case was tried by a jury, under the directions of the Court.

The Court gave to the jury, at the request of the plaintiff, the following instructions:

1st. "That if the jury should find for plaintiff, then the measure of damages is the highest value or market price of the pears on the trees, since the first demand for the delivery of the same."

2d. "That in the estimate of damages, they shall also allow the loss of time, value of services, and wages caused by the failure of defendant to perform his contract."

3d. "That the contract and guaranty was entire, and the plaintiffs had the right to refuse to receive a portion of the fruit without the whole."

The defendant requested the Court to give to the jury six written instructions, all of which were refused. The first three are in effect, that the guaranty or indemnity of the defendant extended only to the acts of himself or others interested in the property, and not against the acts of strangers.

The fourth and fifth instructions are in substance that the true rule of damages in the case was, that if the plaintiffs were molested or annoyed in gathering some of the pears, but not all of them, then they could only recover for the value of the pears on the trees, as to such portions to which the molestation and annoyance extended.

The sixth instruction is as follows: "That to enable plaintiffs to recover at all, the evidence must satisfy the jury that the plaintiffs were so far annoyed or molested in gathering the pears thus bought, that further persistence on their part to gather them would have been repelled by force, or have led to a breach of peace."

Plaintiffs had verdict and judgment. Defendant moved the Court for a new trial, which was denied, and he appealed to this Court.

Sloan & Hartman for Appellant.

The Court erred in giving plaintiffs' instructions to the jury.

I. The first part of the first instruction, as to the measure of damages, is probably correct, disconnected with the latter part of the instruction as to the demand and refusal. The instruction, as it stands, proceeds upon the hypothesis that a demand and refusal is necessary to fix a liability. The Supreme Court has already decided in the case that a demand and refusal was no breach of contract; yet in the very outset we find this same thing clinging, like the shirt of Nessus, to the plaintiffs' case.

The second instruction is clearly erroneous. It is instructing the jury to give special damages. No claim for special damages is claimed in the amended complaint; and certainly plaintiffs cannot recover more than they claim. The only damages claimed were for the value of the pears; yet here we have the Court instructing the jury that, in addition to that they shall also allow for loss of time, value of services, and wages!

The third instruction is clearly erroneous, and that it tended to the injury of the defendant on the trial there can be no question. From the testimony of nearly every witness examined, it appears that the plaintiffs might have received a portion, if not all their fruit, had they seen proper so to do. A portion, at least, was at their disposal, even had they been troubled and molested in procuring the balance. The instrument in question, given by the defendant to the plaintiffs, and which is the basis of the action, is precisely what it purports to be, and nothing more or less, to wit, a guaranteeing or indemnifying instrument, and intended to make plaintiffs whole as to such part of the fruit as they should not be able to procure without trouble or molestation. If they could not procure a portion of the fruit, for that portion the defendant was bound to indemnify them, and no more. If they could not procure any, then the defendant was bound to them for the whole.

II. The Court erred in refusing to give to the jury the instructions prayed for by the defendant.

The first three of these instructions we shall examine together.

Dabovich & Co. v. Emeric.

---

They are, in effect, that the guaranty or indemnity of the defendant extended only to the acts of himself or others interested in the property, and not against the acts of strangers. In other words, that the instrument did not guarantee against wrongful acts or trespasses of all the world, but against the trouble and annoyance only of such parties as had an interest or title, paramount, or otherwise, in the property. This is apparent from the instrument itself, as well as from analogous principles.

The covenant in the instrument at bar is similar to the covenant in a deed for quiet enjoyment. In fact, a covenant against trouble and annoyance is nothing more or less than a covenant for quiet enjoyment. Rawle on Covenants for Title, p. 147; Greenby v. Wilcox, 2 J. R., p. 1; Folliard v. Wallace, 2 J. R., p. 402; Kent v. Welch, 7 J. R., p. 258; Walter v. Hele, 2 Saund. 180, n. 10.

The correctness or incorrectness of the refusal to give the sixth instruction depends upon a simple proposition — did the sale in the case pass the defendant's title in the property to plaintiffs? If so, then the plaintiffs had the right to reduce their property to possession; and if they found their property in the possession of a wrongdoer, who was disposed to hold it by force, then they had a right to use force against force. The instruction prayed for did not even go to this extent, and we submit that it was error in the Court to refuse it.

I. There was no error in the first instruction prayed for by the respondents. That this instruction announces the true rule of damages in the case, is shown by Sedgwick on the Measure of Damages, 258, et seq.

If this instruction assumed that a demand for the pears, and a refusal to deliver, was necessary to give a cause of action to the respondents, as intimated by the appellant, then there may be error in the record, but not such as he can assign; for it was against the respondents.

The contract of sale was, exactly speaking, precedent to that of the guaranty, but in legal effect they were cotemporaneous acts. Perhaps in the view of the counsel, it would have been more accurate to have instructed the jury to give the highest market price after the sale; but surely this is not an error of which the appellant can complain; for if the two acts were not cotemporaneous, that of the sale was first in time, and thus the instruction might have prejudiced the respondents, while it was impossible that it could prejudice the appellant. See particularly, Baldwin v. Burnett, 4 Cal. 392.

II. The second instruction is said to be "clearly erroneous"; and we as earnestly think it clearly correct. The guaranty was that the pears should be at the disposal of the respondents on the trees, "free of trouble or annoyance from other parties." Any damages which might ordinarily, and did result from the breach, ought to be allowed; and such damages ought to be given under the general averment of damages. As we understand the learned counsel, the objection does not go so much to the damages themselves as to their being given under the state of pleadings in this case. In all this we think the counsel are wrong. The record does show such averments, perhaps not so technical or artistic as such averments should be made, but still sufficient for all purposes after verdict. Such damages are clearly allowable. Kenyon v. Goodall, 3 Cal. 257.

III. The third instruction given is said to be clearly erroneous. Now, the fair presumption is, that the purchasers had in view their general business as fruit dealers, as well as certain particular contracts which they had assumed to perform, all of which would have been accommodated by their getting the whole of the fruit, while a small part of it would have been valueless and even prejudicial to them! And yet it is gravely argued that the respondents ought to have taken just so much as the caprice or interest of the appellant would allow. In other words, they were obliged to receive just so much as was to the advantage of the appellant, although at their sacrifice, while he was permitted to retain as much as would have been to their advantage. Such a view of the instrument is too absurd to be tolerated! The respondents had the right to treat the contract as entire, and they did so.

IV. The first three instructions prayed by the appellant are considered together. They are to the effect that the guaranty of the appellant "extended only to the acts of himself or others interested in the property, and not as against the acts of strangers. In other words, that the instrument did not guarantee against the wrongful acts or trespasses of all the world," etc. The guaranty thus restricted in its import would be worse than idle, and valueless. The seller of a chattel is always bound upon his implied warranty of title. By the mere force of law, there was already an undertaking of the effect now ascribed to the guaranty. The respondents had already paid the four hundred dollars, and the property, as held by the Court, had already vested in them; but they were doubtful of the appellant's ability to perform, and anxious for further assurance against the interference of other persons, and therefore gave the additional fifty dollars for the guaranty which expressly provided that the fruit should be on the trees and at the disposal of the respondents "free of trouble or annoyance from other parties." If not intended to indemnify against the acts of strangers, for what purpose was it intended? From all the circumstances characterizing the transaction, as well as the natural and obvious import of the terms, it is difficult even to imagine that anything other than the interference of strangers was intended to be provided against. There was in fact nothing else necessary to the safety of the respondents.

We submit that the error of the counsel for the appellant consists mainly in their considering the guaranty "as similar to a covenant for quiet enjoyment." It is said that it would be unreasonable that a "man should covenant against the tortious acts of strangers which he could not foresee or prevent," etc. Now, the simple answer to all this is, that there is no sort of analogy between a covenant for quiet enjoyment of real estate and that now under review. The purchasers were never permitted to take the possession, so that there is wanting the very first fact to warrant the assertion of the supposed analogy. There was a constructive possession in respondents by virtue of the sale; but that does not relieve the appellant here; for the respondents were to have the pears on the trees at their disposal, "free of trouble or annoyance from other parties;" but the fruit was not at their disposal, nor free of trouble or annoyance of other parties. There was, therefore, a breach of the guaranty.

Sedgwick on the Measure of Damages, already cited, will throughout show the dissimilarity between personal and real contracts as to the right and remedy.

V. The fifth instruction prayed by the appellant but raises again in a form little varied the question as to the entirety of the contract, and has been sufficiently considered.

VI. The sixth instruction. It is an anomalous doctrine that after a man has paid his money for property, and taken an express guaranty that it shall be at his disposal "free of trouble or annoyance of other parties," he must fight, or at least hazard a fight for it before he can have any remedy over! The appellant had contracted to guard against the interference of others, and cannot now transfer the burden which he was paid for assuming, to those who paid him.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J. concurring.

This controversy, which has been going on a long time, and been heretofore before this Court, grew out of a contract in these words:

"Having this day sold to Messrs. Dabovich & Co. three shares and one-fifth of one share of the pears standing on the trees of the orchard of San Pablo, which orchard is divided into eight shares, I hereby guarantee to said Nicholas Dabovich & Co., that the said three shares and one-fifth of one share of said pears will be at their disposal on the trees, free from trouble and annoyance from other parties to them.

"(Signed,)

JOS. EMERLE.

"June 14th, 1856."

When the case was before this Court (January T., 1858) this contract was construed. They say, "from the very nature of the first contract of sale, the delivery took place as soon as the sale was made. So far as the sale was concerned, they became the owners of the fruit upon the trees, and could only maintain an action against the defendant in case he converted the property or interfered with them in picking it. As to the guarantee, its effect was simply that the pears should be on the trees at the disposal of the plaintiffs, and that they should not be disturbed in their right to gather them by third persons. To recover on this contract, it was necessary to allege and prove either that the fruit was not on the trees, or that the plaintiffs had been interfered with by third parties gathering it. There was no necessity for any demand upon the defendant unless for the purpose of enabling him to comply with the terms of his guarantee."

This opinion was given on appeal from the Superior Court of San Francisco after the first trial, which resulted in verdict and judgment for the plaintiffs.

On the remanding of the case, the plaintiffs amended their complaint. This pleading set out the contract in its words, and averred for a breach of it, that the plaintiffs went to the orchard to gather the pears from the trees on which they were, and that the plaintiffs were then and there troubled and annoyed, and were by force, and arms, and threats of violence, ejected from the orchard, and hindered and prevented from gathering the pears; that the defendant was duly notified of this hindrance; that the defendant utterly refused and neglected to deliver the pears to the plaintiffs, or place the same at the disposal of the plaintiffs, according to the terms of the contract, free from annoyance or trouble; and avers damages to the amount of $3,000. Issues were joined on this complaint, and the case was tried by jury under the directions of the Court. Sundry instructions were given and refused. These form the main subject of review here.

It has been seen that the complaint does not aver any causes of special damages. Only such damages, then, as were the natural and necessary consequence of the breach of the agreement can be recovered. The whole guarantee, as we understand it, amounts to this: that the defendant owned a certain portion of the pears growing or hanging on the trees of the orchard; this proportion was sold to plaintiffs, with a right to go and gather them, and the defendant warranted that the plaintiffs should not be disturbed or hindered in getting them. The plaintiffs wanted no trouble, difficulty or law suits about the matter, and the defendant insured them against this. An opposition by force, or the appearance of it, authorized the plaintiffs to desist from going on the premises, or prosecuting their errand in gathering or attempting to gather the fruit; and this opposition gave the plaintiffs a right of action. The measure of damages was the injury done, which was the loss of the pears. The value of these was the standard of

of the principal named in the bill; and Nicholls signed as agent. See that case, 7 Cal. Reports, page 535.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court—TERRY, C. J., concurring.

The defendant made his promissory note, signing it "R. C. Clark, Trustee." On the trial he offered to show that the agreement at the time he made it was, that he was not to be personally liable, but that the payment was to be made out of a trust fund, of which he was trustee. This evidence was rejected by the Court as inadmissible, and the defendant appeals.

It will be perceived, that the tendency of the proffered testimony was in effect, to deny to the note the obligation it imported. The evidence proposed alters so far the contract as it appears, as to show that instead of Clark's being bound to pay at all events, or individually, he was only to pay out of a particular fund, and, of course, not to pay it at all if the fund failed. If the word trustee had not been affixed to the signature of Clark, it is clear that no such proof could be made, for it would clearly contradict the writing. It is argued, however, that the addition of this term is sufficient to vary the rule.

Story on Promissory Notes, sec. 63, says: "As to trustees, guardians, executors and administrators, and other persons, acting en autre droit, they are by law generally held personally liable on promissory notes, because they have no authority to bind, ex directo, the persons for whom, or for whose benefit, or for whose estate they act; and hence, to give any validity to the note, they must be deemed personally bound as makers. It is true that they may exempt themselves from personal responsibility, by using clear and explicit words to show that intention; but, in the absence of such words, the law will hold them bound. Thus, if an executor or administrator should make or indorse a note in his own name, adding thereto the words 'as executor,' or 'as administrator,' he would be personally responsible thereon. If he means to limit his responsibility, he should confine his stipulation to pay out of the estate." Story on Agency, p. 176, asserts the same doctrine.

The question here is not, as the counsel for the appellant has ingen-

Dabovich & Co. v. Emerie.

iously suggested, whether a principal can be bound on an unsealed contract, where the writing intimates and notifies, by general words, the fact of agency, and parol evidence explanatory of the fact intimated is given. But here there is no doubt that the person signing as trustee was bound; but he wishes to prove that he was to be bound only in a certain way, that is, to pay out of a particular fund. It is not pretended that any one else was bound by this contract. No authority is shown in Clark to bind the beneficiaries in this trust by this note. In form and legal effect the note binds him to pay this amount; but he wishes to add to this note another term, namely, that he was only to pay it out of a certain fund; and this, he wishes to prove, was a contemporaneous parol agreement. But the rule is, that the written contract is considered definitive agreement of the parties, and parol conversations and understandings are all merged in it. It is the only authentic evidence of the understanding of the parties.

Nor will it do to say that the evidence is admissible, as showing a want of consideration for the note. It does not tend to prove that there was no such consideration as is acknowledged by the terms of the note, but that there was no such contract as that alleged.

It is, at last, the common case of an attempt to contradict the terms of a written contract by parol.

Judgment affirmed.

DABOVICH & CO. v. EMERIC.

In a contract for the sale of a certain number of shares of fruit growing on the trees of an orchard, owned in shares, where the vendor guaranteed to the vendee that the shares of fruit should be at his disposal on the trees, free from trouble and annoyance from other parties; on breach of such contract, where no special damage is alleged, the measure of damage is the highest market price of the fruit on the trees at the orchard, if there is any market value for it there; if not, then if the vendee is prepared to gather it and carry it to the market, the market value there, less the cost of gathering and carriage. If other persons were in possession of the orchard when vendee went there to gather the fruit, and if those persons forbade him or his agents and servants from going in and gathering the fruit purchased, and if the vendee could not have done so without risk of personal collision or violence, then the guaranty was broken, and though the vendee might have been permitted to gather a portion of the fruit bought, but not all, he had a right to come away and hold the defendant responsible on the guaranty, as he was not bound to take a portion of his contract.

A jury cannot give compensation for loss of time, remuneration for wages paid, etc., unless there is an allegation in the complaint as to these matters.

APPEAL from the Fourth District, County of San Francisco.

This was an action in the Court below for a breach of contract. The plaintiffs, who are fruit dealers in San Francisco, purchased of the defendant, for the sum of four hundred dollars, sixteen-fortieths of the pears growing in a certain orchard. After such sale, the defendant, for the consideration of fifty dollars, executed the following guaranty:

"Having this day sold to Messrs. Nicholas Dabovich & Co. three shares and one-fifth of one share of the pears standing on the trees of the orchard of San Pablo, which orchard is divided into eight shares, I hereby guarantee to Nicholas Dabovich & Co. that the said three shares and one-fifth of one share will be at their disposal on the trees, free of trouble or annoyance from other parties to them.

"JOSEPH EMERICH.

"San Francisco, June 14, 1856."

The plaintiffs alleged a demand and refusal on the part of the defendant. To this complaint there was a demurrer, which was overruled, and a judgment for the plaintiffs.

From this judgment the defendant appealed to this Court, and at the January Term, 1857, (see 7 Cal. Rep. 209,) this Court reversed the judgment of the Court below, and remanded the cause with leave to the plaintiff to amend his complaint.

On the remanding of the case, the plaintiffs amended their complaint. The pleading set out the contract in its words, and averred for a breach of it, that the plaintiffs went to the orchard to gather the pears from the trees on which they were, and that the plaintiffs were then and there troubled and annoyed, and were by force, and arms.

Dabovich & Co. v. Emeric.

---

and threats of violence, ejected from the orchard, and hindered and prevented from gathering the pears; that the defendant was duly notified of this hindrance; that the defendant utterly refused and neglected to deliver the pears to the plaintiffs, or place the same at the disposal of the plaintiffs, according to the terms of the contract, free from annoyance or trouble; and avers damages to the amount of $3,000. Issues were joined on this complaint, and the case was tried by a jury, under the directions of the Court.

The Court gave to the jury, at the request of the plaintiff, the following instructions:

1st. "That if the jury should find for plaintiff, then the measure of damages is the highest value or market price of the pears on the trees, since the first demand for the delivery of the same."

2d. "That in the estimate of damages, they shall also allow the loss of time, value of services, and wages caused by the failure of defendant to perform his contract."

3d. "That the contract and guaranty was entire, and the plaintiffs had the right to refuse to receive a portion of the fruit without the whole."

The defendant requested the Court to give to the jury six written instructions, all of which were refused. The first three are in effect, that the guaranty or indemnity of the defendant extended only to the acts of himself or others interested in the property, and not against the acts of strangers.

The fourth and fifth instructions are in substance that the true rule of damages in the case was, that if the plaintiffs were molested or annoyed in gathering some of the pears, but not all of them, then they could only recover for the value of the pears on the trees, as to such portions to which the molestation and annoyance extended.

The sixth instruction is as follows: "That to enable plaintiffs to recover at all, the evidence must satisfy the jury that the plaintiffs were so far annoyed or molested in gathering the pears thus bought, that further persistence on their part to gather them would have been repelled by force, or have led to a breach of peace."

Plaintiffs had verdict and judgment. Defendant moved the Court for a new trial, which was denied, and he appealed to this Court.

Sloan & Hartman for Appellant.

The Court erred in giving plaintiffs' instructions to the jury.

I. The first part of the first instruction, as to the measure of damages, is probably correct, disconnected with the latter part of the instruction as to the demand and refusal. The instruction, as it stands, proceeds upon the hypothesis that a demand and refusal is necessary to fix a liability. The Supreme Court has already decided in the case that a demand and refusal was no breach of contract; yet in the very outset we find this same thing clinging, like the shirt of Nessus, to the plaintiffs' case.

The second instruction is clearly erroneous. It is instructing the jury to give special damages. No claim for special damages is claimed in the amended complaint; and certainly plaintiffs cannot recover more than they claim. The only damages claimed were for the value of the pears; yet here we have the Court instructing the jury that, in addition to that they shall also allow for loss of time, value of services, and wages!

The third instruction is clearly erroneous, and that it tended to the injury of the defendant on the trial there can be no question. From the testimony of nearly every witness examined, it appears that the plaintiffs might have received a portion, if not all their fruit, had they seen proper so to do. A portion, at least, was at their disposal, even had they been troubled and molested in procuring the balance. The instrument in question, given by the defendant to the plaintiffs, and which is the basis of the action, is precisely what it purports to be, and nothing more or less, to wit, a guaranteeing or indemnifying instrument, and intended to make plaintiffs whole as to such part of the fruit as they should not be able to procure without trouble or molestation. If they could not procure a portion of the fruit, for that portion the defendant was bound to indemnify them, and no more. If they could not procure any, then the defendant was bound to them for the whole.

II. The Court erred in refusing to give to the jury the instructions prayed for by the defendant.

The first three of these instructions we shall examine together.

They are, in effect, that the guaranty or indemnity of the defendant extended only to the acts of himself or others interested in the property, and not against the acts of strangers. In other words, that the instrument did not guarantee against wrongful acts or trespasses of all the world, but against the trouble and annoyance only of such parties as had an interest or title, paramount, or otherwise, in the property. This is apparent from the instrument itself, as well as from analogous principles.

The covenant in the instrument at bar is similar to the covenant in a deed for quiet enjoyment. In fact, a covenant against trouble and annoyance is nothing more or less than a covenant for quiet enjoyment. Rawle on Covenants for Title, p. 147; Greenby v. Wilcox, 2 J. R., p. 1; Folliard v. Wallace, 2 J. R., p. 402; Kent v. Welch, 7 J. R., p. 258; Walter v. Hele, 2 Saund. 180, n. 10.

The correctness or incorrectness of the refusal to give the sixth instruction depends upon a simple proposition — did the sale in the case pass the defendant's title in the property to plaintiffs? If so, then the plaintiffs had the right to reduce their property to possession; and if they found their property in the possession of a wrongdoer, who was disposed to hold it by force, then they had a right to use force against force. The instruction prayed for did not even go to this extent, and we submit that it was error in the Court to refuse it.

I. There was no error in the first instruction prayed for by the respondents. That this instruction announces the true rule of damages in the case, is shown by Sedgwick on the Measure of Damages, 258, et seq.

If this instruction assumed that a demand for the pears, and a refusal to deliver, was necessary to give a cause of action to the respondents, as intimated by the appellant, then there may be error in the record, but not such as he can assign; for it was against the respondents.

The contract of sale was, exactly speaking, precedent to that of the guaranty, but in legal effect they were cotemporaneous acts. Perhaps in the view of the counsel, it would have been more accurate to have instructed the jury to give the highest market price after the sale; but surely this is not an error of which the appellant can complain; for if the two acts were not cotemporaneous, that of the sale was first in time, and thus the instruction might have prejudiced the respondents, while it was impossible that it could prejudice the appellant. See particularly, Baldwin v. Burnett, 4 Cal. 392.

Dabovich & Co. v. Emeric.

---

II. The second instruction is said to be "clearly erroneous"; and we as earnestly think it clearly correct. The guaranty was that the pears should be at the disposal of the respondents on the trees, "free of trouble or annoyance from other parties." Any damages which might ordinarily, and did result from the breach, ought to be allowed; and such damages ought to be given under the general averment of damages. As we understand the learned counsel, the objection does not go so much to the damages themselves as to their being given under the state of pleadings in this case. In all this we think the counsel are wrong. The record does show such averments, perhaps not so technical or artistic as such averments should be made, but still sufficient for all purposes after verdict. Such damages are clearly allowable. Kenyon v. Goodall, 3 Cal. 257.

III. The third instruction given is said to be clearly erroneous. Now, the fair presumption is, that the purchasers had in view their general business as fruit dealers, as well as certain particular contracts which they had assumed to perform, all of which would have been accommodated by their getting the whole of the fruit, while a small part of it would have been valueless and even prejudicial to them! And yet it is gravely argued that the respondents ought to have taken just so much as the caprice or interest of the appellant would allow. In other words, they were obliged to receive just so much as was to the advantage of the appellant, although at their sacrifice, while he was permitted to retain as much as would have been to their advantage. Such a view of the instrument is too absurd to be tolerated! The respondents had the right to treat the contract as entire, and they did so.

IV. The first three instructions prayed by the appellant are considered together. They are to the effect that the guaranty of the appellant "extended only to the acts of himself or others interested in the property, and not as against the acts of strangers. In other words, that the instrument did not guarantee against the wrongful acts or trespasses of all the world," etc. The guaranty thus restricted in its import would be worse than idle, and valueless. The seller of a chattel is always bound upon his implied warranty of title. By the mere force of law, there was already an undertaking of the effect now ascribed to the guaranty. The respondents had already paid the four hundred dollars, and the property, as held by the Court, had already vested in them; but they were doubtful of the appellant's ability to perform, and anxious for further assurance against the interference of other persons, and therefore gave the additional fifty dollars for the guaranty which expressly provided that the fruit should be on the trees and at the disposal of the respondents "free of trouble or annoyance from other parties." If not intended to indemnify against the acts of strangers, for what purpose was it intended? From all the circumstances characterizing the transaction, as well as the natural and obvious import of the terms, it is difficult even to imagine that anything other than the interference of strangers was intended to be provided against. There was in fact nothing else necessary to the safety of the respondents.

Dabovich & Co. v. Emeric.

---

We submit that the error of the counsel for the appellant consists mainly in their considering the guaranty "as similar to a covenant for quiet enjoyment." It is said that it would be unreasonable that a "man should covenant against the tortious acts of strangers which he could not foresee or prevent," etc. Now, the simple answer to all this is, that there is no sort of analogy between a covenant for quiet enjoyment of real estate and that now under review. The purchasers were never permitted to take the possession, so that there is wanting the very first fact to warrant the assertion of the supposed analogy. There was a constructive possession in respondents by virtue of the sale; but that does not relieve the appellant here; for the respondents were to have the pears on the trees at their disposal, "free of trouble or annoyance from other parties;" but the fruit was not at their disposal, nor free of trouble or annoyance of other parties. There was, therefore, a breach of the guaranty.

Sedgwick on the Measure of Damages, already cited, will throughout show the dissimilarity between personal and real contracts as to the right and remedy.

Dabovich & Co. v. Emerio.

---

V. The fifth instruction prayed by the appellant but raises again in a form little varied the question as to the entirety of the contract, and has been sufficiently considered.

VI. The sixth instruction. It is an anomalous doctrine that after a man has paid his money for property, and taken an express guaranty that it shall be at his disposal "free of trouble or annoyance of other parties," he must fight, or at least hazard a fight for it before he can have any remedy over! The appellant had contracted to guard against the interference of others, and cannot now transfer the burden which he was paid for assuming, to those who paid him.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J. concurring.

This controversy, which has been going on a long time, and been heretofore before this Court, grew out of a contract in these words:

"Having this day sold to Messrs. Dabovich & Co. three shares and one-fifth of one share of the pears standing on the trees of the orchard of San Pablo, which orchard is divided into eight shares, I hereby guarantee to said Nicholas Dabovich & Co., that the said three shares and one-fifth of one share of said pears will be at their disposal on the trees, free from trouble and annoyance from other parties to them.

"(Signed,)

JOS. EMERIO.

"June 14th, 1856."

When the case was before this Court (January T., 1858) this contract was construed. They say, "from the very nature of the first contract of sale, the delivery took place as soon as the sale was made. So far as the sale was concerned, they became the owners of the fruit upon the trees, and could only maintain an action against the defendant in case he converted the property or interfered with them in picking it. As to the guarantee, its effect was simply that the pears should be on the trees at the disposal of the plaintiffs, and that they should not be disturbed in their right to gather them by third persons. To recover on this contract, it was necessary to allege and prove either that the fruit was not on the trees, or that the plaintiffs had been interfered with by third parties gathering it. There was no necessity for any demand upon the defendant unless for the purpose of enabling him to comply with the terms of his guarantee."

This opinion was given on appeal from the Superior Court of San Francisco after the first trial, which resulted in verdict and judgment for the plaintiffs.

On the remanding of the case, the plaintiffs amended their complaint. This pleading set out the contract in its words, and averred for a breach of it, that the plaintiffs went to the orchard to gather the pears from the trees on which they were, and that the plaintiffs were then and there troubled and annoyed, and were by force, and arms, and threats of violence, ejected from the orchard, and hindered and prevented from gathering the pears; that the defendant was duly notified of this hindrance; that the defendant utterly refused and neglected to deliver the pears to the plaintiffs, or place the same at the disposal of the plaintiffs, according to the terms of the contract, free from annoyance or trouble; and avers damages to the amount of $3,000. Issues were joined on this complaint, and the case was tried by jury under the directions of the Court. Sundry instructions were given and refused. These form the main subject of review here.

It has been seen that the complaint does not aver any causes of special damages. Only such damages, then, as were the natural and necessary consequence of the breach of the agreement can be recovered. The whole guarantee, as we understand it, amounts to this: that the defendant owned a certain portion of the pears growing or hanging on the trees of the orchard; this proportion was sold to plaintiffs, with a right to go and gather them, and the defendant warranted that the plaintiffs should not be disturbed or hindered in getting them. The plaintiffs wanted no trouble, difficulty or law suits about the matter, and the defendant insured them against this. An opposition by force, or the appearance of it, authorized the plaintiffs to desist from going on the premises, or prosecuting their errand in gathering or attempting to gather the fruit; and this opposition gave the plaintiffs a right of action. The measure of damages was the injury done, which was the loss of the pears. The value of these was the standard of

Conner v. Clark.

---

of the principal named in the bill; and Nicholls signed as agent. See that case, 7 Cal. Reports, page 535.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court—TERRY, C. J., concurring.

The defendant made his promissory note, signing it "R. C. Clark, Trustee." On the trial he offered to show that the agreement at the time he made it was, that he was not to be personally liable, but that the payment was to be made out of a trust fund, of which he was trustee. This evidence was rejected by the Court as inadmissible, and the defendant appeals.

It will be perceived, that the tendency of the proffered testimony was in effect, to deny to the note the obligation it imported. The evidence proposed alters so far the contract as it appears, as to show that instead of Clark's being bound to pay at all events, or individually, he was only to pay out of a particular fund, and, of course, not to pay it at all if the fund failed. If the word trustee had not been affixed to the signature of Clark, it is clear that no such proof could be made, for it would clearly contradict the writing. It is argued, however, that the addition of this term is sufficient to vary the rule.

Story on Promissory Notes, sec. 63, says: "As to trustees, guardians, executors and administrators, and other persons, acting en autre droit, they are by law generally held personally liable on promissory notes, because they have no authority to bind, ex directo, the persons for whom, or for whose benefit, or for whose estate they act; and hence, to give any validity to the note, they must be deemed personally bound as makers. It is true that they may exempt themselves from personal responsibility, by using clear and explicit words to show that intention; but, in the absence of such words, the law will hold them bound. Thus, if an executor or administrator should make or indorse a note in his own name, adding thereto the words 'as executor,' or 'as administrator,' he would be personally responsible thereon. If he means to limit his responsibility, he should confine his stipulation to pay out of the estate." Story on Agency, p. 176, asserts the same doctrine.

The question here is not, as the counsel for the appellant has ingen-

Dabovich & Co. v. Emeric.

---

iously suggested, whether a principal can be bound on an unsealed contract, where the writing intimates and notifies, by general words, the fact of agency, and parol evidence explanatory of the fact intimated is given. But here there is no doubt that the person signing as trustee was bound; but he wishes to prove that he was to be bound only in a certain way, that is, to pay out of a particular fund. It is not pretended that any one else was bound by this contract. No authority is shown in Clark to bind the beneficiaries in this trust by this note. In form and legal effect the note binds him to pay this amount; but he wishes to add to this note another term, namely, that he was only to pay it out of a certain fund; and this, he wishes to prove, was a contemporaneous parol agreement. But the rule is, that the written contract is considered definitive agreement of the parties, and parol conversations and understandings are all merged in it. It is the only authentic evidence of the understanding of the parties.

Nor will it do to say that the evidence is admissible, as showing a want of consideration for the note. It does not tend to prove that there was no such consideration as is acknowledged by the terms of the note, but that there was no such contract as that alleged.

It is, at last, the common case of an attempt to contradict the terms of a written contract by parol.

Judgment affirmed.

DABOVICH & CO. v. EMERIC.

In a contract for the sale of a certain number of shares of fruit growing on the trees of an orchard, owned in shares, where the vendor guaranteed to the vendee that the shares of fruit should be at his disposal on the trees, free from trouble and annoyance from other parties; on breach of such contract, where no special damage is alleged, the measure of damage is the highest market price of the fruit on the trees at the orchard, if there is any market value for it there; if not, then if the vendee is prepared to gather it and carry it to the market, the market value there, less the cost of gathering and carriage. from going in and gathering the fruit purchased, and if the vendee could not have done so without risk of personal collision or violence, then the guaranty was broken, and though the vendee might have been permitted to gather a portion of the fruit bought, but not all, he had a right to come away and hold the defendant responsible on the guaranty, as he was not bound to take a portion of his contract.

A jury cannot give compensation for loss of time, remuneration for wages paid, etc., unless there is an allegation in the complaint as to these matters.

APPEAL from the Fourth District, County of San Francisco.

This was an action in the Court below for a breach of contract. The plaintiffs, who are fruit dealers in San Francisco, purchased of the defendant, for the sum of four hundred dollars, sixteen-fortieths of the pears growing in a certain orchard. After such sale, the defendant, for the consideration of fifty dollars, executed the following guaranty:

"Having this day sold to Messrs. Nicholas Dabovich & Co. three shares and one-fifth of one share of the pears standing on the trees of the orchard of San Pablo, which orchard is divided into eight shares, I hereby guarantee to Nicholas Dabovich & Co. that the said three shares and one-fifth of one share will be at their disposal on the trees, free of trouble or annoyance from other parties to them.

"JOSEPH EMERICH.

"San Francisco, June 14, 1856."

The plaintiffs alleged a demand and refusal on the part of the defendant. To this complaint there was a demurrer, which was overruled, and a judgment for the plaintiffs.

From this judgment the defendant appealed to this Court, and at the January Term, 1857, (see 7 Cal. Rep. 209,) this Court reversed the judgment of the Court below, and remanded the cause with leave to the plaintiff to amend his complaint.

On the remanding of the case, the plaintiffs amended their complaint. The pleading set out the contract in its words, and averred for a breach of it, that the plaintiffs went to the orchard to gather the pears from the trees on which they were, and that the plaintiffs were then and there troubled and annoyed, and were by force, and arms.

Dabovich & Co. v. Emeric.

---

and threats of violence, ejected from the orchard, and hindered and prevented from gathering the pears; that the defendant was duly notified of this hindrance; that the defendant utterly refused and neglected to deliver the pears to the plaintiffs, or place the same at the disposal of the plaintiffs, according to the terms of the contract, free from annoyance or trouble; and avers damages to the amount of $3,000. Issues were joined on this complaint, and the case was tried by a jury, under the directions of the Court.

The Court gave to the jury, at the request of the plaintiff, the following instructions:

1st. "That if the jury should find for plaintiff, then the measure of damages is the highest value or market price of the pears on the trees, since the first demand for the delivery of the same."

2d. "That in the estimate of damages, they shall also allow the loss of time, value of services, and wages caused by the failure of defendant to perform his contract."

3d. "That the contract and guaranty was entire, and the plaintiffs had the right to refuse to receive a portion of the fruit without the whole."

The defendant requested the Court to give to the jury six written instructions, all of which were refused. The first three are in effect, that the guaranty or indemnity of the defendant extended only to the acts of himself or others interested in the property, and not against the acts of strangers.

The fourth and fifth instructions are in substance that the true rule of damages in the case was, that if the plaintiffs were molested or annoyed in gathering some of the pears, but not all of them, then they could only recover for the value of the pears on the trees, as to such portions to which the molestation and annoyance extended.

The sixth instruction is as follows: "That to enable plaintiffs to recover at all, the evidence must satisfy the jury that the plaintiffs were so far annoyed or molested in gathering the pears thus bought, that further persistence on their part to gather them would have been repelled by force, or have led to a breach of peace."

Plaintiffs had verdict and judgment. Defendant moved the Court for a new trial, which was denied, and he appealed to this Court.

Sloan & Hartman for Appellant.

The Court erred in giving plaintiffs' instructions to the jury.

I. The first part of the first instruction, as to the measure of damages, is probably correct, disconnected with the latter part of the instruction as to the demand and refusal. The instruction, as it stands, proceeds upon the hypothesis that a demand and refusal is necessary to fix a liability. The Supreme Court has already decided in the case that a demand and refusal was no breach of contract; yet in the very outset we find this same thing clinging, like the shirt of Nessus, to the plaintiffs' case.

The second instruction is clearly erroneous. It is instructing the jury to give special damages. No claim for special damages is claimed in the amended complaint; and certainly plaintiffs cannot recover more than they claim. The only damages claimed were for the value of the pears; yet here we have the Court instructing the jury that, in addition to that they shall also allow for loss of time, value of services, and wages!

The third instruction is clearly erroneous, and that it tended to the injury of the defendant on the trial there can be no question. From the testimony of nearly every witness examined, it appears that the plaintiffs might have received a portion, if not all their fruit, had they seen proper so to do. A portion, at least, was at their disposal, even had they been troubled and molested in procuring the balance. The instrument in question, given by the defendant to the plaintiffs, and which is the basis of the action, is precisely what it purports to be, and nothing more or less, to wit, a guaranteeing or indemnifying instrument, and intended to make plaintiffs whole as to such part of the fruit as they should not be able to procure without trouble or molestation. If they could not procure a portion of the fruit, for that portion the defendant was bound to indemnify them, and no more. If they could not procure any, then the defendant was bound to them for the whole.

II. The Court erred in refusing to give to the jury the instructions prayed for by the defendant.

The first three of these instructions we shall examine together.

Dabovich & Co. v. Nimeria.

They are, in effect, that the guaranty or indemnity of the defendant extended only to the acts of himself or others interested in the property, and not against the acts of strangers. In other words, that the instrument did not guarantee against wrongful acts or trespasses of all the world, but against the trouble and annoyance only of such parties as had an interest or title, paramount, or otherwise, in the property. This is apparent from the instrument itself, as well as from analogous principles.

The covenant in the instrument at bar is similar to the covenant in a deed for quiet enjoyment. In fact, a covenant against trouble and annoyance is nothing more or less than a covenant for quiet enjoyment. Rawle on Covenants for Title, p. 147; Greenby v. Wilcox, 2 J. R., p. 1; Folliard v. Wallace, 2 J. R., p. 402; Kent v. Welch, 7 J. R., p. 258; Walter v. Hele, 2 Saund. 180, n. 10.

The correctness or incorrectness of the refusal to give the sixth instruction depends upon a simple proposition—did the sale in the case pass the defendant's title in the property to plaintiffs? If so, then the plaintiffs had the right to reduce their property to possession; and if they found their property in the possession of a wrongdoer, who was disposed to hold it by force, then they had a right to use force against force. The instruction prayed for did not even go to this extent, and we submit that it was error in the Court to refuse it.

I. There was no error in the first instruction prayed for by the respondents. That this instruction announces the true rule of damages in the case, is shown by Sedgwick on the Measure of Damages, 258, et seq.

If this instruction assumed that a demand for the pears, and a refusal to deliver, was necessary to give a cause of action to the respondents, as intimated by the appellant, then there may be error in the record, but not such as he can assign; for it was against the respondents.

The contract of sale was, exactly speaking, precedent to that of the guaranty, but in legal effect they were cotemporaneous acts. Perhaps in the view of the counsel, it would have been more accurate to have instructed the jury to give the highest market price after the sale; but surely this is not an error of which the appellant can complain; for if the two acts were not cotemporaneous, that of the sale was first in time, and thus the instruction might have prejudiced the respondents, while it was impossible that it could prejudice the appellant. See particularly, Baldwin v. Burnett, 4 Cal. 392.

Dabovich & Co. v. Emeric.

---

II. The second instruction is said to be "clearly erroneous"; and we as earnestly think it clearly correct. The guaranty was that the pears should be at the disposal of the respondents on the trees, "free of trouble or annoyance from other parties." Any damages which might ordinarily, and did result from the breach, ought to be allowed; and such damages ought to be given under the general averment of damages. As we understand the learned counsel, the objection does not go so much to the damages themselves as to their being given under the state of pleadings in this case. In all this we think the counsel are wrong. The record does show such averments, perhaps not so technical or artistic as such averments should be made, but still sufficient for all purposes after verdict. Such damages are clearly allowable. Kenyon v. Goodall, 3 Cal. 257.

III. The third instruction given is said to be clearly erroneous. Now, the fair presumption is, that the purchasers had in view their general business as fruit dealers, as well as certain particular contracts which they had assumed to perform, all of which would have been accommodated by their getting the whole of the fruit, while a small part of it would have been valueless and even prejudicial to them! And yet it is gravely argued that the respondents ought to have taken just so much as the caprice or interest of the appellant would allow. In other words, they were obliged to receive just so much as was to the advantage of the appellant, although at their sacrifice, while he was permitted to retain as much as would have been to their advantage. Such a view of the instrument is too absurd to be tolerated! The respondents had the right to treat the contract as entire, and they did so.

IV. The first three instructions prayed by the appellant are considered together. They are to the effect that the guaranty of the appellant "extended only to the acts of himself or others interested in the property, and not as against the acts of strangers. In other words, that the instrument did not guarantee against the wrongful acts or trespasses of all the world," etc. The guaranty thus restricted in its import would be worse than idle, and valueless. The seller of a chattel is always bound upon his implied warranty of title. By the mere force of law, there was already an undertaking of the effect now ascribed to the guaranty. The respondents had already paid the four hundred dollars, and the property, as held by the Court, had already vested in them; but they were doubtful of the appellant's ability to perform, and anxious for further assurance against the interference of other persons, and therefore gave the additional fifty dollars for the guaranty which expressly provided that the fruit should be on the trees and at the disposal of the respondents "free of trouble or annoyance from other parties." If not intended to indemnify against the acts of strangers, for what purpose was it intended? From all the circumstances characterizing the transaction, as well as the natural and obvious import of the terms, it is difficult even to imagine that anything other than the interference of strangers was intended to be provided against. There was in fact nothing else necessary to the safety of the respondents.

Dabovich & Co. v. Emeric.

---

We submit that the error of the counsel for the appellant consists mainly in their considering the guaranty "as similar to a covenant for quiet enjoyment." It is said that it would be unreasonable that a "man should covenant against the tortious acts of strangers which he could not foresee or prevent," etc. Now, the simple answer to all this is, that there is no sort of analogy between a covenant for quiet enjoyment of real estate and that now under review. The purchasers were never permitted to take the possession, so that there is wanting the very first fact to warrant the assertion of the supposed analogy. There was a constructive possession in respondents by virtue of the sale; but that does not relieve the appellant here; for the respondents were to have the pears on the trees at their disposal, "free of trouble or annoyance from other parties;" but the fruit was not at their disposal, nor free of trouble or annoyance of other parties. There was, therefore, a breach of the guaranty.

Sedgwick on the Measure of Damages, already cited, will throughout show the dissimilarity between personal and real contracts as to the right and remedy.

Dabovich & Co. v. Emeric.

---

V. The fifth instruction prayed by the appellant but raises again in a form little varied the question as to the entirety of the contract, and has been sufficiently considered.

VI. The sixth instruction. It is an anomalous doctrine that after a man has paid his money for property, and taken an express guaranty that it shall be at his disposal "free of trouble or annoyance of other parties," he must fight, or at least hazard a fight for it before he can have any remedy over! The appellant had contracted to guard against the interference of others, and cannot now transfer the burden which he was paid for assuming, to those who paid him.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J. concurring.

This controversy, which has been going on a long time, and been heretofore before this Court, grew out of a contract in these words:

"Having this day sold to Messrs. Dabovich & Co. three shares and one-fifth of one share of the pears standing on the trees of the orchard of San Pablo, which orchard is divided into eight shares, I hereby guarantee to said Nicholas Dabovich & Co., that the said three shares and one-fifth of one share of said pears will be at their disposal on the trees, free from trouble and annoyance from other parties to them.

"(Signed,)

JOS. EMERIC.

"June 14th, 1856."

When the case was before this Court (January T., 1858) this contract was construed. They say, "from the very nature of the first contract of sale, the delivery took place as soon as the sale was made. So far as the sale was concerned, they became the owners of the fruit upon the trees, and could only maintain an action against the defendant in case he converted the property or interfered with them in picking it. As to the guarantee, its effect was simply that the pears should be on the trees at the disposal of the plaintiffs, and that they should not be disturbed in their right to gather them by third persons. To recover on this contract, it was necessary to allege and

---

Dabovich & Co. v. Emeric.

---

prove either that the fruit was not on the trees, or that the plaintiffs had been interfered with by third parties gathering it. There was no necessity for any demand upon the defendant unless for the purpose of enabling him to comply with the terms of his guarantee."

This opinion was given on appeal from the Superior Court of San Francisco after the first trial, which resulted in verdict and judgment for the plaintiffs.

On the remanding of the case, the plaintiffs amended their complaint. This pleading set out the contract in its words, and averred for a breach of it, that the plaintiffs went to the orchard to gather the pears from the trees on which they were, and that the plaintiffs were then and there troubled and annoyed, and were by force, and arms, and threats of violence, ejected from the orchard, and hindered and prevented from gathering the pears; that the defendant was duly notified of this hindrance; that the defendant utterly refused and neglected to deliver the pears to the plaintiffs, or place the same at the disposal of the plaintiffs, according to the terms of the contract, free from annoyance or trouble; and avers damages to the amount of $3,000. Issues were joined on this complaint, and the case was tried by jury under the directions of the Court. Sundry instructions were given and refused. These form the main subject of review here.

It has been seen that the complaint does not aver any causes of special damages. Only such damages, then, as were the natural and necessary consequence of the breach of the agreement can be recovered. The whole guarantee, as we understand it, amounts to this: that the defendant owned a certain portion of the pears growing or hanging on the trees of the orchard; this proportion was sold to plaintiffs, with a right to go and gather them, and the defendant warranted that the plaintiffs should not be disturbed or hindered in getting them. The plaintiffs wanted no trouble, difficulty or law suits about the matter, and the defendant insured them against this. An opposition by force, or the appearance of it, authorized the plaintiffs to desist from going on the premises, or prosecuting their errand in gathering or attempting to gather the fruit; and this opposition gave the plaintiffs a right of action. The measure of damages was the injury done, which was the loss of the pears. The value of these was the standard of recovery. If there was no ascertained fixed value of the pears growing or on the trees at the orchard, the market value at San Francisco, less the cost of gathering and carriage, would furnish the rule of value.

Dabovich & Co. v. Emerie.

---

The plaintiffs were not bound to take less than all of what they purchased. The defendant had no right to change the terms of the contract; the plaintiffs had a right to the contract as they made it. Even in cases of the sales of several articles by one contract for a sum in gross, the vendee is not bound to take a portion, but may rescind the contract if all are not delivered. This was in effect a sale of all the defendant's share of this fruit, and guarantee of uninterrupted access to all, and liberty to take all. The plaintiffs were not bound to take a part, when they were hindered from getting the rest. We cannot apportion the contract in this way; for the main inducement to the contract may have been to obtain the whole quantity of the fruit contracted for.

The contract did not merely provide against interruption from the parties having an interest in the orchard, but the guarantee is general, including interruption from every quarter.

Inasmuch as no claim was made in the complaint for loss of time, wages, etc., no recovery could be had on this account, and the Court erred in instructing the jury in this respect.

We think there was no error in the first instruction. Considering this contract to be in effect an agreement for the delivery of these pears, or, what amounts substantially to the same thing, a sale of them with a guarantee of peaceable and uninterrupted possession, the plaintiffs having paid the price in cash, were entitled to recover as the measure of damages for a breach of the agreement the highest market price of the pears on the trees, from the time of the delivery to the time of trial, if suit were not unreasonably delayed. Sedg. on Damages, page 264.

The principles upon which this protracted case may be finally disposed of have been given. To prevent misapprehension we repeat them.

If other persons were in possession of the orchard when plaintiffs went there to gather the fruit, and if those persons forbade the plaintiffs, or their agents and servants, from going in and gathering the fruit purchased, and if the plaintiffs could not have done so without risk of

Low v. Burrows,

---

personal collision or violence, then the guarantee was broken; and though the plaintiffs might have been permitted to gather a portion of the fruit bought, but not all, they had a right to come away and hold the defendant responsible on the guarantee.

The measure of damages in that event would be the highest market price of the fruit on the trees at the orchard, if there was any market value for it there, and as it was; if not, then if the plaintiffs were prepared to gather it and carry it to the market, the market value there, less the cost of gathering and carriage, would be the criterion of recovery.

But under the complaint the jury could not give compensation for any loss of time, remuneration for wages paid, etc., as there is no allegation in the complaint as to these matters.

The judgment is reversed and case remanded.

LOW, ASSIGNEE, v. BURROWS.

Under the Act of Congress respecting the authentication of the record of a Court of one State to be used in another, it is only necessary that the certificate should state the main facts which are made necessary by the Act, when the offices of Judge and Clerk are both vested in one person.

A certificate of the proceedings of the Surrogate's Court of New York, which states that A. W. Bradford is Surrogate of the City and County of New York, and acting Clerk of the Surrogate's Court; that he has compared the transcript of the papers with the original records in the matter of the estate of William Young, and finds the same to be correct, and a true copy of all the proceedings; and that the certificate is in due form of law — in testimony whereof he sets his hand and affixes his seal of office — is sufficient.

In an action on a judgment obtained in another State, where the transcript of the judgment shows the jurisdiction of the Court on its face, it is not necessary to aver jurisdiction.

An administrator of an estate in New York, has the right to assign, for a valuable consideration, a judgment obtained there by the intestate in his lifetime, and against a person who has since removed to this State.

APPEAL from the Fourth District, County of San Francisco.

This was an action brought on a judgment obtained in New York.

Low v. Burrows.

One William Young recovered judgment in 1851, in the Court of Common Pleas of New York, against defendant. Afterwards, in 1853, Young having died, his son of the same name took administration on his estate in the Surrogate's Court of the City of New York. Young, the administrator, transferred and assigned to one Swartwout this judgment, who afterwards transferred it to the plaintiff, who instituted this suit. On the trial, plaintiff offered in evidence an exemplification of the proceedings of the Surrogate's Court of New York. The certificate of the Surrogate is as follows:

"STATE AND COUNTY OF NEW YORK, } SURROGATE'S OFFICE. }

"I, Alexander W. Bradford, Surrogate of said County, and acting as Clerk of the Surrogate Court, do hereby certify that I have compared the foregoing copy of the petition, bond, letters of administration, etc., in the matter of granting letters of administration on the estate of William Young, deceased, with the original record thereof, now remaining in this office, and have found the same to be a correct transcript therefrom, and of the whole of such original record, and that this certificate is in due form of law.

"In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my seal of office, this twelfth day of July, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and fifty-five, and of our Independence the eightieth.

A. W. BRADFORD,
Surrogate."

To the introduction of this transcript in evidence, the defendant objected, on the ground that the Surrogate's certificate was not sufficient under the Act of Congress, to admit it to evidence, and on the further ground that the complaint contained no averment that the Surrogate's Court had jurisdiction. The Court sustained the defendant's objection, and the transcript was not read in evidence.

Plaintiff then offered in evidence the assignment of the judgment by the administrator, which was admitted under the objection of the defendant that the administrator could not make the assignment.

Defendant had judgment. Plaintiff moved the Court for a new trial, which was denied, and he appealed to this Court.

First. Judgments are assets where they are given or acknowledged. They then are bona notabilia, and are to be administered by the ordinary Courts of that jurisdiction. *Attorney General v. Bonds are assets where they are at the time of the death of the testator or intestate. (1st Wms. on Errors, ut supra.) A judgment should be assets where recovered—it may ripen into an estate in lands. By the statute Westm. 2d, a statute so old as to constitute a part of the common law, it is a lien on land. Execution issues in the jurisdiction where the judgment is recovered, and can issue nowhere else. In Cosby v. Gilchrist, (7 Dana, p. 207) a judgment recovered in Kentucky is spoken of as assets locally situate in Kentucky, and to be there administered by the local administrator.

Second. If a foreign administrator has, in virtue of his administration, reduced the personal property of the deceased there situated, into his own possession, so that he has acquired the legal title thereto, according to the laws of that country, if that property should afterwards be found in another country, or be carried away and converted there against his will, he may maintain a suit for it there, in his own name and right, personally, without taking out new letters of administration, for he is to all intents and purposes the legal owner thereof, although he is so in the character of trustee for other persons. Stanly & Hays for Respondent.

The Court below did not err in excluding the transcript of proceedings had in the Surrogate's Court of the County of New York; for,

First. The proceedings were not certified so as to entitle them to be read in evidence, either under the Act of Congress, or under section 450 of our Practice Act.

Second. There is no averment in the complaint, nor was there any proof, that the Surrogate's Court had jurisdiction to issue letters of administration upon the estate of the decedent, and it being a Court of special, limited and inferior jurisdiction, all the facts requisite to confer jurisdiction must be both averred and proved by those claiming any right through its decree.

Third. The Court could not admit in evidence or take notice of any letters of administration granted in another State.

They will not support an action out of, but are confined in their operation to, the territorial jurisdiction of the Court granting them.

First Point. The Act of Congress (U. S. Statutes at Large, vol. 1, page 122) and section 450 of our Practice Act, as to who the certificate is to be made by, and how it is to be made, are precisely alike, the latter being copied from the former. They provide that the records and judicial proceedings of the Courts of any other State, to entitle them to be admitted as evidence, shall have "the attestation of the Clerk and the seal of the Court annexed, if there be a seal, together with a certificate of the Judge, Chief Justice or Presiding Magistrate, as the case may be, that the same is in due form."

It has been uniformly held that parties wishing to avail themselves of this Act, must show a strict compliance with its requirements.

Does the certificate in question comply with the statute? Has it been attested to by "the Clerk," with the "seal of the Court," "together with a certificate of the Judge?"

It does not purport to come from the Court, but from the "Surrogate's Office." It reads: "State and County of New York, Surrogate's Office, ss." It then proceeds: "I, Alexander W. Bradford, Surrogate of said county," (he might be Surrogate of the county, and yet not the Surrogate of the Court, or he might not be the sole, chief or presiding Surrogate) "and acting as Clerk of the Surrogate's Court."

---

Low v. Burrows.

---

A certificate by a person "acting as Clerk is not sufficient, for the Clerk who certifies the record, must be the Clerk himself of the same Court; or of its successor; the certificate of his under Clerk, in his absence, or of the Clerk of any other tribunal, office, or body, being held incompetent for this purpose." 1 Green. Ev., sec. 506, and cases there cited.

It does not appear but what the Court had a Clerk distinct and separate from the Judge, and the statute requires an attestation by the "Clerk, together with a certificate of the Judge."

"This, it is said, is founded on the supposition that the Court whose proceedings are to be thus authenticated, is so constituted as to admit of such officers." 1 Green. Ev., sec. 505; Warren v. Flagg, 2 Pick. 450.

The certificate proceeds: "In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affix my seal of office."

The statute requires the "seal of the Court." It is no answer to this to say, "that the seal of office performs a double duty, that it is either the seal of office or the seal of the Court as occasion may require." This may be true, but if it can be made to serve in two characters, it must appear in which of them it was used. Here the certificate says, in effect, that the seal was intended as the seal of office of the Surrogate, and not as the seal of his Court.

The Surrogate may do many acts out of Court, to which he would affix his seal of office, while those acts done in Court would have the seal of the Court attached. The capacity in which the seal was used determines its character and effect. It is signed, "A. W. Bradford, Surrogate."

It therefore does not pretend to be "attested by the Clerk," but by the Surrogate alone. If he was both Surrogate and Clerk, it ought to have been, "Surrogate and Clerk," or "Surrogate and ex

Low v. Burrows.

---

officio Clerk;" and then in addition there ought to have been a further certificate by him as Surrogate alone, for "the seal of the Court must be annexed to the record with the certificate of the Clerk, and not to the certificate of the Judge." 1 Green. Ev. sec. 506; State of Ohio v. Henchman, 27 Penn. State Rep. 480.

The certificate of the Judge is no part of the record. Turner v. Waddington, 3 Wash. C. C. Rep. 126.

Could a mere recital in the certificate of the different offices he filled affect the character of his signature?

The County Clerk of San Francisco county, is ex officio Clerk of the Fourth District Court, Twelfth District Court, County Court, Court of Probate and Court of Sessions. Would a certificate by him, containing this recital, and signed simply "Wm. Duer, County Clerk," be considered by this Court as a certificate of the Clerk of the Probate Court? Clearly not.

Second Point. "The jurisdiction of a Court or Magistrate of special and limited authority, is not to be presumed, but must be averred and proved."

"In such a case a general averment of jurisdiction is not sufficient, but the facts necessary to confer it must be set forth." The People v. Koerber, 7 Hill, 39; Dakin v. Hudson, 6 Cowen, 224.

"It necessarily results from the rule, that the jurisdiction of inferior Courts must appear affirmatively, and cannot be presumed; that all the facts requisite to confer jurisdiction must be averred and proved, whenever the proceedings of such tribunals are relied on, either as a defense or cause of action." 1 Smith's Leading Cases, p. 818, and cases there cited; Cleveland v. Rogers, 6 Wend. 440; Cornwin v. Merritt, 3 Barb. 343; Bloom et al. v. Burdick, 1 Hill, 130; Cornell v. Barnes, 7 Hill, 37, note c; Barnes v. Harris, 3 Barb. 605; Turner v. Roby, 3 Comst. 193.

In Bement v. Wisner, (1 Code Rep. N. S. 143) was that of a complaint on a judgment of the U. S. Circuit Court.

The complaint averred that the Court had jurisdiction and that the judgment was duly given. The defendant demurred, and claimed that the judgment was a foreign judgment, and that the plaintiff was bound to show that the Court had jurisdiction.

The Court overruled the demurrer, but upon the ground that "jurisdiction is intended of the U. S. Circuit Courts."

The Court by this decision impliedly admitted that if the judgment had been a foreign one, the section of their Code would not have applied. Hollister v. Hollister, 10 How. and Practice Rep. 539; 3 Barb. 603.

"In a complaint upon a cause of action dependent upon the laws of other States, a general averment is insufficient. The laws relied upon must be averred and proved." Throop v. Hatch, 3 Abbott's Practice Rep. 23; Pomeroy v. Ainsworth, 23 Barb. 118.

Third Point. The Court could not admit in evidence or take notice of letters of administration granted in another State. They will not support an action out of, but are confined in their operation to the territorial jurisdiction of the Court granting them.

Chancellor Kent, in Morrell v. Dickey, (1 John. Ch. Rep. 156) says: "It is well settled that we cannot take notice of letters testamentary or of administration, granted abroad, and that they give no authority to sue here."

"This is not only the law in England, but it has been very generally adopted in this Country." Williams v. Storrs 6 John. Ch. R. on page 357; Doolittle v. Lewis, 7 John. Ch. Rep. on page 47; Fenwick v. Sears' Administrators, 1 Cranch. 259.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., and FIELD, J., concurring.

One William Young recovered judgment in 1851, in the Court of Common Pleas of New York, against defendant. Afterwards, in 1853, Young having died, his son, of the same name, took administration on his estate in the Surrogate's Court of the City of New York. Young, the administrator, transferred and assigned to one Swartwout this judgment, who afterwards transferred it to the plaintiff. The questions made on the trial of the case in the Court below were these: 1. That the exemplification of the proceedings of the Surrogate's Court was not sufficient to admit it in evidence — the certificate not being in form or substance as prescribed by Act of Congress, or the statute of this State. 2. That the administrator in New York had no right to assign the judgment—the debtor residing at that time beyond the State of New York.

---

As to the first question: It seems that the Surrogate is Judge and Clerk of the Court. This being so, it is only necessary that the certificate should state the main facts which are made necessary by the Acts of Congress to the authentication of the records of a Court, which has both Judge and Clerk. In this case the certificate states that A. W. Bradford is Surrogate of the City and County of New York, and acting as Clerk of the Surrogate's Court; that he has compared the transcript of the papers with the original records in the matter of the estate of William Young, and finds the same to be correct, and a true copy of all the proceedings; and that the certificate is in due form of law.

In testimony of which he sets his hand and affixes his seal of office.

We do not see what more could be required to authenticate to us the records which the officer certifies. The papers show upon their face the jurisdiction of the Court. It is not necessary that the complaint should aver this jurisdiction, and if it were, the defect should have been noticed by demurrer, not by motion to exclude or objection to the admissibility of the transcript.

The second objection is equally untenable. We concede that the administrator has power over only those assets within the State where letters are granted; and we might concede that in the case of notes, bonds, etc., on debtors who live and have their property beyond the jurisdiction, the administrator has no jurisdiction or dominion. But this is not the case in respect to judgments. There can be no doubt if a debtor, against whom the intestate in his lifetime obtained judgment, though at the time of the death of the intestate the debtor was beyond the jurisdiction, afterwards came within the jurisdiction, the administrator might proceed to collect the money from him. The effect of a judgment, as such, unlike a note, is confined to the State where rendered. It is therefore record evidence of a debt. It may be sued on, it is true, out of the State. But it is not easy to see how an administrator of the creditor in California could take to himself as assets a judgment remaining on record in New York, merely from the fact that the debtor happened, for the time being, to reside in California. If the debtor went back to New York, or had property there, it is clear that the California administrator could not collect the money. If he collected anywhere, it would not be by virtue of the judgment in New York vesting in him any title to it, but merely because the transcript of the judgment gave him evidence upon which he might sue. The judgment is a record, and for any use to be made of it, or any power to enforce it, by execution or other process, must belong to the administrator in New York; or this anomaly would result: That the administrator in California would own the judgment for the purpose of suing on it in California, and the administrator in New York would own it for the purpose of collecting it by issuing execution in New York. We think no such doctrine can be maintained.

Low v. Burrows.

---

If the New York administrator owned it for one purpose — for the purpose of collecting it by execution in New York — he owned it for the purpose of receiving the money on it; if the defendant chose voluntarily to pay it, it matters not where the defendant resided at the time. If he could receive the money or collect it, he could assign it for value.

The authorities cited by the appellant maintain this distinction. (See particularly Attorney General v. Bowmens, 4 Meis. and W. 171.) Lord Abinger laid down the rule thus: "Whatever may have been the origin of the jurisdiction of the ordinary to grant probate, it is clear that it is a limited jurisdiction, and can be exercised in respect of those effects only, which he would have had himself to administer in case of intestacy, and which must therefore have been so situated as that he could have disposed of them in pios usus. As to the locality of many descriptions of effects, household and movable goods, for instance, there never could be any dispute; but to prevent conflicting jurisdictions between different ordinaries, with respect to choses in action and titles to property, it was established as law that judgment debts were assets, for the purposes of jurisdiction, where the judgment is recorded; leases where the land lies; specialty debts where the instrument happens to be; and simple contract debts where the debtor resides at the time of the testator's death; and it was also decided that, as bills of exchange and promissory notes do not alter the nature of the simple contract debts, but are merely evidences of title, the debts due on these instruments were assets where the debtor lived, and not where the instrument was found. In truth, with respect to simple contract debts, the only act of administration that could be performed by the ordinary would be to recover or to receive payment of the debt, and that would be done by him with whose jurisdiction the debtor happened to be." (So it said in Vaughn v. Barrett, 5 Vermt. 333.) "An idea seems to have been entertained, that the jurisdiction over the debt in this case followed the person of the creditor. But it is to be observed that jurisdiction or the right of administration in respect to debts due a deceased person, never follows the residence of a creditor. They are always bona notabilia, unless they happen to fall within the jurisdiction where he resided. (See Bac. Ab. Exors E. Cro. Eliz. 472.) Judgments are bona notabilia where the record is. (Ld. Rayd. 855; Carth. 149; 8 Mod. 244; Anon 6 Geo. II., cited by Selw.) Specialties where they are at the time of the creditor's decease (Sum. v. Dobson, cited in Selw. N. P.; Byon v. Byron, Cro. Eliz. 472), and simple contracts where the debtor resides (Carthew, 373; Salk. 37; Ld. Rayd. 562)."

Low v. Burrows.

In this last case, one Matt recovered judgment in Vermont; administration was taken on the plaintiff's estate in that State; the plaintiff resided in New York at the time of judgment, and also at the time of his death; the defendant in the judgment procured and pleaded a release from the New York administrator. The Supreme Court of Vermont held the release ineffectual; and it was in answer to the argument that the debt followed the residence of the creditor, that the Court used the language above quoted. Had the judgment been obtained in New York, it is clear, from the reasoning and authorities cited by the Court, that it would have upheld the power of the New York administrator over the judgment, as assets of that jurisdiction. In fact, the right of the Vermont administrator is placed upon the fact of the rendition of the judgment there.

The industry of the counsel of respondents has collected numerous cases in which the power of administrators over assets of the estate has been declared, but he has cited no case which denies the right of the administrator of the creditor of the deceased to control or collect a judgment rendered within the jurisdiction where letters were granted, although the debtor resides in a different jurisdiction.

Jones v. Thompson.

---

The right of an administrator, at common law, to assign the choses in action of the intestate is not denied; and nothing in the legislation or jurisprudence of New York to the contrary has been shown.

The Court below excluded the record offered on the trial, and this was excepted to. This exclusion might have induced the plaintiff to decline introducing complete proof of the assignment, etc., as, if introduced under the ruling of the Court, it would have been insufficient to maintain the action.

The judgment of the Court below is reversed, and cause remanded.

JONES v. THOMPSON et al.

J. filed his bill in the District Court against T., alleging a partnership between them, and praying for an account of the partnership property. Subsequently, J. filed a petition in the same Court, setting forth the bill, and also that L. T. B. and H. B. had obtained judgment against T. the defendant, and that execution had issued on the judgment, and was levied on the partnership property of the plaintiff and defendant, and that the Sheriff was about to sell the property. The petition prayed that L. T. B. and H. B. might be made parties, and that an injunction might issue against L. T. B. and H. B. and the Sheriff; Held: That on the appeal of the case to this Court, it does not lie in the mouth of J. and T. to say that L. T. B. and H. B. are not parties to the suit, and have no right of appeal.

The interest of one partner in the partnership chattels, is the subject of levy and sale by the Sheriff, on an execution against one of the partners.

But the Sheriff can only seize and sell the interest and right of the judgment partner therein, subject to the prior rights and liens of the other partners and the joint creditors therein.

In such case, the decree should not order a private sale of the firm property. The selling of cattle, sheep, etc., at private sale, is dangerous as a precedent, and liable to great abuse in practice.

APPEAL from the Third District, County of Monterey.

The facts as disclosed by the opinion of the Court, are as follows:

This bill was filed in the District Court of the Second District, on the fourth day of April, 1856. The bill charges a partnership between the plaintiff and defendant, and prays an account. Thompson was the only defendant to the bill, and filed his answer denying the allegations of the bill. Neither the bill nor answer is verified.

---

---

Shortly after this time, plaintiff filed a petition in the District Court, setting forth the complaint, and also that Lewis T. Burton and Harvey B. Blake had obtained judgment in the First District Court, against A. B. Thompson, the defendant, and that execution had issued on the judgment, and been levied on certain cattle, the property of plaintiff and defendant Thompson, and that the Sheriff was threatening to sell the property by virtue of the execution. The petition prayed that the plaintiffs in the execution, Burton and Blake, might be made parties to that proceeding, and that an injunction might be issued against Burton and Blake and the Sheriff of Santa Barbara county, enjoining and restraining them, their agents and attorneys, from proceeding to sell or otherwise dispose of any of the cattle, horses and other property levied on. On the twenty-sixth of June, 1856, an injunction was granted according to the prayer of the petition, by the Judge of the Second District. On the twenty-seventh June, Burton and Blake appeared in Court and asked for a dissolution of the injunction, and that their names might be stricken from the record. The motion for the dissolution of the injunction was denied. Afterwards, on motion of the plaintiff's attorney, the cause was removed to the Third Judicial District, on the ground of incapacity of the Judge, he being related to the plaintiff.

On the twenty-sixth day of April, 1858, the Court entered a final decree, by which a receiver was appointed, and ordered to take immediate possession of the property and to sell so much of it at private sale as would bring the sum of $7,370, and costs of suit and charges of the receiver, and divide the remaining property and cattle on the island between Jones and Thompson, and ordering the injunction to remain in full force and effect against Burton and Blake and the Sheriff.

Thompson, Irving & Pate for Appellants:

1. The first point we present to the consideration of the Court is, that the injunction in this case was irregularly issued, and Burton and Blake improperly made parties to this suit.

---

---

The statute provides in what manner suits shall be commenced, and how injunctions shall issue. Practice Act, section 22, provides "that an action shall be commenced by filing a complaint and issuing a summons thereon." See sec. 113, Prac. Act.

In order to make Lewis T. Burton and Harvey B. Blake parties to this suit, there should have been filed a complaint verified by John C. Jones, or some one in his behalf, against Burton and Blake, and a summons issued thereon. This is the only mode known to our practice. Prac. Act, sec. 114.

In this case the only defendant, Thompson, had answered previously to the filing of the petition for the injunction, and the record nowhere shows any notice, or an order to show cause upon any of these defendants, before the issuing of the injunction.

But it shows conclusively that they did not have notice, nor was an order obtained to show cause, because the petition for the injunction was filed on the twenty-fourth day of June, 1856, and the injunction was issued on the twenty-fifth day of June, 1856.

The law requires that a notice of five days shall be given in all cases of motions, etc., unless the Judge prescribe a shorter period. The record here does not show that the Judge entered an order shortening the time, therefore the granting of the injunction was improper under this section of the statute.

2. Burton and Blake not being parties, no injunction could issue against them. Daniels' Ch. Practice, 3 vol. p. 1834-1837; Walker v. Deveraux, 4 Paige, 229; Fellows v. Fellows, 4 John. Ch. R. 25; Waller v. Harris, 7 Paige, 167.

3. The next point to which we call the attention of the Court is, that admitting for the sake of argument that Burton and Blake were regularly made parties to this suit, then we say, that a Court of Equity will not interfere to stop an execution at law, in cases of this character, until the partnership accounts have been taken. Sitler & Johnson v. Walker, 1 Freeman Ch., Kentucky, 77 Brewster v. Hammet, 4 Conn. 450.

The interest of each partner is his share of the surplus, subject to all the partnership accounts, and that interest is liable to the executions of a creditor. Dutton v. Morrison, 17 Ves. Jur., 1 Rose, 213.

---

Nor in ordinary cases will the Court out of which the execution issues, interfere on motion. Phillips v. Cook, 24 Wend. 390, 401, 608.

So the rule seems to be well established, that a Court of Equity will not interfere to stop an execution at law.

And the only instances in which a Court of Equity ever interferes with an execution at law, is where the property is of a peculiar value, and the party could not be compensated in damages by the verdict of a jury. Allen v. Freeland, 3 Rand. 173.

The property levied on in this case is not of that peculiar value, so that the owner can not be compensated in damages by the verdict of the jury.

He has three distinct legal remedies; he could bring an action at law, to recover the property, against the purchaser, or sue the Sheriff for damages for the taking and detaining thereof, and an action on the indemnity bond.

The question seems to be whether a partner's interest in partnership effects, can be levied upon at all under a common law execution. That it can, principle, policy and authority agree: the first, because the partner has a legal interest in possession, which is leviable estate; the second, because otherwise a debtor by merely entering into a partnership might screen all his property from his creditors, and the third, by a series of cases and a continued practice from the earliest times. If an execution can be sustained at all, there is no mode in which it can be done but by a seizure of the goods and a levy and sale of the legal interest.

The respondents may say in this case, that Burton and Blake not being parties to the record, have no right to appeal. Should this point be raised, we will merely refer the Court to the case of Adams v. Woods, (8 Cal. 306, and 9 Cal., page 616) in which the Court says: "a party aggrieved by a judgment, has a right of appeal, although he is not a party to the record."

Saunders & Brent for Respondent Jones.

1. The appeal should be dismissed as not being taken by a party to the record.

---

Jones v. Thompson.

---

After the suit of Jones v. Thompson was commenced, the plaintiff, Jones, filed a petition for an injunction against Burton and Blake.

This petition is not entitled in this action and should not be regarded as a part thereof; it contains by itself a distinct cause of action, and makes new parties, and is in all respects a new cause, which is now pending, and should be regarded as distinct and separate from the one at bar. It cannot be considered as a part of the proceedings in this action because the plaintiff did not so ask it, because it is independent of it, because in order to be a part it will be necessary to regard the petition as a supplemental bill, which it does not purport to be, and for the filing of which no permission of the Court was asked or granted. Upon its face the injunction proceedings constitute a separate case by itself and should not be mixed or confounded with the present suit.

2. But if Burton and Blake are to be regarded as parties to this record, then they are to be subject to all the responsibilities that ordinarily attach to parties to a litigation.

The final decree was entered in April, but they only appealed four months after. They have made no motion for a new trial, nor have they prepared, nor has the Judge certified to, any statement to be used on appeal; so that the only case they are entitled to bring into this Court, is that made by the judgment roll alone.

3. The appellants claim that a Court of Equity will not interfere, at the instance of one partner, to stop a sale under an execution at law, issued by an individual creditor of the other partner, and levied on partnership property.

As applied to the present case, the claim of appellants is this: that notwithstanding Jones had gone into a Court of Equity, seeking an account and a dissolution of a partnership, consisting of horses, cattle and sheep, between himself and Thompson, and claiming that the partnership was indebted to him in the sum of $60,000, yet the appellants, Burton and Blake, two months subsequent to the commencement of this suit, and after it was at issue, had a right to levy upon this common property for a separate debt of Thompson, and authorize the Sheriff to sell the same at public auction and deliver it to purchasers.

When a Sheriff, upon an execution against one partner, levies on and sells partnership property, he has a right to take possession of the whole property, and deliver it over to the purchaser or purchasers. Phillips v. Cook, 24 Wend. 389, 407-8; Walsh v. Adams, 3 Denio, 127.

Jones v. Thompson.

---

So that the claim of appellants amounts to this: that Burton and Blake could have forced all these horses, cattle and sheep to sale by the Sheriff, could have required the Sheriff to deliver the same to forty or fifty purchasers, as the case may be, and thus require Jones, who had already commenced his action against Thompson, and who had a prior lien on the property, to pursue his rights by suing each one of the vendees of the Sheriff.

We submit that partners have an equitable lien upon partnership property for partnership debts, which lien is prior to the claim of the separate creditors of the individual partners. Story's Eq., sec. 675; Greenwood v. Brodhead, 8 Barb. S. C. 596.

The interest of a partner in a firm can be attached at the suit of his separate creditors, and can be sold by the Sheriff unless enjoined, but this attachment is subject to the paramount claims of the partnership creditors, who, by a subsequent levy, can defeat the prior attachment.

All the authorities agree on this point. Price v. Jackson, 6 Mass. 242; Story on Part., sec. 263; Phillips v. Cook, 24 Wend. 389; Wilder v. Keeler, 3 Paige, 167.

But our Supreme Court has affirmed the principle that partnership creditors are entitled to a preference in the distribution of joint property, over separate creditors of an individual partner. Chase v. Steel, 9 Cal. 66; see Collyer on Part., secs. 825-6-7-8-9-30; also, sec. 831; 1 Madd: Ch. 131-6; 1 Eden on Injunctions, 53-6; Gow on Part., ch. 4, sec. 1, p. 252; Taylor v. Field, 4 Vesey, 396; Taylor v. Field, 15 Vesey, 559, note; Skip v. Sherwood, 2 Swanst. 586.

The weight of American authority is the same way. Story on Part., sec. 264; Witter v. Richards, 10 Conn. 37; Moore v. Sample, 3 Ala. R. N. 319; 1 Green, N. I. Ch. R. 163; Place v. Sweetser, 16 Ohio, 142; 1 Story Eq., sec. 628.

In opposition to the unbroken current of English authority, and the influence of the American decisions, we have only two cases in conflict. Moody v. Payne, (2 John. Ch. R. 548). Here Chancellor

---

Jones v. Thompson.

---

Kent refused to issue an injunction to restrain a sale under an execution issued at the suit of a separate creditor of a partner, and levied on the partnership property.

He based his refusal upon the ground that it would produce delay and embarrassment to creditors, and says that the Court had never undertaken to restrain a Sheriff in a like case.

He quotes no authority where an injunction was repressed, and omits reference to the English cases where it was the constant practice to restrain execution, as appears by the authorities quoted. This decision was made in 1817, and not in a Court of final appellate jurisdiction, and though it has been the subject of earnest criticism by Mr. Justice Story, and elaborate defense by Chancellor Kent, in the note to p. 75, 3 Kent's Com. (8th edition) yet no antecedent authority has been shown to maintain it, and the only one bearing upon the question, (Re Smith, 16 John. 102) is directly opposed to it in principle, and no direct approval even in New York could be adduced; and the only subsequent case which could be found by the Chancellor, approving this decision, was Phillips v. Cook, (24 Wend. 389) already quoted, which was a case at law, not involving the powers of a Court of Chancery.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., and FIELD, J., concurring.

Several errors are assigned by Burton and Blake, who are the appellants here. They are met, however, at the threshold, by the objection that they have no standing in Court, because the respondents' counsel say they are not parties to the record. We think the objection is not good. The petition was certainly a very irregular way to get them into the cause, but it is an irregularity of which the respondents cannot complain. The petition, though not entitled of the cause, was filed among the papers as a part of the record related to the subject matter of the suit, and was acted on by the Judge as a portion of the pleadings, and the final decree refers expressly to the injunction granted on the petition and in pursuance of its prayer, and makes that injunction perpetual. Being affected directly by the judgment, it certainly does not lie in the mouth of the plaintiff below to say the defendants, Burton and Blake, are not parties to it and have no right of appeal.

Jones v. Thompson.

---

It is contended that the cattle, etc., of the partnership is not the subject of levy and sale by the Sheriff, on an execution against Thompson, one of the partners. We think the rule is otherwise. The interest of one partner in partnership property is such an estate under our statute as may be sold for his debts; it is a legal estate in chattels. It is true that, as between the partners, the interest of each is only the residuum of the property left after the settlement of the firm debts; and that the rights of firm creditors and the several partners are paramount to the claims of separate creditors of the firm.

But this interest of the partner thus defined, is held by the weight of authority subject to levy for his debts. Story on Partnership, (sec. 263) thus states the rule: "In cases of this sort, therefore, the real position of the parties, relatively to each other, seems to be this: The partnership property may be taken in execution upon a separate judgment and execution, against one partner; but the Sheriff can only seize and sell the interest and right of the judgment partner therein, subject to the prior rights and liens of the other partners and the joint creditors therein. By such seizure the Sheriff acquires a special property in the goods seized; and the judgment creditor himself may, and the Sheriff, also, with the consent of the judgment creditor, may file a bill against the other partners for the ascertainment of the quantity of that interest, before any sale is actually made under the execution. The judgment creditor, however, is not bound, if he does not choose, to wait until such interest is so ascertained, but he may require the Sheriff immediately to proceed to a sale, which order the Sheriff is bound by law to obey. In the event of a sale, the purchaser at the sale is substituted to the rights of the execution partner, quoad the property sold, and becomes a tenant in common thereof; and he may file a bill, or a bill may be filed against him by the other partners, to ascertain the quantity of interest which he has acquired by the sale."

Chancellor Kent held in Moody v. Payne, (2 Johns. Ch. 548) that an injunction should not be granted to restrain a sale by the Sheriff, upon the ground that no harm is thereby done to the other partners; and the sacrifice, if any, is the loss of the judgment debtors only. Mr.

Jones v. Thompson.

---

Justice Story, (on Part., sec. 264) remarking upon this decision, says: "This does not seem to be a sufficient ground upon which an injunction should be denied. If the debtor partner has, or will have upon a final adjustment of the accounts, no interest in the partnership funds, and if other partners have a lien upon the funds, not only for the debts of the partnership, but for the balance ultimately due to them, it may most materially affect their rights whether a sale takes place or not. For it may be extremely difficult to follow the property into the hands of the various vendees; and the lien of the other partners may, perhaps, be displaced, or other equities arise by intermediate bona fide sales of the property in favor of the vendees, or other purchasers without notice; and the partners may have to sustain all the chances of any supervening insolvencies of the immediate vendees. To prevent multiplicity of suits and irreparable mischiefs, and to insure an unquestionable lien to the partners, it would seem perfectly proper, in cases of this sort, to restrain any sale by the Sheriff."

But this doctrine has no application to this case. The petition makes no case fit for the rule here laid down. It may safely be conceded that if the judgment debtor be indebted to the firm, or the firm be so indebted that on a settlement the debtor partner would not be entitled to any share of the common property, that the other partner might intervene to prevent a sale of the partnership assets. But it would be a great hardship, and would lead to enormous frauds if, merely because the account was unsettled and something due, however small the amount, the creditor should be postponed until an account was taken. No man with a small debt against such debtor, could afford to prosecute his claim; and the effect would be, in almost every case, to prevent or postpone a sale at the suit of the separate creditor.

The petition does not show any facts upon which the injunction was properly granted.

The decree shows a balance of some $7,000 due from the defendant to the plaintiff; but this balance the decree itself shows is wrong. The amount is given as the excess of receipts of firm money over expenditures; but for this excess the defendant was only responsible to his partner for one-half, not for the whole. The bill shows a great number of cattle, sheep, etc., of a value largely exceeding this comparatively small debt due the plaintiff. The appellants are interested in correcting this error, as the property, if sold by them, would be subject to this claim.

---

In the matter of the Estate of E. Knight.

---

The decree is also erroneous in ordering a private sale of the firm property. The selling property of this sort in this way, is dangerous as a precedent, and liable to great abuse in practice. Only so much of the property as is necessary to pay the firm debts should be ordered to be sold, and the balance divided.

These principles being decisive of this case on the merits, it is not necessary to notice minor points.

The decree of the Court below is reversed, the order for injunction dissolved, and the cause remanded for a decree in pursuance of this opinion.

IN THE MATTER OF THE ESTATE OF E. KNIGHT, DECEASED.

An Administrator cannot pay out the money of the estate to remove an incumbrance from the property of the estate, which debt the estate is in no way responsible for.

He is to take care of, manage and preserve the estate committed to him; but this does not mean that he is, at discretion, to pay off all incumbrances resting on the property, upon the notion that property may increase in value, and thereby a speculation may be made for the estate.

If a case should arise in which a great sacrifice would ensue unless money were paid to discharge an incumbrance, it is not impossible that a Court of Chancery might order the expenditure of the money needed to remove such incumbrance.

If an Administrator undertakes to go beyond the strict line of his duty as the law defines it, he acts upon his own responsibility, and while he can receive no profit from a successful issue of his investment, he must bear the loss of a failure.

The Administrator, in the absence of special authority, must administer the estate as he finds it, paying taxes and other necessary expenses, and doing such other acts as are necessary to preserve it as left; he cannot advance money to remove incumbrances, unless his intestate was bound to pay the money.

APPEAL from the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco.

---

In the matter of the Estate of E. Knight.

---

The facts, as disclosed by the opinion of the Court, are as follows:

The appeal is taken by the administrator from a decree of the Probate Court, disallowing a claim of $2,000 and more. This claim originated under these circumstances: The intestate bought one-fifth of a tract of land called the Suscol Ranch. The ranch was incumbered in the hands of the vendees (from one of whom Knight purchased) for some $25,000 of purchase money due by mortgage. Patterson, the administrator, to prevent the foreclosure of the mortgage, made an arrangement with Vallejo, the mortgagee, by which the general claim of Vallejo was removed from Knight's portion of the ranch, and that portion held for only its share; that is, for one-fifth of the sum; and by which arrangement the sale of the mortgaged premises was postponed. The administrator made a payment of the sum in controversy to Vallejo, in order to, and as a consideration for, this arrangement. Knight was not originally bound to pay this money; but the debt existed as an incumbrance upon the estate purchased by him from the vendee of Vallejo. This arrangement was made, and this money paid by the administrator without any order or sanction of the Court of Probate or any other Court, but at his own instance, and from considerations of advantage to the estate. The land was afterwards sold by order of the Probate Court, and for such a sum as left an entire loss to the estate of the sum paid by the administrator to Vallejo.

The Probate Court refused to allow the amount paid by the administrator to remove the incumbrance, and he appealed to this Court.

Sidney V. Smith for Appellant.

I. Under our laws, an administrator is obliged to take into his possession both personal and real estate. Sec. 194 of Act of 1851; Harwood v. Marye, Oct. T. 1857. And is bound to keep it until the estate be settled, or till it shall be delivered over by order of Court to the heirs, etc. Sec. 114 of same Act.

It is his duty to pay all the debts of the deceased out of the personal property, and can only sell real estate in case of deficiency. Sec. 115.

The reason and object of this last section is clear. It is nothing more than declaratory of the common law under which the personal property went to the administrator, the real to the heir; and the intention of our law, while vesting both in the administrator, is still to preserve the realty to the heir. So decided in Belloc v. Rogers, Jan. T. 1858.

---

In the matter of the Estate of E. Knight.

---

The administrator is bound to keep the real estate in good order and repair. Sec. 114. And he is to be allowed all necessary expenses in the care of the estate, as also in its management. Sec. 219.

The word "care" is here placed in juxtaposition to the word "management;" so that it cannot be held to mean what the latter word does. Its meaning must be deeper; and it must be taken to mean "preservation," which is one of its significations.

"Care" is defined by Webster to mean "a looking to, heed or attention, with a view to safety or protection, as the care of property."

Taxes are not the personal debt of the decedent, nor are they of his creation; and still they are a lien on land, and if not paid, the land is sold, and thereby lost to the heir.

The mortgage due to Vallejo was not a debt created by the decedent, nor was it strictly one due by the estate; and yet it was a lien on land owned by the estate; and as with taxes, so with this mortgage: if it had not been paid, the land could have been sold under foreclosure by Vallejo.

The administrator, therefore, exercising "care" over the estate—over the land which was part of the assets of the estate—settled the mortgage to Vallejo in a manner which at the time was certainly highly beneficial to the estate; that is—by the payment of $2,500 in case he retained to the estate that which was on the day of such payment worth to the estate $20,000. This payment was therefore a necessary expense, without which the land could not have been then preserved to the widow and heirs.

If it had been a debt created or assumed by the decedent in his lifetime, it would have been under the entire control not only of the administrator but of the Court; it would have fallen within the rule laid down in Ellison v. Halleck, Oct. T. 1856, and subsequent cases. The reason for this is apparent. It is only the creditors of the deceased who are bound to present their claims to the administrator, or else be barred; and it is only they whom the administrator is bound to give notice to, to present their claims. Secs. 128, 129, 130, &c.

In the matter of the Estate of E. Knight.

A sale of real estate can only be made when the personal property is insufficient to pay the allowance to the family, the debts outstanding against the deceased, and the expenses of administration.

Now, in no aspect was Vallejo a creditor of the deceased, nor had he a debt outstanding against the deceased. All he had was a mere lien on real estate owned by deceased.

If it were a valid claim against the estate, then the result would have been, that it would have been a debt due by the estate; and if the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property were insufficient to pay the whole of the debt, the residue would have had to be paid in due course of administration. See sec. 186.

II. It is a well founded rule of a Court of Equity, and more especially of a Court of Probate, that if an executor or administrator, honestly and in good faith, does without the order of the Court that which the Court on application to it would have ordered to be done, he shall be protected. 2 Ashmead, (Penn.) 211; Hopkins' Ch. R. 28; 2 Hill Ch. R. (So. Ca.) 215; 1 Bailey Ch. R. (So. Ca.) 23.

Now, if the administrator in this case, threatened as he was by Vallejo with the foreclosure of the mortgage of $25,000, had in May, 1854, made application to the Court for directions, what would have been the result? We will suppose, for the present, that the Court possessed full power in this matter: The administrator would have stated in his petition the fact that the mortgage was neither given by the decedent nor assumed by him, but was one given by the grantors of the decedent; that the property owned by the estate was worth $20,000 (making, therefore, the value of the whole ranch to be $100,000, since the estate only owned the one-fifth); that the administrator had sufficient funds in hand; that the property had depreciated in value somewhat, but that such depreciation was according to the opinion of every one only temporary; that he could arrange the matter with the mortgagee by paying $2,500 cash, and obtain time for paying the balance, $2,500 more, and thus release the estate, and that the heirs to the estate were the widow and two children; and he would have asked instructions from the Court as to the course he should pursue.

Would the Court, on such a state of facts, have ordered the administrator to let the foreclosure go on? and that he should only take the proportion of the residue remaining after the mortgage was paid, with all the Court costs and expenses of sale?

In the matter of the Estate of E. Knight.

---

In this view of the case, the Court would certainly have ordered the administrator to do what he did do. He had, in May, 1854, funds in hand.

In the administration of an estate — in all those various matters which must depend on the judgment of the executor or administrator, and which are not regulated and prescribed by legislative enactments — the rule of guidance is, that no more ought to be expected than would be performed by any prudent man in the care and management of his own property. Dillebaugh's Est., 4 Watts, 177; Jones' Appeal, 8 Watts & Sergt. 148; Meeher v. Vanderveer, 3 Green, 392.

In Welsh v. Perkins, 8 Hammond, 52, taxes were due on an estate in the hands of an administrator. He had no money of the estate to pay them with, and in order to prevent a sale, he borrowed of a friend the amount required, agreeing that he would at a future day apply to the Court for an order of sale, and would sell certain specified property to raise the money so borrowed. He acted in perfect good faith. He obtained the order, and sold a certain piece of land. It so happened, that after sale the land so sold rose rapidly in value, whereas the other lands not sold remained stationary. It was sought by the heirs to make him responsible for the loss. The Court held the estate liable, and allowed the amount to administrator.

In Williams on Executors, 1280, it is said: "If an executor surrenders, or otherwise fails to preserve the residue of a term of years, where the land is of more value than the rent, it is a devastavit, for which he is responsible."

So, also, on page 1281, it is said, that though, generally speaking, an executor compounding or releasing a debt, must answer for the same; yet if it appears to have been for the benefit of the estate, it is an excuse.

Again, on page 1287: "Where an executor puts out the money of his testator, though without the indemnity of a decree, upon real security, which there was no reason then to suspect, but afterwards, such security prove bad, the executor is not responsible for the loss." See Estate of Bosie, 2. Ashmead, (Pa.) 437.

F. A. Fabens for Respondent.

1st. Had the administrator any right or authority to make these payments to Vallejo?

The administrator has only such powers as are given him by statute, by the Act of May 1st, 1851, regulating the settlement of the estates of deceased persons, and those powers are a limitation of the powers given by the common law.

Thus he can compound with a debtor only with the approbation of the Probate Judge. Sec. 201 of Act of 1851.

He cannot enter into an agreement in writing to refer a doubtful claim, except to some disinterested person to be appointed by the Probate Judge. Sec. 142 of Act of 1851.

Neither can he sell personal property except by order of the Probate Court. Sec. 148 of Act of 1851.

The duty of an administrator, then, is plainly defined. He has no discretion to act generally for the good of the estate—to do that which he believes in good faith will be advantageous to it. But he must act according to the law, and the authority given him by the law. If he assumes to exceed his authority in a case where he thinks it will be beneficial to the estate, he does it at his own risk. The law does not require him to do it, and, if loss occurs, does not protect him.

The administrator shall take into his possession both the real and personal estate of the deceased. Secs. 114 and 194 of Act of 1851.

“This, however, is only that he may receive the rents and profits until the administration is concluded; the law does not make the real estate descend to him as in the case of personalty. By the common law, the real estate is the heir’s, the personal estate the administrator’s; and this rule is not altered with us, except so far as regards the temporary custody of the realty. Beckett v. Selover, 7 Cal. 215.

The administrator shall keep in good tenable repair all houses, buildings and fences thereon, which are under his control. Sec. 114 of Act of 1851.

What payments is an administrator authorized to make? See secs. 242, 239.

---

In the matter of the Estate of E. Knight.

---

Sec. 243 provides, that the Court shall make an order for the payment of the debts, as the circumstances of the estate shall require.

And by sec. 219 the administrator shall be allowed all necessary expenses in the care, management and settlement of the estate, and for his services such fees as the law provides.

So far from this payment being a necessary expense in the care, management and settlement of the estate, it seems rather to have been a speculative expense. If the ranch, instead of further decreasing, had improved in value, it would have been beneficial; if it continued depreciating, it would be disastrous. The administrator, no doubt, thought that the property would improve, and he was willing to run the risk. It did in fact depreciate, and he must bear the loss. It was not, then, a necessary expense, etc.; for if it had not been incurred the estate would have been better off by some thousands of dollars.

But it is argued, that the word "care" used in sec. 219, is broad enough to cover this payment of a mortgage upon real estate. The necessary expenses in the care of the estate would doubtless include the expenses of keeping houses, buildings, etc., in tenable repair, which the administrator is especially enjoined to do; but certainly it would not embrace the payment of a mortgage upon real estate which the administrator is nowhere authorized to make.

It is said, however, that these payments were made in good faith, and were at the time made with the object of benefiting the estate. But it is not enough to act in good faith merely. In Rossiter v. Cosmit, 15 New Hamp. 41, the Court says: "We cannot adopt the principle suggested in the argument for the appellee, that the administrator is to be allowed the amount he has paid in the redemption of the mortgage to the Wardens of Union Church, if he acted in good faith merely." And again: "But notwithstanding that he acted in good faith, if what he did would probably operate to the prejudice of the creditors, and will in fact so operate if he is allowed the amount paid, we must not disregard their interests because of his good intentions."

In Alsop v. Mather, 8 Conn. 586, the general proposition is stated thus: "An administrator is an agent who is created, and whose powers and duty are prescribed by law. The extent of his liability is defined by the condition of his bond."

In the matter of the Estate of E. Knight.

---

There are several cases in Louisiana not decided upon any enactment of the Code, which illustrate the general principles declaratory of the limited powers of an administrator. Russell v. Cash, 2 La. 187, republished in 1 Louisiana Reports, 317; Gillett v. Ruchall, 9 Robinson, 279.

An administrator cannot, in any transaction in which he pretends to act as such, create any liability on the estate, or change the nature of its obligations, or increase its responsibility with regard to its outstanding debts, and if he does so, he will be personally bound. Bank of Louisiana v. Dejean, 12 Robinson, 19; and cases commented upon by the Court in that case; see also to this same point, Whightman v. Townroe, 1 Maule & Selwyn, 415; Alsop v. Mather, 8 Conn. 587; Wyse v. Smith et al., 4 Gill & John.

So too, when the widow of the deceased testator entered into an agreement with the executors, by which she relinquished her dower, and they agreed, as executors, to pay her in consideration thereof a certain sum therein specified. The Court held that the estate was not liable on the contract of the executors, but that the contract only bound them personally. Callis v. Tolson's Exors., 6 Gill & Johnson, 91.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., concurring.

This is unquestionably a hard case on the administrator, for he seems to have acted in good faith. But we cannot relax or set aside the rules of law to suit the exigencies of particular cases, or relieve individual instances of hardship.

The statutes of this State do not allow an administrator to pay even the debts due by an intestate except in a particular way. Certainly they do not allow him to pay money not due by an intestate, upon an idea that the payment might be beneficial to the estate. He is to take care of, manage and preserve the estate committed to him; but this does not mean that he is, at discretion, to pay off all incumbrances resting on the property, upon the notion that the property may increase in value, and thereby a speculation may be made for the estate. If this were so, an administrator might consume all the assets of the estate in clearing the title to a portion of the property, and then the property might turn out to be valueless or worth but little. If a case should arise in which a great sacrifice would ensue unless money were paid to discharge an incumbrance, it is not impossible that a Court of Chancery might order the expenditure of the money needed to remove such incumbrance. The rule of equity is, that a trustee has a right, in questions of responsibility and difficulty, to seek the direction of a Court of Chancery, touching his conduct in the trust, and that the decree of the Court is a protection to him. But if he undertakes to go beyond the strict line of his duty as the law defines it, he acts upon his own responsibility, and while he can receive no profit from a successful issue of his investment, he must bear the loss of a failure. It would be a most dangerous precedent to hold that an administrator may speculate with the funds of the estate, or pay charges not allowed by law, though solely with a view of benefiting the estate, and then throw the loss upon the estate, and assign his good intentions as a defense to the injurious consequences of his acts.

Wagenblast v. Washburn.

The administrator, in the absence of special authority, must administer the estate as he finds it, paying taxes and other necessary expenses, and doing such other acts as are necessary to preserve it as left; he cannot advance money to remove incumbrances, unless his intestate was bound to pay the money. If he takes the responsibility of improving the estate, or bettering the title in this way, it must be at his own risk. The loss cannot be visited upon the heirs, who gave him no authority to cause it. Nor can he ask legal protection, when he has himself, though with the best motives, gone beyond the provisions of the law.

The decree of the Probate Court is affirmed.

APPEAL from the Sixth District, County of Sacramento.

This was an action of ejectment for a lot of ground in the City of Sacramento. The cause was tried in the Court below without a jury. The defendant had judgment, and the plaintiff appealed to this Court. The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion of the Court.

Winans for Appellant.

A Court of Chancery, though it has authority to correct mistakes, is very reluctant in exerting it, and will only do so where the evidence is perfectly clear. And even Chancery will grant no relief in such cases as against subsequent bona fide purchasers for valuable consideration without notice. Story's Eq. Juris., vol. 1, sections 151, 139 and 165, with cases cited under Note 1 to said section 165 and sections 435 and 436.

"In all cases of mistake in written instruments, Courts of Equity will interfere only as between the original parties, etc., or purchasers from them with notice of the facts. As against bona fide purchasers for a valuable consideration without notice, Courts of Equity will grant no relief, because they have at least an equal equity to the protection of the Court." Warwick v. Warwick, 3 Atk. 290 and 293; Wall v. Arrington, 13 Georgia, 89; Woodworth v. Guzman, 1 Cal. 203.

In the case last cited, the right to correct a mistake in a mortgage is admitted, as against a mortgagor, but not against a person claiming under him, unless the latter has actual notice of the existence of the prior lien. Again, even if Chauviteau had notice of the mistake, which is not admitted, still that does not defeat plaintiff's right to recover. A notice to a prior purchaser, grantor or assignor, even in a Court of Equity, does not affect the rights of a subsequent purchaser, grantee or assignee in good faith, for a valuable consideration and without notice. 1 Story's Eq., sections 409 and 401; Sugden on Vendors, 1037, section 20, vol. 2 of 7th Am. Ed., p. 533; Curtiss v. Mundy, 3 Met. 407; Argendright v. Campbell, 3 Hen. and Munf. 144.

"It is not sufficient to prove facts that would reasonably put the subsequent grantee on inquiry." Pomeroy v. Stevens, 11 Met. 244; Spofford v. Weston, 29 Maine, 140; and see Sugden on Vendors,

Clark & Gass for Respondents.

In this case we hold that the mistake is so palpable, and the intention of the parties so clear, from the face of the deed itself, that the word "west" will be at once rejected, and should it be necessary, the word "east" will be substituted for it.

In the language of the District Judge who tried the case, "The error is one patent upon the face of the deed, and could mislead nobody."

Let us read the description, and see what information we derive from it. The description in respondent's mortgage is as follows:

"The following described real estate, situate, lying and being in the City of Sacramento, and described on the map of said city as a part of lot number one, (1) in the square between K and L, Third and Fourth streets, bounded as follows: commencing at a point sixty feet west of the corner of K and Third streets, thence east on K street twenty (20) feet, thence southerly ninety (90) feet, thence westerly twenty (20) feet, thence northerly ninety (90) feet, to the place of beginning."

To locate this lot in the proper place, you have only to reject, or do violence to one of the calls of respondent's mortgage. But suppose you locate it as appellant's counsel would have you to do, in the middle of Third street, let us see how much of the description you would reject.

1st. You would reject that portion of the description which locates it in the square by K and L, Third and Fourth streets; for if in the middle of the street, it cannot be in the square formed by the intersections of four streets.

2nd. You reject that portion of the description which describes it as part of lot one; for the street cannot be any portion of the square formed by streets.

3rd. You cannot bound it twenty feet on K street, unless you arbitrarily say, that where K and Third streets intersect each other, K street absorbs that portion of Third.

Wagenblast v. Washburn.

---

4th. To locate it as appellant demands, you commence at the corner of K and Third, run along the line of K street, (having arbitrarily determined that it is K street instead of Third) west sixty feet, for your initial point. Your next call is east twenty feet, which brings you back twenty feet on the same line you have already run. If this had been the location intended, the draftsman would have said, "commencing forty feet west of the corner of K and Third streets, thence west twenty feet," etc. Substitute east for west, and the description is natural and proper, and does not require you, in making the survey, to run over the same line twice, commencing sixty feet east of the corner of K and Third streets, thence east twenty feet, etc.

Counsel for appellant denies that where "west" is used when "east" is intended, that we can substitute the one word for the other.

It is perhaps not necessary for us to contend for this power of substitution, in this case; for without using either word, east or west, the description in this mortgage is sufficient for the correct location of this lot.

If we leave out the word "west," the description will then be, "Part of lot one in the square, etc., commencing sixty feet from the corner of K and Third streets, thence east along the line of K street twenty feet, thence southerly," etc. In this description the surveyor is directed to commence sixty feet from the corner of K and Third streets, without being told whether it is sixty feet north, south, east or west, and yet he can have no difficulty in ascertaining his starting point.

If he commences sixty feet west of the corner, he will not be upon lot one, nor in the square between K and L, Third and Fourth streets; nor will twenty feet east from that point, which is the next call, bring him either to lot one, or to the square between the streets named.

TERRY, C. J., delivered the opinion of the Court—Baldwin, J. concurring.

This is an action of ejectment for a lot in Sacramento city. The plaintiff and defendant both deraign title through meane conveyances from one Hein; the defendant's conveyance being prior in point of date. In this conveyance the premises are described as a lot in Sacramento City, "described on the map of said city as a part of lot No. 1, in the square between K and L, and Third and Fourth streets, bounded as follows: Commencing at a point sixty feet west of the corner of K and Third streets, thence east on K street twenty feet," etc.

By reference to the map, it appears that the lot in question lies wholly east of the corner of K and Third streets, and that the description given in the deed would locate the premises in Third street.

The rule is, that effect must be given to the intention of the parties, when it can be gathered from the instrument. Here it appears that the parties intended to convey a portion of lot one. This lot extends eighty feet east from the corner of K and Third streets; excluding the word west, which is evidently a mistake, the description is perfect to all that portion of the lot which lies between the point of beginning and the adjoining lot.

A Court of Equity will relieve against mistake as well as fraud, in a deed or contract in writing, and parol evidence is admissible to show if it be denied in the answer. (2 John. Ch. 585.) Here the mistake appears upon the face of the paper itself, and does not require to be shown by parol. The case comes fully within the authority of Jackson v. Marsh, (6 Cowen, 281) which is cited by appellant.

Judgment is affirmed.

KNOWLES et al. v. INCHES *et al.

Transcripts on appeal to this Court, should not contain irrelevant or unnecessary matter. Instead of copying into a statement for a new trial or on an appeal, deeds and transcripts of records, when no point is made on the construction of the language, a brief statement of the instrument answers every purpose, and is all that the Practice Act requires.

Knowles v. Inches.

A bill to restrain vexatious litigation upon the ground that the right to real property has been determined in former suits, must show that the title to the property was determined in a suit or suits, in which all the claimants to the title were parties.

although some of the parties may be mere accommodation grantees, and fictitious depositories of title, still they have a right to be heard at law in their own defense, before Courts of Chancery can pronounce definitely on their claims.

The remedy, by bill of peace, is provided in instances of this sort for cases of vexatious litigation, after the real merits of the controversy have been settled at law.

A judgment suspended by appeal, cannot be considered as conclusive of the fact of title, even without reference to the manner in which it was obtained.

APPEAL from the Fourth District, County of San Francisco.

This was a bill in equity to restrain the defendants from prosecuting certain suits, depending in the Courts of San Francisco, and from leasing and conveying certain real estate situated in said city.

The bill charges that there has been a long course of vexatious litigation respecting certain real estate, and that the title has been determined in favor of the plaintiffs in said bill, and that several actions are still prosecuted and threatened to harass and annoy plaintiffs.

Defendants had judgment in the Court below, and plaintiff appealed to this Court.

The other facts necessary to understand the points decided, appear in the opinion of the Court.

H. S. Love for Appellants.

A. P. Wilson for Respondents.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court—TERRY, C. J., concurring.

We must reprehend the practice, which is too common, of stuffing a transcript with irrelevant and unnecessary matter. The present case affords a remarkable illustration. The transcript contains some two hundred and thirty-three pages, when everything essential to a review of the case might easily have been given in fifty. Besides the delays, unnecessary expense and labor thus created, the points are hid in this mass of superfluous matter, and it frequently becomes more difficult to find out what they are, than to decide them when found. The Practice Act, so far from sanctioning any such course of proceeding, by implication, rebukes it. Instead of copying into a statement for a new trial or on an appeal, deeds and transcript of records, when no point is made on the construction of the language, a brief statement of the instrument answers every purpose. There is no sense in copying a judgment, execution, and the like, in cases where no question arises as to the form, or the particular words of them; but a short description of the paper, giving the sums, date, Court, etc., is sufficient. If proper attention were given to the making up of statements, we are convinced that the transcripts in this Court might, on an average, be reduced to less than one-half the present size. We might exercise our discretionary power in the imposition of costs in this case, probably with some effect, but for the difficulty of ascertaining by whose fault the insertion of this unnecessary matter is caused. In this case the appellants' counsel, in his brief, apologizes for the length of the transcript, and refers the cause of it to the other side's insisting on the insertion of all this useless stuff. On this suggestion, of course, we cannot act.

---

This case is a bill in equity to restrain the defendants from prosecuting certain suits, depending in the Courts of San Francisco, and from leasing and conveying certain real estate herein situate. The ground upon which the bill proceeds is, that there has been a long course of vexatious litigation, and that the right has been determined in favor of the appellants; that sundry actions are still prosecuted and threatened, to harass and vex the appellants.

The case was referred to a referee, who, in his report, gives the history of the litigation, which, for variety and extent, is unexampled, considering the small value involved. This history, indeed, might afford an illustrative appendix to Scott's account of the celebrated suit of Peter Peebles v. Plainstaines, or Dickens' report of the case of Jarndyce v. Jarndyce. Indeed, it would appear that the only use to which the parties designed to put this lot was to make it a foundation of a lawsuit, which they have erected upon it; an edifice divided, from cellar to garret, into all manner of secret chambers, involved passages and dark entries. The real parties to the controversy seem to have been too few in number to keep up the strife, and hence, both sides have called in a relay of fresh partizans to figure in the fight, having impressed them by means of sham deeds and fraudulent conveyances. Perjury is charged, with no lack of nervous expressions, upon the respective sides, and the lower arts of forensic warfare, such as snap judgments and partial statements of facts, as we are informed by counsel, give character and variety to the proceedings. Ten solid pages of transcript paper, closely written, are taken up by the able gentleman who acted as referee, in giving a mere analysis of the leading facts of these fierce forensic conflicts; the whole narrative of which, unabridged, exceeds, by a few pages, Sir Walter Scott's account of Napoleon's first campaign in Italy. Fearing, probably, that the litigation might, in some way, be brought to an untimely close in the lifetime of the litigants, the respondents are accused, with some reason, of adopting the economical plan of dividing out the subject into small parcels, and suing for this lot by inches.

Knowles v. Inches.

We cannot take time to review this protracted controversy, and to follow its mazes through all their ramifications; nor is it necessary, for a simple point is conclusive. We regret that we have no power to put a stop to this comprehensive and embarrassing litigation, and that we must turn a deaf ear to the pathetic appeal of the appellants' counsel, not "to suffer his clients to be lawed to death;" but, though "it is the interest of the Republic that there should be an end of litigation," and not less the interest of these parties, yet the rules of law forbid our putting an end to it in this way.

It seems that the title of the lot was tried only in the case of Knowles v. Calderwood and Chittlebury. In that case there was judgment for Knowles; but Calderwood appealed from the judgment, and the appeal is, or was, at the time of the referee's report, pending in this Court. It is charged that, in that case, Forrest, who had a mortgage on the premises given by Knowles, was one of the principal witnesses for Knowles; that he swore, on his voir dire, that he was not interested, and that the verdict was mainly, or at least in part, gained on his testimony. The referee finds — and there certainly seems to be some evidence to support the finding — that the case was not satisfactorily and fairly tried. This judgment, suspended by appeal, cannot be considered as conclusive of the fact of title, even without reference to the manner in which it was obtained.

Smith v. Smith.

---

Besides, there was no trial on the merits in any action to which Inches, who claims to be interested through Calderwood, or Van Valkenburg, who is lessee of Calderwood, or holds under his title, or to which action Sanborn and Forrest, who were of the opposite faction, were parties. It is true that these parties, as the referee finds, are, except Van Valkenburg, mere accommodation grantees, and fictitious depositories of title; but they have a right to be heard at law in their own defense, before the Courts can pronounce definitely on their claims, however false they may appear in a controversy inter alias.

Chancery will not interfere in cases like this, until after a trial at law adjudicating the title; and this means a trial in an action in which all the claimants to the title are parties. Otherwise, it would follow, that Chancery might assume jurisdiction, in the first instance, of all actions of ejectment. The remedy, by bill of peace, is provided in instances of this sort, for cases of vexatious litigation, after the real merits of the controversy have been settled at law.

If the appellants are in possession, it is easy to frame a bill to quiet title upon the ground of superior right; but this bill is not framed for that purpose.

The judgment of the Court below is affirmed.

The purchase of land by the husband, after marriage, with his separate funds acquired by him before marriage, and the taking of a conveyance therefor in the name of his minor children by a former wife, is not a fraud upon the rights of his wife.

The law of this State in relation to the rights of husband and wife, as to the common property, is similar to the law of Louisiana and Texas; and in those States it is held, by their highest tribunals, that all property acquired, by either spouse, during the existence of the community, is presumed to belong to it, and that this presumption can only be overcome by clear and satisfactory proof that it was acquired by the separate funds of one or the other; and that the burden of proof lies upon the party claiming the property as separate.

Smith v. Smith.

Where a brick building was erected on such lots during the existence of the community, the presumption that it was but the form in which the common property was invested, is too cogent to be overcome by loose and unsatisfactory testimony.

The law, in vesting in the husband the absolute power of disposition of the common property as of his separate estate, designed to facilitate its bona fide alienation, and to prevent clogs upon its transfer by claims of the wife.

The law will not support a voluntary disposition of the common property, or any portion of it, with the view of defeating any claims of the wife.

A homestead right cannot be asserted merely to a building, independent of the land upon which the building is erected. In the present case, the building is to be regarded only as the form in which the common property was invested, upon the pretense of the husband of having a homestead, but for the real purpose of defeating any claim the wife might have thereto. The beneficent purposes of the statute could not thus be frustrated, and the right of the wife to one-half, upon the dissolution of the marriage, attached.

Where the husband deliberately places a brick building upon the property of his children by a former marriage, after his second marriage, he cannot have any claim upon it or its proceeds. In such case, its character as common property is declared only for the protection of the interest of the wife.

APPEAL from the Sixth District, County of Sacramento.

This was an action brought by the plaintiff, Augusta J. Smith, against the defendant, Frederick C. Smith, for a divorce from the bonds of matrimony between the said parties, and a division of the common property.

The plaintiff asked for the dissolution of the marriage contract on the ground of the commission of adultery by the defendant, after his marriage with her. This charge was denied by the answer. The case was tried in the Court below without a jury, and a decree of divorce granted. The question of the separate and common property of the parties was referred to P. L. Edwards, a referee appointed by the Court, to take testimony, find the facts, and report a judgment to the Court.

The parties were married on the fourth day of May, 1852.

In respect to the property of the parties, the complaint charges:

1st. That prior to and at the time of her marriage with defendant, Frederick C. Smith, she was the owner and in possession of lots numbers two and five in the square between M and N and Eighth and Ninth streets, in the City of Sacramento. That these lots were her separate property.

---

Smith v. Smith.

---

2nd. That defendant, Frederick C., on the — day of June, 1853, sold lot number two, with her consent, and received therefore, to his own use, $1,050.

3rd. That defendant, Frederick C., in 1854 used a portion of this money, together with certain other moneys, the common property of the parties, in the purchase of lots numbers six and seven, adjoining the lots of plaintiff and in the same square. That this last purchase was intended for his own benefit, but the conveyance was taken in the name of the defendants, Alfonzo B. and George V. Smith, both minor children of the defendant Frederick C. by a former marriage.

4th. That afterwards, in the month of July, 1854, the defendant, Frederick C., with the balance of the purchase money of lot number two, and with other moneys acquired by him since their marriage — which is charged to be common property — erected upon said lot number six a brick building at a cost of $4,500, which building is claimed as the common property of plaintiff and Frederick C.

5th. The minor defendants, Alfonzo B. and George V., possessed no means, either in their own name or that of others, and the conveyance to them was, and is, a fraud upon the plaintiff's rights.

6th. That after the erection of said brick building, the plaintiff and defendant Frederick C. occupied said building as a homestead, until about the 18th of November, 1856, when the said Frederick C. fraudulently induced plaintiff to vacate same, and that he is now trying to dispose of the same for the purpose of defrauding her.

7th. Plaintiff prays for a dissolution of the marriage contract, etc., and that lot number five, in the square between M and N and Eighth and Ninth streets, may be decreed to be the separate property of herself, and that lots numbers six and seven, in the same square, the common property and homestead of plaintiff and defendant, Frederick C. — that the same be charged, first, with the payment to her of the sum of $1,050, it being the amount of the purchase money of lot number two in the square aforesaid, and that the Court make such order for the division of the common property as the nature of the case may require, etc.

Defendant, Frederick C., in his answer denies:

1st. That plaintiff was the owner of lots numbers two and five.

---

Smith v. Smith.

---

2nd. That she possessed any property at the time of their marriage.

3rd. Admits that he and his partner did enter upon and improve lot number two, and that they subsequently sold the same for ten or eleven hundred dollars. That such entry was not under any right of plaintiff, nor did they pretend to sell any claim of hers — the deed given by them was a quitclaim. .

4th. Defendant alleges, that at the time of their marriage he was worth $20,000.

5th. Five months after marriage, defendant did purchase lots numbers six and seven, and that the purchase was a gift to his two sons, and was not more than a fair proportion of their rights in the property then possessed by him. Denies that any of plaintiff's money was used in such purchase; and avers that the money was his separate property, etc.

6th. Defendant built the dwelling house with his own funds, and was worth at the time, over and above the two lots, from fifteen to twenty thousand dollars. He gave for the lots eight hundred dollars.

Both the complaint and answer were sworn to.

The referee made his report, from which the following facts are taken:

Parties intermarried about the fourth of May, 1852. At the time of the marriage, Frederick C. owned property in this State to the value of about $16,000. That after the marriage, on the eighteenth of October, 1854, the defendant, Frederick C., consummated a purchase, for which he had previously been negotiating, for the lots numbers six and seven, and took a deed therefor to the defendants, Alfonzo B. and George V. Smith, children of the said Frederick C. by a former marriage, and who were at the time of the respective ages of eleven and thirteen years. At the time of making the purchase, defendant Frederick C. was worth between fifteen and sixteen thousand dollars, and that the conveyance was made to the children by way of advancement from the father. Afterwards, and while yet in affluent circumstances, he erected a brick house thereon, at a cost of $4,000, and the house and lots were worth $4,800, and the same was not an unreasonable advancement to the children. From December, 1854, to the eighteenth of November, 1856, the premises were occupied as a homestead by plaintiff and defendant Frederick C. In the year 1855,

---

Smith v. Smith.

---

Frederick C. brought his two children from some of the Atlantic States, and they resided with him until the eighteenth of November, 1856, when all parties left the house. The house was erected indifferently with the moneys of the said Frederick C. before the marriage, and those earned by him in the course of his business during the progress of the work, although he had enough of the former to complete the building. At the time of the marriage, the plaintiff did not own exceeding one hundred and fifty dollars, "and I do not believe she had that amount."

She claimed divers lots by virtue of purchase thereof, for taxes assessed thereon, among which were lots numbers two and five, in the block between M and N and Eighth and Ninth streets, in Sacramento city. That after the purchase of these lots, she caused a ditch to be dug on one side of one of these lots, but they were wholly unenclosed on all other sides. After the marriage, the defendant, Frederick C., under color of plaintiff's claim to these lots, took possession, and jointly with one Barclay enclosed the same, and erected some houses thereon at a cost of about $1,000. That afterwards, Frederick C. and Barclay sold the improvements for about $950, Smith at the same time selling and quitclaiming the possessory title to said lots. The referee further finds, that both parties are now poor, and recommends that a decree be entered denying the claims of plaintiff to lots numbers six and seven, in block M and N and Eighth and Ninth streets, and that the same be confirmed to the defendants Alfonzo B. and George V. Smith.

A decree was entered accordingly. Plaintiff moved the Court below for a new trial, which was denied, and she appealed to this Court from that portion of the decree disposing of the property.

Winans for Appellant.

1st. The voluntary settlement of defendant, F. C. Smith, on his children by a former marriage, was in fraud of the rights of the plaintiff, his wife, and therefore void. Lightfoot v. Colgin, 5 Munford, 51 et seq.

The rights of husband and wife were very similar at common law, and constituted an interest on the part of each against which a fraud might be committed by the other. Thus, if a feme sole, in contemplation of marriage, made a voluntary settlement of her estate upon another person than her intended husband, the settlement was void as against him, because in fraud of the rights he acquired by the subsequent marriage.

---

Smith v. Smith.

---

So, if the husband, by voluntary settlement or otherwise, alienate his estate after the wife's right of dower had attached, such right remained notwithstanding such alienation, and the property continued charged therewith. Black v. Jones, 1st A. K. Marshall, 312; 2 Blackstone Com. 129, 130, 132; Combs v. Young, 4 Yerger, 224, '5, '6; Hughes v. Shaw, Martin & Yerger, 329.

2d. In the present case, the conveyance to the infant defendants was not, strictly speaking, a voluntary settlement, but only a purchase in the name of the children.

In Bateman v. Bateman, 2d Vernon, 346, a declaration of trust, even by the child himself, was not suffered to prevail against the widow's claim of dower.

Again: a purchase in the name of a child, although presumed prima facie to have been intended for his benefit, will not be so considered, when there are circumstances to rebut such presumption; as, when there are other children who would go unprovided for, or be only scantily provided for. Pole v. Pole, 1st Vesey, 176.

3rd. The settlement on the infant defendants was fraudulent in fact, as shown by the evidence set forth in the statement.

4th. The conveyance to the children was fraudulent in law, as well as in fact.

Because it was in derogation of the rights of the wife in the common property, as established by the Act of April 17th, 1850, defining the rights of husband and wife. See Wood's Digest, 487.

True, by sec. 9th of that Act, it is provided that the husband shall have the like absolute power of disposition of the common property as of his separate estate; but this section was designed to facilitate the bona fide alienation of the property, and to prevent it from being hampered in the possession of bona fide purchasers, by equities or legal claims on the part of the wife, and did not refer to, nor embrace, voluntary settlements of the common property made to third persons for the express purpose of defrauding the wife out of her interest, or even to voluntary settlements made without such intent, but in derogation of the wife's interest.

Smith v. Smith.

---

In the matter of Buchanan's Estate, (8th Cal. 507) it was held, that the common property could not be disposed of by the husband by will. And the same doctrine is held in Beard v. Knox, 5 Cal. 252.

In Petty v. Petty, (4 B. Monroe, 217) it is held, that a man advanced in life, having children by a former wife, contracting a marriage with a woman in moderate circumstances, who two days before the marriage conveyed his property without the knowledge of his wife, cannot thereby deprive his wife of her right of dower in such lands.

In Swain v. Perine, (5 Johns. Chanc. 488) it is also held, that a deed, given by a husband just before marriage, to his daughter, without any consideration and kept a secret until after the marriage, is fraudulent, as against his wife's claim of dower. But the doctrine for which we are contending in this cause, is still more strongly sustained in Questet v. Questet, (Wright's Ohio Rep. 492) where it was held, that a conveyance made without consideration to a son by a former marriage, to deprive the present wife of her subsistence, is void.

F. C. Smith not only used this property as the homestead, but in all his conversations at various times so denominated it; and that, by every act in his power, as well by declaration as by residence, and otherwise, he notoriously set it apart as a homestead, and invested it with the legal attributes thereof. See Cook v. McChristian, 4 Cal. 23; Taylor v. Hargous, 4 Cal. 268, et passim.

John Heard for Respondent.

1st. The lots in question were purchased in good faith by F. C. Smith, for the defendants George and Alfonzo Smith, his children by a former marriage, with his own separate estate.

The house was erected by F. C. Smith with his own money, and when he was in affluence, and was not an unreasonable advancement to the defendants George and Alfonzo.

2nd. The purchase being made by F. C. Smith in the name of his two sons, who were not before provided for, the presumption of law is, that the purchase was intended as an advancement, and rebuts the presumption of a resulting trust to F. C. Smith. See 2nd Story's Equity Jurisprudence, sec. 1202, et seq.

Smith v. Smith.

---

The charge of fraud in fact made by the plaintiff in this case, is without foundation. The evidence and the finding of the referee both contradict it, and there is nothing to support it.

It is as difficult to see any equity or justice in the plaintiff's case, as to find any law to support her.

In 1852 she was married to the defendant F. C. Smith, who was then wealthy; a few months after the marriage, he made the advance to his two sons, then wholly unprovided for. When the advance was made, the witnesses and the referee all say it was not disproportionable to the means of her husband, and that he still retained a large fortune.

The plaintiff brought nothing to the marriage, and certainly lost nothing that she had any right to by this act of paternal duty of her husband. Wood's Digest, p. 487, art. 2605, et seq.

FIELD, J., delivered the opinion of the Court—TERRY, C. J., and BALDWIN, J., concurring.

It is clear that the two lots in question were purchased by the husband with funds owned by him previous to his marriage with the plaintiff. This he expressly states in his examination, and there is nothing disclosed by the record which contradicts his testimony. In this separate property of his, the plaintiff possessed no interest which the law could protect so as to restrain his power of absolute disposition, whether by sale or gift. The purchase of the lots and taking the conveyance in the name of his children by a previous marriage, was not in fraud of any rights of the plaintiff. She had no claim upon the funds thus applied. They were the husband's previous to the marriage, and no interest passed to the wife by that event. The gift to the children was an advancement for their benefit, and was not forbidden by the letter or policy of the law.

But as to the building upon the lots, the case is different. The building was erected long after their purchase, and with funds which constitute common property. It is true, the evidence of the husband tends to show that a portion of the funds thus used were his separate property, but its general effect, when considered in connection with his repeated declarations to different parties, is insufficient to overcome the presumption arising from the fact of the construction being made during the existence of the community.

Smith v. Smith.

---

The law of this State in relation to the rights of husband and wife, as to the common property, is similar to the law of Louisiana and Texas; and in those States it is held, by their highest tribunals, that all property acquired, by either spouse, during the existence of the community, is presumed to belong to it, and that this presumption can only be overcome by clear and satisfactory proof that it was acquired by the separate funds of one or the other; and that the burden of proof lies upon the party claiming the property as separate. Lott v. Keach, 5 Texas, 394; Houston v. Curl, 8 Texas, 242; Gilliard v. Chesney, 13 Texas, 337; Chapman v. Allen, 15 Texas, 278; Clai-borne v. Tanner, 18 Texas, 69; Ford v. Ford, 1 Louisiana, 207; Dominquez v. Lee, 17 Louisiana, 290; Smalley v. Lawrence, 9 Rob. 214; Fisher v. Gordy, 2 La. Ann. 763; Webb v. Peck, 7 La Ann. 92.

In a case decided at the present term, (Meyer v. Kinzer and wife) we have had occasion to consider whether the possession of property by either spouse during the existence of the community, acquired by purchase, created a presumption that the property was common; and we arrived at a conclusion similar to that of the Louisiana and Texas cases, that the presumption of the law is, that all property belongs to the community, which can be repelled only by clear and decisive proof that it was either owned before marriage, or subsequently acquired in one of the particular ways designated in the statute; that is, by gift, bequest, devise or descent, or was taken in exchange for, or in the investment, or as the price of such property, so originally owned or acquired; and that the proof rests upon the party asserting the separate right.

In the present case, the building was erected during the existence of the community, and the presumption that it was but the form in which the common property was invested, is too cogent to be overcome by the loose and unsatisfactory evidence contained in the record. If the separate property of the husband did, in fact, go into the building, it was essential to the preservation of its separate character, that it should have been clearly and indisputably traced by him.

The law, in vesting in the husband the absolute power of disposition of the common property as of his separate estate, designed to facilitate its bona fide alienation, and to prevent clogs upon its transfer by claims of the wife; and we are not prepared to say that, under the comprehensive language of the statute, a voluntary settlement, or a gift of a portion of the common property, not being unreasonable with reference to the entire amount, the claims against it and the situation of the parties, would be invalid. But we think it clear, that the law, notwithstanding its broad terms, will not support a voluntary disposition of the common property, or any portion of it, with the view of defeating any claim of the wife. The different declarations of the husband, respecting the object of the building, were conflicting; at one time it was to be used as a homestead, and at another it was placed on the land of his children to deprive the wife of any claim thereto. If the building can be regarded as a homestead of the parties, she has an interest in it which should have been protected; but we do not see how a homestead right can be asserted merely to a building, independent of the land upon which the building is erected. The building is to be regarded only as the form in which common property was invested upon the pretense of the husband of having a homestead, but for the real purpose of defeating any claim the wife might have thereto. The beneficent purposes of the statute could not thus be frustrated, and the right of the wife to one-half, upon the dissolution of the marriage, attached.

Smith v. Smith.

---

In Beard v. Knox, (5 Cal. 252), this Court held that the common property could not be disposed of by the husband by will, so as to defeat the rights of the surviving wife; and the same doctrine is maintained in the matter of Ruchanan's Estate, (3 Cal. 507). In the first case, the Court said: "Our statute has done away with the common law right of dower, and substituted in its place a half interest in the common property. This liberal provision was intended for the benefit of the wife, and the intention of so humane and beneficent a law should not be defeated, by adopting a rule of construction which would leave the future maintenance of herself and family entirely at the caprice of the husband."

Voluntary conveyances, given on the eve of marriage, for the purpose of depriving the intended wife of her right of dower, where that common law right exists, are fraudulent as against her claim. This was so adjudged in Swaine v. Perrine, (5 John. Ch. 482). And upon the same principle, a voluntary disposition by the husband of the common property, or a portion thereof, for the like purpose of depriving the wife of her interest in the same, must be held ineffectual against the assertion of her claim.

Rowe v. Bradley.

---

It follows, therefore, that the plaintiff, upon the dissolution of the community, was entitled to one-half of the building erected out of the funds of the common property; and, as the title of the land is vested in the children, the separate value of the house and land should be first determined, and a sale then decreed of both, with directions to pay to her one-half of such proportionate part of the proceeds as the value of the house bears to the entire property, the balance and the proceeds of the land being placed in the hands of guardians of the children, and invested, under the direction of the Court, for their benefit. The husband having deliberately placed the building upon the property of his children, cannot himself have any claim upon it or its proceeds. Its character as common property is declared only for the protection of the interest of the wife.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

ROWE v. BRADLEY et al.

In an action of trespass for entering upon the mining ground of plaintiff, and digging the same up and converting the gold-bearing earth, the vendor of plaintiff is a competent witness, although a part of the purchase money is still due him.

The mere fact that the judgment debtor (against whom execution had issued) was found upon the mining ground of plaintiff, did not justify the Sheriff, who had the execution, in going on the ground and digging up the soil, and taking the gold it contained.

In such case, no ouster is necessary to maintain an action of trespass; any unlawful entry is sufficient. An officer, when he puts a Receiver in possession of the property of another, against whom he has no process, or asserts through himself or another an unlawful dominion over such property, is a trespasser.

Rowe v. Bradley.

---

In such action, where there is no specific denial of the amount of damage alleged in the complaint, although the alleged cause of damage is specially traversed, it is doubtful whether such answer amounts to a denial of the damage.

---

APPEAL from the Fourteenth District, County of Sierra.

---

The facts, as disclosed by the opinion of the Court, are as follows: This was an action of trespass, in which the plaintiff complains that in April, 1857, he owned and possessed a third part of a tract of mining ground, and that defendants broke into and trespassed upon it, and dug up and converted the dirt and gold-bearing earth to the value of $2,000.

The defendants answered, denying that the claim was the property of the plaintiff, or that they committed any trespass on the property of the plaintiff, and generally denying all the allegations of the complaint. And further say that "George Davis, one of the defendants herein, is Deputy Sheriff in and for the County of Sierra; that by authority of his said office, and by virtue of an attachment issued from the District Court of the Fourteenth Judicial District in and for Sierra county, in an action before said Court, in which J. W. Bradley was plaintiff, and F. M. Rowe defendant, he levied upon or attached the said F. M. Rowe's interest in the mining claim described in plaintiff's complaint in this action; that thereupon the plaintiff in this case claimed the property as his own, and the said Sheriff, in conformity with the statutes in such cases made and provided, proceeded to try and determine the rights of property; that the jury called to determine said matter decided in favor of said plaintiff, J. W. Bradley, as will more fully appear by reference to the proceedings then and there had, which defendants pray may be made a part hereof.

"And that, afterwards, by virtue of a judgment and execution issued from said Court, and to him directed, and by virtue of said decision of said jury, and of the statutes in such cases made and provided, satisfied the claim of said J. W. Bradley out of the said F. M. Rowe's interest as aforesaid, as the proceedings in said case on record will more fully show; which record, return and proceedings, defendants introduce and make a part of this answer." The answer was sworn to by Davis. Afterwards, defendants amended their answer to this effect:

Rowe v. Bradley.

---

"That they have been informed that plaintiff claims to have purchased the mining claim mentioned in his complaint from one James Finney; but defendants aver that, if such conveyance was made, it was in fraud of the rights of defendant, J. W. Bradley, and made for the purpose of delaying and hindering him from collecting a debt due from F. M. Rowe to him, which debt was the same sued for in the case of J. W. Bradley v. F. M. Rowe in this Court, the record of which suit is made a part hereof; and that said purchase was made by F. M. Rowe, defendant in the last mentioned suit, and the money therefor furnished by him, and the name of A. C. Rowe used in said conveyance from Finney to deceive and defraud said defendant, J. W. Bradley." This was sworn to by Bradley.

One Finney, the vender of the claim to Rowe, to whom was due a part of the purchase money, was examined as a witness. It is assigned as error, that he was admitted to testify when he was incompetent. The question before the jury was not as to the original title as it stood before the witness sold, but as to whether the claim belonged to plaintiff, F. M. Rowe, as whose property it was levied on by the officer.

The cause was tried by a jury, and a verdict had for plaintiff for $2,000, on which verdict there was judgment, from which the defendants appealed to this Court.

H. B. Crossette & R. H. Taylor for Appellants.

Appellants insist that there are but two acts that can be charged as wrongs, and that these were committed by the Sheriff of Sierra county in the discharge of his duty; neither of which constitute a trespass, as charged in respondent's complaint.

These acts are — First. In attaching the right, title and interest of F. M. Rowe, in and to the said mining claims; and,

Second. In receiving the gold dust or coin from Peter Lyre, co-tenant, in satisfaction of Bradley's judgment.

1st. In regard to the first act, it is not denied that George Davis was a regularly appointed and qualified officer, acting under a precept duly issued from a Court of competent jurisdiction; that he found F. M. Rowe in possession of this mining interest; that he legally served him as commanded; that at this time he knew nothing of the preten-sions of A. C. Rowe, or any other person, other than F. M. Rowe, to the ownership of the mining interest. And we say that it was not his duty, nor had he, as a ministerial officer, the right to investigate the title to this interest; that the finding F. M. Rowe in possession was a sufficient justification as to him.

---

---

2d. In regard to the second act. He (the Sheriff) received a certain amount of gold dust, or coin, the profits of this interest, from the hands of Peter Lyre, a co-tenant in these claims. This dust or coin, separated from the claim, formed a distinct species of property, and I can no more conceive of an officer rendering himself liable to an action of trespass on a mining claim, by receiving the dust or coin after its separation therefrom, than I can conceive an action of trespass would lie for an injury done to meadow land, for taking the grass, which grew upon it, but which has since been separated and become an independent species of property.

If there was any wrong committed in relation to this matter, it was committed by Peter Lyre; and if A. C. Rowe was the real owner of this claim, then the action of trespass would not lie against him; for the appropriation of the entire profits by one tenant in common, will not justify an action of trespass by his co-tenant; nothing short of an actual ouster will justify this action.

3d. In regard to the admission of F. M. Rowe's testimony, we say it was error, for the reason that fraud was directly charged against him; that this was the main issue in the case; that this was permitting him to come in and purge himself of the charge. It is true, that his interest, in dollars and cents, could not have been clearly ascertained, but we understand, as a well-settled principle, that it is not the province of Courts to weigh the amount of temptation which witnesses can endure, but to see that they have no temptation at all.

4th. In regard to excessive damages, the testimony shows (and that not clearly) that but $1,745 was taken out, but the testimony does not show how much of this was paid for expenses, which in all cases are deducted; but in any event there is an excess of two hundred and fifty-five dollars. That this excess was given under the influence of passion or prejudice, there is no doubt.

Rowe v. Bradley.

---

Vanclef & Stewart for Respondent.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — FIELD, J., concurring.

One Finney, the vendor of the claim to Rowe, was examined as a witness. It is assigned as error, that he was admitted to testify when he was incompetent. The question before the jury was not as to the original title as it stood before the witness sold, but as to whether the claim belonged to plaintiff, F. M. Rowe, as whose property it was levied on by the officer.

It is true that the witness had not been paid all the purchase money; but this made no difference. This was not an action to try the title; and if it were, in this state of the question before the jury, the vendor, for all that appeared, was a competent witness.

Another assignment of error is, that no trespass was committed, because the officer found F. M. Rowe, the debtor in attachment and judgment, in possession, and therefore had a right to seize the property. But the very question of fact was, who was in possession? and the possession of real estate usually follows the ownership. The mere fact that F. M. Rowe was on A. C. Rowe's ground, is no justification to the officer to go there and dig up the soil, or take the earth or gold taken from the land.

The next error assigned is, that no ouster was made, but merely the rights, title and interest of the judgment debtor attached; but no ouster in this sense is necessary to maintain an action of trespass; any unlawful entry is enough. And the officer, when he put a Receiver in possession of plaintiff's property, or asserted through himself or another an unlawful dominion over another's property, is a trespasser. There is no difference between the officer going, without right, upon the plaintiff's land, and getting Lyre to seize or take the plaintiff's gold or earth, and doing it himself.

In both cases, such an act is a trespass and conversion; and all concerned, aiding and abetting, are original trespassers. It is not the case of a co-tenant paying over money or gold dust to the Sheriff, but the Sheriff getting the co-tenant to aid him in seizing and taking property of the plaintiff.

Bensley v. Atwill

---

The next objection is, that the damages were excessive. There was some evidence tending to show that in a few weeks the amount coming to the plaintiff's share was $1,745. The jury might infer that some additional amount was taken out the balance of the time. Besides, there is no specific denial of the amount of damages laid in the complaint, though there is of the alleged causes of damage.

It may well be doubted, indeed, if the answer put in issue any fact except the fact of ownership, and of the levy, etc., as the property of F. M. Rowe.

Some technical exceptions are taken, but they were not made below, and we cannot consider them for the first time here.

The judgment is affirmed.

---

BENSLEY v. ATWILL

Where a deed is offered in evidence, which purports on its face to be a deed of bargain and sale for an alleged consideration, executed and acknowledged by the defendant, and on the same day recorded, it is some evidence to go to the jury of the delivery of such deed.

It is scarcely to be presumed that one man will execute to another a deed without the assent of that other.

In such case, it is for the jury to say whether the grantee had knowledge of the execution of the deed, or had given his assent thereto.

The grantor, by the execution and acknowledgment of the deed, admits the delivery.

Where A sold a lot of land to B, and delivered possession, and, in a written contract respecting the same, it was stipulated, among other things, that in the event that B should be dispossessed by legal judgment at any time within three years, A should pay back to B $2,000; and should suit be brought against B for the lot, then B should notify A of it, in order to enable him to assist in the defense of the title; Held, that the giving of the notice by B to A of the institution of suit against B for the lot, was indispensable to enable B to recover of A on such contract.

Nor does it matter of what value this notice was to A, or whether it was of any value. In a Court of law, effect is to be given to the bargain according to its terms, and Courts of law cannot speculate upon the weight attached to one or another of the elements of an obligation. A bound himself only in a given way, and can be held only by the bargain he made, at least in the form of this action.

In a suit on such contract, B should aver that he had been evicted after notice to A. The payment of the money is dependent upon this fact.

Bensley v. Atwill.

---

APPEAL from the Twelfth District, County of San Francisco.

The facts of the case sufficiently appear in the opinion of the Court.

Shafter, Park & Heydenfeldt for Appellant.

I. The Court was requested to charge that, "assuming the facts which the evidence tended to prove, there was no delivery of the deed executed by the plaintiff to Samuel Bensley, the grantee."

This instruction was refused. The Court very properly told the jury that a grantor could not force a deed upon the grantee; that assent of the grantee was essential; and left it to the jury to find whether there had in fact been such assent, or not.

a. The plaintiff was entitled to the instruction requested; for there was no conflict in the evidence on the question of "assent," and the facts that it intended to prove showed that there had been no assent as a matter of law.

1. As there was no conflict in the testimony, the plaintiff could claim a judicial declaration as to the effect of the facts should the jury find them. Whitney v. Synde, 16 Vt. 580, 586; Van Hoesen v. Van Alstyne, 3 Wend. 75; Pleasant v. Pendleton, 6 Rand. 473; 2 U. S. D., p. 169, sec. 270; Swartwilder v. U. S. Bank, 1 J. J. Marsh. 36.

2. The declaration or charge requested was correct; for if the facts which the evidence tended to prove, really existed, they precluded all idea of privity on the part of the grantee with the deed. 2 Hilliard's Ab. 283. Nor can the effect of this refusal be evaded on the ground of the charge actually given; for that was clearly erroneous, inasmuch as it put the question of assent as an open question of fact to the jury, when there was no evidence tending to prove such assent. Birney v. Boardman, 3 Vt. 236.

II. The Court told the jury that by the terms of the contract it was necessary for the plaintiff to prove that he had given reasonable notice to Atwill that Lick had sued in ejectment for the land.

This was telling the jury in effect, that the giving of such reasonable notice was a condition precedent to the right of recovery.

This was erroneous; for the giving of the notice was not a condition precedent, but an independent covenant merely.

Bensley v. Atwill

---

a. The inclination of the law is against conditions precedent; for a failure results in forfeiture, whereas a breach of covenant results in compensation merely.

b. The contract, in speaking of the liability of Atwill to refund the money, first adopts the language of conditions, as follows: "Provided" that Bensley shall vigilantly defend.

Such defense was very likely a condition precedent. But immediately thereafter the language is changed; and, in that part which relates to the notice it is said, "It is further agreed."

c. The context has to do with the question of construction, and it can hardly be contended that the payment of taxes, assessments, etc., that are grouped under the "agreement" to give the notice, are conditions precedent. Noscitur à Locies.

d. Again: the giving of the notice does not constitute the entire consideration of Atwill's undertaking to refund, nor any considerable part of it; therefore, on established principles, the giving of the notice should not be construed as a condition precedent.

1. It does not in fact constitute the whole consideration of Atwill's undertaking. The bulk of the consideration consists in the payment of the $6,000, and in Bensley's engagement to defend efficiently against any suit that might be brought for the possession; and if such defense should be made in fact by Bensley, it would be a matter of no practical moment whether Atwill had notice of the pendency of the action, or not.

2. Assuming, then, that the fact is with us, that is — that the giving of the notice does not constitute the whole of the consideration of Atwill's undertaking — the contract is subjected to the rule of construction for which we contend. Boone v. Eyre, 1 H. Black. 273, note; Stavers v. Curling, 32 C. L. 153; Muldrow v. McClelland, 1 Littell, 1; Tomkins v. Elliott, 5 Wend. 496; 2 Smith's Leading Cases, 25; 2 Par. Contracts, 37.

Though in form the covenants may be dependent, yet to prevent injustice, they may be treated as independent. 2 Smith's L. C. 24.

George F. & W. H. Sharp for Respondent.

I. The Court charged the jury that the deed from appellant to his brother, S. S. Bensley, "was not operative to pass the title, and that the lot in question had not been transferred;" which charge was more favorable to appellant than the law warrants.

---

Bensley v. Atwill

---

The acts done by appellant, and by Brooks, with his authority, were a transfer in the sense of this clause of the agreement, and in violation of it.

In truth, the Court should have given the fifth request asked by respondent; as no dissent of S. S. Bensley was shown, it being for his benefit, it is presumed that he accepted the deed. The Lady Superior v. McNamara, 3 Barb. Chy. Rep. 378; Thompson v. Wheeler, 16 Peters' Rep. 106, 119; Ingram v. Porter, 4 McCord Rep. 198.

After the deed was left for record with the County Recorder, he held it for S. S. Bensley, who alone was entitled to receive it. At least, the Recorder would have been justified in refusing to deliver it to appellant.

II. It was incumbent upon appellant to give notice of the suit of Lick against Bensley et al. to respondent, so that he might assist in the defense. The notice did not meet the requirements of the contract either in substance or time.

The respondent conveyed to appellant the lot by quitclaim, with full knowledge of the exact claim of Atwill to the lot. Hence the doctrine of caveat emptor applies. Gouverneur v. Elmendorff, 5 J. Ch. Rep. 84.

The return of the purchase money depended — 1st. Upon appellant being dispossessed by legal and final process within three years. No return, if dispossessed after that time; so that the agreement was in fact to insure a three years' possession.

2d. That appellant would "faithfully, diligently and watchfully resist and defend any claim or infringement that might be made upon said premises, either by law or against law; and also, that appellant notified respondent of any claim made, so as to enable respondent to assist in defense of the title."

3d. That appellant would not transfer the lot without the written consent of respondent.

The clause of the agreement requiring appellant to defend and resist "any claim," is introduced by apt words to make the defense of the claim a condition precedent. No particular words are required to make a condition precedent. It is to be gathered from the meaning of the parties, and it is apparent that the clause of the agreement in regard to notice is to be read with the clause as to the defense of any claim, and is wholly independent of any other. Atwill contracted expressly to have the right to furnish his aid, which might have been controlling in that suit, if allowed to use it effectively.

---

Bensley v. Atwill.

---

The Court below did not put the question to the jury as a condition precedent, nor did the jury find a verdict upon that ground. The Court simply made the giving of notice and the defense dependent.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court—TERRY, C. J., concurring.

Action upon contract, dated twentieth July, 1853, Atwill conveyed to Bensley a lot in San Francisco for the sum of $6,000. A part was paid down, and Bensley's note taken for the balance, payable in three years after date. Atwill agreed to pay back the $2,000, and deliver up the note to be canceled in the event that Bensley should be dispossessed by legal judgment at any time during three ensuing the date of the contract, provided that Bensley should vigilantly defend any suit that might be brought against him during the period of three years for the possession of the lot. Bensley agreed to pay the taxes on the lot; that he would not encumber it; that he would defray all law expenses; and that should a suit be brought against him, he would duly notify Atwill thereof, and that he would not convey the lot without the written consent of Atwill.

Issues of fact having been joined on the complaint and answer, it was specially referred to the jury to find upon the following questions: 1. Did Bensley vigilantly defend the action brought against him by one Lick, who sued, within the three years, for the recovery of the lot? 2. Did he give reasonable notice to Atwill of the pending of the suit? 3. Did Bensley convey the lot to his brother, Samuel Bensley, during the three years? 4. Was the plaintiff judicially dispossessed on the twentieth July, 1856?

The first question being, in effect, as it was treated, a question of law, and passed upon in his (appellant's) favor, it is not necessary to notice it further.

Bensley v. Atwell.

---

On the second and third issues there was evidence, and instructions were given and refused by the Court, which are the subjects of review by us.

The first error assigned in this connection is the refusal of the Court to charge, at the instance of the plaintiff, "that assuming the facts which the evidence tendered to prove, there was no delivery of the deed executed by the plaintiffs to Samuel Bensley, the grantee."

It is argued by the appellant that there was no conflict of proof on this point, and therefore the Court should have given this charge as the legal result of the facts. This deed purports to be a deed of bargain and sale on an alleged consideration, executed and acknowledged by the defendant, and on the same day recorded. This certainly is some evidence that the deed was perfected, and that it was intended to vest the title in the grantee. He might, if ignorant of its execution at the time, have, at any time, assented to it. It is scarcely to be presumed that one man will execute to another a deed without the assent of that other. Mr. Brooks, the witness, does not say that the grantor had no knowledge of the execution of this deed. We think the facts should have gone to the jury, for them to say whether the grantee had this knowledge, or had given, directly or otherwise, his assent; and that the Court did not err, on the facts stated by the witness, in refusing to rule that the deed was never delivered. Perhaps it would be too much, in any case where the testimony of a witness contradicts the written acknowledgment of a party introducing him, (as in this case, that a deed was delivered) and also the fair presumption from the nature of the transaction, for the Court to assume that the testimony of the witness is the fact, and to give effect to it as a legal conclusion. In this case the plaintiff admitted, by the execution of the deed and his acknowledgment of it for record, that he delivered it. The mere fact that the plaintiff was absent from the State, and that the deed was made at the instance of the grantor, or of the witness, is not conclusive evidence of its non-delivery.

The next error assigned is the instruction of the Court that it was

Bensley v. Atwill.

---

the duty of the plaintiff, by the terms of the contract, to prove that he had given reasonable notice to Atwill that Lick had sued in ejectment for the land. This instruction depends upon the terms of the contract, which is in these words:

"State of California, City of San Francisco, ss. — Agreement entered into twentieth day of July, eighteen hundred and fifty-three, between Joseph F. Atwill, of said city and State, party of the first part, and John Bensley, also of San Francisco, party of the second part, witnesseth:

"Whereas, the said Joseph F. Atwill has sold to the party of the second part city lot number (1478) fourteen hundred and seventy-eight, as will appear by deed executed this day, for the sum of $6,000, in which deed the payment of the whole purchase money is acknowledged; and whereas, furthermore, the party of the second part has executed a mortgage on the premises to secure the payment of four thousand dollars, being a balance of purchase money, and has also given his note for the same, payable three years from date, within fifteen per cent. interest from date per annum until paid, as will more fully appear by said mortgage and note executed this day; and whereas, the said Atwill is willing to give the party of the second part a fair title; now, it is fully agreed between said parties, as follows: That if the party of the second part shall, by legal and final process, be dispossessed from the above conveyed premises, in consequence of the establishment of successful claim of ownership of said lot by any other party in a suit at law, any time within three years from this date, then the said Atwill will return the $2,000 cash he has received this day, and also the note of $4,000, and discharge the party of the second part forever; and said Atwill be also discharged upon such payment from all liability to the party of the second part.

"Provided, nevertheless, and it is distinctly agreed upon by the party of the second part, in consideration of the above, that the said party of the second part retain possession of the said lot number 1478, and not suffer the same to be lost without faithfully, diligently and watchfully resisting and defending any claim or infringement made upon said premises, be it either by law or against law, whereby the ownership of said lot may come in question. That the said party of the second part defray all such law expenses incurred by defending title and possession of said property; and, should such suit result in being dispossessed of said lot, he shall have no recourse for the same upon the party of the first part, nor if the title be sustained in favor of the party of the second part.

"And it is further agreed, and distinctly understood, that the said party of the second part will pay all taxes and assessments and improvements on the same, and keep said property free of any incumbrance which may otherwise be created by the party of the second part, and also that said party of the second part will duly notify the party of the first part, or his agents or assigns or administrators or executors, of any claim which may by law be made against said premises, so as to enable the party of the second part to assist in the defense of the title. And it is also fully understood that the delivery of the said premises shall be equal to the interest of the said moneys paid by the party of the second part, and that the said Atwill is not to refund any taxes, assessments, improvements, lawyers' fees, or Court costs whatever, in the event of the loss of said property by process of law or otherwise.

"And it is furthermore understood between the parties, that all that part wherein said Atwill agrees to refund any or all of the purchase money, be void if the said party of the second part transfer the premises (lot No. 1,478) without the written consent of said Atwill previously obtained, or the payment of the said four thousand dollars.

"Witness our hands and seals this 20th July, 1858.

"JOHN BENSLEY, [SEAL.]

"JOSEPH F. ATWILL, [SEAL.]

"In presence of { O. WILLIAMS,
A. B. PERKINS."

Two things appear very prominently in this agreement:

First. That the grantor was only to be responsible after eviction upon or by final process, and that grantee should hold possession until then; and,

Second. That the grantor should have reasonable notice of the

---

Bensley v. Atwill.

---

adverse claim. If this sale of the lot had been by deed, with general warranty, in the usual form, and the grantee had been dispossessed by paramount title, he could not recover (unless he showed notice to his warrantor to defend) upon the production of the record of eviction. He must show, in addition to the record of eviction, that he was unable to resist the title upon which he was sued. Here, however, the grantor makes a special covenant for himself. He does not agree generally to defend the title. Indeed, he does not agree to defend the title at all. He merely agrees to guarantee the possession for a stipulated period. He covenants to repay the purchase money only under particular circumstances, and in a given event. There can be no doubt, if the eviction occurred after the three years, that the grantor would not have been liable at all. The main thing seems to have been, not an eviction, but an eviction of a particular sort, or rather arising in a particular way. The whole agreement seems to have been drawn in a spirit of jealous, almost of suspicious, caution in this respect. Courts do not make contracts for men. They are supposed to be able to make contracts for themselves; and we do not see, if a man chooses to bind himself to pay money on a particular event, why he may not, also, as well give character to that event, and mark and describe it, and hold himself only bound by or after the event so defined; or, in other words, why, if he were only bound, upon eviction of his grantee, to pay money, he may not, by express agreement, limit the obligation to an eviction after reasonable notice to him. If the collocation of the words of this agreement were different, there would be no doubt; that is, if the grantor had said: "I hereby agree, upon grantee's judicial eviction from the lot sold him — that eviction having been obtained after reasonable notice to me of the pending of the suit, etc. — to pay, etc.," no pleader would sue upon such an instrument without averring the performance of the condition. Why should the agreement be differently construed because the words limiting and characterizing the obligation are introduced after the word "provided" in the article quoted? The sense was the same; indeed, we presume the draftsman supposed he had made this sense more emphatic by this form of statement. We have noticed the criticism that the matter relied on by the respondent is introduced in the next paragraph after the word "provided;" and

---

Bensley v. Atwill

---

the inference that, therefore, this was an independent agreement. We think this is a mistake, and that the proviso was intended to embrace the whole succeeding portion of the agreement to the last clause.

Whether agreements are independent or dependent is sometimes difficult to determine. But in cases where one man agrees, in consideration of a future event or act, to do or not to do a thing, the happening of the event is usually a condition precedent to the enforcement of the obligation. The very and only cause whereby the liability of the defendant was to accrue was this eviction; it was to constitute the sole or main ground of the grantee's recovery and claim for compensation. Unless and until evicted, there was no pretext of claim upon the defendant to pay or repay money. The covenant was for a certain sort of eviction, or an eviction had under particular circumstances. The eviction, thus described, was the condition on which the whole liability was founded. It was, therefore, indispensable for the plaintiff to show, in order to maintain his action, that this eviction had happened, a necessary element of which was this reasonable notice, as we have before intimated.

Nor does it matter of what value this notice was to the defendant, or whether it was of any value. In a Court of law, effect is to be given to the bargain according to its terms, and Courts of law cannot speculate upon the weight attached to one or another of the elements of an obligation. The defendant bound himself only in a given way, and can be held only by the bargain he made, at least in the form of this action. The instructions of the Court were unobjectionable, or, if any fault is to be found with them, the appellant cannot complain.

The evidence was conflicting, and it was for the jury to pass upon it. The Court below saw no reason to interfere with the verdict, and for reasons which have often been given, we cannot, in such cases as this, review its action.

The judgment is affirmed.

On a re-hearing of this case, the Court, by BALDWIN, J., and TERRY, C. J., concurring, delivered the following opinion:

We have re-considered this case at the earnest instance of the appellant. We remain, after examining his argument, of the same opinion as before. The decision we have made must, of course, be regarded in connection with, and limited by, the precise facts of that case. The language of the agreement is very guarded. The evident intent of Atwill, in guaranteeing against an eviction within the period limited, was to guard against a collusive judgment. He agreed to pay back the purchase money on a carefully defined condition, viz.: On a judicial eviction within the time, and obtained after notice to him. If "common sense" is applied to the language he used, it amounts to this: "I will repay you $2,000 on your being evicted by judgment after notice to me." Does this mean that he will pay it without any eviction, on a mere showing of a paramount title? Does it mean, any more, any kind of judicial eviction—with or without notice? These questions answer themselves. What Atwill warranted was not the title; it was the possession; and he did not unconditionally warrant the possession, but only on a condition which he expressed. How, then, can he be held, except on his own terms, for a violation of his own contract made and qualified in his own way? Is it not plain, that a party suing for a breach of this covenant, must aver that the warrantee had been evicted after notice to warrantor, and warrantor had failed to pay the sum stipulated? The payment of the money is absolutely dependent upon these facts.

---

Kneeland v. Wilson.

---

The petition is denied.

KNEELAND v. WILSON et al.

In an action to recover the value of certain buildings standing on certain lots proof that one C, through whom plaintiff claimed, on the day of his entry, applied to one of the defendants for his consent to the erection of the buildings, is sufficient evidence to authorize the jury to infer knowledge on the part of C, of defendants' title at the time of such entry.

APPEAL from the Sixth District, County of Sacramento.

This was an action brought by the plaintiff to recover damages for the unlawful conversion of certain buildings (wooden) erected upon certain lots of land situate in the town of Folsom, which buildings were claimed as personal property by plaintiffs, inasmuch as they were constructed on posts or blocks placed upon the surface of the ground.

The facts shown by the record are as follows: In the early part of the year 1856, one F. P. Watson was in possession of the lots of ground on which said buildings were subsequently erected. While in possession, Watson leased said lots to one W. L. Chrysyp, and delivered to him possession thereof. Soon after taking possession, Chrysyp erected the buildings in controversy. On the day of Chrysyp's entry, he applied to one of the present defendants for permission to erect the buildings, which was refused. In the month of July, 1856, the buildings were sold under a foreclosure of certain mechanics' liens, and one B. Tallman became the purchaser; to whom possession was delivered under said sale, and by him retained until the fifteenth September, 1856. Prior to that time, a judgment was recovered in the District Court of the Sixth Judicial District by plaintiff and Henry B. Waddilove against said Tallman, upon which execution was issued; and under said execution a sale of the said buildings was made by the Sheriff of Sacramento county, and they were bought by said Kneeland and Waddilove, who took possession; Waddilove subsequently conveyed his interest to plaintiff. Defendants, in March, 1856, commenced an action of ejectment for said lots against Chrysyp and others, and subsequently obtained judgment, and were placed in possession by a writ of restitution, whereupon plaintiff brought this action.

On the trial, the jury returned into Court and asked instructions to the following question: "What would be the law if the jury believed that Chrysyp entered with knowledge of defendant's title?"

The Court refused to instruct them on this point, upon the ground that there was no evidence to that effect. The jury again retired, and subsequently returned a verdict for plaintiff, upon which judgment was entered. Defendants appealed to this Court.

Martin v. Travers.

TERRY, C. J., delivered the opinion of the Court — FIELD, J., and BALDWIN, J., concurring.

In this case, after the jury had retired they returned into Court and desired to be instructed: "What would be the law if the jury believe that Chrysop entered with knowledge of defendants' title." The Court, in reply, said that there was no evidence to that effect, and therefore refused to instruct on the point.

This was error. It is shown by two witnesses, that on the very day of Chrysop's entry he knew of defendants' claim to the lots, and that he applied to one of defendants for his consent to the erection of the building, which was refused. Surely, this was sufficient evidence to authorize the jury to infer that this knowledge existed at the time of the entry.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded.

MARTIN v. TRAVERS.

Where a party objects to the admission of testimony on trial, he must state the point of his objection at the time. General objection will not do. The party should lay his finger on the point at the time of trial, otherwise this Court cannot review it.

APPEAL from the Twelfth District, County of San Francisco.

This was an action brought to recover back money deposited by the plaintiff with the defendant, as an indemnity for liability on a bail bond for the appearance of the plaintiff.

The complaint alleged, that in March, 1856, the defendant received from the plaintiff five hundred dollars, which the defendant was to return when he should be released from his liability on certain recognizances, which he had entered into for the appearance of the plaintiff and one Saddeaux, in the Court of Sessions. That the defendant had been released and fully discharged from said recognizances, but that he refused to repay the money.

The material portions of the defendant's answer are as follows:

Martin v. Travers.

---

"Denies each and every allegation, except as hereinafter admitted.

"Defendant denies that he had or received of or from the plaintiff the sum of five hundred dollars, or any other sum, as alleged in the complaint; or that he is indebted in any amount to the plaintiff. And the defendant avers that said sum was paid by plaintiff to his counsel, in consideration of his professional services, in the prosecutions in the complaint stated.

"The defendant admits that he executed the receipt," (recited in the complaint) "and at the same time alleges that he executed said receipt and became bail as therein stated, in consideration and upon an understanding with said plaintiff, that said plaintiff would deliver to, and deposit with the defendant personally, the said sum of five hundred dollars therein mentioned, by way of indemnity; but the defendant positively avers that said plaintiff did not so deposit said sum of five hundred dollars, or any other sum, with this defendant, as in said receipt stated. And so defendant alleges that said receipt is without consideration, and not binding upon defendant in any manner."

The case was referred to a referee for trial, who made his report to the Court, and found, amongst other things, the following facts, which are the ground of exception in this Court.

"Sixth. That the defendant, at various times between the eighth day of March, 1856, and the — day of November, 1856, by direction and order of the plaintiff, paid the five hundred dollars to one Col. George F. James, the counsel of the plaintiff, to whom plaintiff was indebted in that amount."

On the trial of the case before the referee, James was sworn, and testified on the behalf of the defendant; and to the following questions put by defendant's counsel, after handing the witness a receipt: "Did the defendant receive the money mentioned in that receipt?" the plaintiff objected, but assigned no grounds for such objection. The referee overruled the objection, and the witness testified.

Defendant had judgment. Plaintiff moved the Court for a new trial, which was denied, and he appealed to this Court.

MORGENTHAU v. HARRIS et al.

An assignment of property to a creditor, to be sold at public auction, and the proceeds to be applied, First, in payment of the claim of such creditor; and, Second, the residue to be distributed pro rata among the creditors of such debtor, is not in contravention of the statute, which prohibits assignments by insolvent debtors for the benefit of creditors.

If such creditor were insolvent at the time of the assignment, the party contesting the validity of the assignment should affirmatively show such fact. The insolvency could not be presumed from the language of the assignment.

APPEAL from the County Court of the City and County of San Francisco.

This was an action of assumpsit, originally commenced in a Justice's Court.

The facts are as follows:

On the fourth of May, 1857, the defendant, Harris, being indebted to Tandler & Co., executed to them a certain instrument, which, after giving a schedule of goods, reads as follows:

"The above mentioned goods, amounting to $1,912.96, I have

Morgenthau v. Harris.

---

delivered into the possession of Messrs. Tandler & Co., to be sold at public auction, and the proceeds thereof to be applied in payment of their claim against me, and any surplus over the amount of their claim to be disturbed pro rata to my other creditors.

"In witness whereof I have hereunto put my hand and seal.

"San Francisco, May 4th, 1857.

"M. HARRIS, { SEAL }

"Witness, S. V. E. STRAUSS."

The goods were delivered to Tandler & Co. under this instrument, who sold them at public auction, and, on the eleventh of May, 1857, after deducting the amount due them, paid over to Harris two hundred and fifty-five dollars and sixty-seven cents, the balance of the proceeds of the sales. An hour or two after the payment of the money to Harris, an order was served upon Tandler & Co. to attend and undergo an examination before a Justice of the Peace, upon proceedings supplementary to execution, concerning property, money, etc., in their hands, belonging or owing to Harris. This order was issued in the present case, which was then pending before said Justice. The Justice ordered Tandler & Co. to pay to plaintiff, Morgenthau, the sum of two hundred and six dollars and fifteen cents, the amount of the judgment against Harris. The case was taken to the County Court, but how it got there the record does not disclose. The cause was tried in the County Court without a jury, and judgment rendered for Tandler & Co., reversing the order of the Justice. Plaintiff Morgenthau appealed to this Court.

Sidney V. Smith, for Appellant.

I. The transfer made by Harris to Tandler & Co., dated May 4th, 1857, was an assignment for the benefit of creditors, and therefore void, as being contrary to the provisions of the Insolvent Law of 1852. Cheever v. Hays, 3 Cal. 471; Græchen v. Page, 6 Cal. 138.

II. As Tandler & Co. obtained their money under and by virtue of a fraudulent transaction, they cannot retain it as against any creditors who may attack such transaction. They are in such case merely holding the money so received as trustees for the debtors, and liable to attachment at their hands. Van Nest v. Toe, 1 Sand. Ch. R. 4.

Meyer v. Kinzer and Wife.

---

Crockett, Baldwin & Crittenden, for Respondents.

FIELD, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., concurring.

The assignment by Harris to Tandler & Co., was made to secure his indebtedness to them, and there is no pretense that it was fraudulent in fact. Nor was it in contravention of the statute, which prohibits assignments by insolvent debtors for the benefit of creditors. Harris was not insolvent at the time of its execution; at least there is no evidence in the record that he was. If such were the fact, it should have been affirmatively shown by the appellant who contested the validity of the assignment. His insolvency could not be presumed from the language of the instrument, and the surplus remaining of the proceeds of the goods, after the payment of his debt to Tandler & Co., exceeded the claim of the appellant, who, so far as appears, was his only remaining creditor.

Judgment affirmed.

MEYER v. KINZER AND WIFE.

Under our statute, all property acquired after marriage, by either husband or wife, except such as is acquired by gift, bequest, devise or descent, is common property.

The presumption, therefore, which attends the possession of property by either spouse, during the existence of the community, can only be overcome by clear and certain proof that it was owned by the claimant before marriage, or acquired afterwards in one of the particular ways specified in the statute, or that it is property taken in exchange for, or in the investment, or as the price of the property so originally owned or acquired. The burthen of such proof is with the claimant of the separate estate.

Where the purchase of property was made with the separate funds of either, that fact must be affirmatively established by clear and decisive proof. In the absence of such proof, the presumption is absolute and conclusive, and it makes no difference whether the conveyance is taken in the name of one or the other, or in the names of both.

The fact of purchase excludes the supposition of acquisition by gift, bequest, devise or descent.

---

Meyer v. Kinzer and Wife.

---

APPEAL from the Twelfth District, County of San Francisco.

This was an action brought by the plaintiff against the defendants, Kinzer and wife, to extinguish a claim of title by the defendants to certain real estate in the city of San Francisco.

Kinzer, the husband, in his answer disclaimed all pretensions to title in himself. Rebecca, the wife, sets up title by a mortgage upon the premises, and asked that the same may be foreclosed for the benefit of her separate estate.

The facts are as follows:

On the sixth of December, 1851, the defendant, George W. Kinzer, who was then, and still is, the husband of the defendant Rebecca, purchased certain real estate in the city of San Francisco, and took the conveyance in his own name. On the first of October, 1853, Kinzer and wife sold the premises to James H. Gager, both joining in the deed, and on the same day, Gager executed and delivered to Kinzer and wife, a note and mortgage on the premises, to secure $14,000 of the purchase money. On the eighth day of April, 1854, George W. Kinzer, for a valuable consideration, assigned and transferred the note and mortgage to Adolphus H. Lemmen—the wife did not join in this assignment. On the twenty-fifth of September, 1855, Gager, the mortgagor, paid to Lemmen the amount of the mortgage, and took a discharge. On the sixteenth of July, 1856, Gager sold and conveyed the property to plaintiff. The defendant Rebecca sets up a claim to one-half of the mortgage debt, as her separate property.

The cause was tried in the Court below without a jury. Plaintiff had judgment, and the defendant Rebecca appealed to this Court.

J. B. Hart for Appellant.

The position taken by the appellant is, that the contract and agreement between her and her husband, by which one-half of the mortgage was placed in her name and so recorded, gave to her the title to a moiety of the mortgage, and placed it beyond the control and disposition of her husband.

Before the sale and conveyance to Gager, the property was common property, one-half of which was in equity hers, the other her husband's, — while in his name was subject to his disposition, and liable for the payment of his debts, but after the sale to Gager, and execution and record of the mortgage, nothing beyond a moiety of the mortgage was his, and under his control — the other was her property, and none but a creditor before the sale and mortgage could reach it.

The second section of the Act regulating the rights of husband and wife, (Cod. Statutes, p. 812) does not prohibit the wife from accepting a gift from the husband, from common or his separate property.

It is clear to my mind, from the seventh section of the Act just alluded to, that the Legislature did not intend to adopt the civil Spanish or French law in regard to gifts or donations between husband and wife, for all those codes prohibit all gifts or donations between them; and upon a fair construction of the Act under consideration, it ought not, it seems to me, to be doubted but a gift from husband to wife, of either common or separate property, was intended by the Act to be allowed, otherwise the Act itself would be an unjust, unfair, and an improper law.

The wife, by the Act, and in all subsequent legislation on the subject, obtained and now has a separate existence and standing from that of her husband in regard to property; the common law no longer governs their right to property, or controls their actions in regard to it, and the only check upon her disposition by her of her property, is that the husband must join in the instrument with her.

The provisions of the third section of the Act, requiring the separate estate of the wife to be inventoried and acknowledged by the wife, and recorded by her, has reference to her separate personal and real estate, in the name and under the control of her husband, and was done to prevent him from having credit upon her property.

But when the title of property is placed in the name of the wife, by and with the consent and direction of the husband, as between her husband and the world, it is hers. Standing in her name, it is notice to all creditors and buyers, that that property is not subject to sale by him, or to the payment of debts thereafter contracted by him.

Johnson & Rose for Respondent.

The plaintiff contends, that the said mortgage, like the property, a part of the price of which it was given to secure, was the common property of the Kinzers, husband and wife, and as such, subject to the control and disposition of the husband alone. There would seem to be no difficulty in this, under the statute. Wood's Digest, 487, sec. 2; see also sec. 9, same Act.

A very similar case was decided in Texas, under the nearly identical provisions of the law in that State. Parker v. Chance, 11 Texas Rep. 513.

For the law determining marital rights in Texas, see Hartley's Digest, pp. 734-8; see also 2 Bright, Husband and Wife, p. 678; Laws passed by the second Legislature of Texas, vol. 2, part 1, pp. 77-9.

Such, also, has been the interpretation of our own law by the Supreme Court, in the case of Joyce v. Joyce, 5 Cal. Rep. 161.

Louisiana, Texas and California, have taken this law of a community of property between husband and wife, from the Spanish law, which previously governed the territory out of which those States were formed. In the cases of Parker v. Chance, and Joyce v. Joyce, the two younger States have conformed to the law as interpreted in Louisiana, and in the Spanish commentators. Smalley v. Lawrence, 9 Rob. La. Rep. 214; Febrero Mejicano, Lib. 1, Tit. 2, cap. 10, secs. 1, 6.

In the case of Smalley v. Lawrence, the Supreme Court of Louisiana holds this language: "The land was purchased during the existence of the community, and although the receipts or certificates are in the name of the wife, still the property as much belongs to the community as if it stood in the name of the husband, unless she can prove that the purchases were made with her own money, or the property given in payment of a debt owing to her in her own right." 1 Rob. 367; 17 La. 300; Houston v. Carl, 8 Texas Rep. 240; Scott & Solomon v. Mavnard et ux., Dallam, 548; McIntyre v. Chappell, 4 Texas Rep. 187; Love and Wife v. Robertson, 7 Texas Rep. 6.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant, that the case is governed by the common law, and that the facts recited in the stipulation raise the presumption of a gift by the husband to the wife. So it was contended in the cases cited from the 11 Texas and 5 Cal. Reports. In the case of Parker v. Chance, the following observations fell from the Court respecting this part of the case:

---

Meyer v. Kinzer and Wife.

---

"Had this transaction, embracing the assignment and the re-transfer of the one-half to the wife, taken place under the common law, where the estate of community and the doctrines belonging to it are unknown, the conveyance to the wife would have been presumptive evidence of a gift and advancement by the husband." 2 Vern. 67; 8 Vesey, 199; Bright, Husband and Wife, vol. 1, p. 32.

FIELD, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., and BALDWIN, J., concurring.

The statute defining the rights of husband and wife, provides in its first section that "all property, both real and personal, of the wife, owned by her before marriage, and that acquired afterwards by gift, bequest, devise or descent, shall be her separate property; and all property, both real and personal, owned by the husband before marriage, and that acquired by him afterwards, by gift, bequest, devise or descent, shall be his separate property;" and, in the second section, that "all property acquired after marriage, by either husband or wife, except such as may be acquired by gift, bequest, devise or descent, shall be common property;" and, by the ninth section, the husband is invested with the entire management and control of the common property, with the like absolute power of disposition as of his own separate estate.

These provisions of the statute are borrowed from the Spanish law, and there is hardly any analogy between them and the doctrines of the common law in respect to the rights of property consequent upon marriage. The statute proceeds upon the theory that the marriage, in respect to property acquired during its existence, is a community of which each spouse is a member, equally contributing by his or her industry to its prosperity, and possessing an equal right to succeed to the property after dissolution, in case of surviving the other. To the community all acquisitions by either, whether made jointly or separately, belong. No form of transfer or mere intent of parties can overcome this positive rule of law. All property is common property, except that owned previous to marriage or subsequently acquired in a particular way. The presumption, therefore, attending the possession of property by either, is that it belongs to the community; exceptions to the rule must be proved.

---

The purchase of the premises in question was made by Kinzer in 1851, after his marriage with Rebecca, and the presumption follows, as we have observed, that the property belonged to the community. If the purchase was made with the separate funds of either, that fact should have been affirmatively established by clear and decisive proof. In the absence of such proof the presumption was absolute and conclusive, and it made no difference whether the conveyance was taken in the name of one or the other, or in the names of both. This results, as we have said, from the language of the statute — "All property acquired after marriage by either, etc., shall be common property." The fact of purchase excludes the supposition of acquisition by gift, bequest, devise or descent.

The Spanish law, so far as the question involved in the present case is concerned, has been adopted in the States of Texas and Louisiana, and in these States the same presumption is indulged that the property belongs to the community from the fact of purchase, as will be perceived by an examination of the adjudged cases in their Courts. Thus in Love v. Robertson, (7 Texas, 11) the Supreme Court of Texas held this language: "The presumption that property purchased during the marriage was community property, would certainly be very cogent, and would require to be repelled by clear and conclusive proof." In Houston v. Curl, (8 Texas, 240) the same Court said: "It is the settled doctrine and law, that property purchased during the marriage, whether the conveyance be made to the husband or wife separately, or to them jointly, is presumed to belong to the community. This presumption may be rebutted by clear and satisfactory proof that the purchase was made with the separate funds of either husband or wife, in which case it remains the separate property of the party whose money was employed in the acquisition." And again, in Chapman v. Alden, (15 Texas, 278) the Court said: "The presumption that property purchased during the marriage is community property is very cogent, and can only be repelled by clear and conclusive proof that it was with the individual money or property of one of the parties." Where the property has not been preserved in specie or in kind, but, as in this case, has undergone mutations and changes, it is indispensable to ascertain its separate character that it be clearly and indisputably traced and identified. See also Lott v. Keach, 5 Texas, 394; Hemmingway v. Mathews 10 Texas, 207; Parker v. Chance, 11 Texas, 513; Wells and Wife v. Cockram, 13 Texas, 127; Clairborne v. Tanner, 13 Texas, 69.

Meyer v. Kinser and Wife.

To the same effect are the decisions of the Supreme Court of Louisiana. In Smalley v. Lawrence, (9 Rob. 211) the plaintiff claimed to be the owner of several tracts of land, by purchase from the United States, against a cession by her husband of his property to his creditors. The parties were married in 1839, and the land was bid off at a land sale in 1841, and paid for by the husband, who took the receipts in the name of the plaintiff, and the Court said: "The land was purchased during the existence of the community, and although the receipts or certificates are in the name of the wife still the property as much belongs to the community as if it stood in the name of the husband, unless she can prove that the purchases were made with her own money, or the property given in payment of a debt owing to her in her own right. All property acquired by either spouse during the existence of the community, the law presumes to belong to it, and is liable for the community debts. If the wife sets up a separate claim, she must make legal proof of it. The title being in her name does not raise even a presumption in her favor." See also Ford v. Ford, 1 La. 201; Davidson v. Stuart, 10 La. 146; Dominguez v. Lee, 17 La. 295; Comeau v. Fontenon, 19 La. 406; Fisher v. Gordy, 2 La. Ann. 762; Provost v. Delahoussaye, 5 La. Ann. 610; Brandergant v. Cassidy, 8 La. Ann. 96; Webb v. Peet, 7 La. Ann. 92; Andrew v. Bradley, 10 La. Ann. 606; Forbes v. Forbes, 11 La. Ann. 326.

This invariable presumption which attends the possession of property by either spouse during the existence of the community, can only be overcome by clear and certain proof that it was owned by the claimant before marriage or acquired afterwards in one of the particular ways specified in the statute, or that it is property taken in exchange for, or in the investment, or as the price of the property so originally owned or acquired. The burden of proof must rest with the claimant of the separate estate. Any other rule would lead to infinite embarrassment, confusion and fraud. In vain would creditors or purchasers attempt to show that the particular property seized or bought was not owned by the claimant before marriage, and was not acquired by gift, bequest, devise or descent, or was not such property under a new form consequent upon some exchange, sale or investment. In vain would they essay to trace through its various changes the disposition of any separate estate of the wife, so as to exclude any blending of it with the particular property which might be the subject of consideration.

By a statute of Pennsylvania, passed in 1848, the property owned by the wife previous to marriage, and that accruing to her during coverture, by will, descent, deed or conveyance, or otherwise, are secured to her as a separate estate; and in Gamber v. Gamber, (6 Harris, 363) the Supreme Court of the State said: "In the case of a purchase by the wife after marriage, the burden is upon her to prove distinctly that she paid for it with funds which were not furnished by the husband. Unless the rigid proof of her title is always required, no one can calculate the amount of injustice which the Act of 1848 will produce," and in Kearney v. Good, (9 Harris, 355) the same Court held this language: "If the burden of proving that the money was furnished by the husband is thrown upon the creditors, their hope of justice must always be a forlorn one. Thus administered, the Act of 1848 would be the worst one ever passed, and the most poisonous to the morals of the people. It would hold out constant temptations to families in embarrassed circumstances to commit wrongs of the worst kind, and to uphold them by imposture and falsehood.

"But there is nothing in the Act of 1848 which makes such consequences at all necessary. To bring the property of a married woman under its protection, it is made necessary by the letter, as well as the spirit of the statute, to prove that she owns it. She must identify it as property which was hers before marriage, or show how she came by it afterwards. Evidence that she purchased it amounts to nothing, unless it be accompanied by clear and full proof that she paid for it with her own separate funds. In the absence of such proof, the presumption is a violent one that her husband furnished the means of payment."

Meyer v. Kinzer and Wife.

---

It follows, from the views we have taken and the authorities cited, that no presumption arises, as contended by appellant, of a gift or advancement to the wife, from the fact that the note and mortgage were taken in the name of both. The position of the appellant rests upon the authorities of the common law. By them a conveyance taken in the name of the purchaser, or the joint names of husband and wife, upon a purchase made by the husband alone, would be deemed prima facie a gift or advancement to her. (Kingdom v. Bridges, 2 Vern. 67; Glaister v. Hewer, 8 Vesey, 195; Christ's Hospital v. Budgin, 2 Vern. 683.) But even by them, the gift, if the property were personal, would only be effectual in case of her surviving him, and he had not, in his lifetime, disposed of it. Cotes v. Stevens, 1 Y. & C. Eq. 66; George v. Bank of England, 7 Price, 646; Rider v. Kidder, 10 Vesey, 360; Lucas v. Lucas, 1 Atk. 270; Drummer v. Pitcher, 5 Sim. 35; Low v. Carter, 1 Beav. 426.

The common law authorities are entirely inapplicable under our system. The statute prescribes the effect of the acquisition of property by either spouse, and its operation cannot be defeated or evaded by the form of the conveyance, or the intention of the husband, in taking it in the name of his wife. In every form the community character of the property continues. See Parker v. Chance, 11 Texas, 515.

As the case at bar stands, it is clear that the note and mortgage were subject to the disposition of the husband as fully and absolutely as if made to him individually. The note was given for part of the purchase money of the land, and the mortgage was executed as security for the note. This change in the form of the common property could not affect the control of the husband over it. The signature of the wife would have added nothing to the validity of the transfer.

PEOPLE v. PLUMMER.

Where the record shows no error which could have operated to the defendant's prejudice the judgment will be affirmed.

APPEAL from the Tenth District, County of Yuba.

The defendant was indicted and convicted of murder in the second degree. The case came to this Court, on appeal, from Nevada county, and at the April Term, 1858, (9 Cal. 298) the judgment of the Court below was reversed, and a new trial ordered. Subsequently, a change of venue was had to Yuba county, where a trial was again had, and the defendant again convicted. The case now comes before this Court, on appeal from the judgment rendered in Yuba county. There are no points of law decided which would justify the publication of the facts. The questions determined are peculiarly applicable to this case; and if the facts were spread out at large, no benefit could result to the profession therefrom.

McConnell & Goodwin for Appellant.

Henry Meredith for Respondent.

TERRY, C. J., delivered the opinion of the Court — FIELD, J., concurring.

After a careful examination of the record in this case, we are not able to discern any error which could have operated to defendant's prejudice.

The question proposed to the witness, Mrs. St. John, to which exception was taken, was not strictly proper, but the answer to it could not possibly have prejudiced the case of defendant.

The evidence of Barker, which was also excepted to, was, in our opinion, properly admitted, as rebutting a presumption sought to be established by the testimony of one of defendant's witnesses.

The instructions asked by defendant were all given, except the seventh, which was erroneous as offered, and the qualification given with it by the Judge was strictly in accordance with the statute.

Judgment affirmed.

Wright & Co. v. Levy.

---

WRIGHT & CO. et. al. v. LEVY et al.

A non-negotiable chose in action created by the immediate parties to it, for the purpose of defrauding creditors, cannot be impeached in the hands of an innocent assignee by the creditors of the debtors making such chose in action. The assignee of a judgment is only the holder of an equity, with the right to use the judgment and the name of the plaintiff to enforce it, and he stands in the shoes of the assignor as to all defenses which existed against the judgment between the parties to it.

A judgment is property which may be purchased like any other property. The purchaser is bound to inquire into the defense of the debtor. He has the means to do this; but he could not be held to inquire into latent equities existing in the hands of third persons; and hence, as to third persons, he stands unaffected by frauds of which he had no knowledge, express or constructive.

On rehearing: L executed and delivered his promissory note to N, without consideration, and for the purpose of defrauding, hindering and delaying his creditors. N had knowledge of the fraud, and was a participant in it. Subsequently, N sued out an attachment upon the note, and had it levied upon L's property. After this levy, W and others, creditors of L, obtained attachments, and had them levied upon the same property. Pending these attachments, and before judgment, N, for a valuable consideration, assigned the note upon which suit was then pending to J, who knew nothing of the original fraud; Held, That J is not protected in his purchase. N, having been superseded by W's attachment, could not, by any act or deed of his, put his assignee in any better position than he occupied himself. N's attachment was void as against W, a creditor of L, and the question is as to the relative equities of J and W, and not as to the equities of third persons.

APPEAL from the Sixth District, County of Sacramento.

This was an action brought in the Court below to set aside a judgment rendered therein in favor of John Jones, assignee of Marcus Newmark, and against Davis Levy, upon the ground of fraud, and for an injunction to restrain the collection of the same, etc.

The bill of exceptions discloses the following facts: Davis Levy executed and delivered a promissory note to Marcus Newmark. The note was given without consideration, and for the purpose of hindering, delaying and defrauding the creditors of Levy. Newmark was cognizant of the fraud, and a participant in it. Subsequently, Newmark sued out an attachment upon this note, and had it levied upon the property of Levy. After the levy of this attachment, the plaintiffs, Wright & Co. and others, creditors of Levy, also sued out attachments,

Wright & Co. v. Levy.

---

and levied them upon the same property. After this second levy, and pending the suit of Newmark, he sold and assigned for a valuable consideration the note executed by Levy, together with the action then pending on it, to the defendant, John Jones. Jones was an innocent purchaser, and knew nothing of the fraudulent intent of the parties to the note. The suit upon the note, together with those of the plaintiffs and creditors of Levy, went to judgment. Thereupon Wright & Co., together with others, creditors of Levy, filed this bill against Levy, Jones and others, setting up the fraud and praying an injunction against the collection of Jones' judgment, and that plaintiffs may be adjudged entitled to the money arising from the sale of the property now in the hands of the Sheriff. The Court below dismissed the bill, and gave judgment for defendant, Jones, from which the plaintiffs appealed to this Court.

2. Prior, because their attachments were prior to the assignment.

II. The "assignment" of the note to Jones by Newmark made it no more available in the hands of the former than it was in the hands of the latter. IV. Under the circumstances Jones is chargeable with notice of the infirmities of the claim assigned to him by Newmark. 3 Story's Rep. 388 and 389; 5 John. Ch. 427; 2 Cowen, 289.

V. Jones is not entitled to be considered a bona fide holder of the claim, having taken it burthened with a lawsuit for its collection.

Moore & Welty for respondent Jones.

The statutes of 13 and 27 of Elizabeth and New York, contains a proviso similar in effect to that contained in the twenty-fourth section of our Act. In fact, ours is a transcript of the New York statute, and that Act was taken from the British statutes, and modified only in phraseology.

The statute of 13 of Elizabeth, ch. 5, provides: "That this Act, or anything contained therein, shall not extend or be construed to impeach, defeat, make void or frustrate any conveyance, etc., of, in, to or out of any lands, etc., goods or chattels, at any time heretofore had or made, or to be made upon or for a good consideration, and bona fide to any person, etc., not having at the time of such conveyance or assurance, made any manner of notice or knowledge of the covin, fraud or collusion, as aforesaid."

The statute of frauds, as it originally stood in England, did not contain this proviso; but the Courts and the people soon found that something must be done to protect innocent third persons who had purchased of a fraudulent grantee without notice of the fraud, and hence the insertion of the above clause.

Since the enactment of the statute of 13th of Elizabeth the Courts of England have been frequently called upon to decide controversies between innocent purchasers from fraudulent grantees and the creditors of the fraudulent grantors, and so far as we are aware, the decisions have uniformly been in favor of the former.

Wright & Co. v. Levy.

---

In discussing this statute, in Cadogan v. Kennett, (Cowp. 434) Lord Mansfield remarked that "such a construction is not to be made in support of creditors as will make third persons suffer. Therefore, the statute does not militate against any transaction bona fide made, and when there is no imputation of fraud, and so is the common law."

The same doctrine prevailed in Doe v. Martyr, (1 New Rep. 332) and had long prior to that case been recognized by Lord Kenyon, in Parr v. Eliason, 1 East, 95.

George v. Wilbank, (9 Ves., p. 190) is a leading case, involving directly the question under discussion here. That was a contest between a bona fide purchaser of personal assets from a fraudulent vendee, and the creditors of the vendor. After a full and most able discussion of the question, Lord Eldon concluded as follows: "The claims of the bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration, must be sustained as against the creditor."

In Prodgers v. Langham, (1 Sid. 133) the general principle is laid down, that "if a fraudulent grantee convey to a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration, it is good, and purged of the fraud by matters ex post facto."

Mr. Roberts, in his learned work on Fraudulent Conveyances, (p. 497) after fully discussing the question, and citing and reviewing numerous authorities, concludes as follows: "The valuable consideration, whenever it occurs, entirely obliterates the fraud, so that it can never again, in any shape, affect the transactions."

With, perhaps, one exception, the Courts of this country have followed the rule laid down in England upon this subject.

Chief Justice Thomson, in the case of Jackson ex dem. Merit v. Terry, (13 John. Rep. 471) admitted that the conveyance from J. Turner to A. Turner was a gross fraud, and made expressly to avoid Hubbard's judgment; but that the lessor being a bona fide purchaser from A. Turner without knowledge of the fraud, he was not to be prejudiced by it.

Mr. Story, in his treatise on Equity Jurisprudence, (vol. 1, sec. 434) under the head of Constructive Frauds, says: "Courts of Equity never interpose at all when the property has been conveyed by the voluntary or covinous grantee to a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration, without notice. Such a person is a favorite in the eyes of Courts of Equity, and is always protected against claims of this sort."

Wright & Co. v. Levy.

---

The reason for this doctrine is well illustrated by Chief Justice Marshall, in Fletcher v. Peck, (6 Cranch, 133) as follows: "If a suit be brought to set aside a conveyance obtained by fraud, and the fraud is clearly proved, the conveyance will be set aside as between the parties; but the rights of third persons, who are purchasers without notice, for a valuable consideration, cannot be disregarded."

In the case of Anderson v. Roberts, (18 John. Rep. 527) Chief Justice Spencer collects and reviews all the authorities upon this subject, and discusses the question with marked learning and ability. In the course of his opinion he remarks: "The grounds adopted by the Courts for protecting bona fide purchasers, without notice, is solid and substantial, and applies with equal force to both descriptions of grantees."

In the same case, Justice Platt, among other things, says: "A bona fide purchaser under a fraudulent grantee, without notice, either actual or constructive, acquires a good and valid title, purged of the original fraud, as against creditors."

"Though a sale of goods made fraudulently, and without consideration, may be void as to the creditors of the vendor, yet if prior to their attachment the goods passed into the hands of a bona fide purchaser not cognizant of the fraud, and for a valuable consideration, the latter would be entitled to hold." Trote et al. v. Warren, 11 Maine Rep. 227; Sparron v. Chelsy, 19 Maine Rep. 79; Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch Rep. 133; Rowley v. Bigelow, 12 Pick. Rep. 306; Hoffman v. Noble, 6 Mete. Rep. 68; Story's Eq. Jurisprudence, vol. 1, sec. 434; Dallam's Dig., Texas, p. 418.

When Jones purchased this note and paid out his money, Newmark was the holder of it, and appeared to be honestly the owner. Jones saw that the note was fair upon its face, and paid out his money without a suspicion that anything was wrong, and ought to be protected.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., concurring.

The answer of defendant Jones, denying all collusion with the plaintiff, in the judgment transferred to him, and asserting that he is a

---

Wright & Co. v. Levy.

---

purchaser in good faith and for value of the judgment, raises the question whether a chose in action, not negotiable by the law merchant — the chose having been procured or created by the immediate parties to it to defraud creditors — can be affected or impeached in the hands of any innocent assignee, by the creditors of the debtors making it. We think, with the learned Judge below, that it cannot. It is conceded that the assignee of the judgment is only the holder of an equity, with the right to use the judgment and the name of the plaintiff to enforce it, and stands in the shoes of the assignor, as to all defenses which existed against the judgment between the parties to it. It is like a note assigned after due, the rule as to which is thus laid down in Story on Bills, (sec. 220, p. 260): "In the next place, as to the time of the transfer. In general, it may be stated that a transfer may be made at any time while the bill remains a good, subsisting, unpaid bill, whether it be before or after it has arrived at maturity. But the rights of the holder against the antecedent parties, may be most materially affected by the time of the transfer. If the transfer is made before the maturity of the bill, to a bona fide holder, for a valuable consideration, he will take it free of all equities between the antecedent parties, of which he has no notice. If the transfer is after the maturity of the bill, the holder takes it as a dishonored bill, and is affected by all the equities between the original parties, whether he has any notice thereof or not. But when we speak of equities between the parties, it is not to be understood, by this expression, that all sorts of equities existing between the parties, from other independent transactions between them, are intended, but only such equities as attach to the particular bill, and, as between these parties, would be available to control, qualify, or extinguish any rights arising thereon. Still, however, subject to such equities, the holder, by indorsement after the maturity of the bill, will be clothed with the same rights and advantages as were possessed by the indorser, and may avail himself of them accordingly."

The judgment is property, which may be purchased like any other property. The purchaser is bound to inquire into the defenses of the debtor. He has the means to do this; but he could not be held to inquire into latent equities existing in the hands of third persons. The law, when it made this sort of property subject to sale, gave it the protection which it extends to all other property. It is only by force of the Statute of Frauds that the judgment or sale of it could be avoided at the suit of the creditor, or by force of common law principles, of which the statute is an affirmance. But neither this statute nor these principles affect an innocent purchaser, nor an innocent purchaser of equities, any more than of legal estates. Between the parties, the assignee of equities stands in the place of his assignor, with no better rights; but as to the claims of third persons, the purchaser of an equity stands unaffected by frauds of which he has no knowledge, express or constructive. No authority has been cited which supports the ground taken by appellant, while the general principle which we have announced is asserted in many cases.

The judgment is affirmed.

At the April Term, 1859, a reargument was had in this case, and the Court, by BALDWIN, J., and TERRY, C. J., concurring, rendered the following opinion:

On rehearing: The opinion which we delivered in this case at the last term is correct in principle. We erred, however, in assuming that the assignment was of a judgment of Levy, and made by Newmark to Jones before the attachment of the plaintiff was put upon the property of the defendant. It now appears, that after Newmark's attachment was levied, the plaintiff got out an attachment on his debt, and it was levied on the same property as Newmark's; and that pending these attachments, and before judgment, Newmark assigned the note and the lawsuit to the defendant Jones. It is found by the Court that this note, attachment, etc., of Newmark's were fraudulent, but that the fraud was not known to Jones, who bought for value. The question then comes up whether Jones is protected in his purchase? We think, on this hypothesis of fact, he is not. Newmark's proceedings were all void against the plaintiff. The plaintiff by his levy took the property subject only to the superior rights or the claim of Newmark. He had, under the assumed facts, the real title as against Newmark. In this condition Jones buys; but Jones has only the right Newmark had. Newmark having been in fact superseded by the plaintiff, could not by any deed or act of his put his assignee in any better position. The question is not as to the equities of third persons; the question is as to the relative equities of Jones and Wright; and it seems Wright has, as against Jones, the oldest equity and the legal title. While the property was legally subject to his claim, Wright subjected it by his attachment; his title then vested, so to speak. No act of Newmark subsequently could divest it. All this is said on the assumption of the fraud of the Newmark proceedings; for the effect of that fraud unquestionably is to make those proceedings nullities as against Wright. When they were nullities, Wright levied on the property, and, of course, his title dating from the levy is superior to Jones' title dating from the subsequent assignment to him by Newmark. None of the authorities cited by the respondent's counsel apply to such a case as this. The principle of the case of Anderson v. Roberts (in 18 Johnson R. 531) is analogous, and two or three cases in Alabama are the same way. It is true that the case in 18 Johns. only holds that after a sale on execution of real estate fraudulently conveyed, the sale being made of it as the property of the fraudulent grantor, an innocent grantor takes no title; but the effect of a levy on chattels is not less decisive in changing the title and vesting it in the Sheriff as trustee for the creditor. After it does so vest, a sale by the fraudulent vendee cannot alter it. The Alabama cases go further, and hold that after the lien of a judgment attaches to property fraudulently conveyed, the lien of the creditor carries the title against a conveyance subsequently made by the fraudulent vendee.

---

Wright & Co. v. Levy.

---

The question is not whether, when Jones took the assignment of the note, he took a good title as against third persons to the note; but whether, when he took, as incident to the note, a title or claim to the property attached, he took a superior right to the plaintiff, who had an older and better claim on it? If, by operation of law, Wright's claim to this property was superior to Newmark's, Wright was as much entitled to priority over Jones, as if his right was given by contract.

We therefore reverse the decree on the finding. We think, however, the case has not been fully tried below, and we remand it that some irregularities may be cured, and an opportunity given to try the case de novo on such amendments of the pleadings as may be desired.

Ordered accordingly.

MOORE v. PATCH, TAX COLLECTOR.

The provisions of the Revenue Act of 1857, which requires the Tax Collector to publish the Delinquent Tax List, giving the name of the owner (when known) of all real estate, and the improvements, together with a condensed description of the property, etc., are not conditions precedent to the vesting of the tax. The obligation to pay the tax does not exist by the force of these provisions. The tax is a debt due from the property holder to the State, and these proceedings by publication, etc., are merely modes adopted by the Legislature to collect them. If the property be omitted from the delinquent list, this does not discharge the property holder, but the defect may be remedied by the Legislature.

Where the Legislature passed an Act to remedy the failure on the part of the Tax Collector to publish the names of the owners, together with a list of the property, such Act cannot be defeated upon the constitutional ground that it is not uniform in its operation. Such Act is not general, but special, and is passed to meet a given state of facts, and, consequently, that provision of our Constitution which provides that "All laws of a general nature shall be uniform in their operation," does not apply.

Taking the third section of the Act of 1858, together with the first section, it is evident that the intention of the Legislature in the passage of the Act of 1858, was to substitute the assessment roll for the delinquent list required by the Act of 1857, or, rather, to give full and complete effect to that list as a valid warrant for the collection of the taxes therein mentioned, and then to provide, as is done in section three of that Act, for their collection.

The Act of 1858, dispensing with the publication required by the Act of 1857, also dispensed with the proof of that fact.

APPEAL from the Twelfth District, County of San Francisco.

The plaintiff filed his bill in the Twelfth District Court, to restrain the defendant, Tax Collector of the City and County of San Francisco, from selling certain property of plaintiff, described in his complaint. A temporary injunction was first ordered, and, on a final hearing, the same was made perpetual by a decree of said Court. From that judgment the defendant appeals to the Supreme Court. The facts necessary to explain the decision appear in the opinion of the Court.

Shafter, Park & Heydenfeldt for Appellant.

I. Does the Act of 1858 by its terms undertake to legalize the assessment roll so far as to authorize the sale of real estate for taxes, where there was in fact no advertisement under the Act of 1857?

---

Moore v. Patch.

---

The Act was approved January 30th, 1858, and it "confirms" the roll "in the hands of the Tax Collector," and "declares it to be legal and binding as a good and valid Tax List, and in all respects sufficient in law as the duplicate assessment list of said city and county for the fiscal year ending June 30th, 1858; and the same is and shall be a sufficient warrant in the hands of the Tax Collector to authorize and empower him to collect the taxes therein assessed."

The language is broad enough to comprehend every description of irregularities, whether committed by the Assessor, the Board of Equalization or Tax Collector.

But, notwithstanding the clear import of the language used, the counsel for the plaintiff insists that it could not have been the intention to dispense with the publication of the delinquent list under the Act of 1857, or, rather, it is contended that the Act of 1858 assumes that such list had been published; and the conclusion is, that where a delinquent tax list was not so published, in fact, it could not be collected under the Act of 1858.

But the Act of 1858 nowhere assumes that a perfect delinquent list had been previously published, nor does it assume that an imperfect one had been published, or make any allusion to any attempt at publication previously made. The position that the Act of 1858 goes upon the supposed assumption in question, is then entirely without foundation.

But, it is said that the Legislature must have assumed a publication of a perfect delinquent list, for the reason, that without such publication the Tax Collector could not make oath as required by sec. 24 of the Act of 1857.

True, he could not; but the answer is, that the Act of 1858 suspends the operation of the Act of 1857 in a particular locality and for a single year. It begins by curing all defects in the assessment roll, and makes the duplicate, notwithstanding those defects, a valid warrant for the collection of all taxes delinquent on its face. The Collector is then (sec. 3) to give notice of ten days through the newspapers, that he will proceed to collect, etc. There is no pretense but that this new form of publication was complied with to the letter. Now, this new mode supersedes, or at least temporarily suspends, the operation of the old one; and the oath required by section 24 of the Act of

Moore v. Patch.

---

1857, being collateral merely to the mode, is also superseded or suspended.

The general notice then prescribed by the Act of 1858, taken in connection with what the plaintiff knew all along by necessary intendment, meets all just demands growing out of the maxim that "No man should be condemned without a hearing."

II. But it is contended that the Act of 1858 is unconstitutional, on the ground that it is retrospective and divests vested rights.

The Act more properly enforces "vested" obligations. Rights may be divested for public uses, and under proper conditions. However absolute the plaintiff's title may have been to his property, it was no more absolute than his duty to pay his taxes; and if, on the whole, he has been fairly dealt with by the Legislature in the matter of notice he has had all that any citizen can claim as against the public.

It is said, that where the statutes make certain steps conditions precedent to the right to sell, and those steps are not taken, the Legislature has no power to order a sale thereafter on a different set of conditions.

To this we answer, that a failure of the first set of conditions does not, in the case of a tax, absolve the tax-payer. It has never been so regarded here or elsewhere. There has always been a provision in our revenue laws, by which a delinquent's taxes have been conserved and carried forward into the roll of the ensuing year, and the power to collect them has never been considered as lost for the reason that proper steps were not taken to enforce their collection during the year for which they were levied. Still, we do not believe, and therefore do not say, that the Legislature, after the plaintiff had effectually slipped through the Act of 1857 for that year, could compel him to pay his taxes at once by edict; and if the Act of 1858 is a sentence rather than a law, it may be open to objection. But it is a law; it gives all delinquents a new hearing; it provides for the reissuing of a public document in which the results of such new hearing are to be noted, and it provides for publication of ten days before property can be sold. These conditions are varied in some respects from those named in the Act of 1857, but they are just, reasonable, and beneficial to the tax-payer, and the power of the Legislature to prescribe them follows from the fact that the tax was unpaid after all, and that the duty to pay it still subsisted. If the duty remained, then the right to enforce its performance remained also. The power being given, the only question that can be made is on the mode in which it was exercised, and that mode, whether it is like or unlike a former one, should be upheld if it is not opposed to any constitutional provision or any rule of universal justice.

---

As to the charge that the Act of 1858 is retrospective, see Yosher v. Stonington, 4 Com. 209; Mather v. Chipman, 6 Com. 54; Beach v. Walker, 6 Com. 197; Norton v. Pettibone, 7 Com. 319; Watson v. Mercer, 8 Pet. 88; Smith on Stat. 409, 546.

But, it is said that the Act of 1858 is unconstitutional in view of the provision "That all laws of a general nature shall be uniform in their operation."

In the first place, the Act of 1858 is not a general law, but a particular one instead; still it is not partial or invidious. The Act lays down a uniform rule for the class of persons upon whom it was intended to operate, to wit, delinquent tax-payers in the City and County of San Francisco.

It is uniform as to the subject matter and parties to which it relates, and is therefore free from the constitutional objection in question. The Act of 1858 creates no new right in the Government, and imposes no new duty, but devises a new proceeding, remedial in its character, for the vindication of a right and the enforcement of a duty fully perfected, and still on foot when the Act was passed.

Waller & Moore for Respondent.

First. The defendant has neither caused to be published in any delinquent list, either the plaintiff, as owner of the property he threatens to sell; nor caused to be published a condensed, nor any description of that property, as assessed to any owner, known or unknown, nor as being delinquent for taxes unpaid. Nor did he cause to be published for three consecutive weeks, nor for any other period of time, an advertisement of the time and place of sale of such property.

The defendant, therefore, had no warrant or authority of law for making such sale.

Moore v. Patch.

---

Such publication and advertisement are required by the Act of April 29th, 1857, (Laws of 1857, p. 325) entitled "An Act to provide Revenue for the support of the Government of the State," particularly by sections 14, 15, 16, 17, 20 and 24, of said Act.

Second. Such publication and advertisement are not dispensed with in the Act of January 30th, 1858, (Laws of 1858, p. 4) entitled "An Act to Legalize the Tax List, or Assessment Roll, of the City and County of San Francisco," etc.

Nor could tax sales to be made under the same, be effectual to convey a title to the purchaser, unless the publication and advertisement specified in sections 14 and 15 of the Act of 1857, had been made. Nor without this could the Tax Collector execute deeds to purchasers, nor take the oath required of him by section 24 of that Act, designed to perpetuate testimony in regard to sales.

The Tax Collector not having so published and advertised, has therefore no right to sell. Blackwell on Tax Titles, pp. 45, 47, 79, 80, 21, 254, 264 and 310.

Third. That the Act of 1858 was not intended to supersede sections 14 and 15 of the Act of 1857, as to notice and advertisement, will clearly appear from sections 16, 17, 20, and especially from section 24 of the Act of 1857, and comparing those sections with the Act of 1858.

In the Act of 1857 referred to, all the conditions precedent, on performing which the Tax Collector had a right to sell property for unpaid taxes, were minutely specified. Those conditions precedent, including the advertisement and notice by publication, were to be performed before the fourth Monday in November. A law passed after that date could not legally relate back, so as to dispense with those conditions precedent, to the prejudice of the individual, nor vary those conditions so as to inflict upon him, on account of a past omission; a penalty which did not exist at the time of the omission. See 1 Kent's Com., pp. 418-19-20; also, decision of C. J. Kent in Dash v. Van Vleck, 1 Johns. 447; 3 Dall. 391, 397; Decision, Story, C. J., 2 Gallis, 139; 5 Yerg. 320; Nelson v. Allen, 1 Yerg. 360; Constitution Cal., Comp. Laws, p. 42, sec. 16.

A tax is a debt owed by the individual to the State. Property is the pledge or mortgage. (Blackwell on Tax Titles, pp. 40-1.) By what right, then, after the debt accrues, can the terms of foreclosure, advertisement and sale, be varied?

Moore v. Patch.

---

Fifth. The defendant has no constitutional right to sell this property. The Constitution of this State provides that "All laws of a general nature shall be uniform in their operation."

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — FIELD, J., concurring.

The plaintiff below enjoined the Collector from proceeding to sell his lot for taxes. The ground is that they are illegal. The plaintiff charges that the delinquent list, published by defendant in the fall of 1857, and under the Revenue Act of that year, did not contain the name and property of plaintiff, as required by the fourteenth and fifteenth sections of that Act. An Act was passed by the Legislature in 1858, (Session Acts, p. 4). This Act confirms the roll in the hands of the Collector, and declares it legal and binding, as a valid Tax List, and in all respects sufficient in law, as the duplicate assessment of said county and city, for the fiscal year ending June 30th, 1858, and the same shall be a sufficient warrant in the hands of the Tax Collector, to authorize and empower him to collect the taxes therein assessed.

It is argued for the respondent that this Act, supposing it to cover the case, is unconstitutional. This idea seems to be founded on the supposition that the steps made necessary by the Act of 1857, are conditions precedent to vesting of the tax, and that no obligation to pay the taxes existed, except by force of these proceedings. This, however, is a mistake. The tax is a debt due from the property-holder to the State, and these proceedings by publication and the like, are merely modes adopted by the Legislature to collect them. If property be omitted from the list, this does not discharge the property-holder, but the defect may be remedied by the Legislature. The irregularities, of whatever character, occurring under the Act of 1857, were intended to be cured by the Act of 1858, and we think, if the provisions of the latter Act have been fully complied with, the property might be fully subjected to the payment of the tax.

Moore v. Patch.

---

The objection that the Act is not uniform in its operation, is without force. It is not a general law, but a special Act, made for a given state of facts. There is no necessity for it, except for the particular occasion, and to remedy the particular evil at which it is aimed, and we think it effectual for that purpose.

The more serious objection, however, is urged, that the delinquent tax list required to be published by the Act of 1857, was never published, and that this provision is not repealed by the Act of 1858. The third section of the Act of 1858, is as follows: "The Tax Collector shall, as soon as may be after receiving back the duplicate assessment list, as provided in the last section, give notice by advertisement, to be published by five insertions in two newspapers published in said city and county, that he will proceed to collect the delinquent taxes due on said list; and at the expiration of ten days after the publication of said advertisement, he shall proceed to sell the real estate on which the taxes remain delinquent, in the manner provided in an Act entitled 'An Act to provide Revenue for the support of the Government of this State,' approved April twenty-ninth, eighteen hundred and fifty-seven; and he shall, in like manner, proceed to collect any taxes which may remain due upon personal property."

The fifteenth section of the Act of 1857, (p. 329 of the Session Acts) provides that on or before the fourth Monday in November, the Tax Collector shall cause the delinquent list to be published, giving, in said publication, the name of the owner (when known) of all real estate and the improvements, together with a condensed description of the property, that it may be easily known, and also a similar condensed description of any real estate or improvements assessed to unknown owners, and also the name of every party delinquent for any tax or personal property, and also opposite each name or description give the amount of taxes, including the costs, etc. If a newspaper be published in the county, the publication by this section required shall be made by one insertion one time per week, for three successive weeks, in some county newspaper. Said publication shall designate the time and place for commencing the sale, which time shall not be less than twenty-one days, nor more than twenty-eight days, from the time of the first publication.

Moore v. Patch.

---

Taking the third section of the Act of 1858 together with the first, it is apparent that the intention of the Legislature was to substitute the assessment roll for the tax list required by the Act of 1857; or rather, to give full and complete effect to that list, as a valid warrant for the collection of the taxes therein mentioned; and then to provide, as is done in section three of that Act, for their collection. It was intended to be a plenary and complete plan for the taxes on that list. This is evident, because, after saying that the list shall be a sufficient warrant for collecting those taxes, it provides for a specific mode of such collection, which was by advertising ten days. It could not have been thought necessary to advertise the list, as in section fifteen of the Act of 1857, and, in addition, to make this latter advertisement. Besides, it would be impossible to follow the directions of the Act of 1857, for the time prescribed had long before elapsed. It has been seen that after the advertisement of the delinquent list directed to be made by the Act of 1857, a sale was to be had; here a sale at a different time is directed to be made by the third section of the Act of 1858. It would result, if we give the construction of respondent to these statutes, that no sale could be had under the Act of 1858; but, indeed, the Act would be wholly inoperative. The provisions of the statute of 1858, therefore, are in direct conflict with the sections fourteen and fifteen of the Act of 1857, and the former must prevail. The whole question amounts to this: Taxes were due from sundry persons for the year 1857; these taxes were not paid. A list of these taxes is made by the proper officers; the Legislature has recognized and validated this list, and a special provision is made for their collection. This provision is not a general law, but a special remedial Act; not made to create any new obligation, but to enforce the original debt. The Government had the power to give this remedy. It was intended to be a complete remedy for the given case.

We do not mean to say, that if these taxes were not due the Legislature could create any obligation for the payment. But being due, and not collected at the proper time, they may be collected by such means as the Legislature has prescribed. The respondent suggests that if this construction be right, that the twenty-fourth section of the Act of 1857 must fall, which requires the Tax Collector, in order to preserve testimony, to make oath that he made the publication required by that Act. But if the publication, as therein required, is dispensed with, so is the proof of the fact. The accessory falls with the principal.

Cowell v. Doub.

---

A general impression seems to prevail that no tax sale can be made which will be effectual to pass title. Without expressing any opinion on the facts of any given case, it may not be out of place to suggest that consequences of a serious character may result to owners of property, by a too confident reliance upon the idea that taxes may be left unpaid with impunity.

The judgment of the Court below is reversed, and cause remanded.

COWELL et al. v. DOUB, TAX COLLECTOR.

Moore v. Patch, Tax Collector, (ante 265) affirmed.

A party seeking to enjoin the collection of tax assessed upon his property, upon the ground that the law provides for the meeting of the Board of Equalization for the correction of the tax list, and that the Board did not meet as required, must show in his bill that there was error to be corrected in his list.

Nor can such party enjoin the collection of the tax upon the ground that notice was not given of the meeting of the Board, as required by law, unless he shows that there was error in the assessed value of his property to his prejudice.

APPEAL from the Seventh District, County of Marin.

This was a suit in equity brought to enjoin the collection of State and County tax assessed upon the property of the plaintiffs, in the County of Marin.

This bill was originally filed in December, 1857, and set out in detail many irregularities in the levy, assessment and equalization of the tax. To this bill defendant demurred; the Court sustained the demurrer, and gave the plaintiffs leave to amend. Between the time of filing the original bill and the decision of the Court upon the demurrer, the Legislature passed an Act extending the time for the collection of the tax. This law, passed February 1st, 1858, confirmed the assessment roll in the hands of the Collector, and provides that the Board of Equalization shall again meet on the third Monday in February, 1858, and continue in session from day to day for four days; that notice of the meeting of the Board should be given, by posting, in three public places in the county, and by publication in the San Francisco Herald, at least ten days before the meeting of the Board, and that all persons dissatisfied might appear before the Board and have their list corrected, etc. The amended bill sets out facts showing that the law of the first of February, 1858, was not complied with, but this is traversed by the answer. The defendant relies on the law of 1858 as curing any defects in the original levy, assessment, etc. The notice was published in the Herald on the sixth day of February, 1858, and the third Monday fell on the fifteenth of the month. It is alleged that this notice was not in time. Defendant had judgment, and plaintiffs appealed.

A. T. Wilson for Appellants.

W. Skidmore for Respondent.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., concurring.

Some of the questions in this case have been decided in case of Moore v. Patch, at the last term. The Legislature, on the first of February, 1858, (Sessions Acts p. 24) confirmed the tax list or assessment roll, as completed by the acting Assessor of the County of Marin, for the fiscal year ending June 30th, 1858, in the words, or nearly the words, of the San Francisco Act, construed in the case of Patch. This we decided the Legislature had the right to do. If any informalities occurred in the assessment of the taxes—the taxes themselves being just debts, and this a mere mode of collecting them—the Legislature could cure them in this way.

It is no objection that the same Act provides for a correction of this list by the Board of Equalization. The case does not show that there was error to be corrected, so far as the appellants' property is concerned.

It is not material whether the notice provided to be given in the fifth section of this Act was given regularly or not. The notice was only important as affording an opportunity for correcting errors in the value of the property taxed. But, as said before, the record does not show that there was any error in the value of the property taxed to the prejudice of the appellants.

---

---

The judgment is affirmed.

---

MARKLEY v. RAND.

Where several persons were sued as members of a joint stock company, and the suit was discontinued as to B, one of the defendants, and judgment was taken against all the others, upon which execution was subsequently issued, and the property of one M, who was not a party to the suit, taken to satisfy the same; Held, That M cannot, by a bill in equity against the plaintiff in the judgment, set it aside upon the ground that the discontinuance of the suit as to B was a discontinuance as to all of the defendants. The judgment cannot be attacked in this collateral manner.

If the Sheriff levies upon the property of a person not a party to the execution, he is responsible in an action at law.

APPEAL from the Fifth District, County of Tuolumne.

This was a bill in equity to set aside a judgment against appellant under the following circumstances:

The defendant, in November, 1853, loaned to J. M. Anderson, president of a joint stock association, the sum of $1,775, for which Anderson gave his notes signed by himself only as president of the company.

These notes, not being paid, defendant commenced suit against J. M. Anderson, E. B. Drake, R. Rupley, John Stevens, Richard Markley, John Doe and Richard Roe, as members of the association. D. P. Baldwin was also served with process in said suit, (as John Doe or Richard Roe.)

Baldwin appeared in person and as attorney in the suit, putting in an answer for himself, denying that he was a member of the association, and another answer for defendants generally.

In March, 1855, the case was called on the calendar. The plaintiff discontinued as to Baldwin. After such discontinuance, Baldwin withdrew the general answer, and judgment was taken against all the defendants except himself, to wit: Jas. M. Anderson, E. B. Drake, R. Rupely, Richard Markley and John Stevens.

---

Markley v. Rand.

---

Execution was afterwards issued thereon, and the goods of William J. Markley levied upon to satisfy the same.

W. J. Markley files this bill to set aside the judgment and execution. Defendant had judgment, and plaintiff appealed to this Court.

W. P. Barber for Appellant.

We ask for the reversal of the decree below upon two grounds:

I. That the discontinuance as to Baldwin, who is proven to have been a member of this association at the time of loaning the money, was a discontinuance as to all, and that consequently when that discontinuance took place, there was no suit pending on which judgment could be entered up.

II. The judgment and execution are against Richard Markley, and William J. Markley brings the suit, alleging that his goods have been levied on, and he harassed and vexed by reason of said judgment and execution.

Heydenfeldt for Respondent.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., concurring.

This was a bill in equity to set aside a judgment under the following facts: A suit was brought against several members of a joint stock association, one Baldwin among them. Baldwin denied he was a partner, and suit was dismissed as to him, and judgment rendered against several others for whom he was attorney. It is claimed now, that Baldwin was really a partner, and that the discontinuance of the suit as to him was a discontinuance as to all. No fraud is averred, certainly none shown; nor is it shown that this was not a joint debt as to the defendants charged, or that they have offered to pay the judgment, or their several proportions of it even, or that Baldwin suffered this judgment by collusion, or that he is insolvent. But the plaintiff below seems to suppose that this informality — supposing we could inquire into it — is sufficient to entitle him to attack the judgment of a Court of competent jurisdiction in this collateral manner. It is not clear, that in a direct proceeding by appeal the Court would reverse such a judgment for any cause assigned. If there was error in the plaintiff in the case below, taking judgment, as he took it, in the face of the answer, by Baldwin denying that he was a partner, the other defendants should have availed themselves of the fact, which would have given them, then and there, the full benefit of the point. They were represented by counsel. If the counsel acted unfairly by them, he was responsible — not the plaintiff, unless he was in collusion with the counsel, which is not charged. There was a full opportunity to contest every fact while the trial was going on, or before the Court lost jurisdiction of the case; and the plaintiff cannot re-try the case by bill in equity. If this were so in every case where by the neglect of the party, or his attorney, a judgment was rendered against him, the case could be taken from the Court of law into a Court of Chancery.

There is nothing in the point that judgment went and execution issued against Markley by the wrong name. This should have been taken advantage of below. If he be not the real defendant, and the Sheriff levies on his property, the Sheriff would be responsible in an action at law, and there is no need of equitable interference.

The decree is affirmed.

SEARS v. HATHAWAY et al.

Plaintiffs and one C., partners in the mercantile business, purchased of defendant goods on credit, which were shortly afterwards sold by plaintiff and his partner at a sacrifice, and the proceeds immediately invested in a homestead in the name of C., who was the brother-in-law of plaintiff. Defendant subsequently caused plaintiffs to be arrested upon the charge of cheating, from which arrest they were discharged. Afterwards, defendant caused plaintiff and C. to be arrested on a charge of concealing property with intent to defraud and delay their creditors; the charge was dismissed as to plaintiff, and C. was sent up to the Criminal Court to answer. Plaintiff thereupon brought his action against defendant for malicious prosecution; Held, That if plaintiff was entitled to any damage, he could recover only the actual damage which he sustained by the arrest.

Malice cannot be presumed in a prosecution where the defendant has incurred all the moral guilt of the charge, although he may have evaded the penalty of the law.

Sears v. Hathaway.

APPEAL from the Fourth District, County of San Francisco.

The facts appear in the opinion of the Court.

Pisley & Smith and Daniel Rogers for Appellant.

E. Cook for Respondents.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERREY, C. J., concurring.

This was a case for malicious prosecution. The evidence on the trial tended to show that the plaintiff and one Crowell were partners in the mercantile business in San Francisco. The defendant sold to the plaintiff goods upon credit shortly before the fourth day of April, 1857, upon which day the firm of J. M. Crowell & Co. were sued, attachment levied, and the concern closed. All the goods sold by defendants, and bought by J. M. Crowell & Co., were shortly after the purchase sold at a sacrifice — some on the day of the purchase, some between the purchase and delivery, and others even previous to the purchase, for less than the prices at which they were purchased, and the proceeds, to the amount of $5,000, invested in the evening of the third of April in the purchase of a homestead by the joint agency of Crowell and Sears; the deed having been taken in the name of John M. Crowell, the brother-in-law of Sears. Hathaway, on the fourth of April, caused the plaintiff to be arrested upon the charge of cheating. Defendant was discharged. Afterwards, Hathaway consulted counsel, and caused Sears and Crowell to be arrested on a charge of concealing property with intent to defraud and delay creditors. This charge was dismissed by the Police Judge as to Sears, and Crowell was sent up to the Court of Sessions.

A trial was had in the District Court for the Fourth District, which resulted in a verdict for plaintiff for $4,000. On motion for a new trial, the Court ordered the motion to be granted unless the plaintiff reduced his verdict to $2,000, which he did; the defendant appealed.

No actual damages were shown beyond the payment of a sum of two hundred dollars for counsel fees in defending against these suits, and some proof of detention on and after his arrest. There was no proof of express malice, or of any circumstances of peculiar hardship or oppression. The damages seem to have been given in this extraordinary sum as smart money, and not merely compensatory for the actual injuries sustained. The evidence, as disclosed by the record, leaves little doubt of the moral guilt of the plaintiff's conduct, and the plaintiff's complaint seems to arise from the technical fact that this fraud was not evidenced by writing; and, therefore, that his procuring goods of other persons, without intention of paying for them, but to so appropriate them as that neither the goods nor the proceeds could be reached by his creditors, was not, in the absence of some writing, a crime for which he could be convicted under the statute. Conceding all this for the argument, and still the concession leaves the verdict wholly indefensible. A party who stands before a jury in such a case as this, on pure technical law, for a defense against an act of moral turpitude, and claiming a discharge because his prosecutor has not pursued a statutory mode of proof to convict him of a crime punishable by the statute, may congratulate himself that the precautions of the law have availed him to escape its merited penalty; but he certainly ought not to have, in addition to this immunity, a right to claim a small fortune from his victim for having mistaken the remedy, or not been as well versed as himself in the technicalities which sometimes shield guilt from public justice. If he was entitled to receive anything under the circumstances, he was entitled to recover nothing more than the actual damages which he sustained by the arrest. It is folly to talk of damages for an injured reputation caused by the imputation of a crime, the whole moral guilt of which he had incurred.

Sears v. Hathaway.

It is true that Courts rarely interfere with verdicts in cases of this sort. They will only do so in extreme cases; but this is of the very class of cases which constitute the exception to the rule of non-interference. It would be a reproach to public justice if such a verdict could stand.

The judgment is reversed.

The Supreme Court will not entertain jurisdiction in cases where the record fails to show that judgment and costs amount to over two hundred dollars.

APPEAL from the County Court of Napa County.

Edgerton & Hopkins for Appellant.

Howell for Respondent.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — FIELD, J., concurring.

The judgment of the County Court is for $114. There is no showing that the costs swelled this sum to more than $200. This Court, therefore, has no jurisdiction of the case, and the appeal is dismissed.

APPEAL from the Eleventh District, County of Placer.

Smith & Hardy for Appellant.

Hale, Hillyer & Myers for Respondent.

TERRY, C. J., delivered the opinion of the Court — BALDWIN, J., and FIELD, J., concurring.

There is in this case no properly authorized statement on appeal. The special verdict of the jury is therefore conclusive as to the facts, and entirely sustains the judgment of the Court below.

Judgment affirmed.

Fisk v. His Creditors.

---

FISK v. HIS CREDITORS.

The Supreme Court has jurisdiction to hear and determine appeals from the judgment of a County Court on questions of fraud, made on the petition of an insolvent for a discharge from his debts.

Upon the issue of fraud, in an application of an insolvent to be discharged from his debts, where it was alleged that the applicant had made and recorded a sham deed of his property shortly before his application, which property was not included in his schedule; Held, That it was error for the Court to instruct the jury "that to find the charge of fraud sustained, they must believe the deed made with the intent to defeat, hinder or delay creditors, and to have been actually delivered to the grantees; that proof of record was no proof of delivery, etc." The fraud is as complete without the delivery as with it.

APPEAL from the County Court of El Dorado County.

This was an application by the plaintiff, Fisk, to the County Court of El Dorado county for a discharge from his debts, upon the ground of insolvency. Several of Fisk's creditors filed their objections to his discharge, alleging that he had made a sham and false deed of his property, which was not included in his schedule. The question of fraud was tried by a jury. The Court gave certain instructions to the jury, which appear in the opinion of the Court. The jury found that the question of fraud was not sustained, and the plaintiff was discharged. The creditors appealed to this Court.

Thos. H. Hewes for Appellants.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., concurring.

This was a contest, before a jury of six men, on the ground of fraud.

We think this Court has jurisdiction of this case, on appeal, it being one of the special cases provided for by the 336th section of the Practice Act. We have thought it best expressly to decide this question of practice, in limine, though by taking jurisdiction of, and deciding many cases of this sort, we have given a practical recognition of the principle heretofore.

The case was tried on the issue of fraud, and facts having been introduced tending to show that the insolvent had made and caused to be recorded a sham deed for property shortly before his application, which property was not included in his schedule. The Court instructed the jury, "That, to find the charge of fraud sustained, they must believe the deed made with intent to defeat, hinder or delay creditors, and to have been actually delivered to the grantees; that proof of record was no proof of delivery," etc. In this the Court clearly erred. There may be a delivery without recording the deed, and a recording without any delivery. But as the record can only be made after acknowledgment, by the grantor, of execution and delivery, this is certainly some proof of the delivery. But the fraud was as complete without the actual delivery as with it; if the grantor made a sham deed, and had it recorded, and reserved from his schedule the property in the deed, and this with the view of defrauding his creditors, the proof of fraud would be complete.

---

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

LISMAN, ADMR. v. EARLY et al.

In an action of foreclosure of a mortgage brought by the administrator upon a note and mortgage given to the intestate in his lifetime, a witness, whose wife is a sister and heir of the deceased, is incompetent upon the ground of interest.

APPEAL from the Eleventh District, County of Placer.

This was a bill to foreclose a mortgage upon a mining claim given to secure the payment of a promissory note. The action was on the note and mortgage.

The note and mortgage were given to one Michael Lisman, who since died, and the suit was brought by his administrator. On the trial, the plaintiff introduced as a witness one Hertch, who testified on his voir dire, that his wife was a sister and one of the heirs of the deceased. Defendants objected to this witness on the ground of interest. The Court overruled the objection, and the witness was allowed to testify. The cause was tried by a jury, who returned a verdict for the plaintiff, and judgment was entered thereon. Defendants appealed to this Court.

Tuttle & Hillyer for Appellants.

Thomas & Hawkins for Respondent.

TERRY, C. J., delivered the opinion of the Court — BALDWIN, J., concurring.

There is no doubt that the witness, Hertch, was incompetent on the ground of interest, and his testimony was improperly admitted.

It is urged by respondent, that this being an equity case, the Court will not reverse because of the admission of improper evidence, but will proceed to examine and decide the case upon the legal evidence in the record. This is the ordinary and proper course in such cases, when the evidence in the record, excluding that improperly admitted, is satisfactory, which is not the case here, as it is by no means clear that the judgment can be sustained by the record without the evidence of Hertch.

The judgment is reversed, and a new trial ordered.

SWAIN & MARSH, Admrs. v. CHASE et al.

An affidavit for an order of the publication of the summons, upon the ground of the absence of the defendant, which states that the defendant could not, after due diligence, be found in the county where the action was pending; that affiant had inquired of Fogg, who is an intimate friend of defendant, as to his whereabouts; that Fogg was unable to inform him, and that plaintiff did not know where defendant could be found within the State, is insufficient to authorize the publication. A publication made upon such an affidavit will not give the Court jurisdiction of the person of the defendant.

The law presumes nothing in favor of the jurisdiction of Justices' Courts, and a party who asserts a right, under the judgment of a Justice, must affirmatively show every fact necessary to confer such jurisdiction.

APPEAL from the Seventh District, County of Contra Costa.

This was a bill filed in the Court below to enjoin the collection of a judgment obtained in a Justice's Court.

The judgment was obtained by Allen against Chase, upon an order of the Justice publishing the summons in the action. The order was obtained upon the affidavit of Allen; the substance of which is set out in the opinion of the Court. Defendant Chase had judgment in the Court below, and Allen, one of the defendants to the bill, appealed to this Court.

H. Allen for Appellant.

Whitman & Wells for Respondent.

Respondent submits that the primary point to be settled in this case is — Was the judgment of the Justice of the Peace, in favor of H. Allen, and against M. S. Chase, valid?

Respondent contends that it was a nullity, and void. This point settled in favor of respondent, disposes of the case decided against him.

1st. Justice of the Peace cannot take any jurisdiction by implication. Van Elten v. Jilson, 6 Cal. Rep., p. 19.

2d. In favor of the jurisdiction of a Justice of the Peace nothing can be implied. Everything to confer jurisdiction must be affirmatively shown. Whitwell v. Barbour, 7 Cal. Rep., p. 64.

3d. No presumptions of law are made in favor of the regularity of proceedings of Courts, or officers of special or limited jurisdiction, or of proceedings unknown or contrary to the common law, even when taken by Courts of general jurisdiction; these parts of the statute, which are essential to jurisdiction, must be shown to have been strictly pursued, or the proceedings will be held to be a nullity. *Thatcher v. tice's Docket of R. A. Madison, said to be a Justice of the Peace of Contra Costa county. This is no proof; it is not, in any manner, authenticated. It is not signed by the Justice, nor are the entries certified by the Justice, or his successor in office, to be correct, as provided by statute. See Practice Act, sec. 605.

If, however, it be proof of anything, does it prove that personal jurisdiction was ever obtained of respondent Chase, or any service on him, actually or by implication of law.

It fails in that it does not appear either that the person upon whom service is to be made, resides out of the State, or has departed from the State, or cannot, after due diligence, be found within the State, or conceals himself, to avoid the service of summons.

TERRY, C. J., delivered the opinion of the Court—BALDWIN, J., concurring.

The proceedings taken in the Justice's Court in the suit of Allen v. Chase, were not sufficient to give the Court jurisdiction of defendant.

An attempt seems to have been made to procure service by publication; but it does not appear that the provisions of the statute were complied with. The affidavit on which the order of publication was issued, states, that defendant Chase could not, after due diligence, be found in the County of Contra Costa; that he had inquired of one Fogg, who was an intimate friend of Chase, as to his whereabouts; that Fogg was unable to inform him, and that plaintiff did not know where Chase could be found within the State.

The statute authorizes service by publication, when the party to be served resides out of the State, or has departed from the State, or cannot, after due diligence, be found within the State, or conceals himself to avoid the service of summons, and the fact shall appear by affidavit, etc.

The affidavit of Allen does not show that Chase had left the State, or that any diligence has been used to ascertain his whereabouts, beyond inquiring of a single individual, and there is no pretense that he was concealing himself to avoid service. It was wholly insufficient to authorize the order of publication.

The law presumes nothing in favor of the jurisdiction of Justices'

Judgment affirmed.

COMSTOCK v. BREED, et al.

The old and unmeaning distinction between sealed and unsealed instruments is done away with by our statute, and the consideration of a sealed bond may be impeached by the obligor, in the same manner as a promissory note by the maker. The intention of the Legislature was to place bonds and notes on the same footing in respect to defense.

To constitute a consideration to a bond or other instrument in writing, it is necessary that some advantage to the promisor, or injury to the promisee, should occur. A past and executed consideration is not sufficient. When the debt of A, already created, is promised to be paid by B, no new term being introduced in the contract, as delay, or the like, it is not binding upon B. It is a mere understanding to pay another's debt, and is within the Statute of Frauds, and without the statute, would be void, as being without consideration.

APPEAL from the Fourth District, County of San Francisco.

This was an action on an indemnity bond executed by the defendants, and payable to the plaintiff. The condition of the bond, and the defense set up to it, are briefly stated in the opinion of the Court. The cause was tried by a jury, who returned a verdict for the plaintiff, upon which judgment was entered, and the defendants appealed to this Court.

A. Bennett for Appellants.

I. There was an entire want of consideration for the instrument sued upon. The consideration for the instrument sued upon was a by-gone transaction; these appellants were strangers to the consideration at the time of the execution of the instrument, and in order to hold them liable, it was necessary to show some consideration moving to them at the time of the execution of the instrument sued upon. Addison on Contracts, 23; Story on Contracts, sec. 855; 7 Cal. Rep. 32; Chaffee v. Thomas, 7 Cow. 358; 7 Johns. 87; 8 Johns. 29; 10 Johns. 243; 1 Caines, 583.

---

Comstock v. Breed.

---

II. The instrument sued upon is void by the Statute of Frauds, the consideration not being expressed on the face of the instrument. Packer v. Wilson, 15 Wend. 343; 1 Denio, 226; Bennett v. Pratt, 4 Denio, 275.

Thos. C. Hambly for Respondent Denna.

I. In answer to the first point made by defendants, it is only necessary to recur to the language of the bond, as follows: "Should the above named obligors, or either of them, immediately after the rendition of such judgment against said Comstock, pay the amount of said judgment in full, and hold the said Comstock entirely free and harmless from the consequences thereof, for the performance of which acts on the part of said obligors, Breed et al., the said Comstock has paid and surrendered a good and lawful consideration, to the full satisfaction of said obligors, and for which they are firmly bound and hereby acknowledge the receipt, then," etc.

Now, what is the consideration of the bond? Why, a payment and surrender to Frothingham & West, at the time the bond was executed, of a good and lawful consideration; solemnly so admitted by them, under their hands and seals.

Can they now allege that there was no consideration but an advance of money to Breed a long time before? By no means; and they are clearly estopped from denying this consideration.

II. Nor is the bond void under the Statute of Frauds, as defendants allege. They say it is an undertaking for the naked precedent debt or default of another, and that no consideration is expressed, other than the money advanced to Breed.

The statute requires "some note or writing" expressing the consideration. Now what is the meaning of the term "expressing a consideration?" I take it to mean alleging a consideration. What does "value received" in a note mean? Why, it simply alleges a consideration. What does our bond say? "A good and valuable consideration paid and surrendered." This is surely a very strong and clear compliance with the statute, and wholly fulfills its demand.

---

Comstock v. Breed.

---

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — FIELD, J., concurring.

This suit was brought on a bond of indemnity, on which bond Frothingham and West were sureties, not connected, except as herein-after stated, with the consideration. The bond recites and acknowledges the general consideration of value received and surrendered, and is conditioned to pay to Comstock, who was a Receiver in a certain pending suit in one of the Courts of San Francisco, between Breed and Dennis, such moneys advanced by Comstock to Breed, as the Court might, by judgment, order to be paid by Comstock. The defense set up by these sureties is, that these moneys had, some five months before the execution of the bond, been advanced by Comstock, without the instance or any participation in the transaction, by these sureties; and they say that this being the only consideration for their covenant, it is nudum pactum.

This raises the question: 1st. Whether, at law, the consideration of a sealed instrument—it expressing a consideration—may be impeached by an obligor? and, 2d. If so, was the fact asserted competent proof of a want of consideration? The first question is answered by the statute, (C. L., p. 165) which expressly gives this right to the obligor. The old, unmeaning distinction between sealed and unsealed instruments, is destroyed by the statute, and it was the design of the Legislature to place bonds and notes on the same footing in respect to defenses. It is well settled, that though a consideration be recited in a note, the defendant may show that in fact there was no consideration; and the same rule holds as to bonds.

In order to constitute a consideration, it is necessary that some advantage to promisor, or injury to promisee—the degree not material—should occur. A past and executed consideration is not sufficient. If the debt of A already has been created, the mere promise to pay it by B—no new term being introduced into the contract—as delay, or the like, is not binding. It is a mere undertaking to pay another's debt, and it is within the Statute of Frauds, and, without the statute, would be void, as without consideration. Chaffee v. Thomas, 7 Cow. 358; Story on Cont., sec. 855.

Comstock v. Breed.

---

If, therefore, solely in consideration that Comstock had advanced this money to Breed, these sureties promised to repay it, evidently they had received no consideration for the promise, from the past fact. If, having advanced the money, the sureties promised, in consideration of Comstock's not calling for it, until judgment should be rendered against him for it, the case might be different. We do not see that the mere fact of a Receiver holding moneys in trust for parties, paying a portion as an advance to a party whom he believes or supposes will be entitled to it, is such an illegal consideration as to vitiate a bond for its repayment. The Receiver may hold money which it is apparent or very probable must ultimately go, on final settlement, to a particular person, whose convenience may be greatly promoted by receiving it in advance of his strict right to it, as in cases of administrators or other trustees; and we do not see, if he chooses to take the risk of making a premature payment, that there is anything opposed to public policy, or to the law, in the act, which would infect a bond of indemnity with a fatal taint of illegality. Such an advance would rather be without law, than against law. But it is unnecessary, perhaps, to lay down any definitive rule in this case on that subject. The record does not show any consideration beyond the recitals in the bond, and the facts alleged in the defense.

There is nothing in the point that Dennis stands in any better position than Comstock, to whose rights and place on the calendar he seems to have succeeded. The instructions of the District Court oppose these views.

The error of the Judge below has already been sufficiently indicated for the purposes of a new trial, when the issues can be determined upon the principles here announced.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded.

Houseman v. Chase.

HOUSEMAN v. CHASE et al.

A party in possession of public land, claiming title to it, must be presumed to be the owner of it, and can mortgage it. Where another party enters under, and in privity with the title of the mortgagor, he will not be allowed to defeat the mortgage upon the ground that the same was not executed in pursuance of the Statute concerning Chattel Mortgages.

APPEAL from the Fourteenth District, County of Sierra.

A statement of facts appears in the opinion of the Court.

Meredith & Hawley for Appellants.

I. Upon the pleadings and proof in this cause, as well as on the facts found, plaintiff, Houseman, was by law entitled to the judgment and relief prayed for, and the Court below erred in rendering judgment for a sum of money only, against defendant Keller, and refusing a decree of foreclosure as against said Keller and said defendants, Chase and Chase. Hutchinson v. Perley, 4 Cal. R. 33; Winans v. Christy, 4 Cal. R. 70; Plume v. Seaward, 4 Cal. R. 94; Richards v. Williams, 7 Wheat. R. 59; Elridge v. Knolt, Cons. R. 102, 215; Pongar v. Weaver, 6 Cal. R. 548; Act Concerning Conveyances, Wood's Dig., p. 100; Act in Relation to Personal Mortgages, Wood's Dig., p. 108; Merrill v. Gorham, 6 Cal. R. 462.

W. W. Upton for Respondent.

TERRY, C. J., delivered the opinion of the Court—BALDWIN, J., concurring.

This was a proceeding to foreclose a mortgage upon certain land in Nevada county, given by one Keller to plaintiff, which mortgage was duly acknowledged and recorded in the proper county.

Defendant, Chase, who was the vendee of Keller, set up, by way of defense, that the land described in the mortgage was public land of the United States, and that the mortgage not having been executed in accordance with the Statute concerning Chattel Mortgages, is void as to defendant, who was a purchaser without actual notice.

---

People v. Miller.

---

The Court gave judgment against Keller for the sum mentioned in the note, but refused to decree a foreclosure of the mortgage, and plaintiff appeals.

At the time of the execution of the mortgage, Keller was in possession of the property claiming title, and must be presumed to have been the owner of it. The defendant, Chase, having entered under Keller, and in privity with his title, cannot be allowed to dispute it in this action. The mortgage from Keller was duly acknowledged and recorded, and Chase must be deemed a purchaser with notice.

It follows that the judgment of the Court below is erroneous, and it is reversed and the cause remanded, with direction to enter a decree foreclosing plaintiff's mortgage, and ordering the premises to be sold to satisfy the same.

PEOPLE v. MILLER.

When an indictment for murder is used as a substitute for, and in place of, an indictment for manslaughter, it must, where time is material, contain the averment as to time, which would be essential in an indictment for manslaughter.

It is generally true that every essential fact must be stated in the indictment, and this means every fact material to the offense of which the party may be convicted, and the allegation of a day within the period of limitation, is material, whenever the offense is subject to limitation.

If the defendant is out of the State a portion of the time, it must be so averred in the indictment. Prima facie, the lapse of time is a good defense; and where the statutory exception is relied on, it must be set up.

APPEAL from the Fifth District, County of San Francisco.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Court.

Robinson & Beatty for Appellant.

The only error assigned in this case is, that the indictment shows that the offense of which the appellant was convicted, was committed more than three years before the indictment was found.

---

People v. Miller.

---

Sec. 97 of the Criminal Practice Act, (Wood's Digest, page 278) reads as follows: "An indictment for any other felony than murder, must be found within three years after its commission."

It is admitted by the Attorney General, that if the proof had shown that the offense was committed by the defendant while in this State, and more than three years before the finding of the indictment, he could not have been properly convicted of the crime of manslaughter.

He, however, to support the judgment in this case, relies on sec. 242 of our statute, which reads as follows: "The precise time at which it was committed need not be stated in the indictment, but it may be alleged to have been committed at any time before the finding of the same, except when time is a material ingredient of the offense."

He argues, that although the indictment alleges the offense to have been committed more than three years before the finding of the indictment, yet as the precise time is not necessarily stated in the indictment, the offense may possibly have been committed at a later period than that charged, and within the three years.

Sec. 242, cited above, is simply a repetition of a rule of criminal pleading, which is to be found in every elementary work on criminal pleadings. But the main point is, when time is, and when time is not, material in an indictment. At common law, time was said to be immaterial, for the simple reason that there was no limitation to indictments for felony. Page 301 of Blackstone's Commentaries, note 1.

When there is a statute of limitations, time becomes so far a material fact, as that it must be alleged that the offense was committed within the time of limitation; that is, the offense may be charged to have been committed on some day certain, and that day must be within the time of limitation. See Chitty's Criminal Law, p. 223.

This same doctrine is fully endorsed by the Supreme Court of Alabama, in the case of the State v. Beckwith, Stewart, page 318.

The statute only provides that the "precise time at which it was committed, need not be stated."

It is clear, that the statute requires that some time be stated. If it was a case of murder, any day might be stated, because there is no limitation; therefore, in this case, the indictment, as an indictment for murder, was good; but as an indictment for manslaughter, it was bad, because it should, within itself, show a state of facts which would exempt the party from punishment.

---

People v. Miller.

---

The statute makes three years a bar in every case, except when the defendant is out of the State when the offense was committed. (See secs. 97 and 99 of the Criminal Practice Act.) Here the indictment shows the defendant was in the State when the offense is alleged to have been committed, and also that it was committed more than three years before the finding of the indictment. These facts constitute a perfect bar to the prosecution. If all the allegations in the indictment be true, the party is not punishable. How, then, is it possible to punish a party under that indictment? Clearly, it could not be done in any other way than by a waiver of his privilege under the statute.

The only authority relied on by the Attorney General to support this case, which we deem it necessary to notice, is the one in 9th Cowen, page 655. At first sight, this might appear to support the ruling of the Court below; but on a more critical examination, it is in fact rather confirmatory of our views. The Court says: "Non constat, on this motion, but that, on its appearing in evidence that the crime was perpetrated more than three years previous to the indictment being found, and on this being objected, as it might be on not guilty, the prosecution then answered, by proving that the prisoners were within the exception." Now, it is clear from this quotation, that the only ground on which the indictment is sustained, is that on its appearing (as the Court admits it must have appeared in the indictment) that the offense was committed more than three years before the finding of the indictment; that the prosecution then showed the case was taken out of the statute by the absence of the party. If it were possible to show any facts in this case which would take it out of the operation of the statute, then, the authority, so far as it goes, is in favor of the People. If, on the other hand, no state of facts exists, or might have been found at the trial, which takes it out of the Statute of Limitations, then, we contend, it is good authority on our side. It is a well settled rule of practice, both in civil and criminal proceedings, that the allegata and probata must coincide. You cannot contradict your own pleadings. The only apparent exception to that rule, is in relation to allegations as to time.

People v. Miller.

---

The only case where the time of a promise being made becomes material is when the Statute of Limitations might operate as a bar. In that case, the time must be stated, so far correctly, or so near correctly, as to show the promise is not barred by the Statute of Limitations. See 3 Texas Reports, Swenson et al. v. Walker's Admr., page 95; McClenney v. McClenney, 3 Texas Reports, page 196; see also 2 Texas Reports, page 541.

Attorney General for Respondent.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., concurring.

This was an indictment for murder, under which the defendant was convicted of manslaughter. The act is charged to have been committed more than three years before the finding of the bill; and three years is the period of limitation to the prosecution of the offense of manslaughter. It is true, that a party may be convicted of manslaughter under a general indictment for murder; the indictment for murder answering as a good indictment for manslaughter. But when the indictment for murder is used as a substitute for, and in place of, an indictment for manslaughter, it must, if time be material, contain the averment as to time, which would be essential in an indictment for manslaughter. The object of pleading is to apprise a party of the precise charge made against him, and to enable him to defend himself and to avail himself of all his legal rights and privileges. It is generally true that every essential fact must be stated in the indictment; and this means every fact material to the offense of which the party may be convicted; and the allegation of a day within the period of limitation is material, whenever the offense is subject to limitation. (Wharton Cr. L., pp. 111 and 114.) If, for example, robbery was an offense not barred by lapse of time, but larceny was barred within a year, though the rule is that every robbery includes a larceny, we apprehend a conviction for larceny could not be had under this indictment of robbery, if it were found after the period of limitation for prosecutions for larceny.

Steinback v. Fitzpatrick.

---

It is true that the Statute of Limitations excludes from computations the time the defendant may be out of the State, but the rule is, that this exception must be stated in the pleading. Prima facie, the lapse of time is a good defense, and if the statutory exception is relied on, the State should set it up. This is the rule in civil pleadings under our system, and it is not less strict in criminal cases.

The case in 9 Cowen, cited by the Attorney General, seems to be against this view, but that case stands opposed to well settled precedents in the English and American Courts. The contrary doctrine seems to be held in State v. Bockwith, 1 Stewart, 318; Shelton v. State, 1 Stewart & Por. 208; and State v. Roach, 2 Haywood, 552; see also 1 How. Miss. 260; Wharton Cr. L. supra, 1 Chitty Cr. L. 253.

Upon principle, we can see no distinction between an indictment for murder, which, if good for manslaughter, shows on its face that the crime for manslaughter is barred, and an indictment for the special offense of manslaughter with the same statement as to time.

We cannot hold that the condition of the defendant under the more general indictment is any worse than if the indictment were for the precise and specific offense.

Judgment reversed.

STEINBACK v. FITZPATRICK et al.

In an action of ejectment to recover the possession of a tract of land, the plaintiff must aver either title or possession. The mere taking from the land a portion of the herbage growing thereon, is not sufficient to give a right of possession. Nor is a complaint in such action sufficient, which fails to aver a continued adverse holding by the defendant.

APPEAL from the Twelfth District, County of San Francisco.

Knight v. Fair.

This was an action to recover the possession of a lot of land in the City of San Francisco.

The allegations of the complaint are briefly stated in the opinion of the Court. The defendants demurred to the complaint, on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The demurrer was sustained by the Court below, and judgment given for defendants. The plaintiff appealed to this Court.

B. W. Brooks for Appellant.

Stanley & Hays for Respondent.

TERRY, C. J., delivered the opinion of the Court—BALDWIN, J., concurring.

The demurrer to the complaint was properly sustained.

The first count alleges that one Spencer, the grantor of plaintiff, was seized in his demesne as of fee and right, by taking the esples thereof to the value of one dollar, and that plaintiff, by virtue of a conveyance from Spencer, is entitled to the possession.

This is not a sufficient statement of a cause of action, under our statute. No title or actual possession is shown in the grantor of plaintiff, and the mere taking from the land of a portion of the herbage growing thereon, is not sufficient to give a right of possession.

The second count is defective, because it does not aver a continued adverse holding by the defendant.

Judgment affirmed.

KNIGHT v. FAIR, SHERIFF.

In an action against a Sheriff for special damages, resulting from a refusal on the part of the Sheriff, to make and deliver to plaintiff a deed to certain premises purchased by plaintiff at Sheriff's sale, when there is no allegation in the complaint of title, nor any averment that, in case the deed had been executed, plaintiff would have been able to recover possession of the premises, or the rents and profits: Held, That such complaint is insufficient.

APPEAL from the Ninth District, County of Siskiyou.

This was an action for special damage, against the defendant, as Sheriff of the County of Siskiyou, for a failure to deliver to the plaintiff a deed to certain real estate purchased by the plaintiff at an execution sale, made by the defendant as Sheriff of said county. The defects of the complaint are stated in the opinion of the Court. Defendant demurred to the complaint, on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The Court below sustained the demurrer, and judgment was entered for defendant. Plaintiff appealed to this Court.

J. A. Fletcher for Appellant.

J. Berry for Respondent.

The complaint is wholly defective, and "under no enlightened system of jurisprudence should such pleadings be upheld, tending, as they do, to obscure the true issues involved, to surprise litigants, and embarrass Courts and lawyers." It does not show what interest or estate Calhoun had in the premises; it does not show that he ever had any interest whatever, not even that he was ever in possession of the premises, or of any part thereof, or of the esplees and profits thereof; and there could be no error, under the most liberal rules of construction, in sustaining the demurrer, where the plaintiff shows no right whatever, and therefore no damages. Payne & Dewey v. Treadwell, 5 Cal. 310; Gamer v. Marshall, 9 Cal. 268; Bird v. Lisboa, 9 Cal. 1; Thornburg v. Hand, 7 Cal. 554.

The complaint must show in what manner the plaintiff has sustained damages. Stevens et al. v. Rowe, Sheriff, 3 Deneb, 327.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRE, C. J., concurring.

This case was for damages sustained by the plaintiff, by reason of the refusal of the defendant, Sheriff of Siskiyou county, to execute to him a deed for land bought at public sale; but the complaint is fatally defective in this, that it alleges special damages, arising from the inability to get rents and profits from the estate — a tavern in Yreka — without averring that the defendant in execution had any title to the premises, or that the plaintiff, if the Sheriff had made him a deed, would have been either entitled to receive, or been able to recover, possession of the property, or rents or profits. For this error the Court properly sustained the demurrer.

Judgment affirmed.

RITTER v. PATCH, TAX COLLECTOR.

AN injunction will not lie to restrain the collection of taxes due on property, unless it be shown that the injury resulting from the collection, to the owner, would be irreparable. An averment of this character must appear in the bill, and if denied, it must be sustained at the hearing.

A tax is not a cloud upon the title to real estate; and its unlawful collection, by distress or seizure of chattels, is no more than an ordinary trespass.

APPEAL from the Fourth District, County of San Francisco.

This was an action to restrain the defendant, as Tax Collector of the City and County of San Francisco, from the collection of a large amount of State and county tax, assessed upon the property of the plaintiff. The bill avers a number of irregularities in the assessment, and in general terms charges, that if the defendant is allowed to enforce the collection of the tax, "great and irreparable injury will be done him," (plaintiff). There is no averment in the bill, showing in what manner this injury would result to the plaintiff, nor is there any charge that defendant is not able to respond in damages for such illegal act.

The Court below issued the injunction upon the complaint, and at a final hearing of the case, decreed that the injunction be made perpetual, and the defendant be forever restrained from the collection of said tax. Defendant appealed to this Court.

Shafter, Park & Heydenfeldt for Appellant.

Berri v. Patch.

---

J. B. Hart for Respondent.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., concurring.

Injunction to restrain the defendant from proceeding to collect a tax on personal property.

Waiving other obstacles of a very serious import, which oppose the plaintiff's proceeding, we think that the bill states no sufficient ground for equitable interposition. The remedy by injunction is unauthorized in cases like this, except where the injury is irreparable, if, indeed, that furnishes a sufficient ground for interference. This must appear in the bill by some issuable averment, and be sustained, if denied at the hearing. It is not shown that the Tax Collector would not be able to respond in damages. On the contrary, he asserts that he and his sureties are amply able to answer in any damages incurred by proceeding to collect the tax. The tax is no cloud upon the title of real estate, and its collection, by distress or seizure of chattels, is no more than ordinary trespass, if the tax be illegal, or the conduct of the officer unauthorized. The New York cases (1 Abbott, 4; Ib. 79; Ib. 250) go much further than it is necessary for us to go, in this respect. But, if the principle contended for be adopted, Chancery might restrain, from anything we can see to the contrary, every threatened, unauthorized invasion of real or personal property. This would be to throw into Chancery a great portion of all the torts committed or threatened.

Judgment reversed and bill dismissed.

PEOPLE ex rel. TALLANT et al. v. THE BOARD OF SUPERVISORS OF SAN FRANCISCO COUNTY.

The People ex rel. McLane v. Bond, Assessor, (10 Cal. 563) affirmed.

The Board of Supervisors of the City and County of San Francisco, have no control over the Treasurer, in the payment of the interest and principal of the Sinking Fund of that city. The allowance or disallowance, auditing or refusing to audit, of the Board, are alike immaterial.

APPEAL from the Fourth District, County of San Francisco.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion of the Court.

F. P. Tracy for Appellants.

F. M. Haight for Respondents.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., and FIELD, J., concurring.

The principles of this case have already been settled in the case of The People v. Bond, Assessor, 10 Cal. 563. This is a mandamus

Hunt v. Waterman.

to compel the defendants to allow the Auditor to audit, and the Treasurer to pay, the sum of $197,000, the interest and Sinking Fund for the years 1857 and 1858, under the Act of May 1, 1851, entitled, "An Act to authorize the Funding of the Floating Debt of the City of San Francisco, and to provide for the payment of the same."

The proceeding was discontinued on the hearing, as against the Auditor and Treasurer, and judgment for peremptory mandamus rendered against the defendants.

We have already held that the Board of Supervisors had no control over the Treasurer in respect to this matter. Their allowance or disallowance, auditing or refusing to audit, are alike immaterial: therefore, this proceeding against the defendants is improper. For this reason the judgment is reversed and the case dismissed.

HUNT v. WATERMAN et al.

A vendor's lien does not exist in this State, where a mortgage security is taken for the purchase money. The silent lien of the vendor is extinguished, whenever he manifests an intention to abandon or not to look to it. And this intention is manifested by taking other and independent security upon the same land, or a portion of it, or on other land.

The fact that such mortgage is defective, does not revive the lien, as it is the intention of the vendor which controls, and this is as well known by an informal act as one properly done.

A general averment in the complaint — to enforce the vendor's lien — that the mortgage is defective as a security, is not sufficient to withdraw the case from the general rules above stated.

APPEAL from the Eleventh District, County of El Dorado.

This was a bill filed in the Court below, for the enforcement of a vendor's lien to a quartz lode.

The facts as disclosed by the opinion of the Court, are as follows:

In this case the plaintiff seeks to enforce a vendor's lien for the purchase money of a certain quartz vein sold by the plaintiff to the defendant, and charges that the other defendants are purchasers of the property from Waterman, with notice of this indebtedness. The bill shows that the plaintiff took a mortgage on this property for the payment of this purchase money, but avers that by reason of some defect in the deed or acknowledgment, it is not available as a security for the plaintiff's debt. It is not very clear whether the plaintiff meant to rest his claim for relief on the mortgage or on the vendor's lien, or on both. But, from the bill, demurrer and decree, we take it that he abandoned the notion of the validity of the mortgage, and relies on the vendor's lien.

---

Hunt v. Waterman.

---

The decree is for the enforcement of the parol or tacit lien. Defendants appealed to this Court.

John Hume for Appellants.

First. It appears from the complaint, that at the time of the sale to Waterman, plaintiff took from him a mortgage to secure all the unpaid purchase money. That the taking of said mortgage was a waiver of a vendor's lien. That if no vendor's lien existed, he has shown no cause of action against the defendants appearing in this suit.

Second. That the vendor's lien was equally waived in this case, whether the mortgage was properly acknowledged or not, as the taking and recording the mortgage showed an intention to rely upon the mortgage, and not upon the vendor's lien.

In regard to the first point, the American rule as to what will be regarded as a waiver of a vendor's lien, is very clearly and fully laid down, as follows: "A lien will be considered as waived whenever any distinct and independent security is taken, whether by mortgage of other lands, or pledge of goods, or personal responsibility of a third person, and also when a security is taken upon the land either for the whole or a part of the unpaid purchase money, unless there is an express agreement that the implied lien shall be retained." Vide Leading Cases in Equity, vol. 1, pages 272, 273; 4 Kent, 151 to 153, 3d ed.; Fish v. Howland, 1 Paige, 20 to 30; Cole v. Scott, 2 Wash. 141; Gilman v. Brown, 1 Mason, 192, 221; Little v. Brown, 2 Leigh's Rep. 383; Conover v. Warren, 1 Gilman, 498; Wilson et al. v. Graham et al., 5 Munf. 297.

It appears from the complaint in this case, that a mortgage for the unpaid purchase money was taken by plaintiff, and by him caused to be recorded, which was a waiver of the vendor's lien, and notice to subsequent purchasers of such waiver; and that plaintiff relied upon the mortgage, also of the time of payment of the money.

An unacknowledged or recorded mortgage is a higher security than a vendor's lien. (Vide Leading Cases in Equity, vol. 1, page 280; Gilman v. Brown et al., 1 Mason, 192, 221.) Neither are good as to subsequent purchasers without notice; both are good between the parties. But the unacknowledged mortgage is the higher security, being a lien by express contract, while the other "is a right which has no existence until it is established by the decree of a Court in the particular case." Gilman v. Brown, 1 Mason, 192.

"There being a higher security, the taking of it will be a merger, waiver, or extinguishment of the lower security upon the same property, expressum facit cessare tacitum." Little v. Brown, 2 Leigh, 283.

"When, by the express agreement of the parties, there is a lien upon the estate for a part of the consideration of the conveyance, it excludes the idea of an implied lien for the residue." Fish v. Howland, 1 Paige, 31.

Again, any conduct which shows an intention on the part of the vendor to give up the lien, will be a bar to its prosecution. Leading Cases in Equity, vol. 1, page 273; Fowle v. Rust's Heirs, 2 Marshall, 294; Clark v. Hunt, 3 J. J. Marshall, 553.

In this case there can be no question about the intention of the vendor to secure his debt by mortgage, which if it had done, would have been a waiver of the vendor's lien. He expressly alleges in his complaint, that he took the notes and mortgage therein mentioned to secure the purchase money unpaid; that he filed the same with the County Recorder, and procured the same to be recorded. An intention then to rely upon the mortgage was, at the time of the execution thereof, a waiver of the vendor's lien.

If the vendor shall have since found that his mortgage was not executed in accordance with the provisions of the registry laws of this State, still, having once relied upon it, and thus waived his lien, he cannot now go back and restore the lien. The lien once waived is gone forever. When the party has by his own act shown his intention to abandon one security for a better, he cannot afterwards ask a Court of Equity to repair his errors, and restore him to rights which he has lost by his own acts. No man can take advantage of his own wrong, carelessness or negligence, nor will a Court of Equity interfere to relieve him from the just consequences of the same. If there was any defect in the acknowledgment or execution of the mortgage, which would prevent it from being considered notice to third persons, the vendor should not have taken it. It was his duty to see that it was properly executed. That some kind of acknowledgment was added to the instrument is certain, because otherwise it could not have gone to record.

Hunt v. Waterman.

---

Thos. H. Hewes for Respondent.

In respect to the allegations in the complaint relative to the mortgage, we say, that it does not appear therefrom that a mortgage was in fact taken.

The complaint speaks of it as a "pretended mortgage," which the "defendants claim to be invalid," etc. It virtually asserts that the mortgage constituted no lien, and the defendants admit the correctness of the assertion.

To avoid any question upon the validity of the mortgage, we relied upon the "equitable mortgage," or lien as vendor, held by us; and in so doing, we think we have done no act of which the defendants can complain. Their rights are in no manner changed or impaired. But conceding the validity of the mortgage, did we thereby abandon our vendor's lien?

This question is passed upon in Boos v. Ewing, 17 Ohio Rep. 500. The facts in that case are very similar to those in this case. The authorities in that case are carefully reviewed, the question elaborately discussed both by Court and Counsel, and to their reasoning and argument we respectfully direct the attention of this Court. The decision in that case is directly in point and in our favor.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court—TERRY, C. J., and FIELD, J., concurring.

The question in this case is directly presented, whether, in this

Hunt v. Waterman.

---

State, a vendor's lien exists when a mortgage security is taken for the purchase money. The decisions of the various Courts have been numerous on this branch of jurisprudence, and are not harmonious. The better rule, supported by the weight and number of the authorities, is to hold the silent lien of the vendor extinguished, whenever the vendor manifests an intention to abandon or not to look to it; and it is held that he does this whenever he takes other and independent security upon the same land, or a portion of the same land, or on other land. When he looks to other security he loses this tacit lien. Brown v. Gilman, 4 Wheat. 290; 1 Mason, 212; Fisk v. Howland, 1 Paige Ch. R. 20, where the authorities, English and American, are fully reviewed.

The editor of Leading Cases in Equity, reviewing the case of Macreth v. Simmons, (15 Vesey, 350) cites and reviews a very great number of cases which decide and discuss the general doctrine, and this particular point. The case of Boos v. Ewing, (17 Ohio, 521) cited by respondent, seems to be the other way, and is noticed by the editor as a case opposed to the general current of decision.

The fact, if we regard the averment of the bill as properly stating it, that the mortgage was defective in itself, or its acknowledgment, does not help the plaintiff. For, as we have seen, the question is as to the intention of the vendor, which is as well shown by an informal act as one regularly done. If the mortgage was properly executed, it may be enforced, of course; but the whole case seems to rest here on the validity of the vendor's lien. It is not stated how, or in what, the mortgage was defective, and this general and loose averment is not sufficient to withdraw the case from the influence of the general rule we have announced.

That the case may be fairly tried upon its merits, in view of the law as we have held it to be, the decree is reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings on another trial.

ISAAC STEVENS v. IRWIN, SHERIFF.

A subscribing witness to a written instrument, if within the jurisdiction of the Court, must be produced, or some sufficient reason given for his absence.

Within the jurisdiction of the Court, is meant, within the State.

A power of attorney, not affecting real estate, is not required to be recorded, and the fact of such instrument being acknowledged and recorded, does not authorize it to be read in evidence without proof of its execution.

A witness who is called to impeach another, may answer that he would not believe such other witness on oath. This has been the uniform practice in this State, and no injury has resulted from such practice.

APPEAL from the Fourteenth District, County of Sierra.

This was an action of replevin to recover certain personal property, taken by the defendant, as Sheriff, under a process against B. C. Stevens.

The plaintiff had judgment in the Court below, and defendant moved for a new trial, which was denied, and he appealed to this Court.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion of the Court.

Vancleif & Stewart for Appellant.

1st. The Court erred in admitting the testimony of ——— as to the handwriting of Cooke, a subscribing witness to the power of attorney.

2d. The Court erred in permitting the question to be asked the witness McCummings, whether he would believe James Morgan under oath.

3d. The Court erred in overruling defendant's motion for a new trial.

Counsel discussed the facts at considerable length, and referred to the following authorities in support of the second assignment of error: 1 Greenleaf's Evidence, sec. 461; Phillips v. Kingfield, 1 Appleton, 375.

R. H. Taylor for Respondent.

1st. The first point made by appellant, is not well taken. Conceding that the Court erred in admitting the testimony of Musser, the defendant was not prejudiced thereby. The power of attorney could have been admitted in evidence without proof of the handwriting of the subscribing witness. Wood's Digest, page 103, sec. 29.

---

Isaac Stevens v. Irwin.

---

2d. It was no error to permit the impeaching witness to testify whether he would believe the witness Morgan on oath. Johnson v. The People, 3 Hill, 178; People v. Rector, 19 Wendell, 579; State v. Boswell, 2 Dev. 209 and '10; 2 Ib. 522; Fulton Bank v. Benedict, 1 Hall N. Y. S. C. R. 558; Chess v. Chess, 1 Penn. R. 32; 2 Phil. Ev. 432; Cowen & Hill, Notes to Phil. Ev., part 2, pp. 754 to 758.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., concurring.

This was an action of replevin against the Sheriff for certain chattels. The question before the jury was one of fraud, the defendant setting up that the goods were in possession of one B. C. Stevens, a brother of plaintiff, against whom the defendant, as Sheriff, had process; the plaintiff asserting that the goods were his, and that B. C. Stevens was only his agent, managing and controlling his business, and without interest or ownership in the property. The business seems to have been conducted in the name of the plaintiff, who was shown to have been absent from, if not residing out of, the State. The case appears to have been closely contested on the proofs, which, as usual in such cases, were conflicting, circumstantial and numerous. The apparent possession having been shown in the defendant in the process, it became important for plaintiff clearly to explain and account for this circumstance. This he sought to do by showing the agency of B. C. Stevens for him; and as the best and most satisfactory proof of this fact, offered a power of attorney from the plaintiff to B. C. Stevens, giving him power consistent with his acts of management and control of the property and business, the subject of inquiry. The plaintiff offered to prove this power, which was attested by one Cook, of San Francisco, as subscribing witness, by proving by a gentleman present at the trial the signatures to the paper. Against the objection of defendants, this mode of proof was allowed by the Court; and this ruling is assigned for error.

The Court erred in admitting the evidence. The subscribing witness was within the jurisdiction of the Court, by which is meant, within the State. The subscribing witness must, in such cases, be called, or some sufficient reasons given for this omission. Jackson v. Root, 18 Johns. 611.

The fact that the power was acknowledged before a Notary or a Justice of the Peace, and recorded, makes no difference; for this power is not a recordable instrument within the Registry Acts; it does not affect the title of real estate, even if that would be sufficient to admit it to be read without further proof, when introduced for the purpose of affecting other property than the realty.

It is also assigned for error, that the Court should not have permitted a witness who testified to the bad reputation of another witness whom he was called to impeach, to answer that he would not believe the other on oath. It is true, Mr. Greenleaf on Evidence, (sec. 461) questions the propriety of this course, but Phillips, Starkie, and other approved writers, and many adjudged cases, hold it to be proper; and the practice in this State has been uniform, we believe, the same way. We see no injury in the practical working of the rule; it may sometimes be necessary to define more clearly the sense the witness entertains of the standing and reputation for truth of the impeached witness; and we do not think it advisable, from any mere question of the soundness of an old established rule, to create confusion in the practice. The error already noticed is decisive of the case here.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded.

BEEBE v. BROOKS et al.

An indorser of a promissory note, after maturity, is entitled to demand and notice of non-payment, before he is liable to pay.

The law requires a demand to be made within a reasonable time, and notice of non-payment must be seasonably given.

APPEAL from the Ninth District, County of Siskiyou.

This was an action brought to recover a sum of money due on a promissory note, and for a decree of sale of certain personal property pledged for the payment of the note.

The action was against the maker and indorser; the note was indorsed after it fell due. The cause was tried in the Court below without a jury, and the Court found as a fact, that Herzog, the indorser, had no notice of the dishonor of the note. Judgment was given for the plaintiff, against Brooks, the maker, and a non-suit as to Herzog, the indorser. Plaintiff appealed from that portion of the judgment dismissing the action as to Herzog.

P. L. Edwards* for Appellant.

I. The indorsement of the respondent was made nearly two years after the maturity of the note, and it seems difficult to conceive the utility of any demand of payment, or notice of non-payment, after that time. The note was negotiable, and to give the ordinary effect to such demand and notice, the former must have been made on the last day of grace, and the latter must have been diligently given according to the circumstances of the case. Here, however, the note had been long due when the respondent made his indorsement.

II. Where a bill or note is indorsed after maturity, the indorsement is equivalent to drawing a new bill, or making a new note, and the indorser becomes an original promisor. Chitty on Bills, 215; Story on Promissory Notes, notes p. 627, sec. 479.

A leading case in support of our position is that of Brown v. Davis, 3 Term R. 80; see also Bank of North America v. Barriere, 1 Yeates, (Pa.) 360; Allen v. Rightmire, 20 John. R. 365; Hall v. Smith, 1 Bay's R. 330.

It is conceded that there are many authorities to the contrary; but granting that there are such, and even that they outweigh those in our favor, we still insist that upon principle and right reason, the law ought to be pronounced in our favor. As late as 1849, the principal authorities on both sides of the questions were reviewed in the State of Pennsylvania, and the true doctrine, as we think, settled in our favor. Jordan v. Hurst, (12 Penn. State R. 269). This case most triumphantly overrules that of McKinney v. Crawford, (8 Sergt. & R. 351), which had sought to overrule The Bank of North America v. Barriere, 1 Yeates, 360.

Beebe v. Brooks.

---

III. There is a large and respectable class of cases, in which the rule as to notes and bills indorsed when over due is, that demand and notice are dispensed with, and only diligence is necessary according to the circumstances. In other words, the only penalty of neglect is a responsibility for the injury which it actually occasions to the indorser, and the question of reasonable diligence is always a question for the jury. Chadwick v. Jeffers, 1 Richardson, 397; Gray v. Bell, 2 Ib. 67; 3 Ib. 71; cases cited 1 Amer. Leading Cases, 360.

If this be the true doctrine, then the plaintiff ought not to have been nonsuited; but the question ought to have been submitted to the jury, whether he had exercised reasonable diligence in trying to collect the amount of the note from the maker.

No brief on file for Respondent.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., concurring.

The assignment of errors by the appellant in this case raises but one question, that is, whether, if a note be indorsed after it is due, the indorser is entitled to demand and notice, before he is liable to his indorsee? The authorities, it is conceded, are not consistent. But we think that the weight and number are both in favor of the affirmative of this proposition. It would be a useless and almost an endless task to review them all. Mr. Parsons, in his recent work on Contracts, takes this view of the question. Parsons on Cont., 2 vol., p. 231, note.

We think that the rule should be as uniform as possible in its operation upon the same description of commercial paper. Even if we did not consider ourselves foreclosed by authority, we should hesitate long before we reached the conclusion that the indorser meant, by placing his signature upon an overdue note or bill, to become unconditionally liable for that amount. We suppose that the universal understanding of business men is, not that an indorsement is not equivalent to a promissory note upon which the indorser may be sued the next day, but that it amounts to no more than a guaranty of the solvency of the maker; and that the indorsee may, if he makes demand upon the maker and fails to get the money, have recourse upon the indorser. This is the extent of the indorser's liability. It is true that no time is expressly limited, as in cases of bills or notes not due, for demand and notice to the indorser; but the law requires a demand to be made in a reasonable time, and notice of default seasonably given. No notice having been given in this case to the defendant, Herzog, the indorser, the Court below properly gave judgment for him.

Barringer v. Warden.

---

Judgment affirmed.

BARRINGER v. WARDEN et al.

Where a complaint shows prima facie upon the facts stated, that the claim or debt upon which suit is brought, is barred by the Statute of Limitations, the defendant may take advantage of the defect by demurrer. But when the complaint does not directly show prima facie a case for the operation of the statute, a demurrer cannot be sustained on this ground. This is the chancery rule, under the English system, and as our pleadings approximate more nearly to the chancery than the common law form, we have adopted the former.

The provision of the Statute of Frauds which requires the promise to pay the debt of another to be in writing, expressing the consideration, does not apply to the promise of A to pay money he owes by contract with B, to C. This is paying A's own debt, and creating his own obligation, not assuming another's.

Where A, who is indebted to B, promises, in consideration of his release by B, to pay the amount to C, who is a party to the arrangement, it is a sufficient consideration to support such promise.

APPEAL from the Ninth District, County of Siskiyou.

This was an action to recover a sum of money. The facts, as alleged in the complaint, are as follow:

Some time in the year 1856, J. A. Ripson sold to Matthias Woolsey, an undivided one-sixth interest in a mining claim, and placed Woolsey in possession. The transfer was in writing; Woolsey was to pay six hundred dollars, so soon as his share of the claim should yield that amount of money, after deducting one dollar per day for expenses.

---

Barringer v. Warden.

---

On the sixth day of November, 1856, Ripson assigned to plaintiff his claim on Woolsey for six hundred dollars, the amount Woolsey had agreed to pay for the interest purchased by him. After this assignment from Ripson to plaintiff of the debt on Woolsey, the latter sold the one-sixth interest, which he had purchased of Ripson, to the defendants in this suit, at the same price and upon the same terms as those upon which he had purchased of Ripson. Both Woolsey and the defendants had notice of the assignment from Ripson to plaintiff, and at the time of the sale from Woolsey to the defendants; and in consideration of such sale, and in further consideration that plaintiff would accept them as his debtors, and discharge Woolsey, the defendants undertook and promised to pay to plaintiff six hundred dollars, as soon as the one-sixth interest purchased by them should yield or be entitled to that sum, after deducting one dollar per day for expenses. The complaint avers that the one-sixth of the claim purchased by defendants has yielded more than six hundred dollars, after deducting one dollar per day for expenses; and also avers, that on the — day of May or June, 1858, the defendants sold and parted with their entire interest in the one-sixth of the claim purchased by them of Woolsey, but have failed and refused to pay the six hundred dollars to plaintiff. This complaint was filed October 16th, 1858. To this complaint the defendants demurred on the grounds:

First. That it appears upon the fact of the complaint, that the cause of action accrued more than two years prior to the commencement of the action; and,

Second. That the agreement of the defendants to pay plaintiff the six hundred dollars, was void under the Statute of Frauds, being a promise on their part, not in writing, to pay the debt of another.

The Court below held that both grounds of demurrer were well taken, and gave judgment for the defendants, from which plaintiff appealed to this Court.

Clark & Gass and Buckner for Appellant.

I. Plaintiff did not become the assignee of the debt until November 6th, 1856, which was within two years next preceding the institution of the suit. Defendants' promise to pay plaintiff being necessarily subsequent to plaintiff's acquiring the debt by assignment, their promise must have been within the two years. But there is still another reason why the Court erred in holding the cause of action to have accrued more than two years before the institution of the suit; no right of action accrued until the working of the claim had yielded six hundred dollars, in addition to one dollar per day for the expense of working it, or until the defendants parted with their interest in it, and this is alleged to have been in May or June, 1858, four or five months only before the institution of the suit.

---

Barringer v. Warden.

---

Again, in this case, the Statute of Limitations cannot be taken advantage of by way of demurrer. In Sublette v. Tinney et al., (9 Cal. 423) this Court held, that where it appeared upon the face of a bill in equity, that the cause of action did not accrue within the time limited by the statute, that advantage might be taken of the statute by demurrer. In actions at law, however, the statute must be specially pleaded.

Upon the second ground of demurrer, the Court below equally erred in rendering judgment for the defendants.

II. The promise alleged in the complaint, and upon which this action is based, is not a promise by the defendants to pay the debt of Woolsey, but an original promise on their part, for a valuable consideration, to pay the purchase money of a claim purchased by them, to the plaintiff, instead of paying the same money to Woolsey, from whom the purchase was made. The debt was their own, and instead of paying the money to Woolsey, who would immediately have paid it to plaintiff, they agreed to pay it directly to plaintiff. If the payment by them to plaintiff would, in addition to satisfying their own debt to Woolsey, have also satisfied the debt from Woolsey to plaintiff, this is not a matter of which they can complain, or which is to their prejudice. The same result would have followed if they had paid the money to Woolsey, and he had paid the same money to plaintiff. In either case both debts would have been discharged, and in either case the debt was their own they were paying. This is not at all the case provided for by the Statute of Frauds, in which the promise is required to be in writing. The statute only covers the case where A, without being indebted to B, and without any consideration moving

---

Barringer v. Warden.

---

him thereto, promises to pay the debt of B to C. That is not this case, where A purchases a house of B, and in consideration thereof, agrees to pay the price to C; he is only discharging his own debt, and such a case is not contemplated by the Statute of Frauds. Brewster v. Skelton, 8 Johns. 376.

No brief on file for Respondents.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., concurring.

The Court below erred in sustaining the demurrer to the complaint. Although it is true, that where a complaint shows prima facie upon the facts stated, that the claim is barred by the Statute of Limitations, the defendant may take advantage of the defect by demurrer, yet it must clearly so appear. In chancery, under the English system, this was the rule; at law it was otherwise; there the statute must have been pleaded; but as our pleadings approximate more nearly to the chancery than the common law form, we have adopted the equity rule. But when the complaint does not directly show prima facie a case for the operation of the statute, a demurrer cannot be sustained on this ground. In the present instance, the six hundred dollars were not to be paid absolutely at a given time, but this sum was to be paid as soon as the payor's share of the claim sold should yield that amount, after deducting one dollar per day for expenses; and there is no averment that this state of things happened within the statutory limit. Nor is the case, as stated, within the Statute of Frauds. That statute requires a promise to pay the debt of another to be in writing, expressing the consideration. But this requirement has no reference to a promise by A, to pay money he owes by contract with B, to C. This is his debt; the mere direction in which he pays it, not altering the character of the contract from an original obligation. There is no difference between a debtor promising to pay his creditor directly so much money which he owes him, and his promising his creditor to pay a third person the same sum, by agreement between the three. The last promisor is paying his own debt, and creating his own obligation, not assuming another's. This has been often decided, and is too obvious to require authority or further illustration to make the proposition evident. Moreover, the promise to pay the six hundred dollars is averred to be a promise made to plaintiff, in consideration of plaintiff's discharge of Woolsey, his original debtor; and this is a sufficient consideration to support a promise made directly from promisor to promisee.

Stockton v. Garfrias.

---

Judgment is reversed and cause remanded.

STOCKTON v. GARFRIAS.

Where defendant conveyed by deed, to plaintiff, a tract of land, and there was subsequently a dispute between the parties respecting the boundary line of the land so conveyed, and the parties subsequently made an agreement fixing the line; Held, That in an action of trespass by the plaintiff against the defendant, for cutting timber upon the land previous to such agreement, the defendant was not estopped by the agreement in showing title in himself previous thereto. It was competent for the defendant to show that the deed did not embrace the locus in quo.

The agreement would not retroact so as to show that to be a trespass which at the time was lawful.

Held, in such case, it was error in the Court to instruct the jury, that the delivery of the deed and the cutting of firewood on the tract was sufficient evidence of possession. The cutting of timber, by itself, was neither possession or title as against the owner.

APPEAL from the First District, County of Los Angeles.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion of the Court.

George Cadwalader for Appellant.

P. L. Edwards for Respondent.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court—TERRY, C. J., and FIELD, J., concurring.

This was trespass for entering upon the plaintiff's land and cutting timber. There was no proof that the plaintiff was in actual possession of the spot of land alleged to be trespassed on at the time of the trespass. The plaintiff had bought the land of the defendant, and by a survey made of the premises, it was ascertained (or is asserted) that the lines of plaintiff's tract, as given by the deed, did not embrace this land. But the plaintiff attempted to show that a few days before the suit was brought, but after the trespass complained of, the plaintiff and defendant agreed that the line was such as to embrace this land. The whole question of fact was whether the cutting of the timber was on the land of the plaintiff or not. It was contended by the defendant that it was not; that the deed did not comprehend the locus in quo: and some evidence by the Surveyor and others was given, tending to show that the spot was not within the deed. How the fact is we cannot say; but that matter was a question peculiarly for the jury. If the deed did not, by its terms, include this tract, or if the terms of the deed were ambiguous, it is not impossible that the boundary lines may have been properly settled by agreement, or that the admission of the defendant may have been proper proof of their location. But, conceding this, it is clear that this agreement, if made, did not estop the defendant from showing title in himself previously to the agreement. It was competent for him to show that by the deed the property was not that of the plaintiff; that is, that the deed of the defendant did not embrace the locus in quo; and, though the plaintiff might show that, by agreement, the lines were settled, this agreement would not retroact so as to show that to be a trespass which at the time was lawful.

---

Stockton v. Garfias.

---

The Court erred in instructing the jury, under the circumstances, that the delivery of the deed and the cutting of firewood on the tract was sufficient evidence of possession; for the very question was, whether the premises in dispute were within the lines of the deed, so that the delivery of the deed would carry the title to such premises. The cutting of timber, by itself, of course, is neither possession or title — certainly not as against the owner, as the defendant claimed to be — and as, perhaps, if his construction of the deed were right, he was at the time of the asserted trespass.

The judgment is reversed and cause remanded.

Griffith v. Grogan.

---

GRIFFITH v. GROGAN et al.

Defendants were indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $10,000; subsequently parties had a settlement, and defendants gave to plaintiff, in part payment of the debt, a note of third parties, for $2,500, which was received by plaintiff without objection, and the same left with defendants for collection. The note was not paid at maturity, and plaintiff demanded the amount for which the note was taken in settlement, of the defendants, who paid $1,250, and gave to plaintiff another note of same parties for the balance, payable in one year: Held, In an action by plaintiff against the defendants to recover the balance, that defendants are liable for the amount.

Unless the note was received by express agreement as payment, it did not extinguish the debt. It only operated to extend the time of payment of the debt, to the time the note fell due, and hence the Statute of Limitations would commence running only from that time.

The acceptance of a note of a third party, by the creditor, is considered as accompanied with the condition that the note shall be paid at its maturity.

The obligation of the debtor to pay in such case, does not rest upon notice by the creditor of the non-payment of the note, but upon the fact that the note was not paid; and hence, delay on the part of the creditor in calling on the debtor, will not absolve him from his obligation to pay.

A part payment of a demand, of one of two debtors, will not discharge such debtor making the payment, from the payment of the balance. His obligation is to pay the whole.

APPEAL from the Twelfth District, County of San Francisco.

This was an action to recover a sum of money.

In March, 1853, the plaintiff, Griffith, loaned to the defendants, Grogan & Lent, $10,000, for which they were to pay the plaintiff three per cent. per month.

In December, 1854, the defendants rendered their account to the plaintiff, and a settlement of the balance due was made. In such account the plaintiff is charged with a note of Hale & Vincent, for $2,500. This note was received without objection by the plaintiff, and was then left by him with the defendants for collection. Upon its maturity, the note was not paid, and the plaintiff, after some months' delay, called upon the defendants for the amount for which it was taken in the settlement. The defendant, Lent, then advanced $1,250 of the amount in cash; and a new note of Hale & Vincent for the balance, payable in one year, was given to plaintiff. This arrangement was made in October, 1855, under the supervision of Lent, who appears to have acted upon the impression that his own liability would be discharged by the payment of one-half, his copartnership with Grogan being at that time dissolved. The new note not being paid, the present action was brought to recover the balance remaining due upon the account rendered upon the settlement, the subsequent payment by Lent being credited thereon. On the trial, the plaintiff produced the new note of Hale & Vincent, and offered to deliver the same up to the defendants.

Griffith v. Grogan.

---

The cause was tried by a jury in the Court below, who returned a verdict for the plaintiff for $1,717.77, and judgment was entered thereon. Defendants appealed to this Court.

Whitcomb, Pringle & Felton for Appellants.

I. It will be seen that there is a clear distinction between the case at bar and the case where the note or bill of a third person is given for a pre-existing debt. In the case at bar, after the first settlement the defendants were not indebted to the plaintiff at all; allowing that the first settlement was fraudulent, still it was only voidable, not void, and until actually avoided by the plaintiff by the surrender of the note which he received on the settlement, it was an extinguishment of all claims of the plaintiff against the defendants. The plaintiff had simply a right to avoid; this right he has never exercised. He voluntarily, and with full knowledge of all the facts, canceled the note he received in settlement, thereby putting it out of his power to rescind this contract, and received therefor one-half money and one-half in a new note of Hale & Vincent, made payable in a year.

II. The second point which we make is this: That the plaintiff should have alleged and proved a notice to defendants, that the second note was not paid, and have demanded the payment of the money before bringing suit.

Admitting that defendants could become liable to plaintiff at all, it would only be in case the second note of Hale & Vincent was not made. Now, whether this note was or was not paid, was a fact of which plaintiff alone could have notice, and the defendants could not know, until apprised by plaintiff, that the condition on which they were to be liable, had happened. It is a familiar principle, that notice and demand are necessary before bringing suit, where the liability depends on a condition, the happening or non-happening of which is peculiarly within the knowledge of the person in favor of whom the liability is to accrue. Now, in this case, on the hypothesis that the plaintiff received this second note in conditional payment, he bound himself to use reasonable diligence to collect it. He was bound to notify the defendants that this condition — that of nonpayment — on which their liability depended, and the happening of which he alone knew had really happened, and that they were liable. He had no right, either as a matter of law or common sense, to commence a suit on a liability of the existence of which defendants were kept in ignorance by himself. Dayton v. Trull, 23 Wend. 345.

Griffith v. Grogan.

---

Sidney V. Smith for Respondent.

I. That the taking of a note of a third person for a pre-existing debt, is not payment of satisfaction, except it be so expressly agreed; it is merely an extension of the time of payment of the original debt.

Upon this point the doctrine is well settled; the cases are all reviewed in 2d American Leading Cases, (pp. 162–196) the leading case there cited being Tobey v. Barber (5 Johns. 98); and the correctness of the doctrine is recognized by this Court in Brewster v. Bours, 5 Cal. 501.

II. Whether it was the intention of the parties that the note was given and taken in full discharge, or not, was a question for the jury. 2d Am. Lead. Cases, 180.

III. This Court, in Armstrong v. Hayward, (6 Cal. 183) decided that a release to one joint debtor, to avail either him or his co-debtor, must be a technical release under seal; and no such release is pretended in this case.

But the appellants say there was no pre-existing debt, and that therefore this case is clearly distinguished from the class of cases to which respondent has referred; and they give as their reason for it, that Griffith never rescinded the transactions of December, 1854, because, with a full knowledge of all the facts, he accepted the $2,500 note, and delivered it up to Hale at the time of the settlement in October, 1855; and in proof of this, they refer to Hale's evidence. They therefore contend that there was an entire waiver of the fraud of December, 1854, and they asked the Court so to instruct the jury.

Griffith v. Grogan.

---

The Court below properly refused the instruction as asked for, because it is well settled that while the party defrauded may, by accepting that which was the subject of the fraud, lose the right to rescind, yet without more, he does not, by that act alone, lose his right to recover for the fraud. Allaire v. Whitney, 1 Hill, 484; Whitney v. Allaire, 4 Denio, 554.

IV. It was not necessary that notice of nonpayment should have been given to Grogan & Lent.

In Dayton v. Trull, (23 Wend. 345) cited by appellants, the case was not that of a note of a third person, but it was a bill of exchange drawn by the original debtor on a third person, which bill was not produced, nor was it shown to have been presented for payment.

The authors of American Leading Cases, (vol. 2, page 183) refer to the law merchant as controlling this class of paper, and say that it is the duty of the holder of such paper to make it available for the purpose for which it is given, and that therefore a plea that the plaintiff has taken the note of a third person, on account of the cause of action, is sufficient to create a bar to the suit, which can only be removed by showing that the ordinary course of business had been pursued with reference to the security thus taken, and that it has notwithstanding proved inadequate as a means of payment.

Dayton v. Trull was decided in accordance with the law merchant, which requires that the maker of a bill of exchange shall be notified of the presentment and nonpayment.

In the case before the Court, the note for $1,500 was duly presented to Hale & Vincent for payment, and payment refused. Inasmuch as the note was not indorsed by Grogan & Lent, nor were they parties to it, it was not necessary, under the law merchant, to give notice to them.

FIELD, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., and BALDWIN, J., concurring.

The money placed in the hands of the defendants, in March, 1853, cannot, in strictness, be termed a deposit. The defendants were to have the use of the money, and to allow interest upon it, although the plaintiff was at liberty to withdraw such portion of the same as he chose, at any time. It was, in fact, a loan payable in whole or in part, on demand. In what manner, therefore, the defendants used the money, it is of no consequence to inquire. It was to them, and not to any investments of the money, the plaintiff was to look for repayment.

---

Griffith v. Grogan.

---

In December, 1854, the defendants rendered their account to the plaintiff, and a settlement of the balance due was made. In such account the plaintiff is charged with a note of Hale & Vincent for $2,500. This note was received, as it would appear, without objection by the plaintiff, and was then left by him with the defendants for collection. Upon its maturity, the note was not paid, and the plaintiff, after some months' delay, called upon the defendants for the amount for which it was taken in the settlement. The defendant, Lent, then advanced $1,250 of the amount in cash, and a new note of Hale & Vincent for the balance, payable in one year, was given to the plaintiff. This arrangement was made in October, 1855, under the supervision of Lent, who appears to have acted under the impression that his own liability would be discharged by the payment of one-half, his copartnership with Grogan being at that time dissolved. The new note not being paid, the present action was brought to recover the balance remaining due upon the account rendered upon the settlement, the subsequent payment by Lent being credited thereon. On the trial, plaintiff produced the new note of Hale & Vincent, and offered to deliver the same up to the defendants.

The only questions material for the determination of the case, relate to the effect upon the claim of the plaintiff of taking the note of Hale & Vincent in the settlement of December, 1854, the effect of the renewal of the note, and the application of the Statute of Limitations to the demand.

The consideration of the note of $2,500 is of no moment. Whether given for a loan of a part of the money received from the plaintiff, or upon a sale of flour, is immaterial. The only point for consideration relates to the intention, or rather the agreement, with which it was received by the plaintiff. Unless received by express agreement as payment, it did not extinguish the debt. It only operated to extend until its maturity, the period for the payment of the debt. This is the settled doctrine as to the notes of the debtor, or of third persons, taken for an antecedent debt. Their acceptance is considered as accompanied with the condition of their payment at maturity. Thus it was said, as long ago as the time of Lord Holt, that "a bill shall never go in discharge of a precedent debt, except it be part of the contract that it should be so." (Clark v. Mundal, 1 Salk. 124.) And that where the note of a third person "is given in payment of a precedent debt, it is always taken under this condition to be payment, if the money be paid thereon in a convenient time." (Ward v. Evans, 2 Ld. Raymond, 928.) And such has been the rule in England ever since. The case of Tobey v. Barber, (5 John. 68) is the leading American authority on the point in question, and has been followed, with few exceptions, in the several States. That was an action upon a covenant in a lease to pay rent. In defense to a part of the claim, the defendant gave in evidence a receipt of the plaintiff of one hundred and sixty-three dollars, purporting in terms to be in full for the rent for two quarters. The plaintiff then proved that the note of one Coffin, payable in four months, constituted a portion of the money named in the receipt; that Coffin failed before the maturity of the note, and took the benefit of the Insolvent Act, and that the note was not paid. The admission of this proof was objected to, but the Supreme Court held the same admissible, and in its opinion said: "The taking of the note was no extinguishment of the debt due for the rent. It is a rule well settled, and repeatedly recognized in this Court, that taking a note, either of the debtor or of a third person, for a pre-existing debt, is no payment, unless it be expressly agreed to take the note as payment, and to run the risk of its being paid; or unless the creditor parts with the note, or is guilty of laches in not presenting it for payment in due time. He is not obliged to sue upon it; he may return it when dishonored, and resort to his original demand. It only postpones the time of payment of the old debt until a default be made in the payment of the note. (1 Salk. 125; 5 Term Rep. 513; 6 Term Rep. 52; 7 Term Rep. 66; 1 Esp. N. P. 3; 1 Cranch, 181; Her-ring v. Sanger, 3 Johns. Cas. 71, and Roget v. Merritt and Clapp,

Griffith v. Grogan.

---

---

Griffith v. Grogan.

---

2 Caines, 117.) There is no evidence in this case that the plaintiff agreed to run the risk of the solvency of Coffin, and to take the note as absolute payment, except it be the inference arising from the receipt itself, and that is not enough to establish such a positive agreement."

In Jackson v. Weed, (9 John. 310) the plaintiff sued for goods sold and delivered, for which the note of a third person was taken, and a receipt in full given; and it was left to the jury to determine whether the plaintiff had agreed to receive the note as payment, and to run the risk of its being paid. The jury having found for the plaintiff, the Court refused a new trial, and in its opinion said: "The books all agree that there must be a clear and special agreement that the vendor shall take the paper absolutely as payment, or it will be no payment, if it afterwards turn out to be of no value."

In Olcott v. Rathbone, (5 Wend. 490) the cashier of a bank, on the maturity of a note, accepted a check of a third person for part of the money, and a new note for the balance, and thereupon delivered up the old note, and it was held that on the dishonor of the check, an action would lie upon the original note, to recover the amount of the check, and that the delivering up of the original note, was not evidence that the check and new note were received in payment. See also Hays v. Stone, 7 Hill, 128; Jaffrey v. Cornish, 10 New Hamp. 505; Porter v. Beverly, 10 Peters, 532; Schemertron v. Laines, 7 John. 311; Elwood v. Deifendorf, 5 Barb. 398; Van Eps v. Dillaye, 6 Barb. 244; Maye v. Miller, 1 W. C. C. 328.

The authorities proceed upon the obvious ground that nothing is to be considered as payment in fact, but that which is in truth such, unless something else is expressly agreed to be received in its place. That the mere promise to pay, whether by the original debtor or a third party, cannot of itself be regarded as an effective payment, is manifest. Testing, then, the case at bar by these authorities, the defense fails. The only evidence that the plaintiff received the note of Hale & Vincent for $2,500, in payment, is derived from the account rendered by the defendants, and his own allegation in the complaint. Neither are evidence of an agreement to receive the note in satisfaction of the debt. Neither are inconsistent with the conditional acceptance of the same. They are not more expressive than the receipt in full in Tobey v. Barber and Johnson v. Weed or the surrender of the original note in Olcott v. Rathbone. And all the attendant and subsequent circumstances go to show that the plaintiff never intended to take the note in absolute payment, and assume the risk of its ultimate collection upon himself. It does not appear that he knew anything of the responsibility of the makers; and it is not reasonable to suppose that he would have released, without any consideration, a claim upon defendants, who were abundantly responsible, for the note of parties of whose means he was wholly ignorant. The question in any view, was one of fact to be determined by the jury, and their finding is conclusive. No stress can be placed upon the delay in calling upon the defendants for payment, after the maturity of the note. They were fully aware of its nonpayment; the note was in their possession for collection, and their obligation to meet its amount did not rest upon any notice, but upon the fact that it was not paid at maturity.

Griffith v. Grogan.

---

The renewal of the note in part could not alter the original relations of the parties as debtors and creditors, except in the increased extension of the time of payment, until the maturity of the renewed note. The makers were at the time wholly insolvent, and their insolvency was known to the plaintiff. That the renewed note was taken under these circumstances in satisfaction of the balance, is at least highly improbable. The evidence disclosed by the record does not establish any agreement to this effect, and the presumptions of the law are against its existence. The whole arrangement appears to have been made under the supervision, if not by the direct request, of Lent. It may be that it was the expectation of Lent, that he would be entirely released of responsibility upon the whole demand, by paying his portion. But if so, he was mistaken in the legal effect of the transaction. A part payment of the demand by one of two debtors, was no consideration for a discharge to him of the balance. The payment of the entire amount was the obligation of both; the partial payment was but a partial discharge of the existing obligation, and furnished no claim for the relinquishment of any rights for the residue. (Armstrong v. Hayward, 6 Cal. 183.) To have availed him, the release to Lent should have been a technical one under seal.

The Statute of Limitations does not bar the demand. It is true, that the action is for the balance due upon the amount rendered in December, 1854, and were it not for the notes of Hale & Vincent, the statute would have run against the demand. These notes operated, however, as an extension of the period of payment, until October, 1856, and the present action was brought in December following.

The case appears to have been tried upon the impression that it was essential to the plaintiff's recovery to make out a misrepresentation by one of the parties as to the solvency of Hale & Vincent, and the consideration of their note, and several of the instructions asked in the Court below, and several of the points made in this Court, are founded upon that impression. These we do not notice, as from the views we have taken, they are entirely immaterial to the determination of the rights of the parties.

Judgment affirmed.

PEOPLE v. URIAS.

An indictment which charges an offense in the following language is insufficient:

"In and upon one John Provisso feloniously did make an assault with a deadly weapon, to wit, a pistol loaded with powder and ball, with intent then and there to kill said Provisso, without any just cause or provocation, but with an abandoned and malignant heart."

The allegation of premeditation, or malice aforethought, is a necessary ingredient to the crime of murder, or of an assault with intent to commit such crime.

APPEAL from the Court of Sessions, County of Contra Costa.

The defendant was indicted for an assault with a deadly weapon, with intent to kill. He plead not guilty; was tried by a jury who returned the following verdict: "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty as charged in the indictment." Upon this verdict judgment was rendered, and the defendant was sentenced to five years' confinement in the State prison. The defendant moved the Court to arrest the judgment upon the following grounds:

---

People v. Urias.

---

1st. The facts stated in the indictment do not constitute a public offense.

2d. The indictment does not substantially conform to the requirements of sections 237 and 238 of the Act regulating Criminal Practice.

The motion was overruled, and the defendant appealed to this Court.

M. J. Chase for Appellant.

W. W. Theobalds for Respondent.

TERRY, C. J., delivered the opinion of the Court — BALDWIN, J., concurring.

The indictment charges that defendant at, etc., "in and upon one John Provisso feloniously did make an assault with a deadly weapon, to wit, a pistol loaded with powder and ball, with intent then and there to kill said Provisso, without any just cause or provocation, but with an abandoned and malignant heart."

The statute requires that an indictment shall be direct and certain as to the person charged; the offense charged and the circumstances constituting the offense, when necessary to constitute a complete offense, (sec. 239) and the offense charged, must be so clearly and distinctly set forth that a person of common understanding may know what was intended, and the Court enabled to pronounce judgment according to the right of the case.

The indictment in this case does not comply with these requirements; and indeed it is difficult to determine from the paper itself whether it was intended by the attorney who drew it as an indictment for an assault with intent to commit murder, or an assault with a deadly weapon with intent to inflict bodily injury, which is an offense of much lower grade.

The Court below seems to have regarded it as an indictment for an assault to commit murder, and sentenced defendant to five years' imprisonment; but the language employed is more consistent with the supposition that it was intended to charge the lower offense under the second subdivision of section 50 of the Act concerning Crimes and Punishments.

It is true the indictment charges the act to have been done with intent to kill, but it does not allege premeditation or malice aforethought, which is a necessary ingredient to the crime of murder, or of assault with intent to commit such a crime, while it contains averments of the absence of considerable provocation, etc., which are not at all appropriate to an indictment for an assault with intent to murder, but are necessary to make out the statutory offense of assault with a deadly weapon.

---

Lies v. De Diablar.

---

It follows that the Court erred in denying the motion in arrest of judgment.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for further proceedings.

LIES v. DE DIABLAR AND DE LA GUERRA, EXECUTOR OF PEDRO DIABLAR, DECEASED.

A mortgage of the homestead of the family, executed by the husband only, is void. To make such mortgage valid, the wife should join with the husband in the execution of it.

Abandonment and adultery on the part of the wife will not divest the homestead of its character as such, nor will it defeat or impair her right to it as a homestead.

The homestead right is as much for the benefit of the children as for the benefit of the wife.

An order of the Probate Court setting apart property as a homestead, will not defeat a mortgage which has properly vested as a lien upon the property, where the mortgagor was not a party to such proceedings.

It does not matter when or how the homestead was acquired, or whether it was common or separate property; it can only be conveyed in the manner prescribed by law.

APPEAL from the Second District, County of Santa Barbara.

This was a bill to foreclose a mortgage. The bill alleges, that previous to the year 1846, Pedro Diablar (the mortgagor) and Tomasa Badillo were married according to the laws then in force in California. After the marriage, and previous to the year 1849, Pedro Diablar became seized of a certain lot of ground upon which he erected a dwelling-house, which was the home of the family. That in the year 1852, Tomasa Badillo, wife of the said Pedro, eloped from her said husband, and lived an adulterous life. That at the time of her elopement she left two children with the husband.

---

On the twenty-sixth of April, 1853, the said Pedro made his will, in which he acknowledged his marriage with Badillo, and stated that by her he had two children, who were then minors, and whom he declared his sole heirs to his property. "Also, I divest and deprive my aforesaid wife from the title or right that she may have in this property, for having abandoned her obligations and tender children, as is publicly notorious in this place."

On the eleventh day of July, 1854, the said Pedro executed and delivered to plaintiff a certain mortgage of the premises occupied as a homestead — the substance of the mortgage is set out — which was acknowledged and recorded.

On the twenty-seventh of October, 1854, Pedro died, without having revoked his will. At the time of his death, the full sum of money specified in the mortgage was due and unpaid. That the will was admitted to probate, and letters testamentary were granted thereon. That subsequently plaintiff presented his mortgage to the executor and Probate Judge, and the same was approved and allowed by both of them. That the children of Pedro and his widow claim to have some right in the mortgaged premises, and that such claim is set up by virtue of an order of the Probate Court setting apart said premises to the widow and children as a homestead; and that plaintiff was not a party to said proceeding, and had no notice of the same. The bill then concludes with the usual prayer for the sale of the premises, etc., to satisfy said mortgage debt.

Defendant demurred to the bill on three grounds:

1st. The Court has no jurisdiction of the subject of the action.

2d. The complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

3d. Right of the parties has been determined by the Probate Court setting aside the premises to defendants as a homestead.

The Court sustained the demurrer, and judgment was entered for defendants. Plaintiff appealed to this Court.

---

---

Eugene Lies for Appellant.

I. The assignment of homestead in the premises to the widow by the Probate Court, cannot be considered an adjudication. It was inter alios acta, as amply shown by the pleadings. This plaintiff had no notice, and was not a party to that proceeding.

II. The deceased, Peter Diablar, whose wife had eloped from him, executed alone a mortgage of the homestead. Furthermore, he made a will, whereby he disinherited his adulterous wife. All this we contend he had a right to do, and the mortgagee's cause of action rests upon that right. Story's Conflict of Laws, secs. 84, 87, 102, 103, 112, 225, 138.

Isaac Hartman for Respondents.

I. The Court below had no jurisdiction of the case.

When a claim has been presented to the Probate Court, and allowed, the District Court has no jurisdiction. Ellison v. Halleck et al., 6 Cal. 386; Belloc v. Rogers, 9 Cal. 143; Hentsch v. Porter, 10 Cal. 559.

II. In law, the premises were the homestead of the family, and the execution of the mortgage by the husband alone did not affect the homestead right of the wife and children. McHenry v. Moon, 5 Cal. 90; Sargent v. Wilson, 5 Cal. 504; Poole v. Genard, 6 Cal. 234; Revalk v. Kraemer, 8 Cal. 66; Buchanan's Estate, 8 Cal. 507; Dunn v. Tozer, 10 Cal. 167.

III. The order of the Probate Court setting aside the premises as a homestead was a protection against creditors. Rix v. McHenry, 7 Cal. 89.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., concurring.

We think that the plaintiff below cannot maintain his claim, to subject to his mortgage, executed in 1854, the premises, (to the extent of $5,000 in value) for the reason that these were the homestead of the family. The adultery or abandonment by the wife did not divest the property of the character of homestead. It is not material when the title to the homestead accrued. It was within the competency of the Legislature to declare what property should be exempt from forced sale, and what should be the mode of its disposition, provided antecedent claims of creditors or others were not affected by the law. The Legislature has provided that the homestead should not be sold except in a particular way, which is, by the wife joining the husband in the deed. It is a mistake to suppose that this provision was solely for the benefit of the wife. It was as much for the benefit of the children. The husband can make no disposition of the property except in the statutory mode, and it does not descend as assets of the estate if he leaves a family.

---

Liles v. De Diablar.

It is not necessary to inquire whether the husband could make any disposition of the estate by will, which would deprive the wife, under the circumstances, of her right to participate in the benefits of the homestead; though we do not see that the statute has made the crime of adultery, or abandonment, or desertion by the wife of the homestead, or of the family, a cause of defeating or impairing her right.

The proceedings of the Probate Court—the plaintiff not having been a party—were not, of themselves, operative to defeat his claim to this property; but the radical objection to the plaintiff's recovery is, that no title, under the facts stated, inured to him—the deed of the husband alone to the homestead premises being simply void.

We think it not material to inquire what the Mexican law prevailing at the time of the marriage was; nor at what time the property was acquired; nor whether it was common or separate property. For, as before intimated, the Legislature could constitutionally declare the modes of transfer of property to take effect in futuro, subject only to the provision that rights already vested had not intervened. No man has any vested right to dispose of any property, by whatever title he holds, in any way other than that which the law prescribes. The law might prescribe that real estate of every kind should pass by deed of husband and wife; it has prescribed that a particular description of real estate—the homestead—should only pass in this way; and it is not material by what title or when the party acquires the property.

The judgment is affirmed.

Muldraw v. Norris.

MULDROW v. NORRIS.

The rule is general that arbitrators must pass upon all matters submitted, or their award will be invalid. If several matters are specified in the submission, and the award does not disclose that each is determined, it is defective on its face, and can be set aside on motion. But if the submission is general, of all matters in controversy, without specification it is not necessary that the award should embrace any matters except those which are laid before the arbitrators. These last, however, must be passed upon, or the award will be void in toto, and be set aside upon a proper showing of the omission.

If the submission provide that an award upon the matters submitted be made, or the condition of the bond be that the parties are bound, provided the award of such matters be made, then such proviso extends to all the matters submitted, and operates to render the submission conditional, and the award binding only in case the arbitrators pass upon every subject, either specifically referred to them, or brought to their notice under the general terms of the submission.

Where one of the principal matters in dispute, passed upon by the arbitrators, was subsequently set aside by a higher Court, and the judgment rendered upon the award vacated by reason of the error of the arbitrators in passing upon said matter, it left the award as though such item submitted had never been passed upon, and consequently the award did not effect the purposes of the submission by settling all matters of controversy between the parties. The consideration which moved the parties to enter into the submission had failed, and hence the award is void.

The award being void, a release of action, filed by one of the parties in pursuance of the submission, is also void.

A useless and invalid determination upon one item properly presented within the general terms of the submission, must, on principle, be as fatal to the entire action of the arbitrators as an omission intentional, or unintentional, to notice the item at all.

The doctrine that an award may be good in part and bad in part applies to instances where there has been an excess of power in the arbitrators by their attempting to determine matters not submitted, or where there is uncertainty or illegality in an independent and distinct matter forming no consideration for other parts of the award, and the settlement of which could not have contributed to induce the arbitration.

APPEAL from the Eleventh District, County of Yolo.

This was an action brought upon an award and agreement of the parties, submitting certain matters of difference between them to arbitration. The agreement of submission is as follows:

“Whereas various matters of difference have for a long time existed between the undersigned, which, for the purpose of having the same speedily and properly adjusted, they desire to submit to the judgment and decision of disinterested persons, to be selected by the parties hereto — therefore, we hereby agree to submit to Thomas J. White, Charles Horner and William McDaniel, all matters of difference, suits, actions or causes of actions, now existing or pending between us, which arose or accrued to either of us at any time before the first day of December last past, to determine the same; and we do further agree, that the award of the said Thomas J. White, Charles Horner and William McDaniel, or of any two of them, upon the matter hereinbefore submitted, shall be final and conclusive between us, and that we will abide the same; and we hereby constitute the said Thomas J. White, Charles Horner and William McDaniel, or either of them, our attorney, or attorneys to confess at any regular term of the District Court of the Sixth Judicial District in and for Sacramento county, or other Court having jurisdiction of the same, a judgment against us or either of us, in accordance with the terms of said award. And we further agree, that upon such judgment being rendered, we will take no appeal from the same, nor sue out any writ of error, certiorari, or other writs, for the purpose of carrying the same to a higher Court, or for the purpose of staying or preventing the issue of execution therefor. The authority hereinbefore conferred to confess judgment upon said award, is intended to be irrevocable, provided an award be made as aforesaid by or before the first day of April next.

“The said Thomas J. White, Charles Horner and William McDaniel, or any two of them, shall have power, etc. (Here follows a clause for the payment of the costs attending the arbitration and costs of suits now pending, etc.)

“This submission is intended to embrace all actions or suits upon which judgment may have been heretofore entered, as well as actions and suits now pending, and causes of actions and other matters of difference. All actions or suits now pending on appeal taken, shall be dismissed upon the making of said award or at any regular term of the Court or Courts in which the same may be pending, after the making of the same, upon the motion of either party hereto, and shall not, in the meantime, be prosecuted; nor shall any writ be sued out, or other proceeding instituted, in the meantime, for the purpose of carrying said judgment to an Appellate Court, or for the purpose of reversing or modifying the same, nor any other purpose; nor shall execution in the meantime be sued out on the same.

"Witness our hands and seals, this fourteenth day of February, A. D. 1851.

"SAMUEL NORRIS, [L. S.]

"WILLIAM MULDROW. [L. S.]"

Before the first of April, the arbitrators made an award upon all topics of controversy between the parties, in which they directed Norris to pay to Muldrow the sum of $23,500, and by virtue of the authority contained in the submission, confessed a judgment for that amount in favor of Muldrow and against Norris in the District Court for Sacramento county. Norris subsequently moved the District Court to set aside this judgment. The motion was overruled, and Norris appealed therefrom to the Supreme Court. (See 2 Cal. Rep., p. 74.) The Supreme Court reversed the ruling of the District Court, and vacated the judgment, upon grounds which appear in the opinion of the Court in this case. Thereupon Muldrow brought this action.

Upon the trial in the Court below the plaintiff introduced the submission, the award, the bond, and a release from plaintiff to defendant, releasing all actions, demands, etc. The defendant gave in evidence the judgment of the Supreme Court setting aside the judgment confessed on the award.

The case was tried in the Court below, without a jury, and judgment rendered in favor of the plaintiff for $10,000. Norris moved the Court for a new trial, which motion was overruled, and he appealed to this Court.

Robinson, Beatty & Botts for Appellant.

The appellant insists that there was no award made by the arbitrators binding on him in law.

That an award of arbitrators decides the right of parties as effectually as a judgment at law, or a decree in chancery, and is as binding, is not denied. But their conclusiveness must be understood with the qualification that the award was a valid and binding one; or, in other words, the arbitrators must have jurisdiction. Tewis ex rel. v. Tewis ex rel., 4th Monroe, 47, 48.

Muldrow v. Norris.

---

The arbitrators acquire their jurisdiction, or power of deciding, from the agreement to submit; and the authority conferred and the duty imposed by the submission must be observed. It is that which gives jurisdiction. Jackson v. Hunt, 6th Johns. 14; Harrington v. Rich, 6th Vermont Rep. 666, 672; 2d Cowen & Hill's Notes, 223.

What were the various matters of controversy, litigation, etc., submitted to the arbitrators, we have no means of knowing. But this we do know from the award itself, as reported by the arbitrators, upon the presumption heretofore stated, that three subjects of controversy were submitted to them, namely:

The claim for damages growing out of a breach of a lease.

The claim for damages for the refusal of Norris to furnish thirty head of cows with calves.

The claim set up by Muldrow for Norris's interference with the ferry.

On each and all of these the award finds against Norris, and orders him to pay to Muldrow the sum of $23,500, to wit: $4,000 for the cows, $6,000 for the ferry, and $13,500 for the land; and for this sum judgment was confessed by the arbitrators. But this judgment was set aside by this Court because the award was contrary to law, or the finding not sustained by the facts. The arbitrators, therefore, had no authority under the submission and the law to confess such judgment. But by the terms of the submission, whatever award was made, a judgment could be confessed for. If the judgment confessed was held to be invalid, the award must also be invalid; particularly as the judgment was set aside for defects in the award.

If it is answered to this, however, that inasmuch as the decision of this Court vacated the judgment confessed because of error in the arbitrators, on one portion only of the award, and on one of the subjects submitted to them, and that the award shall stand good for all the rest, we reply:

"It is conceded that an award may be good in part and bad in part. But this doctrine applies only where the submission is of particular subjects, and the award covers those and other subjects, and there is no connection between the two classes of subjects, and they are in nowise dependent on each other, it will be enforced as to these within the submission, and held void as to the others." It is purely a question of authority or power, "if that which is void affects not the merits of the submission the residue shall be held valid." 1 Wend. 326; 13 Johns. 264; 2d Cow. 638.

---

*Muldrow. v. Norris.

---

The arbitrators had no authority to decide any controversy unless they decided all the controversies. If any one was omitted that was presented to their attention, their power failed; or if they acted on any one in any manner whatever, so that their action was useless, or invalid, or wrong, their whole award must fail; because the submission embraced all matters of dispute, and the omission to render a valid award as to any one of them, or their improperly deciding any of them, so as to leave it open for future contest and litigation, "affected the merits of the submission." To omit a duty is as much an error as to usurp a power. Nay, more so, for the omission of the duty renders the whole award void, while the decision of a subject not submitted avoids it only pro tanto. Randall v. Randall, 7 East, 81, 83; Wright v. Wright, 5 Cowen, 197; Karthans. v. Ferrer, 1 Peters, 222; Melchel v. Stavely, 13 East, 58; George v. Lansely, 8 East, 13; Emery v. Hitchcocke, 12 Wend. 156.

I. In opposition to the views expressed by the counsel for the appellant, we maintain, that in the legal sense, and within the meaning of the submission, all matters in difference between the parties were passed upon and decided by the arbitrators. That one item or demand was allowed, to which the respondent was not entitled, either legally or equitably, cannot affect the legal conclusion. The damages allowed for this item, according to the decision cited, were not allowable either at law or in equity. They were not, within the meaning of the submission, a subject of controversy or difference either in a Court of law or equity. Such was the opinion of the Court below in the present case.

In Randall v. Randall, 17 East, 79, cited by the counsel, there was in the submission a clause ita quod, all matters in difference should be decided by a certain day. That case differs from the present; for here there is no condition except as to the time within which the award should be made. All matters of difference were submitted; but still the award might be good in part, although bad in another part, provided that the award should be made within the time limited. The submission was not ita quod all matters in difference should be decided, but ita quod a decision should be made before the time limited.

In Mitchell v. Slavel, 16 East, 58, as cited by the learned counsel, Lord Ellenborough said, "That the arbitrators were called upon to act in a matter in controversy, and have not acted. The award is, therefore, not final; but there is no award at all respecting a matter of difference which is stated to have been notified to the arbitrators. It was a condition of the submission that they were to arbitrate upon all matters in difference, etc."

Now, is not that case broadly distinguishable from the present? Here no matter of difference was notified to the arbitrators, upon which they refused or failed to act. They passed upon all differences brought to their notice; and the gravamen of the objection on the part of the appellant is, that according to the opinion of this Court already cited, they went further and allowed damages upon a demand neither legal nor equitable, and for which there could rightfully be no recovery either legal or equitable. As far as the arbitrators could act, they did so. Their award is good to the extent of the legitimate demands of the parties, and beyond this it is only void.

Although an award ought to decide on all the questions contained in the submission, still, to avoid it for want of such decision, it should appear that such questions were "actually in controversy between the parties." And "where part of an award is void by reason of the arbitrator having exceeded his power, it does not vitiate the residue." Jackson v. Van Allen et al., 14 John. R. 96.

In opposition to the counsel, we insist that there is here no remaining subject of controversy. All is ended upon the payment of the judgment under review; that which is supposed to remain as a subject of difference is only hypothetical, imaginary! According to the highest judicial authority of the State, it never was, and never can be, the subject of a legal or equitable recovery. It, then, was a myth, intangible and unavailable, and so now and forever remains! It is, therefore, no subject or matter of difference within the legal intent and meaning of the submission!

Muldrow v. Norria.

---

II. Having noticed the principal points made by the counsel, we proceed to fortify the case of the respondent by other responsive considerations and authorities:

1. The appellant has uninterruptedly retained and enjoyed all the benefits of the submission and award on his part. These are the facts, and it is so to be held, for there is not a pretense to the contrary to be found in the pleadings or evidence. If such had not been the facts, the appellant should have shown to the contrary. The law is, that "If one of the parties to an unauthorized award perform it on his part, and the other party accepts such performance, the latter thereby ratifies the award." "Acts of arbitrators may be ratified." Culver v. Ashley, 19 Pick. R. 300. Here the whole award of money was against the appellant, he having every other subject of difference in his own possession. Shall he now, after the lapse of years, and after the intervention of the Statute of Limitations, be allowed to hold all the property which was the subject of the differences, and yet avoid the whole award? Can he be allowed to hold all the advantages of the submission and award on his part, and yet avoid their force and effect so far as it is against himself?

2. The true question is, whether the powers of the arbitrators were wholly conditional, or whether, all matters being submitted, it was made a condition that all matters of difference should be ended by them?

"The question, therefore, is reduced to this: Whether, under the reference, (arbitration) it is necessary to the validity of any award to be made pursuant to it, that it should decide all matters in dispute? And this is a mere question of construction, for there is no rule of law requiring it; its necessity arises from the contract of the parties. The old rule was, that unless the submission expressly made it conditional with an ita quod, an award of a part only was good, etc." Wrightson v. Beywater, 3 Exch. R. 199. And if the matters omitted are "not necessarily dependent upon and connected with the other points, the award should be sustained." Ib.

Muldrow v. Norris.

---

3. In Birks v. Trippet, 1 Sanders' Rep. 32, which has always been regarded as a leading case, it was held, that even admitting "that a submission has been conditional with an ita quod, yet this is a good award, for he hath awarded general releases from both parties; and although the defendant had notified his debt to the arbitrator; yet the arbitrator was not bound to allow it," etc. "And here he has given his judgment that the plaintiff should be released by the defendant; and so he has made his award thereof, and of all differences whatsoever."

Afterwards, Dord Tenterden said he was glad that the case of Birks v. Trippet enabled him "to give judgment in favor of the plaintiff;" and the whole Court held, that the arbitrators, "by having awarded mutual and general releases, must be deemed to have adjudged and finally decided upon the matters in those pleas respectively mentioned, and the general release would be an answer to any actions or claims founded upon them," etc. Wharton v. King, 22 Eng. Com. L. R. 223.

So, again, "where all matters in difference are referred to an arbitrator, an award directing the execution of general releases closes all accounts between the parties up to the time of the submission." Trimingham v. Trimingham, 30 Eng. Com. L. R. 604.

The reason of the rule requiring a decision of all matters in difference is, that if either party cannot have the advantages of the award by reason of its nullity, then the other should not have the advantages on his part; and the award must be held void in the whole. 2 Sanders' R. 293, notes.

FIELD, J., delivered the opinion of the Court—BALDWIN, J., concurring.

The submission of the parties embraces all matters of controversy existing between them, previous to December, 1850. What those matters were the submission does not state; it only recites that they were various, and that the agreement was entered into "for the purpose of having the same speedily and properly adjusted." From its language it must be inferred that the parties stipulated to withdraw their several matters of difference from the consideration of the ordinary tribunals, upon the condition that they should be all adjusted and settled by Judges of their own selection, and full peace be thus obtained, and not mere partial freedom from litigation.

Muldrow v. Norris.

---

The rule is general, that arbitrators must pass upon all matters submitted, or their award will be invalid. If several matters are specified in the submission, and the award does not disclose that each is determined, it is defective on its face, and can be set aside on motion. But if the submission is general, of all matters in controversy, without specification it is not necessary that the award should embrace any matters except those which are laid before the arbitrators. These last, however, must be passed upon, or the award will be void in toto, and be set aside upon a proper showing of the omission. The authorities to this effect are numerous and decisive. Thus, in Randall v. Randall, 7 East, 81, the submission embraced three subjects: one to determine all actions between the parties; another to fix the value to be put upon hop holes and potatoes in certain land; and the third, to ascertain the rent to be paid for other land. The arbitrators made their award upon the first two subjects, but omitted to notice the last, and the Court held that the whole award was vitiated by the omission. "The authority," said Ellenborough, C. J., "given to the arbitrators, was conditioned, ita quod they should arbitrate upon these matters by a certain day. If, then, they fail as to one of them, the condition has not been performed upon which the award was to have its obligatory effect; and here they have stopped short, and have omitted to settle one of the subjects of difference which was stipulated for. This is not like the case where an award, being good in part and bad in part, the good part shall not be vitiated by the arbitrator having also directed something to be done which is superfluous and bad. But here the very condition on which the parties submitted to the award has failed." And in the same case, Le Blanc, J., said: "The contract of the parties is in effect this — One says that he will submit to the arbitrators to ascertain what he is to pay for the hop poles, etc., upon condition that it shall also be referred to them to decide what rent is to be paid for certain land. And he may fairly have said that unless both those matters of difference were referred he would not refer either of them singly. If, then, the arbitrators omit to decide one of them, the condition fails on which the reference was agreed to."

Muldrow v. Norris.

---

In Mitchell v. Stavelly, 16 East, 58, to the action on an arbitration bond the defendant pleaded, among other things, that a certain matter of difference between the parties was laid before the arbitrators, but was not included in their award, and the Court held the plea good. The submission was of all matters in difference, and Ellenborough, C. J., said: "The award, therefore, is not only not final, but there is no award at all respecting one of the matters in difference referred, which is stated to have been notified to the arbitrators. It was a condition of the submission that they were to award upon all matters in difference between the parties. That is an important difficulty, against which the plaintiff has to contend, and it would be to no purpose to amend the pleadings."

To the same effect is the case of Wright v. Wright, 5 Cowen, 197. That was an action upon an arbitration bond conditioned to abide the award of certain arbitrators, upon the usual general submission, with the ita quod clause. The defendants pleaded that the arbitrators left undetermined a controversy between the parties which was brought to their notice; and, on demurrer to the replication to the plea, the Court, per Sutherland, J., said: "It is a general rule, that where the bond of submission contains an ita quod clause, the award will be void unless it comprehend all the matters submitted. This rule is invariable where the particular matters submitted are specified in the bond. But where the submission is general, and an award concerning one or more things is made, it will be presumed, until the contrary is shown, that nothing else was referred to the arbitrators, or brought before them by the parties. But if the arbitrators award in relation to one or more things, and say that they will not meddle with the rest, the whole is void, because they have not pursued their authority; and in such a case it is immaterial whether the submission was general or special, for, if general, it appears on the face of the award that the arbitrators had notice of the matters which they refuse to decide."

The submission or bond in the several cases cited contained an ita quod clause; and this fact is considered as distinguishing those cases from the one at bar. The ita quod clause, so called, is only a condition that the award should be rendered upon the matters submitted by a specified day. The designation of the day is one part of the condition essential to be complied with, but not more so than the other part, that the award should be upon the matters submitted.

Muldrow v. Norris.

---

In the cases of Mitchell v. Stavely, 16 East, 58, and Wright v. Wright, 5 Cowen, the award was rendered within the time designated, and the decisions were made upon the omission of the arbitrators to pass upon all the items specified in the submission, or laid before them under its general terms. The same was evidently the case with the award in Randall v. Randall, 7 East, as the objection taken was not to the time the award was rendered, but that one of the three subjects submitted was left undetermined. See also, Brown v. Merrill, 4 Eliz., Dryer, 216; Risden v. Inglet, 2 Cro. Eliz. 838; Ormelade v. Coke, 3 Cro. Jac. 354; Bradford v. Bryan, 7 Mod. 349.

The point, then, of the decisions, so far as that part of the ita quod clause is concerned which affects the present case, is this: that if the submission provide that an award upon the matters submitted be made, or the condition of the bond be that the parties are bound, provided the award of such matters be made, then such proviso extends to all the matters submitted, and operates to render the submission conditional, and the award binding only in case the arbitrators pass upon every subject, either specifically referred to them, or brought to their notice under the general terms of the submission.

The language of the submission of the parties in the case at bar, is much stronger that the award must embrace all the matters in controversy, than the usual formal ita quod clause, "so that the award be made of the premises," etc. It recites that there are "various matters of difference;" that for the purpose of "having the same speedily and properly adjusted," the parties have agreed to submit "all matters of difference, suits, actions," etc.; to the arbitrators "to determine the same;" that the award "upon the matters heretofore submitted," shall be final and conclusive, and that they will "abide the same," and that they authorize a confession of judgment "upon said award; and, as if to avoid any misconstruction, the parties further declare that "the submission is intended to embrace all actions or suits upon which judgments may have heretofore been entered, as well as suits or actions now pending, and causes of action and other matters of difference," etc. Nothing can be clearer than that the parties contemplated an award upon all the matters submitted; and not an award upon a portion only of such matters.

Muldrow v. Norris.

---

We have noticed the objections of counsel to the absence of the ita quod clause, because the old authorities give force to its presence. We do not think its absence or presence of any moment, or that its presence would, in any respect, vary the construction of the submission. The distinctions drawn by the old cases upon this point, are more subtle than just. See Bisden v. Inglet, 2 Cro. Eliz. 838, and, as far back as 1741, Chief Justice Willis observed, in Bradford v. Bryan, 1 Willis, 270, that if it were not for the cases he should be of opinion that, when all matters are submitted, though without the condition of the ita quod clause, all matters must be determined; assigning as the reason that it was plainly not the intent of the parties that some matters only should be determined, and that they should be left at liberty to go to law for the rest. At the present day the distinctions are not regarded, and the construction given to a general submission is not controlled by the ita quod clause. "These nice distinctions," says Sergeant Williams, in a note to case 6 of Saunders, "are now disregarded; Courts of justice being at present more liberal in the construction of awards than formerly. And therefore, an award may be good, though made of less than is contained in the submission; as if the submission be of all actions, trespasses, demands and controversies, and the award be made of some only, the award is good; for no more shall be presumed to have been made known to the arbitrator. But if, in fact, other causes of action in being were made known to the arbitrator, then such award would be bad, as well where the submission is conditional with an ita quod, as where it is absolute." 1 Burr, 277; Hawkins v. Colclough, 1 Bac. Abr. 141.

"Usually, in submission," says Watson on Arb. 17, "to arbitration, there is introduced a condition — 'so as the award be made of and upon the premises' — which, from the first words, is called the 'ita quod.' Where the submission is made with an 'ita quod,' it has always been holden that, if the arbitrator do not make his award of all the matters submitted to him, and whereof he had notice, the award is entirely void. But, where the submission is without an 'ita quod,' an award of one of several matters submitted to the arbitrator was formerly considered good. This distinction between general and conditional submissions runs through all the old authorities. This distinction does not now prevail to that extent; indeed, it has been considered by high authority, that it would not now be holden that, where all matters in difference are submitted, though without an 'ita quod,' the arbitrator must make his award of all matters submitted to him, and whereof he has notice, otherwise the award would be entirely void. The effect of this condition has, in a modern case, been much considered by the Court of Exchequer. That Court there laid it down that it always depends on the true construction of the submission whether it is necessary to the validity of an award that it should embrace all matters referred. Where the submission is with an 'ita quod,' it is requisite that all matters should be disposed of by the award; but, if the submission is without such a condition, then the whole submission is to be looked to in order to ascertain whether it was the intention of the parties that all matters should be embraced by one award."

Muldrow v. Norris.

Regarding, then, the submission of the parties as conditional, and their agreement as one to abide an award upon all the matters submitted, and not an award upon a part, only, of such matters, we proceed to consider the consequence to the case at bar. The award rendered shows that three matters were laid before the arbitrators, and passed upon by them. Other matters in dispute may also have been considered, but whether so or not is immaterial. Three were passed upon — one a claim for damages growing out of a breach of a lease; another a claim for damages for the refusal of the defendant to furnish thirty head of cows and calves; and the third, the claim for damages for interference with a certain ferry on the American river. Upon the first claim the arbitrators allowed $13,500; upon the second $6,000; and upon the third $4,000; making in all $23,500. For this sum judgment was confessed by the arbitrators under a provision in the submission in favor of Muldrow, and against Norris, in the District Court. This judgment the defendant moved to set aside; the District Court denied the motion, but this Court, on appeal, held the ruling of the District Court erroneous, and reversed the judgment. Upon its reversal, the present action was brought upon the award. The reversal was ordered for the error committed by the arbitrators, and apparent upon the face of the award in estimating the amount of damages for the breach of the lease. The calculation was based upon the fact that the product of twenty acres of land was worth $9,000, from which the arbitrators inferred the product of two hundred acres would have been worth $90,000. The damages thus estimated, said the Court, were too remote and speculative, and involved too many contingencies; that the rule adopted was clearly illegal, and an award rendered upon such a basis was unconscionable. It is to be observed that the Court did not decide that Muldrow was not entitled to any damages for the violation of the lease, but only that the rule adopted by the arbitrators for the estimation was illegal. The award then stood precisely as though one and the main item submitted had never been passed upon.

Muldrow v. Norris.

---

The award had not effected the purposes of the submission — settled all matters of controversy between the parties. Muldrow's claim for damages was still left undetermined, and the only consideration which could have moved Norris to enter into the submission and to stipulate to abide the award had failed. Muldrow could still have sued for the damages for the violation of the terms of the lease. His release does not affect the question. That was executed upon the direction of the arbitrators, and was based upon the supposition that the award was to stand, the judgment confessed thereon to be enforced, and a release from Norris to be given. It could not avail in any respect as a defense to an action for the breach of the lease. The case, then, stands precisely as though the arbitrators had never considered the item, and in this view there is no question that the whole award is vitiated. See cases cited above, and particularly Bradford v. Bryan, 1 Willis, 268.

An useless and invalid determination upon one item properly presented within the general terms of the submission, must, on principle, be as fatal to the entire action of the arbitrators as an omission intentional, or unintentional, to notice the item at all. This is not a case within the doctrine that an award may be good in part and bad in part. That doctrine only applies to instances where there has been an excess of power in the arbitrators by their attempting to determine matters not submitted, or where there is uncertainty or illegality in an independent and distinct matter forming no consideration for other parts of the award, and the settlement of which could not have contributed to induce the arbitration. It is not, and never has been law, that in any other instance upon the submission of several matters, or in a general submission upon the proper presentation to the arbitrators of several matters, an award upon a part was good. "In all cases," says Watson on Arb. 243, "when an award, void in part, may be supported for the residue, it must always be understood that it does not appear that the arbitrator has omitted to make his award of some matters submitted to him; for in that case, if the void part were one of the matters in controversy, and that was bad for uncertainty or otherwise, the award would be void in toto, as the arbitrator had not made his award upon all matters referred to him. The principle upon which it is so held, is, that the consideration for which the party submitted was, that the arbitrator should make an award of all matters in difference, and which consideration has failed."

People v. Ah Fong.

---

It follows, from the views we have taken, that the award, as left after the decision of this Court reported in 7 Cal. 74, was insufficient to support the present action, and the bond of the defendant to abide such award falls with it.

PEOPLE v. AH FONG.

In the trial of a criminal case, the Court has no right to charge or instruct the jury orally, without the consent of the prisoner. The fact that the Judge told the prisoner's counsel, after the charge was given, that he would put his charge in writing, if desired, does not help the case; nor will it do to say that the instruction, as given, could do no harm; for the very point of inquiry is, as to what the Court did charge. The charge must be put in such shape as the prisoner can get the benefit of it. He is entitled to stand on his strict legal rights, and has a right to avail himself of any errors to defeat the conviction; nor is it necessary that he should except to the charge at the time it is given. On motion for a new trial the prisoner may bring up any ruling of the Court which denies him the benefit of a statutory privilege like this.

APPEAL from the Thirteenth District, County of Mariposa.

People v. Ah Fong.

---

This was an indictment and conviction for the crime of murder. The grounds of the appeal sufficiently appear in the opinion of the Court.

Samuel A. Merritt for Appellant.

The only error assigned is, that the Court charged the jury orally without the consent of parties. The District Judge having committed an error, tries to get out of it by attempting to state the charge as "nearly as could be remembered."

I submit, is it not almost an impossibility for a Judge to recollect, after a lapse of eleven days, all, or even substantially, his oral charge to a jury? and that, too, in the midst of a crowded term of Court, where many other criminal cases are being tried daily, and where one case might easily be confounded with another, in the mind of the Judge! The object of the statute, in requiring the charge to be in writing, is too evident to need argument; and the proposition is so simple, that it seems almost impossible that a District Judge should be so careless as to neglect its provisions.

Again, the District Judge tries to get out of his position, by saying "that he distinctly stated to the counsel, that the said charge would be given in writing, if required, and there was no expression of dissent, nor was there any exception taken by either party." Counsel for People contend that this was a waiver on part of prisoner. Now it will be observed that the District Judge does not say when he made this statement, whether before or after he had given oral instructions. Certainly if he made this statement after he had committed the error, that statement could not cure it. Silence may give consent in some cases; but certainly, in a criminal case, the waiver should be shown affirmatively by the record. People v. Beeler, 6 Cal. 246; People v. Demint, 8 Cal. 423; People v. O'Hara et als., decided at this term of this Court.

Attorney-General for Respondent.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — FIELD, J., concurring.

The defendant was convicted of murder. His counsel insist that there is error in the record of conviction, in this: That the Court charged the jury orally, without consent of the prisoner or his counsel. The charge is given in the statement of the Judge below, as he states, as nearly as can be remembered, and the Judge adds that he stated to the counsel that the charge would be given in writing, if required, and there was no expression of dissent, nor was there any exception taken by either party. The statute, for wise purposes, requires the charge of the Judge, in criminal cases, to be in writing. Every lawyer knows how difficult it is to obtain an exact account, in writing, of words spoken during a trial—especially a criminal trial. In such trials, the exact language used is often forgotten, or differently understood by different persons; and, in the press of business, with his attention diverted to various matters, it is next to impossible for a Judge to remember, days after the trial, precisely what occurred during its progress. And yet, in such cases, the life of the prisoner may depend upon a single word or syllable, omitted or added. It will not do to say that the instruction, as given, could do no harm, whether given in writing or orally; for the very point of inquiry is, what did the Judge charge? The error is in not putting the instruction in such a shape as that the prisoner could certainly get the benefit of it, as the statute intended. If we assume that, whenever it is shown that the instruction was right, the prisoner cannot complain, it would result that the statute would be wholly inoperative and useless; for if the instruction as given, be wrong, the prisoner could avail himself of the error, whether the charge be in writing or not. The principle of this case was decided in People v. O'Hara, at this term. We say in this case: "The right to have the instructions in writing, so as to preserve them in an authentic form, and to secure an entire accuracy of statement, is given by the statute, and there is no presumption indulged in criminal cases that any right is waived. The record must show the waiver. We think the policy is good; and there can, or ought to be, no difficulty in the Court or District Attorney's seeing that the proper entry is made on the record, whenever this right is waived."

People v. Ah Fong.

---

The fact that the Judge told the counsel he would put the instruction in writing, if desired, does not help the error. This was after the charge was given. The mischief intended to be prevented by the act might have been partly done. The charge could not be orally given without the consent of the prisoner. He had given no such consent. He and his counsel were entitled to stand on their strict legal rights. They were not bound to assist in curing any errors of which they might avail themselves to defeat a conviction.

---

Bowen v. May.

We presume, after the charge was given, they did not desire it to be in writing. The mere declination to insist on a right, in a criminal case, is not a waiver of that right. But it was not even that; all that this failure, not to insist, amounted to, was a failure to request the Court to correct the error it had already committed. Nor is it so clear that the error could be corrected in that way; the object of the statute being to prevent mistake on the part of the jury, as to the law, as well as to preserve authentic evidence of the very language used to the jury in the charge. The prisoner was not bound to except at the time. The rule would be different in civil cases; but in criminal cases, the prisoner, on motion for a new trial, may bring up any ruling of the Court which denies him the benefit of a statutory privilege like this. This was decided in effect in O'Hara's case, before referred to.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for a new trial.

BOWEN v. MAY et al.

The provisions of the thirty-second section of the Practice Act, which, in actions against two or more defendants, all of whom are not served, authorizes judgment to be entered to bind the joint property of all the defendants, does not apply to actions for the foreclosure of mortgages on real estate.

The fact that two or more persons join in the execution of a mortgage of lands, does not raise a presumption that the estate mortgaged is joint property.

In order to constitute a joint estate in lands in two or more persons, such estate must be expressly declared as such in the conveyance, otherwise the estate conveyed will be held by the grantees as tenants in common.

APPEAL from the Fourteenth District, County of Sierra.

This was a bill for the foreclosure of a mortgage.

The action was brought upon notes and a mortgage executed by

Bowen v. May.

both of the defendants. The mortgage is in the usual form of a joint mortgage; and, to secure the payment of three several promissory notes given for the purchase money of a mining claim, grants, bargains and sells to the plaintiff the said premises.

Personal service was had upon defendant Elliott, and upon failure to answer judgment was rendered by the Court on the application of plaintiff, ordering a sale of the mortgaged property for the payment of the debt and execution against the joint property of defendants, and the separate property of defendants served with process.

A motion was made in the Court below to set aside the judgment on the ground that no service of process was had on either defendant.

The Court overruled the motion, and this appeal is taken by defendants from the order overruling said motion, and from the final judgment.

The return on the summons is in the following language:

"STATE OF CALIFORNIA, } District Court Fourteenth Judicial Dis-
"County of Sierra, } trict in and for Sierra County.

"BRACKETT BOWEN,
v.
"J. J. MAY AND ED. E. ELLIOTT. }

"THOMAS ALDRICH, being duly sworn, says: that he is a white male citizen of the United States, and over twenty-one years old; that upon the twenty-third of June, A. D. 1858, at Alleghanytown, in the County of Sierra, he served a certified copy of the summons hereto attached, and a certified copy of the complaint attached to said summons, issued in the above entitled cause, upon the defendant Ed. E. Elliott, by delivering the same to him personally at said place.

"THOMAS ALDRICH.

"Sworn to, subscribed before me this } 23d day of June, A. D. 1858, }

"B. D. S. MARVIN, Notary Public."

M. Kirkpatrick for Appellants.

I. The Court erred in adjudging that defendant May was indebted to respondent.

Bowen v. May.

---

II. The Court erred in decreeing a sale of the mortgaged premises.

III. The Court erred in decreeing a sale of May's interest in the mortgaged premises.

IV. The Court erred in overruling defendants' motion to set aside the decree.

1. Upon the first, second and third points, I submit that the decree is erroneous, in this — that the Court has no jurisdiction of the person of defendant May, yet the Court adjudges that said May is indebted to the respondent, and decrees a sale of his interest in the mortgaged premises. It is said that this decree is authorized, sec. 32, Prac. Act.

This section should receive a strict construction. I contend that it is inapplicable to equity cases — foreclosure cases. "Judgment" may be entered against parties "jointly indebted on a contract, so far only as that it may be enforced against the joint property of all, and the separate property of the defendant served." This language is not comprehensive enough to include a case like this.

Again: It nowhere appears that the mortgaged premises is the "joint" property of the defendants. It is only the joint property of a defendant not served that can be thus subjected.

2. I contend that sec. 32, Practice Act, so far as it permits judgment to be entered against a defendant not served, is unconstitutional. Sec. 8, art. 1st Const. Cal. provides, that no person "shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law." Here the defendant is deprived of his property without any process of law whatever. The Court, without jurisdiction of his person, decrees the sale of his property. If the Legislature can go thus far, may it not in any case permit property to be taken without process of law?

W. W. Upton and Vanclef & Stewart for Respondent.

This return shows that Thomas Aldrich was competent to serve the process, (Practice Act, sec. 28) and that he did the acts required to be done in the service of the summons and complaint, to wit: delivered the same personally to defendant. Practice Act, sec. 29.

Independent of the return on the summons, the Court finds, as a fact, that process was served, etc.; and the finding of the Court is conclusive as to that fact, until some showing is made to the contrary. Alberson v. Bell and Wife, 9 Cal. 315.

Bowen v. May.

---

It may be objected that service of process was not had upon both of the defendants.

The complaint and mortgage which is made a part of the complaint, show that the two notes sued on were joint as well as several; that the mortgage was the joint contract of both defendants, given for the purchase money, and that the mortgaged property was the joint property of both defendants. No personal judgment was taken to be enforced against the property of the party not served. The record shows that the judgment is authorized by sec. 32 of Practice Act.

The only advantage of this provision is to enable the plaintiff to enforce his judgment against the joint property. Such provisions are common in other States, and are enforced by the Courts. Carnan v. Townsend, 6 Wendell, 206; Melvin v. Kimball, 23 Wendell, 293.

There is no distinction made by our statute between judgments at law or in equity; both are called judgments, and the thirty-second section of Practice Act applies to all cases of judgments upon joint contracts without exception.

TERRY, C. J., delivered the opinion of the Court — FIELD, J., and BALDWIN, J., concurring.

The provisions of the thirty-second section of the Practice Act, which, in an action against two or more defendants, all of whom are not served with process, authorizes judgment to be entered to bind the joint property of all, does not apply to proceedings for the foreclosure of a mortgage on real estate.

The fact that two persons join in a mortgage of lands does not raise a presumption the estate conveyed is joint property. Joint tenancies are not favored by our system — the statute having abrogated the common law rule of conveyances in this respect — so that in order to constitute a joint estate in lands in two or more persons, such estate must be expressly declared in the conveyance itself, otherwise the estate conveyed will be held by the grantees as tenants in common. Wood's Dig., art. 380.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded.

 Whitley v. J. H. McKune.

---

 WHITLEY, CONTESTANT, v. J. H. McKUNE, DISTRICT JUDGE ELECT.

The failure of the officers conducting an election in a given district to be sworn as the Election Laws provide, will not invalidate the entire election, without reference to its influence on the general result.

The rule is well settled, that the mere receiving and counting votes, improperly given, will not invalidate an election.

An act, however erroneous, which does no injury to a party, cannot be the subject of a legal complaint on his part.

The fact that the ballot-box was temporarily out of the possession of the officers of the election, will not invalidate the election, especially where no fraud, collusion or suspicious circumstances are shown.

The provisions of our statute clearly indicate that the Legislature did not mean that the returns of a candidate should be set aside, where an election was held at the proper time and place, and for the proper officers, unless it affirmatively appeared that there was such irregularity as affected the result of the election.

Where such irregularities have occurred, it rests with the contestant to show them. The returns are prima facie evidence of the fact they import; and the returned candidate, after being commissioned, is prima facie entitled to the office.

APPEAL from the County Court of Sacramento County.

The facts of this case appear in the opinion of the Court.

J. H. Gass and H. O. Beatty for Appellant.

The objections to appellant's statement may be resolved into two: 1st. That the statement is not sufficiently specific; and, 2d. That the provisions of the statute said to have been violated are merely "directory," and that they may be disregarded with impunity.

On the first point, the respondent refers to Skerrett's case, reported in 2 Parsons' Select Equity. In this case it was held, that a general allegation that A was not duly elected, but that B was, was not sufficiently specific; but there were other charges of a character very similar to those contained in the appellant's statement, that were admitted to be sufficiently specific, and were considered and passed on as such by the Court. Our statute, sec. 58 of the Election Law, provides that no statement of the causes of contest shall be rejected, nor the proceedings dismissed, for want of form, if the particular causes of contest shall be alleged with such certainty as will sufficiently advise the defendant of the particular proceedings or causes for which such election is contested.

---

Whitley v. J. H. McKune.

---

What could be more precise and exact than the allegations of this statement? Time, place and circumstances are all given. For instance, it is charged that the Judges in certain election districts, specifying the districts, were not sworn; that in a certain district, describing it, so many votes, specifying the number, were counted for the respondent without having been ascertained to have been given for him in the manner required by law, specifying the manner in which they were dealt with; that in another district, specifying it, the ballot-box was surrendered to the keeping of strangers, etc., etc. Can it possibly be urged, in the face of such allegations as these, that the respondent was not advised of the nature and character of the irregularities complained of? No declaration at common law, no complaint under our Practice Act, would be required to be more specific; nay, a criminal indictment would admit of less particularity.

Upon the second point: Are the irregularities complained of in the statement, and admitted by the motion to dismiss, to be committed with impunity? Are all the provisions prescribing the mode of conducting to be disregarded, and, at most, to be considered as merely "directory?" This is the great point to which the respondent bends his energies. He cites Cook's case, 14 Barb., and 4 Selden; the Pennsylvania cases of Boileau, Skerrett, Carpenter and Kneass, reported in 2d Parsons' Select Equity Cases.

It is true, that the Courts of both New York and Pennsylvania held that some of the provisions of the statutes of those States, concerning the mode of conducting elections, were merely directory, and might be disregarded with impunity; but, upon these cases, we have to remark — First. That none of them go so far as the Court is asked to go in this case; Secondly. That they are unsatisfactory, in this — that whilst they declare that some of the statutory provisions are merely directory, they admit that some are mandatory, without furnishing any guide or test by which we may distinguish the one from the other; Thirdly. That upon the particular point — and it is the only one in these cases involved in the case at bar — of the necessity of compliance with the provision requiring the Judges and Clerks to be sworn, they are directly opposed to the uniform and unbroken current of decision in the House of Representatives. See McFarland v. Purviance, p. 131; Same v. Culpepper, 221; Easton v. Scott, 272, and Draper v. Johnson, 703, Book of Contested Elections.

---

Whitley v. J. H. McKune.

---

It is also to be remarked, that the cases in Barbour, Selden and Parsons, being all upon quo warranto, seem to be based mainly upon the indisposition upon the part of the Court to reject votes given under such circumstances, when the effect would be to confer an office upon the candidate who apparently received a minority vote. The whole tone of the opinions show that the decisions might have been far otherwise had the effect of rejecting the irregular vote been, as it would be here, to lead to a new election.

But nowhere has this absurd doctrine, by which the positive provisions of law have been nullified by Courts under the pretense that they were "directory"—a phrase without meaning, and invented for the occasion—been more ably and signally rebuked than in the opinion of this Court in the case of the People v. Weller. There the doctrine is put upon the true ground, and the only one upon which it can be maintained. According to the theory of that opinion, the test of the efficacy of statutory requirements is this: Does the statute affix a penalty to the breach? Is the disobedience of the essence of the thing required? In other words—has the penalty been incurred substantially as well as formally?

It is certainly a little singular, that the Court, in the cases of Skerrett and Carpenter referred to, while treating the statute requiring the officers to be sworn as merely directory, and of no importance, at the same time says, that all presumptions are in favor of the solemn acts of sworn officers of the law, and that they will hesitate to interfere with or set aside the acts of public officers sworn to perform their duties, etc., etc. See 2 Parsons' Select Equity Cases, 520, 540.

Observe how particular is the statute in providing for a faithful record of the ballot before it is destroyed. It shall be, not examined by the Judges—that would be too indefinite—but read aloud, each name separately and distinctly, by one of the Judges, the public looking over his shoulder; two Clerks shall note each name, as read, by tallies.

---

Whitley v. J. H. McKune.

---

Why by tallies? Because, to keep count by tally, is to repeat aloud each score, and to proclaim every five, whereby a constant comparison is made by the two tellers, so that any discrepancy between them may be at once ascertained, and immediately corrected.

To say that these requirements are not of the essence of the mode of conducting an election, and that they may be disregarded with impunity, is to say, that the Legislature can throw no guard or checks around the ballot-box, and that bad and dishonest politicians may with impunity commit those outrages at elections which have been the bane and disgrace of California, and which our statute was enacted to prevent.

The 52d section of the Statute concerning Elections, (See Wood's Digest, p. 380) declares that "no irregularity or improper conduct on the part of the Judges, shall be construed to amount to such malconduct as to annul the election, unless the irregularities or improper conduct shall have been such as to procure the person, whose right to the office may be contested, to be declared duly elected, when he had not received the highest number of legal votes."

How is this provision to be construed? The respondent contends that it imposes upon the appellant the burden of showing that if the rejected vote had been properly kept and counted, the respondent would not have received the highest number of votes. We contend, the only effect of the clause is this: although the vote of the precinct or election district may be rejected for irregularity in taking it, if, throwing out the whole vote of the precinct, or rather, giving it all to his opponent, the respondent would still be elected, but by a decreased majority, then the irregularity shall not be permitted to vitiate the election; and this is perfectly clear from the examination of the next, or 53d section, which is intended to make the same provision for Justices of the Peace, Constables, and other county officers, that the 52d section makes for officers of districts. Moreover, the construction contended for by the respondent involves an absurdity. Here the complaint is, that the vote not having been ascertained in the manner provided by law, and the ballots having been destroyed, the result is unascertainable. To say we are obliged to show how the unascertained and unascertainable vote really stood, would be to require an impossibility. We show, that of the votes counted for the respondent, a number greater than the majority by which he was returned, was illegally counted for him. The ballots are gone. When we go behind the return of the Clerk, we are referred to the tally list, and the report thereon of the Judges. Thus is the record substituted for the ballots, upon which the certificate and commission are based, and upon which the respondent ultimately relies. When we have shown that he was returned only by a majority of two hundred and eight; that this return is based upon four or five hundred votes counted for him, which, as far as the law knows, may have been given for anybody else, we have shown malconduct in the Judges, and an impossibility of ascertaining the real result, which, in our humble opinion, vitiates this election.

---

Whipley v. J. H. McKune.

---

Suppose the case put by the Court in "The People v. Cook:" A gang of rowdies destroy the ballot-box in a particular precinct; the number of votes destroyed are greater than the majority of the returned candidate. Under a provision similar to ours, the New York Court does not hesitate to declare that such a state of things would vitiate the whole election; notwithstanding the contestant could not show that the officer returned would not have been elected if the votes destroyed had been properly counted.

Take the facts as they occurred at Mormon Island and at Folsom, where the ballot-box was exposed to public interference — is this not a substantial disregard of the requirement of the statute? Is it not malconduct on the part of the Judges? and does it not invalidate the votes of those precincts? When the ballot-box, in violation of the careful and stringent provisions of the statute, has been placed in a position where it can be tampered with, does not the law, in its jealousy, infer that it has been tampered with? If not, these provisions are nullities, and there is no mode left us of securing the purity of elections. See the case of the People v. Backus, 5 Cal. 275.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., and FIELD, J., concurring.

This proceeding is taken under the statute of this State, (Wood's Dig., pp. 375 to 382) art. 2155, secs. 51 and 52, and the object of it is to contest and to vacate the election of defendant, McKune, as Judge of the Sixth Judicial District. The complaint was, on motion, dismissed by the County Judge, before whom the proceedings were had; and this appeal is from that order. The effect of this motion is not greater than that of a general demurrer, and if that could not be sustained, neither could this motion be. This involves an inquiry into the legal sufficiency of the complaint. The complaint alleges that, at the general election in September last, McKune was returned as having received two thousand six hundred and thirty-four votes for this office, and that C. T. Botts, his only competitor, received two thousand four hundred and twenty-six votes; and that McKune, receiving his certificate, was commissioned for six years.

---

Whipley v. J. H. McKune.

---

The first specification is, that the returns are irregular, null, and void, in this: That, in the First District of the City of Sacramento, where three hundred and nine votes were returned for McKune, neither the Judge, Inspector, nor Clerk, conducting the election, were sworn, as the law required.

It will be seen that no charge of the fraud is made in this allegation, nor of collusion between McKune and these officers, nor of willful neglect of duty on the part of the officers, nor that the vote for McKune, so returned from these polls, was larger than the vote returned for Botts, nor that McKune received any benefit, or Botts any injury, by the counting in of the votes so returned. The naked question presented by this specification is whether the failure of the officers, conducting an election in a given district, to be sworn, of itself invalidates the entire election, without reference to its influence or the result. This proposition cannot for a moment be maintained. If it could, no State, or even County election, ever would stand; for, probably, no election has ever occurred in the State, at which some informality, of equal grade and importance to this, did not occur.

The rule is well settled that the mere receiving and counting of votes, improperly given, does not invalidate an election. This has been held in New York, in Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, and many other States; indeed, everywhere, we believe, where the question has been raised. The universal rule is, that an act, however erroneous, which does no injury to a party, cannot be the subject of legal complaint on his part. Our statute is conclusive on this point. Art. 2156, sec. 52, declares "that no irregularity or improper conduct in the proceedings of the Judges, or any one of them, shall be construed to amount to such misconduct as to annul or set aside any election, unless the irregularity or improper conduct shall have been such as to procure the person whose right to the office may be contested, to be declared duly elected, when he had not received the highest number of legal votes." This specification, therefore, is manifestly bad.

Whipley v. J. H. McKune.

---

The next is "of the votes as given for the said McKune, in the said district, two hundred thereof were not ascertained to have been written on, or printed on any ballot, as the law directs; but were guessed at, or inferred thereon. That the Judges, Inspectors or Clerks, failed to keep any legal tally paper in said district, and failed to return any tally paper to the Clerk of the County of Sacramento." It is not easy to see what the precise charge is, which the pleader meant to convey by this statement; nor do the counsel for the appellant agree in their explanations at the bar. Whatever it was it seems liable to the same objections already made; for it is not shown that there was a miscount of legal votes in favor of McKune. The only just complaint which could be made in this connection is, that votes were counted for McKune, which he did not receive; and, whether the votes were guessed at or not, if the guess was not erroneous, no injury could possibly result to Botts on that account. The specification as to the keeping of the tally will be noticed hereafter. It is to be observed that it is not alleged that a tally paper was not kept, but that no legal paper; (this is a conclusion, not a fact.

The complaint then states, that of the votes so returned, as given for McKune, twenty-eight were given and intended for Botts, and should have been so counted. This is a good statement, as showing an error of twenty-eight votes against McKune.

The next specification has been already answered. It merely charges that, in the Second District, neither the Inspector, nor Judges, nor Clerk, were sworn. That three hundred and sixteen votes were returned as given for McKune in this district; and, of the votes, eighty were never ascertained to have been written or printed upon any ballot; but were guessed at or inferred to be thereon. In another part of this specification, that twenty-three of the votes counted for McKune, were really given for Botts. This last statement is sufficient so far as it goes; the rest is bad.

---

Whipley v. J. H. McKune.

---

The next specification is like the above, except that it refers to the Fourth District, in Sacramento; twenty-two votes for Botts, counted for McKune.

The next is also similar, applying to the Third District; ten votes for Botts, counted for McKune.

The next specifications are as follows: "And the said Daniel H. Whipley is informed and believes, and so charges the truth to be, that at the precinct of Folsom, in the township of Granite, in the district aforesaid, one hundred and twenty-five votes were returned as having been given for the said McKune, as aforesaid, and that thirteen were given and intended for the said Botts, and should have been so counted, and that the Judge, Inspectors, and Clerks of the said precinct were guilty of misconduct in this: that they permitted the ballot-box to be removed from the room in which the election was held, before the ballots were counted; and the said ballot-box, when removed as aforesaid, was left in charge of a person who was neither a Judge, Inspector nor Clerk of said election."

And the said Daniel H. Whipley further states, that he is informed and believes, and so charges the truth to be, that from the precinct in the township of Sutter, known as the "Cottage," one hundred and sixty-eight votes were returned as having been given for McKune, as aforesaid; that of the said votes one hundred and twenty-six were never ascertained to have been written or printed upon any ballot deposited in the manner prescribed by law, but the same were inferred or guessed at, and so illegally returned for said McKune, as aforesaid; that neither the Judges, Inspectors nor Clerks were sworn at said precinct; and that the ballot-box was removed from the room in which the election was held, and committed to the custody of persons who were neither Judges, Inspectors nor Clerks of said election, before the ballots were counted; that, in running out or counting up the tallies at said precinct, nine votes which were cast for Charles T. Botts were omitted — his vote run out eight, when it should have been seventeen at that precinct.

Whitley v. J. H. McKune.

---

And the said Daniel H. Whitley further states, that he is informed and believes, and so charges the truth to be, that, at the precinct known as "Mormon Island," in the said district, where thirty-eight votes were returned as having been given for the said McKune, as aforesaid, the ballot-box was removed from the room in which said election was held, and intrusted to the custody of a person who was neither a Judge, Inspector nor Clerk of said election, before said votes were counted.

And the said Daniel H. Whitley further states, that the precinct known as "Michigan Bar," in said District, where one hundred and two votes were returned as having been given for said McKune, as aforesaid, sixty of which were never ascertained to have been written or printed on any ballot, deposited in the manner prescribed by law; but the same were inferred or guessed at, and so illegally and improperly counted for the said McKune.

And the said Daniel H. Whitley further states, that he is informed and believes, and so charges the truth to be, that at the precinct known as "The Magnolia," in the township of Brighton, in the county aforesaid, from which fifty-eight votes were returned as having been given for the said McKune, as aforesaid, neither the Judges, Inspectors nor Clerks of the election were sworn; and that the ballot-box at said precinct was removed from the room in which said election was held, and was intrusted to the keeping of a person who was neither a Judge, Inspector nor Clerk, of said election, before the ballots deposited therein were counted.

The only questions which it is necessary to consider are these: 1. Does the mere failure of the officers of elections, to qualify according to law, vitiate the election? 2. Does the fact that the ballot-box was out of the possession of the officers of the election — no fraud, or collusion, nor circumstances of suspicion being shown — have that effect?

Unquestionably public policy requires that every safeguard should be thrown around the elective franchise, and every protection which can shield the ballot-box from corrupt or improper influences given to it. But a strictness of requirement which forms the mere fact of the existence of informalities not shown to be injurious in their results, would suppress the declared will of the people constitutionally expressed, leads to as dangerous consequences. We consider the law well settled by authority, that the mere failure of the officers to take the oath does not invalidate the election. If this were so, it might lead to more fraud than it would prevent; for these officers might omit the oath for the purpose of throwing out the notes of a precinct. The following cases hold the doctrine just announced: Truehart v. Alldrick, 2 Texas, 217; People v. Cook, 14 Barbour, 259; 19 Wend. 139; 4 Denio, 168; 14 Pickering, 236; 16 Pickering, 153; and this is supported by the universal rule, that where one acts under color of office, his acts are binding, though not legally qualified: People v. Bartlett, 6 Wend. 422. In 2 Parsons' Equity Cases, these questions are all reviewed with learning and ability, and the same doctrine is held. But it is useless to consume time in citing authorities from other States, for the Statute of California, already quoted, is decisive on the point. And we think it equally clear on the other and remaining proposition, which is, that the ballot-boxes at two precincts were not all the time within the view and control of the Inspectors, etc. It is observable that no charge of suspicious circumstances, or of any actual fraud is made in this connection; nor is it shown that any votes were changed, or any alteration made of ballots, or the result in any way affected by this circumstance; nor does it appear for what length of time, nor in what way, nor under what state of facts this was done or permitted. We presume it would not be contended, that if the officers happened to lose sight of the box for a moment, or in case of a row, or a fire, they rushed out of the room, leaving the box, that this would constitute any sufficient cause for invalidating the returns or votes. If the question was connected with circumstances of suspicion, the case might be different; but if we were to hold that this circumstance alone, as stated, invalidated the returns, it would be in the power of any officer or other persons to defeat an election, by throwing the ballot-box out of the window, or carrying it to the next room.

The following provision of the statute plainly indicates for what grounds the contest may be maintained: 1. For misconduct on the part of the Board of Judges, or any member thereof. 2. When the person whose right to the office is contested, was not, at the time of the election, eligible to the office. 3. When the person elected shall have been convicted of crime, etc. 4. When the person elected shall have given a bribe to the Judges, etc. 5. On account of illegal votes. Then follows the 52d section already quoted. The 53d section provides, that when an election is contested on account of any misconduct on the part of the Board of Judges of any township election, or any member thereof, the election shall not be annulled and set aside upon any proof thereof, unless the rejection of the vote of such township or townships shall change the result as to such office in the remaining vote of the county. Sec. 54 provides that nothing in the fifth ground of contest shall be so construed as to authorize an election to be set aside on account of illegal votes, unless it shall appear that an amount of illegal votes shall have been given to the person whose right to the office is contested, which, if taken from him, would reduce the number of his votes below the number of votes given to some other person for the same office, after deducting therefrom the illegal votes which may be shown to have been given for such other person.

---

Whipley v. J. H. McKune.

---

These provisions very clearly indicate that the Legislature did not mean that the returns of a candidate should be set aside when an election was held, at the proper time and place, and for the proper offices, unless it affirmatively appeared that there was such irregularity as affected the result of the election; and when these irregularities of mere mode occur, it rests with the contestant to show that they changed the result. Indeed, as the returns are prima facie evidence of the facts they import, and as the returned candidate—especially after being commissioned—is prima facie entitled to the office, the contestant must show that the election was not only conducted irregularly, but that in consequence of irregularities, the declared result was different from what it would otherwise have been.

The complaint, taking such portions of it as is sufficiently stated for true, does not show enough to entitle the contestant to his prayer; for the votes improperly counted for McKune, transferred to the list of Botts, are not enough to change the result.

The judgment is affirmed.

HUNTER v. WATSON et al.

The true construction to be given to the Registration Act is, that the failure of a grantee to record his deed, does not absolutely, and without exception, avoid the deed as to third persons. The failure to register only protects bona fide purchasers for a valuable consideration.

Open and notorious possession of real estate by one having an unrecorded deed for it, is evidence of notice to a subsequent purchaser of the first vendee's title. But the possession must exist at the time of the acquisition of title or deed of the subsequent vendee, from the common vendor.

A deed made to a man who is dead at the time of its execution, is a nullity.

The word "heirs" in a conveyance, is not a word of purchase, carrying title to the heirs, but only qualifying the title of the grantee.

A deed made under and in pursuance of a general power of attorney, which authorized the attorney "to make and execute conveyances," and where the purchase money was received by the principal, cannot be assailed for the want of authority to execute it.

The Registration Act only protects purchasers; creditors, as such, are not included within its provisions. But a judgment creditor, purchasing at his own sale, without notice, is a bona fide purchaser within the Act.

The knowledge of an agent, in the course of the agency, is the knowledge of the principal, and the agent cannot be forced to disclose it. But if the agent acquires information apart from, or independent of such source, he is not protected from disclosing it.

APPEAL from the Sixth District, County of Sacramento.

The facts as stated in the opinion of the Court, are as follow:

This was an action of ejectment to recover a lot in Sacramento city. The title was in one William Glenn, against whom, on the eleventh of October, 1855, plaintiff recovered judgment in the District Court for Sixth District, and on the twenty-sixth day of July, 1856, the plaintiff became the purchaser, at Sheriff's sale, made under the judgment. It seems that this property was owned by one McPherson, who sold it in payment of a debt to one Forbes, and that Forbes, desiring to hide it from his creditors, procured a deed of it to be made to Glenn. Glenn left the country, and made a power of attorney to his brother, Thomas Glenn, to transact his business, sell his lands, etc., with power of substitution of other attorneys; that Glenn sold the lot to Knox by deed dated twentieth of September, 1851. The deed was not recorded. Knox died in 1854. On the twenty-second day of March, 1856,

---

Hunter v. Watson.

---

Glenn executed a deed to Knox and his heirs, which was recorded twenty-seventh of March, 1856. Knox's administrator, Hubbard, was in the notorious possession of the property at the time of the plaintiff's purchase. Two questions are made by the record:

1. Was the possession of the administrator of Knox notice of the unrecorded deed from Glenn to Knox?

2. If not notice at the time of the obtaining of the judgment of the plaintiff, was the recording of the deed to Knox and his heirs before the sale under execution, sufficient?

Plaintiff had judgment, and defendants appealed.

Crocker & Robinson for Appellants.

1st. The plaintiff having purchased the property at a sale on his own judgment, is not a purchaser within the rules of equity, so as to enable him to claim notice of outstanding titles.

When a judgment creditor purchases at the Sheriff's sale on his own judgment, no notice to him of the equity of third persons is necessary, as he is not entitled to protection as a bona fide purchaser, as he pays no new consideration. Arnold v. Patrick, 6 Paige, 316; Williams v. Hollingsworth, 1 Strobhart Eq. 103; Bush v. Bush, 1 Strobhart Eq. 379; Kirbay v. Dillard, Speer's Eq. 20; Shultz v. Carter, Speer's Eq. 542; 1 P. Williams, 278; Rep. Temp. Fairb. 28; 3 Hare, 416; Beaver v. Filson, 8 Barr, 327; 1 Story's Eq. Juris., sec. 410, note 1; 2 Story's Eq. Juris., sec. 1503, b.

A purchase by a third person stands on a very different footing in this respect, from a purchase by the plaintiff in the judgment. 2 Binnely, 46.

So also a creditor who takes real estate in payment of his debt, is not a purchaser for value, so as to entitle him to protection against prior equities. Dickson v. Tillinghast, 4 Paige, 215; Roman v. Adams, 1 S. & M. Ch. 45, 49; Powell v. Jeffries, 4 Scammon, 387; 11 Wend. 533; 1 Dw. Ch. 103.

A purchaser at Sheriff's sale, with or without notice, acquires no better title than the debtor had. Freeman v. Hill, 1 Dev. & Batt. Eq. 389; Polk v. Gallant, 2 Dev. & Batt. Eq. 395.

A judgment creditor is bound by all prior equities, and so is a purchaser at Sheriff's sale under the judgment. Bank of S. C. v. Campbell, 2 Rich. Eq. 179, 191.

Equity controls the general lien of a judgment so as to protect the equitable interests of others. 2 Paige, 266.

And it will limit the lien to the actual interest the debtor has in the estate. 4 Paige, 15; 6 Paige, 315.

A purchaser of the judgment debtor, before judgment, whose deed is not executed until afterwards, will thus be protected against the judgment. 6 Paige, 315, 316, note a; 1 P. Wms., 278; 2 Wash. C. C. R. 78.

Where the agent of the judgment creditor purchased the property at Sheriff's sale, but paid no money, applying the amount as a credit on the judgment, he cannot protect himself against a prior equity, of which he had no notice. Swayze v. Burke, 12 Peters, 11, 24, 25.

That the purchaser had secured the payment of the purchase money, is not sufficient to protect him against prior equities. 7 J. C. R. 65.

To entitle a party to protection in equity as a bona fide purchaser, he must have actually paid the purchase money and received his deed, before notice of the equity. 6 Barb. S. C. R. 19, 26; 1 Paige, 280; 11 Barb. S. C. R. 490.

In equity, the lien of a judgment does not attach upon the mere legal title to lands in the debtor, where the equitable title is in another; and a judgment creditor seeking to make it liable will be restrained, as he loses nothing, having parted with no money. 1 Paige, 280; 11 Barbour S. C. R. 490; 6 Barbour S. C. R. 19, 26.

2d. The plaintiff had notice of the title of Knox under whom defendants hold, or at least sufficient facts were known to him to have put him upon inquiry.

He had actual knowledge of the possession of the premises by Knox, and those holding under him. He was told at the sale, before it was struck off to him, that he was not buying a title. There was a deed upon record from Glenn to Knox, and though it was executed after the decease of the latter, it was sufficient to put him upon inquiry.

If, at the sale, the purchaser receives sufficient information to put him upon inquiry, it is sufficient notice. 1 Paige, 283.

Information from third parties is sufficient to put the party upon inquiry. 3 Metcalf, 406; 1 Cowen, 622; 2 Dev. & Batt. Eq. 360; Hardin, 37.

---

But the most material evidence of notice, is the actual possession of the property by Knox and those holding under him, and the fact that this possession was known to the plaintiff, before his purchase.

This question has been before this Court in several cases, and in some of them, the well-established rule that possession is notice to all persons of the title of the possessor, has been set aside. We think so clear and evident a departure from this ancient rule of property, upon so important a question, making, as it does, so great an invasion upon the rights of property, should be promptly overruled by this Court, before its evil effects have been too extensively felt.

The ancient rule which we contend for, has been established by the following authorities:

English: 2 Vesey, 440; 16 Vesey, 249, 254; 17 Vesey, 433; 1 Jac. & Walker, 181; 1 Hare, 43; 2 Ball & Beatty, 416; 4 Dow Parl. Rep. 245; 2 Sch. & Lefroy, 583; 1 Merivale, 282; 2 Powell Mort. 576, note. Maine: 32 Maine, 286; 8 Greenleaf, 94. New Hampshire: 4 N. H. Rep. 397; 5 N. H. 181; 2 Foster, 500. Vermont: 2 Vermont Rep. 544. Massachusetts: 3 Pick. 149; 3 Mass. 575. Connecticut: 3 Conn. Rep. 146. New York: 3 Paige, 421; 5 J. C. R. 39; 2 Paige, 300; 10 Barb. S. C. R. 354; 6 Paige, 383. Pennsylvania: 3 S. & R. 283; 5 Binney, 132; 1 Wharton, 303, 318; 7 Watts, 261, 382; 5 W. & S. 427. Delaware: Harrington Rep. 48. Ohio: 13 Ohio Rep. 408. Indiana: 4 Blackford 94, 383. Illinois: 5 Gilman, 186. Missouri: 1 Missouri Rep. 77. Kentucky: 1 Littell, 350; 1 Monroe, 193, 235; 2 J. J. Marshall, 164, 178. Maryland: 1 Mar. Ch. Dec. 523; 10 Gill & Johns. 316. New Jersey: Saxton, 441; 2 Green Ch. 143. Georgia: 2 Georgia Decisions, 205. Alabama: 12 Ala. Rep. 17. South Carolina: 2 Hill Ch. 421. Mississippi: 11 S. & M. 21. Tennessee: 2 Humph. 335. United States: 10 Howard, 348, 375; 1 McLean, 22.

Such a train of decisions certainly ought to settle the law, if decisions and precedents are to have any force and effect.

But even under the rules laid down by this Court in previous cases,

---

Hunter v. Watson.

---

that possession is notice of equitable titles not in a condition to be recorded, we contend the judgment of the Court below should be reversed upon this point alone.

We contend, therefore, that the defendants, who hold under Knox, come under the rule laid down by this Court in Ellis v. Jeans, 7 Cal. Rep. 409, and Bryan v. Ramirez, 8 Cal. 461.

It has been held, and we think very properly, that an unrecorded deed is evidence of an equity equal to a title bond. 4 Dana, 260.

As to the last deed executed by Glenn to Knox, after the decease of the latter, though it could not operate as a conveyance to him, yet it is good as a conveyance to his heirs. 12 Mass. 447; 1 Pick. 27; 8 Greenleaf, 148; 2 Peters, 201; 14 Missouri, 420; 2 Brock. 156.

But even if it should be held void as a conveyance, it is still good as an executory contract, and the heirs could compel the execution of a proper deed to them. When there is an intention to convey, and a good consideration given, but the legal title has not passed, equity will compel the execution of a proper instrument. 1 Hoffman Ch. Rep. 382; 1 Bramb. 63.

And such deed would relate back to the original contract of sale. A deed made in pursuance of a contract, is good by relation from the making of the contract. 1 John. Cas. 81, 85.

3d. The District Court erred in ruling that Welty, plaintiff's attorney, need not testify as to notice of Knox's title, acquired from parties other than the plaintiff.

This was clearly error, for the law is well settled, that notice of title in a third person, given to an attorney or agent, is notice to the principal. Fulton Bank v. N. Y. & S. Canal Co., 4 Paige, 136; Griffith v. Griffith, 9 Paige, 316; Bank of U. S. v. Davis. 2 Hill, 451, 461; Sutton v. Dillaye, 3 Barb. S. C. R. 529; Mech. Bank v. Seton, 1 Peters, 309.

It cannot be claimed that Welty was privileged from testifying as to this notice, received, not from his principal, but from third persons; for it is a well established rule, that the privilege of an attorney is restricted entirely to communications from his client, and does not apply to facts derived from other parties. 7 East, 357 and note; 1 Phillips' Ev. 162.

Hunter v. Watson.

---

Moore & Welty for Respondent.

The main question involved in this case, viz., was defendants' possession of the premises, if known to plaintiff before his purchase, sufficient to put him, a subsequent purchaser for a valuable consideration, upon inquiry, and charge him with notice of defendants' interest? It is admitted that plaintiff has a perfect legal title to the premises, and he must prevail in this action unless he had a sufficient notice of defendants' claim, to place him in the position of a fraudulent purchaser. Under our system, there are two kinds of notice; actual notice in fact, and record or constructive. At common law, actual notice was necessary in every case; but the rule was found to be inconvenient and troublesome and in this country it has been changed in nearly every State, by the passage of registry laws. Among the earliest legislation of this State, after its organization, was the passage of an Act concerning the Execution, Acknowledgment and Registration of Conveyances. The twentieth section of this law provides that "Every conveyance of real estate within this State, hereafter made, which shall not be recorded as provided in this Act, shall be void as against any subsequent purchaser, in good faith and for a valuable consideration, of the same real estate, or any part thereof, when his own conveyance shall be first duly recorded." (Wood's Dig., p. 103, sec. 26.) This language is plain, positive and comprehensive. If a person holds a "subsequent" deed "duly recorded," the only questions that can arise in reference to the validity of his title, are: 1st. Is he a purchaser "in good faith"? and, 2d. Has he paid a "valuable consideration"?

Who are "subsequent purchasers in good faith"? or, in other words, what acts or knowledge, on the part of a subsequent purchaser, will make him a purchaser mala fides? In this case we are not to inquire whether the defendants held equities of which plaintiff had notice, but did plaintiff have any knowledge of this unrecorded deed prior to his purchase; for we submit there is a wide difference between the principles governing a case, where both parties claim legal title from the same grantor, one by virtue of a deed which he has neglected to record, and the other by deed duly recorded, and a case where one party claims the legal title, and the other equities, which by law he was unable to register and give notice of. In the former case, the first purchaser has so far violated and disregarded the positive requirements of the law, that his grantor has been enabled to perpetrate a fraud by making a second conveyance to an innocent purchaser. It was his duty to have recorded his deed; and if he did not, and the property is again conveyed, he alone must suffer the penalty which the statute imposes, while, on the other hand, the party holding an equitable claim, has done all the law requires. If he were to record his equity, it would do him no good, as it is not such an instrument as the law authorizes to be recorded, and would therefore impart no notice to subsequent purchasers. This class of claimants, the law has ever regarded with much favor. They have been guilty of no wrong, and as a matter of necessity, and of justice to them, the Courts in many of the States have said, that open and continued possession on their part, is sufficient to put subsequent purchasers upon inquiry. But this rule does not apply to claims under unrecorded deeds. The law positively requires deeds to be recorded, in order to make the conveyance valid, as against subsequent purchasers. The statute has provided a public repository for all evidences of change of title, and it is the duty of every man to comply strictly with this salutary provision of the law. When two parties claim title to the same premises, from the same grantor, the question will be (if the case is free from fraud) as to priority of record. This view has been sustained by this Court, by repeated decisions, and the distinction which we have drawn has been as often recognized. The question was first presented in the case of Call v. Hastings, 3 Cal. Rep. 179; Mesick v. Sunderland, 6 Cal. Rep. 297; Stafford v. Lick, 7 Cal. Rep. 479; Ellis v. Janes, Id. 409.

Hunter v. Watson.

---

The decisions of this Court upon this point, stand not alone. They are supported by nearly all the Courts in States where registry laws exist, and in England the old doctrine has been greatly modified. 21 Mo. Rep. 313.

In Rhode Island it has been decided that "open and continued possession of land by a person having an unrecorded deed, and claiming land as his own, is not presumptive notice of the existence of such deed to subsequent purchasers. Harris v. Arnold, 1 Rhode Island Rep. 125; see also Withers v. Carter, 4 Gratt. (Virg.) Rep. 407.

Hunter v. Watson.

---

In 32 Maine, 287, cited by appellants, the Court said: "Prior to the Revised Statutes, visible possession of an improved estate, by the grantee under his deed, was implied notice of the sale to subsequent purchasers, although his deed had not been recorded. But the Revised Statutes, (chap. 91, sec. 26) introduces a new principle, and abolishes constructive notice, arising from possession under a deed not recorded, and requires actual notice of such deed to subsequent purchasers to prevent them from holding the estate."

In the case of Jackson v. Van Valkenburgh, (8 Cow. 254) Judge Woodworth reviewed the authorities upon this question, and cited, with approbation, Jolland v. Stainbridge, (3 Vesey, 478) in which Lord Alvanley said: "The person who takes subsequently must know exactly the condition of the prior deed, and must have intended to defraud."

In support of this doctrine, the same learned Judge quotes the language of Lord Hardwicke, in Hine v. Dodd, (3 Atk. 275) as follows: "Nothing short of fraud, or clear and undoubted notice, will do."

In Jackson v. Burgett, (10 John. 457) actual notice of the unrecorded instrument was held necessary; so also in Dunham v. Dey, 18 John. 555.

In Dey v. Dunham, (2 John. Ch. Rep. 182, 190) Chancellor Kent again reviews this doctrine at length and agrees with Lord Hardwicke in Hine v. Dodd, that "A notice that was to break in upon the Registry Act, must be such, as with the attending circumstances will affect the subsequent purchaser with fraud. A notice merely to put the party upon inquiry, will not be sufficient." See also Jolland v. Strainbridge, 3 Ves. 478; Great Falls Co. v. Worster, 15 New Hampshire, 412.

Mr. Justice Scott, in Beattie v. Butler, (21 Mo. Rep. 321) discusses this question at some length, and after a review of the authorities, concludes as follows: "But the possession of the tenant, if notice at all, was only notice of his own right, and not that of his reversioner; this seems to be the settled doctrine." See also 7 Watt. 261; 1 Atk. 589, 490; 4 Binn. 184; 2 Sumner, 557, and 6 Sergt. & Rawle, 184.

This brings us to the consideration of another question raised by appellants, viz.: Is plaintiff, who purchased at Sheriff's sale, upon his own judgment, a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration? In some of the earlier decisions in England and this country, a distinction was drawn and maintained between a purchaser who was also the execution creditor, and a purchaser who was a stranger to the judgment and execution. In the former case it was said that the purchaser took the property for a pre-existing debt, paying no new consideration, and must therefore take subject to the outstanding equities in the hands of third persons, while the latter paid the purchase money on the day of sale, and took the property discharged of all equities of which he had no notice. But upon what just reasoning the distinction was maintained, it is not easy to discover. Let us state an example: A advances money to B, for which he obtains a judgment; he issues execution and levies upon B's property; he attends the sale, and being willing to give more than any one else, becomes the purchaser. But because he paid the purchase money to B in advance, and not to-day, he is not a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration, and must take the property with some secret trust, or have his title defeated altogether by the production of an unrecorded deed, of which he had no notice. But, says the old theory, A takes the property for a pre-existing debt, and parts with no new consideration. This is not the case; the law takes the property, and an officer of the law sells it to the highest bidder. A purchases the property, not as creditor, but as purchaser. The character of creditor ceases, and the rights of purchaser immediately attach. In this State the statute not only permits, but invites, the creditor to purchase; then why should he not stand upon the same footing of other purchasers?

There is no sound reason why he should not. Modern Courts have abolished the old distinction, and the rule now is, "that no difference exists between a purchaser at private sale, and one at Sheriff's sale." Robinson v. Rowan, 2 Scammon Rep. 501.

The case of Scribner's Lessees v. Lockwood, (9 Ohio, 184) is directly in point. Parker's Lessees v. Miller et al., 9 Ohio Rep. 108; Jackson v. Post, 15 Wend. 288; Graham v. Samuel, 1 Dana, 166.

Our theory is, that the plaintiff here stands upon the same footing

---

Hunter v. Watson.

---

with other purchasers, and that his lien and title relate back to the date of the entry of his judgment, and must prevail over defendants' unrecorded deed. This was the doctrine of this Court in the case of Smith v. Randall, 6 Cal. Rep. 47.

In the case in 2 Binn. 52, relied upon by appellants, Judge Breckenridge says: "The purchaser at a Sheriff's sale, is as much a purchaser, and as much entitled to protection under a want of notice, as any other. The consequences would be monstrous, if the law would suffer him to be disturbed by secret trusts, or to be affected by the culpable negligence of those who were under a moral and legal obligation to do something which would save others from laying out their money without consideration."

The case in 11 Mo. 77, cited by appellants, is an authority directly against them. The Court says: "This case does not differ in principle from those of Hill v. Paul, (8 Mo.) and Reed v. Austin's Heirs, (9 Mo. 722). The doctrine of these cases is, that the lien of a judgment prevails over a prior unrecorded deed, and this may be regarded as the settled law of this Court."

"The lien of a judgment will prevail over a prior unrecorded deed. That the deed was executed before the debt was contracted, cannot alter the case; the credit may have been given upon the very lots conveyed by this unrecorded deed." Frothingham v. Stacker, 11 Mo. 78; Reed v. Austin's Heirs, 9 Mo. 722; Hill v. Paul, 8 Mo. 479; Helm v. Logan's Heirs, 4 Bibb, 78.

In the case of Coffin v. Ray, (1 Metcf. 214) C. J. Shaw said: "The attachment of real estate is considered as in the nature of a purchase, and the attaching creditor is affected with notice of a prior conveyance, in the same manner as a purchaser." Priest v. Rice, 1 Pick. Rep., p. 167; Semple v. Bird, 7 Serg. & Rawle, 285.

The record contains one other question which we will briefly notice. On the trial in the Court below, appellants called as a witness, D. W. Welty, one of plaintiff's attorneys, and among other things, asked him whether he (witness) had any knowledge of defendants' interest prior to plaintiff's purchase. This was objected to. The Court sustained the objection, and this is assigned as error. See Greenleaf's Evidence, vol. 2, p. 311, sec. 244; 7 Cal. Rep. 450.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — FIELD, J., concurring.

We have given the important questions raised by the record, our most serious attention. The amount involved in this particular case is not considerable, but the principles are of the greatest importance. The questions are not free from difficulty; indeed they are full of embarrassment, arising not only from several decisions of our own Court, which, to say the least, do not seem altogether consistent, and from the conflicting nature of the decisions in other States and in Great Britain. Upon no subject is it more important that the law should be beyond doubt as to its construction, and simple and precise in its provisions. And it may well merit legislative consideration, whether the Statutes of Registration should not be thoroughly revised, so as to secure uniform and certain rules for the disposition and protection of real estate in the future.

It is not necessary to review the various decisions of this Court. The questions we are considering turn upon the proper construction of the twenty-fourth and twenty-sixth sections of the Recordation Act 1850: This is the language of the twenty-fourth section, as amended in 1855: "Every conveyance of real estate, and every instrument of writing, setting forth an agreement to convey any real estate, or whereby any real estate may be affected, proved, acknowledged, and certified in the manner prescribed in this Act, to operate as notice to third persons, shall be recorded in the office of the Recorder of the county in which such real estate is situated, but shall be valid and binding between the parties thereto, without such record."

The twenty-sixth section is as follows: "Every conveyance of real estate within this State, hereafter made, which shall not be recorded as provided in this Act, shall be void as against any subsequent purchaser in good faith and for a valuable consideration, of the same real estate, or any portion thereof, where his own conveyance shall be first duly recorded."

It would seem that the Legislature designed, in the twenty-fourth section, to hold that the recording of the deed was necessary to give notice of it to third persons, and supposed that the want of such notice

---

Hunter v. Watson.

---

invalidated the deed as to them; but that afterwards the twenty-sixth section was inserted, which was intended to qualify and limit the effect of this provision. The twenty-sixth section is taken from the legislation of New York on that subject, and is in the words of a section of a statute of that State. Taking both sections together, it seems evident that the true construction is, that the failure of a grantee to record a deed, does not absolutely and without exception avoid the deed as to third persons; for, if it did, it is impossible to give effect to the words "bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration." The failure to register only protects this class of persons. Under the registration laws of England and the American States, (which did not contain this limitation) Courts of Equity engrafted this exception, and held, in numerous cases, that the purchaser of lands, knowing them to have been before sold by the vendor, though the deed was not recorded, was not within the protection of the statute. (See 10 John. 457.) The Irish Registry Act makes no exception or qualification but the record is the only notice; and, in some of the States—Massachusetts, Maine, and perhaps others—actual notice is the only substitute for the notice by the registry.

The question arises, who is a bona fide purchaser, or what is a bona fide purchase? And this inquiry has been the fruitful source of difficulty, and contention, and conflicting decision. A priori, it might, perhaps, be considered not a little difficult to say that a party buying land in the possession of another, must necessarily be a fraudulent purchaser, especially when he buys with record proof before him of the ownership of his vendor. It could scarcely be held that such a purchaser must necessarily know that the vendor had no title, and that the possessor had. Some of the cases hold that mere possession is actual notice—and will not suffer any proof to be made to the contrary—other, and perhaps the greater number, hold that it is only a presumption of notice, which may be rebutted; and others again hold that the possession is not so much notice of the title of the holder, as a circumstance which should put the purchaser on inquiry, and if he fails to inquire, he is no more protected than if he had inquired and ascertained the fact.

In New York the cases are by no means harmonious—the earlier cases holding with more strictness to the doctrine of notice than those of later date. It must be conceded, however, that the authorities, not only in New York, but elsewhere, are overwhelmingly to the point that possession is proof of notice—whether prima facie or absolute, it is not necessary to inquire here — of the title of the possessor. This is the doctrine of the Supreme Court of the United States, and of every State in the Union, with the three or four exceptions.

Hunter v. Watson.

---

It is urged against this array of authority, that this matter of possession is a fact, not a principle; that the fact must have its force in different States or places, according to circumstances; that this fact in England or Massachusetts, owing to local circumstances, has a significance which is denied by the circumstances prevailing here; that in the older States titles are settled and easily understood, but that the reverse of this stable condition of affairs characterizes our younger and unsettled State; and that besides this, we have a statute unknown to those States, allowing the purchase of land in adverse possession; that, in addition to this, much of the real estate of the country is held by disputed titles, and no inconsiderable portion by no pretense of it. The force of this argument is conceded; but something may be urged on the other side. Some latitude should probably be indulged in a new State, whose people, hastily gathered together, are, many of them, unfamiliar with their own laws; and it is not strange that, under the peculiar circumstances which surround them, great negligence and laxity in the transaction of business, both in individuals and public officers, prevailed; and hence much that may be attributed to ignorance, carelessness and accident, prevented the preservation and protection of land titles. But besides this, we do not see enough in these suggestions to induce us to disregard an array of authority so formidable.

We acknowledge the weight of the considerations of public policy which suggest that land titles should be made to depend upon written and record proof, with few exceptions, and to leave as little to parol proof as possible; and especially do we acknowledge the paramount importance of establishing clear, precise and definite rules in respect to contracts and property; such rules as furnish of themselves authentic guides to Courts and juries, and give to the citizen certain ideas of his rights, and leave as little as possible to litigation or the discretion of the Judge. But this policy addresses itself to the Legislature, and we cannot give effect to it in this case, in the face of a clear persuasion that the law, as it is written, is otherwise.

We must, therefore, hold, in obedience to this authority, that the open, notorious possession of real estate, by one having an unrecorded deed for it, is evidence of notice to a subsequent purchaser, of the first vendee's title. To guard against misapprehension, we say that the possession must exist at the time of the acquisition of title or deed of the subsequent vendee, from the common vendor.

It appears by the express finding of the Court, that Knox, the vendee of Glenn, entered into possession of the premises after his purchase in 1851, and made permanent and valuable improvements; that up to the time of his death, he was in possession, as was his administrator after his death, until after the purchase by Hunter. The finding is, that the administrator was in "the notorious possession of the property at the time of the plaintiff's purchase." But it is by no means clear, from the evidence, whether the Judge, in his finding, meant to assert that this was a personal possession, or possession by a tenant or tenants; for the finding is that defendants hold under a lease from Knox's administrator. When the lease commenced does not appear. The other evidence introduced to show knowledge by Hunter of the deed from Glenn to Knox, was, taken alone, clearly insufficient. Wyatt v. Burnell, 19 Vesey, 435; Jolland v. Strainbridge, 3 Vesey, Jr., 478; Scott v. Gallagher, 14 S. & R. 333.

The deed of 1856 may be laid out of the question. It was made after the death of Knox, and though made to him and "his heirs," the word "heir," is not a word of purchase, carrying title to the heirs, but only qualifying the title of the grantee. A deed to a dead man is a nullity.

The deed of 1851, at the instance of Forbes, is attacked. The deed was executed under a power from Glenn, very general in its terms and evidently intended to give to the attorney authority to act for the principal in respect to the latter's business in California; it authorized the attorney "to make and execute conveyances." The money was received by Forbes, and the execution of the deed seems to have been approved by Glenn. We think, therefore, that this deed cannot be assailed for want of authority to execute it. It was not recorded.

Hunter v. Watson.

---

If Hunter had legal notice of this deed, we think it was enough to defeat his purchase.

The Statute of California already cited, only protects purchasers; creditors, as such, do not seem to be included within its provisions; but a judgment creditor, purchasing at his own sale, without notice, is a bona fide purchaser within the Act. The cases are not agreed upon this subject, but the weight of authority and the reason of the rule are as we have stated it. 4 Cowen, 599; 15 Wend. 588; 8 Ib. 620; 5 Mo. 387; 8 Ala. 866; 9 Ohio, 184; 1 Barr, 24.

Upon the trial, Mr. D. W. Welty, the attorney for the plaintiff, was examined as a witness for the defendant, to prove that while he was acting as agent for plaintiff, he ascertained the facts in relation to the title or claim of Knox to this property. Though this examination was not very regular, yet we are inclined to think the witness should have answered the general question, or protected himself by his privilege or that of his client. It is clear, that the knowledge of the agent in the course of the agency, is the knowledge of the principal; and while the attorney is not permitted to disclose the confidential communications of his client, yet if he acquires information apart from any such communications, he is not protected from disclosing it. We do not understand that the witness was required to state any facts derived from statements made to him by his client, or from the papers of his client, but merely to state facts coming to his knowledge from independent sources.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

I dissent, for reasons which I shall file hereafter.

People v. Burbank.

PEOPLE ex rel. ATTORNEY GENERAL v. BURBANK.

When a District Judge is elected by the people on the occasion of a vacancy in the office, he is, under the Constitution, elected for a full term of six years. And this though the proclamation of the Governor for the election is for the unexpired term of his predecessor.

The function of the proclamation is not to proclaim the law, but the fact of the vacancy. It cannot change either the law or the Constitution.

The Constitution, though it fixes the period of the tenure of the office of District Judge, does not fix any day for the commencement of the term; and if it did, it would not follow that it applies to Judges afterwards elected to new districts. Nor would it result, that the Judge elected in consequence of a vacancy, was necessarily elected to fill such vacancy.

All the Constitution means by the expression "during the term," as used in sections fifteen and sixteen of article sixth, is, during the time or period for which the officer is elected.

When the Constitution says the Judge shall hold his office for six years, it means that this period of six years is the term of his office; it is that quantum of time assigned to him by the Constitution as his period of the enjoyment of the office, and this quantum may not improperly be called a term.

The Legislature can direct the time and prescribe the mode of electing District Judges, but cannot change the tenure of the office; hence, so much of the Act as limited the period of incumbency, is void.

An Act may be void, in part, for its unconstitutionality, and good, so far as it is constitutional.

People ex rel. Brodie v. Weller, Governor, (11 Cal. Rep. 77) affirmed.

APPEAL from the Twelfth District, County of San Francisco.

This was an action to try the right to the office of District Judge of the Fourth Judicial District.

The facts as stated in the opinion of the Court, are as follows: In 1852, at the general election, Delos Lake was elected Judge of the Fourth District for six years from first of January, 1853. In June, 1855, he resigned, and the Governor appointed J. S. Hager to fill the vacancy until the election in 1855. In July, 1855, the Governor issued his proclamation, in pursuance of law, for the election in September; in which proclamation was included this office—styling the officer to be elected a District Judge for the unexpired term of Delos Lake, resigned. The Board of Supervisors also gave notice in the same way. At the election, Hager was elected—was commissioned in this form — and entered on the office, and held it until the general election of 1858, when Caleb Burbank was voted for, and received a majority of the votes for this office. All the proceedings were regular in form, and he was commissioned by the Governor in due form — qualified, and entered upon the office. This proceeding is taken to oust him, upon the claim that Hager is entitled to the office.

People v. Burbank.

---

The Court below held, that “Burbank is rightfully and legally in the possession of the office of Judge of the Fourth Judicial District of the State of California, and that he did not unlawfully usurp said office, as in the information alleged.” Relator appealed to this Court.

Hall McAllister for Appellant.

Counsel reviewed at considerable length the history of the legislation in this State respecting the Judiciary, and then argued as follows:

II. Legislative exposition of constitutional provisions is never entitled to much weight.

The supineness, carelessness and ignorance of legislators, are matters of complaint, not only in this State, not only in other States of the Union, but also in England. We constantly find the English Judges bitterly complaining of the supineness and neglect of Parliament in the matter of legislation. Dwaris on Statutes, 551, 556, 708.

In England, Parliament are omnipotent, and are therefore only called upon to see that their statutes do not conflict with each other; whereas American Legislatures must look not only to this, but must also bring each Act they pass to the test of the Constitution.

When legislative exposition should be resorted to, and the weight which should be given to it. Smith's Statutory Law, seca. 289, 290, 291, 292; Dwaris on Statutes, 562.

III. In the construction of a constitutional provision restrictive of the power of the Legislature, legislative exposition should never be resorted to. Smith's Statutory Law, seca. 293, 295, 296; Vide also, Ibid., sec. 290.

The present case is one where the constitutional provisions are restrictive of the power of the Legislature.

The Constitution substantially declares (art. 6, sec. 6; art. 11, sec.

People v. Burbank.

---

8) that the Legislature shall not interfere with "the duration of any office" which has by it been "fixed."

IV. Legislative exposition has not been regarded by this Court, heretofore, as a guide in construing the Constitution. In re Heldforth, 1 Cal. R. 438; Cauldfield v. Hudson, 3 Cal. R. 389; Reed v. McCormick, 4 Cal. R. 342; Exline v. Smith, 5 Cal. R. 112; Burgoyne v. Supervisors of San Francisco, 5 Cal. R. 1; Guy v. Hermance, 5 Cal. R. 73; Dickey v. Hurlburt, 5 Cal. R. 343; Zander v. Coe, 5 Cal. R. 230; The People v. Applegate, 5 Cal. R. 295; The People v. Nevada, 6 Cal. R. 143; The People v. Johnson, 6 Cal. R. 500.

V. The only true exposition of the Constitution is a judicial one.

The judicial attribute has been lodged by the Constitution, not in the hands of the Legislature, but with the Judiciary — a distinct coördinate department of Government.

The idea has no force, that the Judiciary must, in any degree, yield to the crude opinion of the Legislature concerning the Constitution, when that Legislature is deciding as to its own powers.

It will not do for the Legislature to sit as Judge in their own case.

VI. The Constitution fixes the judicial tenure of appellants at six years.

The District Judgeship is a constitutional office; hence, (in considering its nature, character, jurisdiction, duration, and the like) we must disembarass our ideas of all statutory regulations, and look solely to the organic law — the Constitution. Constitution, art. 6, sec. 5. Here we have a constitutional office, and a constitutional tenure affixed to its incumbent.

The office itself, and the tenure of its incumbent, are beyond the reach of legislative enactment.

Upon the subject of tenure, the framers of our Constitution need not have added a single word additional to the expression "for the term of six years."

That provision alone would have been fully sufficient for appellant's case.

But article 11, sec. 7, is perhaps even more explicit; for it substantially forbids all legislative interference with "the duration of any office fixed" by this Constitution.

But is the system marked out in the Constitution for this office of District Judge, complete? Are contingencies provided for — death or resignation?

Constitution, art. 5, sec. 8: When, therefore, a vacancy occurs for any reason, in the office of District Judge, the Governor has constitutional power to fill the office until the "next election by the people."

Our argument is plain, and nothing can be more simple than the operation of the system appointed (fully and completely) for the office of District Judge.

Resignation or death occurring, the office becomes vacant; the Governor appoints for the interim until the next general election by the people. The people elect at the constitutional time (to wit, the next general election after the vacancy in the office occurs, which is always a time uncertain, the period of the general election being entirely under control of the Legislature) to a constitutional office for the constitutional tenure.

Is there any possible defect in this system? Is there any contingency unprovided for? Is there any reason why this plain, simple and complete plan, marked out in the organic law, should not be enforced?

Neither can a single argument be adduced against the policy of this system, while there are many obvious suggestions in its favor.

By always making the tenure of elected District Judges six years, the value, dignity, independence and utility of the office are preserved; while to split up the constitutional tenure into one, two, three, four years, as may chance, greatly tends to impair, if not to entirely destroy, these important attributes.

These views are asserted by this Court in People ex rel. Brodie v. Weller, 11 Cal. Rep. 77.

The idea of fixed terms identical for the whole State, having a certain commencement and fixed termination, appointed by the Constitution, was thoroughly and utterly denied by this Court in the People ex rel. Brodie v. Weller.

A Judge elected to fill the unexpired term of a previous incumbent who had died, is entitled to hold the full constitutional term. Shelly v. Johnson, Dallar, 597, cited in Texas Digest, p. 268; Roman v.

People v. Burbank.

---

Moody, Dallam, 512, cited in Texas Digest, p. 386; Wammach v. Holloway, 2 Ala. R. 31.

Where the term of office is fixed by the Constitution, each succeeding incumbent, although elected to fill a vacancy, is entitled, unless it is otherwise provided in the Constitution, to hold the office for the full period. Bunton v. Wilson, 4 Texas R. 400; Marshall v. Harwood, 5 Maryland, 423; Hughes v. Buckingham, 5 Sm. & M. 632; Powers v. Hunt, 2 Humphrey's R. 24; The People v. Green, 2 Wend. R. 266; The People v. Coutant, 11 Wend. R. 511; The People v. Garey, 6 Cowen, 642.

The Constitution of the State of California does not fix the time of the commencement of the term of the District Judge. Constitution, Art. VI, sec. 5; The People v. Weller; The State of Ohio v. Nebeling, 41, 42, 43.

The respondent's counsel has pertinaciously argued that the Constitution appoints a certain commencement and termination for the term of the District Judges, and yet has even failed to show that the commencement of the term of the first original nine districts is appointed by the Constitution.

By the statute of 1850, nine Judicial Districts were established. By the Act of March 11, 1851, eleven Judicial Districts were made. By the Act of May 15, 1854, twelve Judicial Districts were created. By Act April 16, 1855, fifteen Judicial Districts were established. By a recent statute, the number of Judicial Districts has been increased to eighteen.

If these fixed terms, with certain constitutional commencement and termination, are non-existent whence does the respondent derive "unexpired term," "balance of term," etc., which form the burden of his argument?

If a District Judge dies, there is a vacancy in the office, not a vacancy in his term. There cannot be said to be a vacancy in his term, for the term has ceased to exist. There is no fixed term having a duration beyond the life of the judicial incumbent.

The Constitution attaches the term to the Judge, not to the office. Constitution, Art. VI, sec. 5.

The Constitution, speaking of District Judges, says: "Said Judges shall be elected by the qualified electors of their respective districts at the general election, and shall hold their office for the term of six years." That is—all District Judges shall hold their office for the term of six years.

---

People v. Burbank.

---

There is no exception suggested; there is no language from which any can be implied. The constitutional clause applies generally to all District Judges.

Notice also the imperative character of the language used — "shall hold." The expression is positive and emphatic.

The declaration of the Constitution — that District Judges shall hold their office for the term of six years — is an express contract with every Judge duly elected by the people, that he shall have that tenure. An open offer is made by the Constitution, and, when accepted by election and qualification as Judge, the compact is complete.

A reference to the Constitutions of the various States of the Union, clearly establishes, that when the framers of a Constitution have created a constitutional office, established the duration of the term for which it shall be held, and have desired, that in case of a vacancy by death or resignation, the office should be filled by a new incumbent only for the residue of the term during which his predecessor would have held, they have so distinctly expressed themselves in the Constitution.

Constitution of New York, Art. VI, sec. 13; Constitution of Mississippi, Art. IV, secs. 2, 5, 20, 21; Constitution of New Jersey, Art. VI, sec. 6, subd. 1 and 2; Art. VII, sec. 2, subd. 2; Constitution of Louisiana, Title IV, arts. 63, 67; Constitution of Kentucky, Art. IV, secs. 3, 6, 7, 11, 13, 23, 26; Constitution of Michigan, Art. VI, sec. 14; Constitution of Wisconsin, Art. VII, secs. 4, 9.

Hoge & Wilson for Respondent.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., concurring.

More in deference to the earnest and ingenious argument of the respondent's counsel, and the interest of the question, than from any sense of the intrinsic difficulties of the subject, we have thought it proper to go into a full discussion of the points presented by this record, and to a reconsideration of our former decisions upon this matter. The facts may be thus briefly stated: In 1852, at the general election, Delos Lake was elected Judge of the Fourth District, for six years from first of January, 1853. In June, 1855, he resigned, and the Governor appointed J. S. Hager to fill the vacancy until the election in 1855. In July, 1855, the Governor issued his proclamation, in pursuance of law, for the election in September, in which proclamation was included this office — styling the officer to be elected a District Judge for the unexpired term of Delos Lake, resigned. The Board of Supervisors also gave notice in the same way. At the election, Hager was elected — was commissioned in this form — and entered on the office, and held it until the general election of 1858, when Caleb Burbank was voted for, and received a majority of the votes for this office. All the proceedings were regular in form, and he was commissioned by the Governor in due form, qualified, and entered upon the office. This proceeding is taken to oust him, upon the claim that Hager is entitled to the office.

---

People v. Burbank.

---

The question being as to the effect of Hager's election, we are called upon to construe the provisions of our Constitution, and to test by them the validity of the Acts of the Legislature under which the respondent claims. The preliminary propositions of the learned counsel for the respondent are not disputed; we yield to them our cordial sanction and entire approval. The delicate office of declaring an Act of the Legislature unconstitutional and void should never be exercised, unless there be a clear repugnancy between the inferior and the organic law. Courts have no legislative powers; they are merely the organs of laws already made; they can do no more than construe and give effect to them. But the power of declaring a particular statute unconstitutional, necessarily results from this very duty, since they could not declare the paramount law at all, if it were destroyed or nullified by the Legislature; they are bound to declare not only the law made by the Legislature, but that superior law to which the Legislature owes its existence. We concede, also, that a long and consistent recognition by the Legislative and Executive Departments of the Government, of the constitutionality of a system of laws, by reference to which the State Government has been guided, furnishes a still further reason for extreme caution on the part of the Judges in the exercise of this power; but we do not concede, in this particular instance, the force which the learned counsel claims for the argument. Without reference to the circumstances of extraordinary difficulty and embarrassment which characterized the early history of California legislation something perhaps might be urged against the authority of usage and passive acquiescence, when the short and feverish period of our political and social experience is considered. Only a few years have elapsed since California was admitted as a State into the Union, and if, as the counsel suggests, many events have been crowded into that brief space, it must be remembered, too, that Legislatures and people have been diverted in no ordinary degree by that very cause, from the attention given in older States to matters of government. The legislation of the State has been a signal illustration of this want of care, and the statute book is replete with crude and unconstitutional legislation; and if full effect were given to the argument, it would be impossible to say to what extent the Constitution would be altered. It is certain that the same course of argument so much insisted on, would, if effect were given to it, validate the entire State debt, and affirm the power of the Legislature to incur any conceivable amount of indebtedness for the future. Moreover, we might urge that the constitutionality of the laws under review never was, in any way, recognized by the Judicial department; we say in no way, for the mere fact that judgments of Judges holding under the law have been brought into this Court and passed on, proves nothing; this Court could take no notice of the persons rendering the judgment — no point being made as to their authority — nor could there have been, as the Judges were in office with a color of right, and in undisputed exercise of judicial functions. Besides all this, the question is not of the nature calculated to challenge sharp criticism or much inquiry. The Judges being in office without dispute as to title, and elections occurring at unfrequent intervals until the periodical elections, few men thought or spoke on the subject, until the case was brought for judgment directly before this Court. We think it a mistake to suppose that there has been, at any rate of late years, no question in the mind of the profession upon this point; the reverse is the fact, from the time when the subject began to be discussed; so soon as the question was made in this Court, it was decided.

---

---

Nor is this a matter as seems to be intimated, like many of those which, being once declared or acted on by the Legislature for a series of years, is protected by public policy—that policy which turns a Court instinctively from a scrutiny into the foundations of laws long established, and which, when overturned, carry down with them vested interests and rights, or create general confusion. The question, in its immediate results, is turned into a mere question of personal right and interest between two men. Every act done by a Judge, acting as such under a commission, and in open possession of the office, whether rightfully in office or not, is to all intents and purposes as valid, so far as third persons are concerned, as if he were both Judge de facto and de jure. We suppose this principle cannot be disputed. There is but little difference between an old Act and a new Act, so far as this question of acquiescence is concerned, if nothing or little have been done under the Act, or if no rights are vested under it. We think upon this question, then, we can proceed to construe the law, without any very controlling obstacle to our consideration of it, arising from the past history of the Government. But as this argument has been very much pressed, it may not be out of place to inquire into the particular facts upon which it is based.

The first Act passed on the subject was that of March 16th, 1850. St. 1850, p. 95, sec. 23. Act of the same year, p. 101, does not make for the respondent: Act of 1850, April 11, 1850, p. 206, sec. 46, though loosely drawn and omitting any provision for supplying the vacancy of County Judges, does in sec. 46 support respondent's claim by providing for vacancies in office "for the unexpired term." By the Act of April, 1851, the forty-sixth section of the Act of 1850, April, was (in effect) amended so as to provide for County Judges. In the Act of 1853, vacancies are provided for, but nothing said as to the tenure. The other Legislatures have done nothing to indicate their views on the question. The various Acts of 1850 and 1851, except the sections noticed, seem rather to lean to the side of the appellant; but it can hardly be contended that two Acts of the earliest of California Legislatures, passed before the Judiciary were organized under the popular elective system, should possess the controlling weight of an authentic exposition of the Constitution.

People v. Burbank.

---

We must, therefore, try this question by the Constitution, and here we find our chief difficulty; it is the difficulty of making clearer what the Constitution has made palpable. We might agree with the learned counsel, that the Constitution must generally be construed more by its own terms than by the aid of authorities from other States; but this is only true when there is something peculiar in the matter to be construed. If the same words, in the same or similar contexts, have elsewhere received a definite construction, the authority is entitled to the same weight in this as in other cases. The words, however, are plain enough of themselves. The first section of article sixth of the Constitution provides that the judicial power shall be vested in a Supreme Court, in District Courts, in County Courts, and in Justices of the Peace. Section five provides that the State shall be divided by the first Legislature into a convenient number of Districts, subject to such alteration, from time to time, as the public good may require; for each of which a District Judge shall be appointed by the joint vote of the Legislature at its first meeting, who shall hold his office for two years from the first day of January next after his election; after which said Judges shall be elected by the qualified electors of their respective Districts at the general election, and shall hold their office for the term of six years. If the question turned on the meaning of these words—"the said Judges shall hold their offices for the term of six years," we apprehend no dispute would arise as to the meaning. That "six years" applied to all the Judges, do not mean one, two, three, or four, or five years, is plain enough. The language is general; it embraces all the Judges; it refers to the offices of all; declares how they shall be filled, and the duration of the enjoyment. If the Convention meant to say that certain terms should be assigned to the office of Judge, and those terms filled without reference to the number of incumbents, the apt words to express this idea would have been employed, just as in the Constitutions of New York, Louisiana, Kentucky, and other States, language was used to convey the idea. Thus, in New York, when speaking of Judges, "if the office become vacant before the expiration of the regular term for which he was elected, the vacancy may be filled by appointment by the Governor, until it shall be supplied at the next general election of Judges, when it shall be filled by election for the residue of the unexpired term." But this and like provisions in other Constitutions were wholly unnecessary, according to the adverse construction. If it were expedient that District Judges should be elected for a term of six years when first filling the office, what reason or sense is there in the fact that the new Judge is the successor of a Judge who had not filled out his term, which should alter the rule? But two answers can be given: that the Judges are classified, (but there is no classification provided for by our Constitution) or else, to secure conformity of elections; but this policy is not indicated, and is in fact impracticable.

---

People v. Burbank.

We come now to see how these same words, or similar words, are construed in other States, and then we will examine whether there is anything in other provisions of the Constitution which affects the language quoted. In the People v. Garey, (6 Cowen, 646) it was held that the seventh section of the fourth article of the Constitution of New York, which declared that persons appointed to the office of Justices of the Peace, should hold office for four years, inhibited the Legislature from increasing or diminishing this term, and that this could not be done by the creation or division of the counties. The counsel did not pretend, in that case, that the Legislature had this power directly, but it was contended that they had the power to make new counties; and if the Justice was no longer a resident of the county for which he was elected, this removed him from office; but the Court held otherwise. This case was affirmed by the Court of Errors of New York, (9 Cowen, 640). In People v. Green, (2 Wend. 266) this same question came up in another form. The provision of the then Constitution of New York is strikingly analogous to the section of our own. The eighth section of the fourth article declares that Sheriffs, etc., shall be chosen by the electors of the respective counties once in every three years, and as often as vacancies shall happen; they shall hold no other office, and shall be ineligible, etc., and the Governor may remove them at any time within the three years for which they shall be elected, etc. Judge Marcy said, "there is no express designation of the term for which Sheriffs shall hold their office, but it is fixed at three years by the strongest implication."

People v. Burbank.

---

We extract a portion of the opinion of Justice Marcy, for the aptness of its application to the case: "By the general provisions elections for Sheriffs are not to be held oftener than once in every three years, except in cases of vacancy. In what part of the Constitution is it declared, or from which of its provisions are we authorized to infer an exception, in the case of a person elected to an office, vacant by the death, resignation or removal of his predecessor? Why shall he not hold as long as he would have done if elected at the end of a full term? It is the designation of the stated period for the election that fixes the term of holding, and this designation is applied to every election. Apply the language of the Constitution to a single county, to that of Cayuga, for instance; it is, that the Sheriff of this county shall be elected once in every three years, and as often as a vacancy shall happen. A vacancy did happen by the death of Hughes, and without the latter clause of the foregoing sentence, no election could have been held until three years from the previous one; but I cannot infer from this clause any restriction upon the term of Green, the successor of Hughes. It does not express or imply that he is to serve out only the residue of Hughes' term. Green was elected, as I understand the provision, to fill the vacant office, and not merely to serve out the vacant term of his predecessor. I am inclined to think that a diversity of opinion on this subject has arisen from different applications of the term 'vacancies' in the section of the Constitution which we are now considering. It has been sometimes applied to the office as contradistinguished from the term of service, and at others, to the term of office. I understand it as applicable to the office alone. When Green came into the office, he took it with all the rights, powers and incidents belonging to it under any circumstances, one of which was a term of three years. The case of Sheriffs has been assimilated to that of Senators, who are declared by the Constitution to be chosen for four years; but those chosen to fill vacancies, hold only for the residue of the unexpired term of their predecessors. This limitation to the holding does not result from the fact that they are elected to fill vacancies, but from other parts of the Constitution from which it is necessarily implied. The provision classifying the Senators, and vacating the seat of one from each District in every year, could not be carried into effect if a Senator elected to fill a vacancy were to hold a full term of four years. But permitting a Sheriff to hold for three years in case he is elected to fill a vacancy, is not, like the case of a Senator, incompatible with any other part of the Constitution." The same question again came up in 11th Wendell, 135, People v. Coutand, in the case of a Register, to whom the same words of the Constitution quoted in the last case applied. Chief Justice Savage took the same ground, re-affirming the decisions before cited. He says: "Taking the whole section together it is as if it read, 'Every person elected Sheriff, Register, etc., shall hold his office for three years, etc.' If such had been the phraseology, there would have been no reason for doubt; I think there is as little now." What is the difference "between persons elected as Judges," and "Judges shall hold their offices" for six years?

---

People v. Burbank.

---

The Constitution of Tennessee is very similar to ours, providing that the people shall elect, etc., for the counties, one Sheriff, etc.; the Sheriff for two years, the Register for four. If a vacancy occur after the election, it is to be filled by the Justices until the election, when the office shall be filled by the qualified voters: Held by the Supreme Court, that the election of the Register, after the vacancy, was for the full four years. (Powers v. Hurst, 2 Hump. 24.) The Texas Constitution provides: "There shall be a Clerk of the District Court for each county, who shall be elected by the qualified voters for members of the Legislature, and who shall hold his office for four years. In case of a vacancy, the Judge of the District shall have the power to appoint a Clerk until a regular election can be held: Held that the person elected, though during the term which, if a vacancy had not happened, would have been that of the predecessor, holds for the period of four years. (Bunton v. Wilson, 4 Texas, 410.) Several other decisions have been made in the same State to this effect. The same principle is held in Marshall v. Howard, 5 Md. 423; Hughes v. Buckingham, 5 Smedes & M. 649, holds the same general doctrine. That case is distinguished from Smith v. Halfacre, in 6 How. (Miss.) 391, by the fact that by the Constitution of Mississippi, biennial elections were fixed on first Monday in November, and that day was fixed as the commencement of the term of officers elected at that election. But, as we have said in Brodie v. Waller, the Constitution of this State, though it fixes the period of tenure, does not fix any day for the commencement of the terms of the Judges. This position was vigorously assailed by the learned counsel, but, we think, without success. Nor, if we are mistaken in this view, does it at all follow, because a day of the commencement of the terms of judicial officers is given by the Constitution, that it applies to Judges to be afterwards elected for new Districts; nor, if it did, would it result that the Judges elected in consequence of a vacancy, so to speak, must necessarily be elected only to fill that vacancy. We are unable to perceive the logical connection between the fixing of a particular day for an incumbent to take his office, and the extent of the period for which he is to hold it.

People v. Burbank.

---

Other authorities might be added; but in the absence of any opposing case — for Smith v. Halfacre turns upon matters peculiar to the Constitution of Mississippi — it is wholly unnecessary to adduce more authority to aid a construction which, really, needs no extrinsic support.

If we look from the words to the policy they were employed to declare, the result is the same. The Constitution of California shows a wise and peculiar solicitude to secure the independence of the Judiciary. For that purpose, it provides that the Supreme and District Judges shall not be eligible to any other office during the terms for which they shall have been elected; and further, that their compensation shall not be increased or diminished during that term. When we see, in connection with these provisions, the unqualified declaration that the District Judges shall hold their office for the term of six years, and an express provision that the duration of offices fixed by the Constitution shall not be altered by the Legislature, we are constrained to the conclusion that the words fixing the period of tenure — by far the most essential means to the same end — were designed to be so construed as to be most effectual for its accomplishment. It is just and right that this should be so. A lawyer who abandons his business and clients, and surrenders all claims to other official promotion, should have some guarantee of the continuance of his office; but this consideration is nothing compared to the paramount policy of securing the impartiality and independence of Judges, which can be most safely assured by a tenure of respectable duration.

People v. Burbank.

---

It is urged that the fifteenth and sixteenth sections of the sixth article of the Constitution control and limit, or show a different construction of the third section. Those sections simply provide that the Judges shall be ineligible, as before observed, and that their compensation shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which they shall have been elected. It is inferred, from this, that the Constitution has divided the office into fixed terms, to which the incumbents are appurtenant. But we think this is not true. All the Constitution means by the expression "during the term," is during the time or period for which the officer is elected. When the Constitution says the Judge shall hold his office for six years, it means that this period of six years is the term of his office; it is that quantum of time assigned to him by the Constitution as his period of the enjoyment of the office; and this quantum may not improperly be called a term. If A is elected District Judge, and enters upon the office, or accepts it for a day, he is disqualified for other office during the whole period of six years; and so, after his election, it would not be competent for the Legislature to change the compensation. These observations we apply to the District Judges alone; as we said in Brodie v. Weller, the provisions of the Constitution in respect to Justices of the Supreme Court are different in respect to terms.

The remaining question is as to the validity of Hager's election. It is said that the Act under which the election of 1855 was held, provided for the election of District Judges to succeed those who had not served for the full time for which they were elected, only "to fill an unexpired term;" that the proclamation of the Governor was to the same effect; and so the commission; and hence, it is contended, that Hager was not legally elected. But we think this position is not well taken. The law required an election to fill this office. The Legislature could direct the time and prescribe the mode of the election, but could not change the tenure; it could no more prescribe that the Judge elected should hold office for a part of a constitutional period than for double the time; the function for the proclamation was not to proclaim the law, but the fact of a vacancy; the proclamation cannot change the law, much less the Constitution. So much of the Act as limited the period of incumbency is void; but it is well settled that though an Act may be void, in part, for unconstitutionality, it is good so far as constitutional. This has been often held. The observations of Mr. Justice Huger, of the Constitutional Court of South Carolina, state very clearly the rule on this subject: "If a commission, issued by the Governor, cannot control the provisions of an Act of the Legislature, neither can an Act of the Legislature control a provision of the Constitution; and for the same reason, neither possess original power; in both it is derivative; each, therefore, must be governed by the authority under which it acts. Supreme power exists in the people alone. They have, by the Constitution, declared what portion of that power shall be used by the different departments — neither has a right to encroach upon the other.

"If the people declare and ordain in their Constitution, that an office shall be held by a particular tenure, or that the obligation of a contract shall not be violated, it would be as much usurpation in the Legislature to alter that tenure, or violate the obligation of the contract, as it would be in the Governor to commission for a longer period than directed by the Legislature.

"It is made the duty of the Judiciary to enforce the paramount law; and it is unworthy of consideration, whether it be an Act of the Legislature conflicting with the commission of a Governor, or a provision of the Constitution with an Act of the Legislature, or two Acts with each other. In every case, the Judges are bound to use their utmost discretion." And the same Court said in another case: "The Governor, in granting a commission, acts ministerially, and therefore ought to make it conform to the law and to the Constitution. The commission does not confer the office; it is only evidence of it, and cannot change the tenure by which the Constitution declares that it shall be held. As soon as an ordinary is elected, he is in office under the Constitution, and entitled to all the rights and immunities conferred by that instrument."

We have thus, more at length than the difficulties of the case warranted, given our views upon this subject. It is important that the law upon the question should be settled, so that it may be understood for the future; and to that end we have reconsidered the case of Brodie v. Weller, 11 Cal. 77, and re-affirm it. The principles there laid down are conclusive of the merits of this action.

People v. Templeton.

---

The judgment of the Court below is reversed, and judgment ordered to be entered in the District Court for the appellants.

PEOPLE ex rel. FOX v. TEMPLETON.

F. was elected, in the month of May, 1857, County Judge of San Mateo county, in pursuance of the provisions of an Act "To Organize and Establish the County of San Mateo." No proclamation of the Governor was issued calling this election. At the general election in 1858, in pursuance of the proclamation of the Governor, an election was held for the same office, and T. was elected: Held, That F. was entitled to the office.

By the Constitution, Judges of the County Court hold their offices, when elected, for four years. It is in the power of the Legislature, in organizing, or after organizing, a new county, to prescribe the time of elections for county officers, and also the period of the commencement of their terms; but it is not competent for the Legislature to change the period of the tenure of the office of Judge of County Courts, any more than to change those of Supreme and District Judges. It is evident, from the terms of this Act, that it was contemplated that these officers — the Judge among them — should enter upon their offices as soon as the election was announced, or within a reasonable time thereafter.

From the time of the assumption of the office, the term of the Judge elected would legally commence, and terminate at the expiration of four years from that time.

APPEAL from the Twelfth District, County of San Francisco.

This was an action brought to try the right to the office of County Judge of San Mateo county.

On the twelfth day of May, 1856, in pursuance of the provisions of "An Act to Repeal the several Charters of the City of San Francisco, and to Establish the Boundaries of the City and County of San Francisco, and to Consolidate the Government thereof," an election was held for the various county officers, including that of County Judge for the County of San Mateo, and at such election, the relator, Benjamin F. Fox, was elected County Judge, and soon after qualified and entered upon the discharge of the duties of such office. The law under which this election was held, did not go into effect until after the day of the election.

---

People v. Templeton.

---

On the eighteenth of April, 1857, an Act was passed "To Reorganize and establish the County of San Mateo." This Act provided for the election of all the county officers on the second Monday in May, 1857. Under the provisions of this Act, another election for the office of County Judge was held, and the relator was again elected, and soon thereafter was duly commissioned and entered upon the duties of the office. No proclamation of the Governor, calling either of the elections, was issued. At the general election in the year 1858, in pursuance of the proclamation of the Governor, and notice of the Board of Supervisors of that county, an election was held for the office of County Judge of San Mateo county, and the defendant, Templeton, was elected to that office, and soon after was commissioned, qualified and entered upon the duties thereof, ousting the relator, Fox, who now brings this action to try the right to said office.

By the judgment of the Court below, the defendant, Templeton, was excluded from the office, and Fox was held to be entitled to it. Defendant appealed to this Court.

W. T. Gough for Appellant.

Three elections are relied upon by the respondent.

1st. The election in May, 1856, is absolutely void. People ex rel. McDougall v. Johnston, 6 Cal. Rep. 673.

2d. The election of September, 1856, was held without a proclamation; over six hundred votes were cast in the county at that election, and of these only thirty-eight for County Judge.

a. Such an election is void and fraudulent, and confers no rights. The People v. Benham, 3 Cal. Rep. 477; The People ex rel. McKune v. Gov. Weller, 11 Cal. Rep. 49.

b. That the present County of San Mateo is a different county from that in existence at the time of that election, both as to the extent and organization. See Acts of April 19th, 1856, and Statutes of 1857, page 223.

c. The Statute of 1857 is to "Reorganize and Establish the County of San Mateo." As to titles of statutes, see Cohen et als. v. Barrett & Sherwood, 5 Cal. Rep. 209.

d. The Special Act of 1857, (Stat. p. 65) was passed for the purpose of legalizing the acts of the officers of San Mateo county, but, by its provisions, before any officers were entitled to its benefits, they were required to conform to its provisions, one of which was, that no officer claiming its benefits should continue in office longer than the special election for officers of that county, which took place in May, 1857.

The respondent voluntarily complied with the requisitions of that Act; took the oath of office required by it, relied upon it, held himself out to the community as acting under it, and finally ran for office at the election of May, 1857, specified by its provisions, was elected thereat, qualified and entered upon the discharge of the duties of the office, under the election in May, 1857.

e. He is estopped from setting up the election in September, 1856, by his subsequent acts. 1 Zabriskie's N. Jersey Rep. 403; 4 Kent, 268-9, notes c and 1; Carpenter v. Stellwood, 12 Barb. 128.

f. That by his said acts, appellant was induced to act. Duel v. Bear River Co., 5 Cal. Rep. 85.

Having thus disposed of these preliminary questions, we come now to consider what is deemed to be the real issue in this case.

3d. The respondent and relator was elected in May, 1857, at a special election, County Judge of San Mateo county, for a term — if any term under the said election ever existed — which has long expired. See Act to Reorganize and Establish the County of San Mateo, Statutes of 1857, pp. 222-3, sec. 6.

It is conceded in this argument, that the Legislature has the power to shorten or lengthen the terms of all offices, except those fixed by the Constitution, and except, in this case, the County Judge. See Const., art. 6, sec. 7.

It is taken for granted, that in construing statutes force and effect must be given to all their parts, agreeably to the intention of the Legislature. But for these we refer to Gore v. Brazier, 3 Mass. 523-40; Kelly Bank Petitioners, 23 Pick. 93, and to other cases there cited.

The intention of the Legislature must govern in construing statutes, when it can be ascertained. Smith v. Randall, 6 Cal. Rep. 50.

a. What, then, was the intent of the Legislature in this case?

1. It seems, indeed, so evident, that he who runs may read and understand — that it was their intention to extend the terms of all the officers of the County of San Mateo, six months longer than the ordinary terms; or, to speak more correctly, to allow them to hold — 1st. For six months; 2d. For the terms fixed by laws; i. e., other laws. See Stat. 1857, p. 223, cited above.

2. This would make the tenure of the office of County Judge by the relator, four years and six months, an unconstitutional term. Const., art. 6, sec. 8.

b. Now, what we contend for is, that force and effect must be given to the term expressed by the law: "Shall hold their respective offices until the next general election" — that is, from May, 1857, to September, 1857 — for the intention of the Legislature is manifest, that they intended the ordinary term to commence at the general election in September, 1857, for they say that their holding "after the next general election, the same, in all respects, as if elected at the next general election"; and that the primary intent of the Legislature was to fill the offices of the county up until the succeeding general election.

1. It is conceded that the Legislature has not the power to shorten the term of an office, the length of which is fixed by the Constitution; but have they not the power to establish the commencement of that term at the general election, and in the meantime fill the office till that election? Take case of the office of District Judge, the term of which is fixed by the Constitution to commence at the general election. Suppose a new District is formed in February, would not the Legislature have power to fill that office, by special enactment, until the time when the constitutional term would commence?

2. The Act of May, 1857, above referred to, is a special election. It is also specially defined to be a special election by the Statute of 1857, page 65.

Special elections are defined to be such as are held to fill vacancies. Art. 7, Act concerning Offices, 1851; Compiled Laws, 245, and Act to Regulate Elections, 1850.

c. If the relator and respondent was elected to fill the vacancy until the general election in September, 1857, his term of office has long since expired; for surely it will not be seriously contended that by virtue of a special election in May, 1857, to fill a vacancy, the relator was elected to fill that, and also a constitutional term which commenced at the general election in September, 1857; for it is not pretended that he was elected in any manner at the last aforesaid election.

d. If the relator and respondent was not elected to fill a vacancy at the special election in May, 1857, then the Statute of May, 1857, calling for a special election to fill the offices of the County of San Mateo, so far as it relates to the election of the County Judge, it is urged, is void.

C. N. Fox for Respondent.

I. The first point made by appellant is, that the election set up by relator, which took place in May, 1856, is absolutely void, and for this he relies on the case of the People v. Johnson, 6 Cal. 673.

a. But it is respectfully submitted, with all due deference to the opinion of the learned Judges who then occupied the bench, that that decision is erroneous. It was evidently founded upon the last section of the schedule annexed to the Consolidation Bill; and in order to give that section a liberal construction, the Court has overridden the express will of the Legislature as found in other portions of that schedule. See Stat. 1856, p. 176.

b. Even if that decision be correct, the subsequent Act of the Legislature (Stat. 1857, p. 65) so far cured the defect in the former election as to confirm the relator in office until his successor was elected and qualified, and entitled to enter upon the duties of the office according to law.

II. The relator was again elected in May, 1857, under the "Act to Reorganize and Establish the County of San Mateo." The term of office prescribed by that Act was "until the next general election," and for the term fixed by law from and after the next general election, the same in all respects as if elected at the next general election. Stat. 1857, p. 223.

a. The term of office of County Judge is fixed, not only by statute,

People v. Templeton.

---

but by the Constitution, at four years. (Art. 6, sec. 8 of the Constitution; Wood's Digest, p. 151, art. 652, and p. 558, art. 2860.) And under these statutes the term begins and ends, and the elections take place at specified terms, "except in cases otherwise provided by special enactment." In this case, the election and term of the relator was "otherwise provided for by special enactment," and that same special Act provided that future elections and terms should be governed by the general law above referred to. See Stat. 1857, p. 223, above cited.

b. Where the Act organizing a county prescribes the term of the officers first elected, and no provision is made for the election of their successors, the election of successors must be governed by the general law. People v. Church, 6 Cal. R. 76; People v. Colton, 6 Cal. Rep. 84.

III. The construction sought to be put upon the Statute of April, 1857, by appellant, cannot be maintained. He asks the Court, in effect, to put what he deems a literal construction (so far as the office of County Judge is concerned) upon that part of the Act which provides for the term "until the next general election," and to wholly disregard the remainder of that sentence. If any part of that Act is nugatory, as applied to the case of the relator, it is that part to which appellant asks the Court now to give force and effect, and nugatory, for the reason that it was unnecessary. The relator was already in office under the election of 1856, and the Act of March, 1857, confirming him in office; and under that title was entitled to continue in office, whatever may have been the result of the election in May, 1857, until the first Monday in April, 1858, the time when the Court below very properly intimates his term began under the election of May, 1857.

a. But suppose his term, under the election of 1857, did commence immediately after the election, as appellant claims it did, his construction cannot then hold good, for the Legislature had no power, even if they so intended, to provide for the election of a County Judge for a term of six months only; they cannot abridge the constitutional term of four years. With reference to the office of County Judge, the Constitution fixes no time when the term shall begin, or when the officer shall be elected. The term must be four years; it may begin on the day fixed by the general law, or on any other day, according to contingent circumstances. People v. Langdon, 8 Cal. R. 1; People v. Whitman, 10 Cal. R. 38; Brodie v. Weller, 11 Cal. R. 77.

People v. Templeton.

b. The Legislature in that Act has assumed to specify the effect of its provisions; and if the term did commence in May, 1857, the Court has no power to say it was a six months' term, but must give the full term prescribed by the Act, or, at least, so much of it as can be given under the Constitution — four years — and declare the Act void as to the residue.

When the statute assumes to specify the effects of a certain provision, we must presume that all the effects intended by the law makers are stated. Perkins v. Thornbury, 10 Cal. R. 189; People v. Whitman, Ib. 38; Lee v. Evans, 8 Cal. R. 424; Bird v. Dennison, 7 Cal. R. 307.

IV. Appellant tells us this was a special election. We deny the proposition. It was an election held under a special enactment, but it was not a special election, in the legal sense of that phrase. A special election is one held to fill a vacancy in an office already existing. This was an election to fill offices created by the Act which provided for the election.

a. To give this Act the construction asked by appellant, would be equivalent to overturning the organic act of almost every new county in the State. Nearly every Act organizing a new county, makes the first election come in the spring, and, in the same manner that this does, extends the terms of the officers first elected; in some of them, that extension is made in express words as to the office of County Judge. See Act to Organize the County of Merced, Stat. 1855, p. 125; Act to Organize the County of Del Norte, Stat. 1857, p. 35, and others.

V. This case differs from the case of the People ex rel. McKune v. Weller, 11 Cal. 49, cited by appellant, in this: In that case the party claiming the office against his predecessor was relator; here the case is reversed. He who claims the office against his predecessor, has seized upon that office, and compelled the predecessor to bring his action. The rule must then be reversed; defendant's title must first be examined, and if he has none, that alone will be decisive of the case. Doane v. Scannell, 7 Cal. R. 393; People v. Scannell, 7 Cal. R. 432.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., concurring.

Leaving out some facts which are immaterial in the view we have taken of this question, the case may be thus stated: Fox, the relator, was elected Judge of San Mateo County, in May, 1857, that being the day fixed by the Act of April 18, 1857, for an election for officers of that county. The defendant was elected at the general election of 1858. The Act of April, 1857, (Session Acts, 222) is rather ambiguous in the section authorizing the election; it is as follows: "There shall be an election held for all the county officers of said county, and to ascertain the place preferred by its electors, for their county seat, to be hereafter fixed by Act of Legislature, on the second Monday of May next; and the officers elected at such election shall hold their respective offices until the next general election, and for the terms fixed by law, from and after the next general election, the same in all respects as if elected at the next general election, and until their successors are respectively elected and qualified, as provided by law."

By the Constitution, Judges of the County Courts hold their offices, when elected, for four years. It is in the power of the Legislature, in organizing, or after organizing a new county, to prescribe the time of elections for county officers, and also the period of the commencement of their terms; but it is not competent for the Legislature to change the period of the tenure of the office of Judges of County Courts, any more than to change those of Supreme and District Judges. It is evident, from the terms of this Act—"the officers elected shall hold their respective offices until the next general election, and for the terms fixed by law"—that it was contemplated that these officers—the Judge among them—should enter upon their offices as soon as the election was announced, or within a reasonable time thereafter. From the time of the assumption of the office, the term of the Judge elected would legally commence, and terminate, of course, at the expiration of four years from that time. If the Act is to be construed as extending the term beyond this, as probably is the literal construction, the Act so far is void, leaving in force only so much as is constitutional. (See People ex rel. v. Burbank, ante 378.) The other points have been already decided by this Court.

The judgment is affirmed.

RITTER v. STOCK et al.

Where the evidence produced on trial in the Court below, is conflicting, and the question is one of fact, this Court will not disturb the verdict of the jury, on the ground that the case is an equity proceeding.

A jury who have heard the evidence and observed the manner of the witnesses produced before them, have a better opportunity of forming a correct judgment, than an Appellate Court from merely reading the statement of the evidence.

APPEAL from the Twelfth District, County of San Francisco.

Shafter, Heydenfeldt & Park and J. B. Hart for Appellant.

H. S. Love for Respondents.

TERRY, C. J., delivered the opinion of the Court — BALDWIN, J., and FIELD, J., concurring.

The questions presented by the record, are purely questions of fact.

The case was submitted to the jury on special issues, which were found in favor of defendant.

The evidence on the questions submitted was conflicting, and the verdict depended upon the weight which the jury attached to the testimony of each witness. Upon this point, the jury, having heard the testimony and observed the manner of the various witnesses produced before them, had better opportunities of forming a correct judgment than the Appellate Court from merely reading the statement of the evidence; and we are not disposed — although this is an equity case, and the verdict of the jury is not binding on the Court — to interfere with the verdict and ruling of the Judge who tried the cause.

Judgment affirmed.

Burke v. Table Mountain Water Co. & Laforge.

---

BURKE et al. v. THE TABLE MOUNTAIN WATER CO. &
LAFORGE.

In an action of ejectment, where the complaint alleges possession in the defendant, a denial in the answer in the following words is not sufficient to put at issue the question of possession: "Defendant denies that he has unlawfully, wrongfully, and in violation of the plaintiff's rights, had the possession," etc. This denial might be true, and yet the defendant be in possession. The defendant was called on to answer, not only the character of the possession, but the fact of possession.

The failure to deny a material averment, is an admission of the facts contained in such averment, and such admission is conclusive against the pleader.

The sufficiency of a notice to the adverse party, to produce on trial a certain paper in his possession, is a question of discretion in the Court trying the case.

Where it is impossible to produce the paper between the time of giving the notice and the trial, that fact should be made to appear.

Literal accuracy cannot be expected in the description given in the notice of a paper in the possession of the adverse party. Such description as will apprise a man of ordinary intelligence, of the document desired, is sufficient.

In an action of ejectment against two persons, where one of the defendants had previously surrendered the possession of the premises to his co-defendant, this fact is sufficient to support the finding of the Court, that the possession was in one and not in the other.

On re-hearing: The reasons given by a Judge in his findings are no part of the judgment. The point decided is the thing fixed by the judgment.

In an action of ejectment against a company and one L, where the Court found that the company was in possession, and that L was not, and gave judgment against the company only, L is not precluded from showing his possession in any future proceedings; his right to the possession, if he has any, is not concluded by the judgment and finding. Such judgment determines only the fact that L was not in the actual possession.

An agreement of cancellation of the lease of a ditch, and the surrender of the possession to the lessor, is sufficient evidence of the surrender of such possession, although it does not appear that there was a consideration expressed in such instrument of cancellation and surrender.

APPEAL from the Fifth District, County of Calaveras.

This was an action of ejectment to recover the possession of a certain ditch for the conveyance of water for mining purposes.

The complaint sets out the title of plaintiffs, and avers "that the defendants, the Table Mountain Water Company and A. B. Laforge, well knowing the premises, and well knowing the plaintiffs were the owners of such property, and entitled to the possession and use thereof as aforesaid, have unlawfully, wrongfully, and in violation of the rights of the plaintiffs herein, at all times since the said fifteenth day of March, A. D. 1858, had the possession thereof, and ever since said day wrongfully and unlawfully detained possession of the same from these plaintiffs; and that said defendants do now wrongfully and unlawfully detain the possession," etc.

This allegation is attempted to be traversed in the answer of the Table Mountain Water Company by the following:

"The said defendants, the Table Mountain Water Company, for answer to the plaintiffs' complaint denies that the said Company has unlawfully, wrongfully, and in violation of plaintiffs' rights, had the possession of the certain ditch, canal or flume described in said plaintiffs' complaint, and denies that they unlawfully and wrongfully detain the possession of the same."

The cause was tried in the Court below without a jury, and by the findings of the Court it appears that on the twelfth day of February, 1857, a judgment of foreclosure of mortgage of the premises, in favor of E. A. Rowe v. The Table Mountain Water Company, was duly rendered in the District Court of Calveras county, and that subsequent the property was sold under the decree; that at such sale, Bowman and plaintiff Hughes became the purchasers, and a deed was duly made by the Sheriff conveying to them the premises; that subsequently Bowman sold and conveyed his interest to the plaintiff Burke.

On the thirty-first of October, 1856, the Table Mountain Water Company leased the premises to the defendant Laforge for the term of five years, and under this lease he entered into possession. On the sixteenth of March, 1858, and before the commencement of this suit, Laforge, by a written contract with the Company, surrendered to them the possession of the ditch. This action was commenced on the twelfth of April, 1858, and the Court finds that plaintiffs were then the owners, and entitled to the possession of the ditch.

On the day of trial, plaintiffs served upon the defendants notice to produce on trial "the written agreement canceling the lease alleged to have been made between A. B. Laforge and the Table Mountain Water Company—said agreement having been made by A. B. Laforge and the Table Mountain Water Company — or parol evidence will be given of its contents." The lease was signed by the individual members of the company, and the agreement surrendering possession is alleged was made to them. The defendants did not produce the agreement, and parol evidence was admitted on trial of its contents. Plaintiffs had judgment against the Table Mountain Water Company only, no judgment being taken against Laforge. All of the defendants appealed to this Court.

---

Burke v. Table Mountain Water Co. & Laforge.

---

Robinson & Beatty and Hardy & Vaughn for Appellants.

I. The Court below erred in overruling the motion for a nonsuit, because at the time said motion was overruled, there was no evidence showing the Table Mountain Water Company was, or had been, in the possession of the property sued for, and had shown as facts entitling them to a recovery against A. B. Laforge.

II. The Court below erred in admitting parol evidence as to the contents of a certain written paper in relation to the surrender or transfer of a certain lease, because the notice to produce the paper did not describe the paper, the contents of which were proved, but a paper signed by other and different parties.

III. The Court below erred in refusing to strike out and exclude the evidence of James Brady in relation to the contents of the within instrument, in regard to which he testified, for the following reasons: First. The instrument about which he testified did not express any consideration on its face, and was therefore void under the Statute of Frauds; hence no sufficient foundation had been laid for the introduction of secondary evidence.

IV. The evidence does not justify the finding of facts by the Court.

Latham & Sunderland for Respondent.

The only questions are: First. Does the finding of the Court support the judgment? And, Second. Was there error in admitting parol evidence of the contents of the transfer or surrender of the lease?

1. The finding is complete upon all points — that the corporation was the owner of the property in dispute; mortgaged it; that the mortgage was foreclosed, sold and deeded by the Sheriff; that plaintiffs succeeded to the right of the purchaser at Sheriff's sale, and that the company, at the time of bringing suit and at the trial, was in possession. The defendant, the Table Mountain Water Company, being defendant in the foreclosure suit, and in possession of the property at the commencement of the ejectment suit, the proceedings being regular, there could be no defense by the company.

---

Burke v. Table Mountain Water Co. & Laforge.

---

2. There was no error in admitting the parol evidence.

I. The evidence was against the corporation, and they do not now complain.

II. Laforge cannot complain, because there is no judgment against him.

III. The notice in writing was sufficient; and if not, the verbal notice on the trial was. Defendants made no showing why they could not produce the papers.

It is said, however, that the paper is shown to have been void for want of a consideration expressed therein. The witness does not pretend to say there was no consideration expressed in the agreement; he says Laforge was to be paid for his improvements, but that was not in the paper. This answer was not in response to a question as to the contents of the paper, nor does it purport to be.

Again: the construction of the paper must be taken most strongly against the defendants, they having refused to produce the paper. Defendants' counsel had it in the morning of the day of trial; the presumption is, it was still in his possession in the Court-house. Such presumption becomes conclusive when the same attorney refuses or declines to show that it has passed from his possession, or is then at his office, or at a distance. The statute, as also the rules of evidence prior to the passage of the law, require only reasonable notice. What is reasonable notice, the Judge who tries the case below can better determine than this Court.

IV. The answer of the company does not deny that they are in possession; and as between plaintiffs and the company, there was no issue to which Brady's testimony could be pertinent. The Court found the company in possession, from the pleadings themselves, and not from the evidence of the contents of the paper.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., and FIELD, J., concurring.

---

Burke v. Table Mountain Water Co. & Laforge.

---

This action of ejectment was brought to recover a certain ditch. One Laforge was a defendant, but no judgment was recovered against him. The complaint charges that the defendant — the Table Mountain Water Company — was in possession. The answer of the company does not deny this averment in any such manner as to put it in issue. The answer denies that this defendant has “unlawfully, wrongfully, and in violation of plaintiffs’ rights, had the possession,” etc. But this might be perfectly true, and yet the defendant be in the possession. What the complaint called the defendant to answer, was not only the character of the possession, but the fact of possession by it, and a failure to deny this averment is an admission of it. This admission is conclusive evidence of the fact admitted. It is, therefore, immaterial, so far as the company are concerned, whether the Court erred or not in its admission or rejection of evidence in respect to an admitted fact — though we are not satisfied, as will be seen hereafter, that any substantial error was committed, to the injury of the defendants. Laforge was discharged from the suit. The Court found he was not in possession, hence he could not be sued in this action, and was properly discharged; if he was in possession, the Table Mountain Water Company, having confessed their possession, and not having set up Laforge’s title, or shown any connection with it, judgment was properly rendered against it. But it is argued that error has been committed to the prejudice of Laforge; that though the judgment was for him, yet the predicate of that judgment was the finding that he was not in possession, and had surrendered all his right to the Table Mountain Water Company, or the members of it, and the control of the property; and that this finding was improperly made in this — that parol evidence was admitted of a certain paper purporting to be an agreement of cancellation of a lease from the company to Laforge. Notice was served on the defendants’ attorneys, on the day of the trial, to produce this paper. It was shown that this paper was that day in the possession of one of the attorneys of defendant. The sufficiency of notice to produce a paper shown to be in the possession of a party is a question of discretion; and if it were possible to procure it between the time of giving notice and the trial, that fact should be made to appear. In this instance, it does appear that the paper was present, or in the hands or within the control of the defendant. There is nothing in the technical point that the agreement was between the members of the company and Laforge, and not between Laforge and the company. Literal accuracy cannot be expected in the description of a paper in the possession of the adverse party; such description as will apprise a man of ordinary intelligence of the document desired is enough. Nor is there anything in the point that the witness Brady testified that no consideration was expressed in this instrument. We understand him only to say that Laforge was to be paid for some improvements, and this was not expressed in the writing. The fact that the agreement was executed and carried into effect, and the further fact that the defendants refused to produce the paper, go far to show that it was a valid agreement; but whether it was or was not, if Laforge surrendered the possession to the company, it was enough to support the finding that the company was, and Laforge was not, in possession. The company did not set up this agreement — indeed, could not — and Laforge by it parted with any possession he had before.

---

Burke v. Table Mountain Water Co. & Laforge.

---

The judgment is affirmed.

On re-hearing in this case, the following opinion was rendered by BALDWIN, J.—TERRY, C. J., and FIELD, J., concurring.

On petition for a re-hearing.

The finding which is objected to is that Laforge was not in possession. To prove that he was not, parol evidence of the contents of a paper purporting to be an agreement of a cancellation of a lease was offered and admitted. It was objected that no consideration was shown for this agreement. But as a verdict could not be found against Laforge, unless he was in possession, we do not see that this proof was inadmissible, for the agreement was evidence of a surrender of a former possession, whether there was a consideration for it or not. The finding was, therefore, right. At least, Laforge cannot complain. Judgment is for him. The reason given for the conclusion is not res judicata as to him, so as to bind him in any future proceeding. Though the Court decided he had no title and no possession, and therefore he was improperly joined as a defendant, yet it also decided that the plaintiff had no claim on him, and could recover nothing. We do not understand that the reasons given for a finding are judgments. The point decided is the thing fixed by the judgment, but the reasons are not. The only point adjudged is the fact that Laforge is not in possession, and that result was reached by testimony proper for that purpose. His right to the possession, if he has any, is not concluded by this judgment and finding. But there was evidence enough for the Court below to base its action on — that he was not, in fact, in possession; and this is the only fact really decided. See Garner v. Marshall, 9 Cal. 270.

---

Laforge's right is just as good, therefore, now, as it was before the trial; the effect of the judgment being to determine the fact that he was not in actual possession; and, according to the case just cited, actual possession was necessary in order to sustain an action of ejectment against him.

We think, therefore, that conceding everything to the argument of the counsel — which seems to us to be more plausible than sound -- there is no substantial error in the opinion which the petition reviews.

The petition is denied.

PEOPLE ex rel. ATTORNEY GENERAL v. MARTIN.

People v. Porter, 6 Cal. Rep. 26, and the People ex rel. McKune v. Weller, 11 Cal. Rep. 49, affirmed.

The office of County Judge is not a "county office" within the meaning of the Act entitled "An Act to amend 'An Act to Regulate Elections,' passed March 23d, 1850;" consequently the Board of Supervisors cannot order a special election to fill a vacancy in that office.

The appointee of the Governor to the office of County Judge will hold, over a person elected to the same office at a special election ordered by the Board of Supervisors of the County.

APPEAL from the Fifth District, County of Tuolumne.

This was an action brought on the relation of the Attorney General, to try the right to the office of County Judge of Tuolumne county.

The facts, as stated in the opinion of the Court, are as follows: On the twelfth day of August, 1858, the Board of Supervisors of Tuolumne county ordered an election for County Judge of that County, an office made vacant by the death of T. J. Jones, former incumbent, who died on the fourth day of the same month. The notice was given for ten days, by publication in a newspaper of the county. No proclamation, of course, was made by the Governor for filling the office, as the vacancy occurred after the time for making the proclamation. The election was had on the first Monday of September, 1858, at which relator claims to have been elected. The defendant was in office by appointment from the Governor, dated August 7, 1858, and still holds it; this proceeding is taken to oust him. The defendant had judgment in the Court below, and the relator appealed to this Court.

---

People v. Martin.

L. Quint, for Appellant, contended that the office of County Judge is a county office, and as such, the Board of Supervisors of the county had a right to order a special election to fill the vacancy; and the relator, having received a majority of votes at such election, was entitled to hold the office. Counsel referred to People v. Marsh, 1 Cal. Rep. 406; Wood's Digest, p. 559, sec. 30; Ib. 561, sec. 43; Constitution, art. 6, sec. 1; Ib., art. 6, sec. 8; Wood's Digest, p. 375, secs. 3, 8, 9.

The case of the People v. Porter, 6 Cal. R. 26, is relied upon as authority, but the Court will perceive that the two cases are entirely dissimilar. In that case there was no vacancy in the office at the time the Supervisors made the order, and, as a matter of course, an order for an election to fill a vacancy which did not, and indeed might not exist at all, was a nullity, and was absolutely void.

W. P. Barber, for Respondent, contended that sec. 4 of the Act of 1855, did not apply to the office of County Judge, and consequently, the Board of Supervisors could not order an election. Counsel referred to the statutes, and also to Ex parte Ellis, 11 Cal. Rep. 222; People v. Porter, 6 Cal. Rep. 26.

BALDWIN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court — TERRY, C. J., concurring.

This question has been, in effect, decided in the cases of People v.

Porter, 6 Cal. 26, and People ex rel. McKune v. Weller, 11 Cal. Rep. 49. Some plausibility is given to the appellant's argument that this is a county office, and that by the Act of 1855, (Sessions Acts, p. 160) the Board of Supervisors has power to order an election to fill a vacancy in the office; but the whole legislation on this subject contradicts this idea. The terms of the Act of 1855 are, it is true, general, but they must be construed in connection with and as part of the body of the legislation upon the general subject. The Act of 1855 is an amendment of the Act of 1850, (C. L. 775) which gave to the County Judge this power, in the same words as the Act of 1855 gives it to the Supervisors; but this first Act evidently did not mean to apply to the office of County Judge, of course, and the amendment was only made to throw the same duty imposed on the Judge, upon the Board — because of the objection that the Judge could only discharge judicial functions. Other Acts show that the County Judge was not considered a county officer, in the sense of the Act of 1850 or 1855; he is to tender his resignation, when he resigns, to the Governor; in case of vacancy, the County Clerk is to certify it to the Governor, who is to appoint; the Governor is to issue a commission, which fills the office until the next general election; and the Act (C. L. 774) requires the Governor "to give notice of the offices to be filled." As the law requires the notification to be made to the Governor of the vacancies in this office, and the governor has the power of appointment under this general law requiring his proclamation for a special election in such cases, we do not feel authorized to overthrow the express decision made in the case of People v. Porter, which declares the Governor's proclamation in such a case a condition precedent to the validity of the election.

The judgment is affirmed.

Hehn v. Stansbury — Krum v. King.

HEIHN v. STANSBURY et al.

A statement on appeal must be filed within the time prescribed by law. A statement filed a year after judgment was rendered, is not in time.

APPEAL from the Sixth District, County of Sacramento.

In this case the judgment was rendered May 18th, 1857. Notice of appeal was filed and served May 12, 1858. On the nineteenth of May, 1858, the parties stipulated that the statement used on motion for a new trial, should stand as the statement on appeal; respondent reserving his right to object to the appeal upon the ground that the same was not taken in time.

E. B. Crocker for Appellant.

Smith & Hardy and Sanders for Respondents.

TERRY, C. J., delivered the opinion of the Court — BALDWIN, J., concurring.

The appeal from the order denying a new trial was not taken within the time prescribed by law, and cannot be considered by the Court.

Upon the appeal from the judgment, no statement was filed until a year after judgment was rendered; therefore, we can only consider the judgment roll, which discloses no error.

Judgment affirmed.

KRUM v. KING.

A Deputy Sheriff who seizes property under an attachment, is not authorized, by virtue of his office, to bind the Sheriff by contract for the payment of a keeper to take charge of the property so attached. Special authority for this purpose must be shown.

APPEAL from the Eleventh District, County of Placer.

Krum v. King.

---

This was an action brought by the plaintiff for services rendered the defendant, in taking charge of certain property seized by the defendant, as Sheriff of Placer county, under a writ of attachment.

One Stewart, a deputy of the defendant in the office of Sheriff of Placer county, had in his hands a writ of attachment issued by the District Court of Placer county, and, by virtue of its commands, he seized certain real and personal property, and then and there made a contract with the plaintiff to take charge of the property, and safely keep the same for the defendant. Plaintiff was to receive for such services, at the rate of four dollars per day. He kept the charge of the property for some time, and until discharged by defendant. Defendant declined to pay plaintiff for such service, and he brought this action to recover the amount. On the trial, there was no evidence produced on the part of the plaintiff, showing any authority on the part of Stewart, the deputy, to bind his principal in such contract. Plaintiff had judgment in the Court below, and defendant appealed to this Court.

Anderson & Hillyer for Appellant.

Tuttle & Hillyer for Respondent.

TERRY, C. J., delivered the opinion of the Court — BALDWIN, J., and FIELD, J., concurring.

The complaint alleges a contract made with defendant, through his agent or deputy. In support of this allegation evidence was introduced, showing that defendant was Sheriff of the county, and that the contract was made by Stewart, one of his deputies.

This evidence was not sufficient to warrant the judgment. No special authority to make the contract is shown, and the mere fact of his being Deputy Sheriff, did not authorize Stewart to bind his principal in this manner.

Judgment reversed.

Pico v. Columbet.

PICO v. COLUMBET.

In an action by a tenant in common against his co-tenant, who is in the sole possession of the premises, to recover a share of the profits of the estate; a complaint which avers a tenancy in common between the parties; the sole and exclusive possession of the premises by the defendant; the receipt by him of the rents, issues and profits thereof; a demand by the plaintiff of an account of the same, and the payment of his share; the defendant's refusal; and that the rents, issues and profits amount to $84,000, is insufficient to support the action.

In such complaint, there are no special circumstances alleged which withdraw the case from the ordinary remedies at law, and require the interposition of equity. The action is a common law action of account; and, viewed in this light, the complaint is fatally defective in not averring that the defendant occupied the premises upon any agreement with the plaintiff, as receiver or bailiff of his share of the rents and profits. It is essential to a recovery that this circumstance exist, and equally essential to the complaint that it be alleged.

At common law, one tenant in common has no remedy against the other, who exclusively occupies the premises and receives the entire profits, unless he is ousted of possession, when ejectment may be brought, or unless the other is acting as bailiff of his interest by agreement, when the action of account will lie. The occupation by him, so long as he does not exclude his co-tenant, is but the exercise of a legal right. His cultivation and improvements are made at his own risk; if they result in loss he cannot call upon his co-tenant for contribution; and if they produce a profit his co-tenant is not entitled to a share in them. The co-tenant can at any moment enter into equal enjoyment of his possession; his neglect to do so may be regarded as an assent to the sole occupation of the other.

There is no equity in the claim asserted by the tenant to share in profits resulting from the labor and money of his co-tenant, when he has expended neither, and has never claimed possession, and never been liable for contribution in cases of loss. There would be no equity in giving to a tenant, who would neither work himself or subject himself to any expenditures or risks, a share in the fruits of another's labor, investments and risks.

The statute of 4 and 5 Anne, 16, is not in force in this State.

APPEAL from the Third District, County of Alameda.

This was an action by one tenant in common against his co-tenant, who is in the sole possession of the premises, to recover a share of the profits of the estate.

In the Court below, the defendant demurred to the complaint of the plaintiff upon the ground that "it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action." The demurrer was overruled. Defendant excepted, and subsequently answered. This Court has considered the question of the sufficiency of the complaint, the substance of which is set out in the opinion of the Court. The judgment of the Court below is, that the bill be dismissed, and defendant have judgment for his costs. Plaintiff appealed to this Court.

Stowe & Brown for Appellant.

Plaintiff contends that this decision was erroneous, and that Courts of Equity always gave relief, and compel one tenant in common who had been in the exclusive possession, and received the entire rents and profits, to account, for the reason that there was no remedy at law, and it will not be inappropriate to keep in view the distinction between common law and equity. "Common Law"—that system of law which is administered in the Common Law Courts, as distinguished from the rules prevailing in Courts of Equity and Admiralty. Wood's Lectures, Introduction, 81; 6 Peters' R. 102, 110.

"There can be no ouster between tenants in common in possession, and therefore, if one takes more than his share of the rents, the only remedy is account, either by action under the Statutes of Anne, or by bill in equity." 4 Young & Collier, English Exchequer R. 4; Chitty's Eq. Digest, 6; Parrott v. Palmer, 3 Mylne & Keene's R. 632.

"A, being at the time abroad, became a tenant in common with B, and died fifteen years afterwards, without having, during that period, been in England, and being all the time ignorant of her rights as tenant in common. B continued all along in possession and receipt of the rents and profits of the premises. Held, that B's possession did not amount to an ouster, and that A's representative could sustain a bill for an account against B, without recovering previously the possession." 1 Chitty's Eq. Digest, 10, subdivision 13, title Account, citing 2 Law Journal Rep. in Ch'y.

It cannot be pretended in this case that B could be charged as bailiff, or that he agreed to account for the rents and profits, or to pay for his exclusive possession. Pultney v. Warren, (decided in 1801) 6 Vesey, 76.

This mischief was not remedied until the Act for the amendment of the law (Stat. 4 Anne) gave an action of account by one tenant in common against the other. Before that period, the habit of the Court
